HISTORY OF MONTANA

JOHN H. SCHROEDER. That the sheep industry has grown to such enormous proportions during the past several decades is due to the fact that climatic conditions are nearly ideal, while the valleys afford excellent grazing facilities and the "bunch grass," which covers the hillsides and plains, makes excellent fodder for the animals. Many of those who are now largely engaged in this business have graduated from the ranks of herders, and among them are to be found numerous natives of the Fatherland. In this class may be mentioned John H. Schroeder, of Billings, who is the owner of 21,000 acres of land located twenty-one miles northwest of the city. Mr. Schroeder was born in Holstein, Germany, November 22, 1865, and is a son of Peter Henry and Margaret (Kibbel) Schroeder, both natives of Holstein.

Peter Henry Schroeder was a tailor in Germany, but on coming to the United States, in 1876, engaged in agricultural pursuits near Denison, Crawford county, Iowa. In 1879 he returned to Germany, and in the following year brought his family back to America and resumed farming and his death occurred when he was seventy-eight years of age. He was a faithful member of the German Lutheran church, as was also his wife, who died at the age of eighty-two years, and they were the parents of seven children, of whom three are living: Julius, of Denison, Iowa; Emma, the wife of Claus Peters, living in Crawford county, Iowa; and John H.

John H. Schroeder received his education in the common schools of Germany, and when fourteen years of age accompanied the family in its immigration to the United States. For about four years he was employed as a farm hand in Iowa, and also spent one year as clerk in an implement firm in Denison, but in the spring of 1885 first became connected with the sheep business as a herder, at Big Timber, Montana. For two years thereafter he followed the same occupation in the Yellowstone Valley, in the meanwhile carefully hoarding his savings until he had enough, in 1888, to purchase a small band of sheep, conducting his business on the range. So successful did he become that in 1900 he purchased 21,000 acres of land, located twenty-one miles northwest of Billings, and at present is running 4,500 head of sheep. He still follows the same line of business, but in the fall of 1910 came to Billings, where he has a nice home at No. 123 Lewis street. He has been interested in fraternal work, belonging to Magic City Camp, No. 593, Woodmen of the World, and Germania Lodge, No. 7, Sons of Hermann. His career affords an example of what may be accomplished by thrift, industry, perseverance and honest dealing, and is worthy of emulation by those of the younger generation who feel they are handicapped by lack of influential friends or financial aid.

In 1895 Mr. Schroeder was united in marriage with Miss Olga Lehfeldt, in the Congregational church in Billings, she being a daughter of Rudolph Lehfeldt. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Schroeder, namely: Amanda; Walter; Herman, twin of Walter; Louis, and Frances, twin of Louis.

THOMAS G. WILSON. A citizen of high repute and one who has been prominent and influential in the business world of Butte for a good many years past, Thomas G. Wilson is now living virtually retired, devoting all his attention to his private affairs. He is the owner of extensive real-estate properties in Butte, and while he does not take an active part in public affairs his loyalty and public spirit in all matters affecting the general welfare have ever been of the most insistent order.

Thomas G. Wilson was born at Heuvelton, New York, on the 7th of July, 1867, and he is a scion of a fine old colonial family, the original progenitor of the name in America having immigrated to this country in the colonial period. The progenitor of the family in America was a relative of the historic character, John Alden. The maternal ancestors of Thomas G. Wilson were of Scotch extraction and were early settlers in Massachusetts, whence removal was later made by various members of the family to New York. Mr. Wilson, of this notice, is a son of John G. and Mary J. (Jones) Wilson, both of whom were born and reared in New York, where they passed practically their entire lives and where they died. The father was a contractor and builder by occupation and he and his wife became the parents of four children, of whom Thomas G. was the third in order of birth.

To the public schools of Heuvelton Thomas G. Wilson is indebted for his rudimentary educational training. He left school at the age of sixteen years and then secured a position as clerk in the store of Robert Aiken at Lisbon Center, New York, receiving as remuneration for his services the sum of ten dollars per month. Being of an economical disposition, he managed to save a little sum of money out of his wages and in 1885 he came to Butte, removing thence to Anaconda, where he secured employment with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company. He saved two hundred and fifty dollars and in 1886 went to Colorado, whence he returned to Montana about 1890. Settling in Butte, he turned his attention to the real-estate and insurance business, being associated in that line of enterprise with Willard H. Winters, then county auditor of Silver Bow county. At the expiration of one year Mr. Winters withdrew from the firm and Mr. Wilson conducted the business individually until 1903, when he retired from active pursuits. His real-estate business was largely of a local character and little by little he managed to acquire a great deal of valuable property in Butte, realizing a snug little fortune from increased real-estate values. He now devotes all his time and attention to the care of his personal property, spending his leisure moments in out-of-door sports. He takes a number of hunting and fishing expeditions into the mountains when the opportunity offers and is a thorough sportsman in the broadest sense of the term.

In his political convictions Mr. Wilson is a stalwart supporter of the principles and policies for which the Republican party stands sponsor, and while he does not participate in public activities he gives freely of his aid and influence in support of all measures projected for progress and improvement. He was reared in the Methodist Episcopal church and still remains loyal to the doctrines of that denomination. He has a large circle of sincere friends who honor and esteem him for his sterling integrity and high moral character.

FREDERICK HITZFELDT. Custer county has many fine ranches, but there are none that excel that belonging to Frederick Hitzfeldt, lying forty-five miles south of Miles City, a magnificent tract of 8,500 acres. Mr. Hitzfeldt, who owns about 1,200 head of cattle, has had a remarkably successful career, having attained his present independent position through the result of a lifetime of persistent industry and adherence to straightforward business principles. He was born in Galveston, Texas, October 20, 1860, his parents being natives of Germany, where they were married. His father, who was a ship carpenter by trade, lost his life by drowning three months before the birth of Frederick, who was the youngest of a family of thirteen children.

From earliest childhood, Frederick Hitzfeldt has worked continuously and persistently. He was not able to secure many educational advantages, as he was compelled to leave school when young in order to assist in the support of the family. He was but eight years old when his mother died, and the orphan lad was bound out as a sailor boy. Not liking the life of a seaman, when ten years old he secured work in a brickyard, where the labor was hard and the wages only ten dollars per month. After about six months, he found he was still in debt twenty-five cents to his employer, and gave up his position and worked his way back to Galveston. He soon secured employment in hoisting brick and mortar in erecting a building, driving a mule and earning fifty cents per day, out of which he supported himself. While thus engaged, he met Mr. S. W. Allen, one of the leading stockmen of the Lone Star State, who gave him work as a cowboy, and in this gentleman's employ made his first trip over the trail from southern Texas to Dodge City, Kansas, in 1879. During the spring of 1885 he came to Montana, and on August 24th of that year landed on Big Missouri river, having traveled overland with cattle for Hunter & Evans. He continued with this firm for about one and one-half years, and then became associated with Judge C. H. Loud, who was at that time at the head of the Hereford Live Stock Company. One and one-half years later he was made superintendent of the company, but after four years the company was dissolved, and Mr. Hitzfeldt and Judge Loud purchased the firm's interests and continued in the business for twelve years, but in 1910 the judge's interests were purchased by Mr. Hitzfeldt, who has since operated alone. Mr. Hitzfeldt is an excellent sample of the self-made man. Although handicapped by lack of early advantages, he has steadfastly pushed forward, and the success which has attended his efforts should prove worthy of emulation by the youth of the country who are striving, without capital or influential friends, to gain a competence. His career in the business world has been marked by integrity and fair dealing, and his reputation is without stain or blemish. In political matters, Mr. Hitzfeldt recognizes no party lines, and votes for the candidate he deems most worthy the office at stake. Fraternally, he is associated with Yellowstone Lodge No. 26, A. F. & A. M., of Miles City, in which he has numerous friends, as he has, indeed, in all walks of life.

Mr. Hitzfeldt was married to Miss Georgianna Shy, the oldest of the five children born to George Shy, a native of Missouri and at present an influential ranchman of Custer county. Mr. and Mrs. Hitzfeldt have had no children.

WILLIAM JAMES MARTIN was born in Setter Creek, Amadore county, California, on the first day of January, 1880. He is the son of George Martin who left his native state of Michigan for the gold fields of California but not until too late to be counted among the early and most successful miners. In 1884, he left California for Montana, hoping that the mines there would prove more profitable for him. After working for a year with some considerable success he sent for his family to join him in Butte, expecting to make that city their future home.

His wife, Elizabeth Duncalf Martin, had taken his name while still in her Michigan home, and followed him to the southwest and there shared, without complaint, the hardships of his early life. When summoned to join him in Butte, in 1885, she gathered together her few possessions and with their five little children started cheerfully across the plains for Montana. These children are all, at the present time, residents of Meaderville, Montana, where their father early passed away without having accomplished the end for which he had been striving. His wife still makes her home with her daughter in Meaderville.

William James Martin, her second born, is the oldest of the four boys. At the age of sixteen, he left the schools of Butte which he had been attending, feeling that it was incumbent upon him to become a wage earner that the younger brothers be given an opportunity to continue their studies. His first employment was in the Heinze Concentrator. He remained for nine years in this work, receiving from the first the full wage of a man, three fifty per day.

On November the thirteenth, 1903, he was united in marriage to Miss Jennie Murrish who had come to Butte from Nevada City, Nevada. Their only child, Leta, was born in their home at Meaderville, 52 Main street, on the second of January, 1905.

In April, 1910, Mr. Martin entered into partnership with Mr. Robert Sutherland and together they established the Meaderville Coal Company at the corner of Main and Collusa streets. They have their private railroad trackage and handle on an average of five cars per week. The business increases every year although they are already known as among the most prosperous coal dealers in Silver Bow county.

Mr. Martin is a popular and public-spirited citizen of Meaderville although he takes little interest in the politics proper of the city or state. That is, naturally, aside from utilizing his right of suffrage. He seldom neglects, when chance offers, to cast a vote for the Republican party.

He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America lodge and is captain of the volunteer fire department of Meaderville.

Much credit is due Mr. Martin for the success he has attained and the position he has created for himself and his family, unaided by means or education, the two things that we have been taught are essential to material prosperity.

GEOFFREY A. LAUZIER. With a good natural aptitude for business, and that developed by a special course of instruction and long and valuable experience while in the employ of other men, Geoffrey A. Lauzier, president of the National Mining and Investment Company, Incorporated, and its successor, the Lauzier-Wolcott Company, Incorporated, of Butte, has reached his elevation in business and his excellent standing in his home community by a regular course of progress, in the furtherance of which he has employed all his time and faculties, used excellent judgment and been at all times alert to see and seize his opportunities as they have come.

Mr. Lauzier is a native of Ottawa, Canada, where his life began on August 12, 1868. He began his education in the schools of his native city, where he remained until August, 1885, then came to Butte, Montana, and here continued his studies in the high school. When he left that school he attended the Butte Business College for training in business, and as soon as he completed its course of instruction secured a position in a hay and grain dealing establishment conducted by his uncle. The uncle sold this business and Mr. Lauzier then went to work for the Lavell brothers, who were engaged in the lumber, livery and transfer industry. He remained with them sixteen years and acquired a thorough knowledge of their business, besides becoming familiar with the requirements and possibilities of many other lines of trade. At the end of the period mentioned, having accumulated some capital and feeling a strong desire to have a business of his own, he started his present enterprise, under the name of the National Mining and Investment Company, and incorporated it. The company has extensive and profitable holdings and is doing a large business. Mr. Lauzier is its president and controlling spirit, and its success and progress are due almost wholly to his enterprise, breadth of view and accurate knowledge of all the requirements in the case and all features and phases of the situation.

Gabriel Lauzier, the father of Geoffrey, is a native of southern France. He came to Canada in 1860, locating in the province of Ontario, near the capital of the Dominion, and there for a number of years engaged in profitable farming operations. He is still living there, but is now retired from all active pursuits and enjoying a rest which he has richly earned for his declining years. He is at this time (1912) seventy-four years of age. The mother, who was Sarah Lavell, a native of Canada, died on April 21, 1909.

Mr. Lauzier was married in Butte on October 3, 1900, to Miss Lou F. Foster, a daughter of John M. and Mary (Duffield) Foster, well known and highly respected residents of that city. No children have been born of the union. Mr. Lauzier mingles freely in the social life of his community as a member of the Silver Bow Club and in all its other phases. He takes a great interest and an active part in outdoor sports, is a leading member of the Golf Club and a promoter of all athletic entertainments for the enjoyment of himself and the people generally. He is a Catholic in religion and a Democrat in politics. His church has his ardent and serviceable devotion, but he is not an active partisan in political affairs, although an unwavering believer in the principles of his party as the best guarantee of good government and the enduring welfare of the country. The progress and improvement of his city and state are matters of great moment with him, and he is always ready to support in the most practical way any worthy undertaking in which they are involved. Butte has no better citizen and none whom the people more highly esteem.

A. C. SANDBERG, D. D. S. One of the leading representatives of the dental profession of Butte, Dr. A. C. Sandberg is identified with a calling that aptly illustrates the swift advance of science within the past few years, more valuable improvements and discoveries having been made in dentistry, mayhap, than in any other branch of surgery. The second oldest practising dentist of the city, he has gained an excellent reputation for professional skill, and acquired a substantial patronage. He was born, November 27, 1860, in Sweden, his father was an engineer on a steamer plying between Gottenborg and Stockholm. His father died in early life, in 1865, and his mother, whose maiden name was Sophia Wenstrom, passed to the life beyond three years later, in 1868.

Left an orphan when but seven years old, A. C. Sandberg had a hard life as a boy and youth, suffering many hardships and privations, and having but little time for either study or play. He was an errand boy in a commission house until twelve years old, when he began an apprenticeship of six years at the trades of a jeweler and diamond setter, during the time attending school six months. In 1880, responding to the lure of the western world, he came to the United States, and for five years worked at the jeweler's trade in Chicago. Coming from there to Montana in 1885, Dr. Sandberg, who had begun the study of dentistry in Sweden, and continued it in Chicago, came to Montana, locating in Helena, where for eight years he practised his profession. In 1893 the Doctor opened a dental office in Butte, for nine years being associated with Dr. W. H. Hall, but since 1902 has practised alone, his skill, modern methods, close attention to his professional duties, and his unblemished personal character, having secured for him a large and eminently satisfactory practice.

Dr. Sandberg was formerly active in military affairs, while living in Chicago having belonged to the Home Guards from 1881 until 1885, while in Helena he served as a lieutenant in the Home National Guards. He is a member, and ex-vice-president, of the Montana State Dental Association. Fraternally he belongs to the Knights of Pythias, and to the Order of Moose.

Dr. Sandberg married, March 7, 1887, in Helena, to Anna Belle Garrison, who was born in Abingdon, Illinois.

SAMUEL S. SINGER may in all truth be said to have grown up in the dry goods business. Certain it is that he has been actively identified with the mercantile line since he was thirteen years of age, and he has gone through every phase of the business in a manner calculated to give him a thorough insight into the many intricate details which attend the successful manipulation of the industry. His early training he received in his native land, Roumania, and it was of a rigid and uncompromising nature that in five years fitted him more thoroughly for the business than twice that time could have done in America. From a minor position in a dry goods establishment in Minneapolis after he came to this country in 1885, he has come to be known as one of the leading merchants in Great Falls, and his store is one of the most important and at the same time most popular establishments of its kind in this section of the state.

Mr. Singer was born in Roumania on September 13, 1867, and is the son of Isador and Clara Singer. The father was born in Roumania and came to America in 1888, settling in Minneapolis, where he still lives, although retired from active business. Samuel attended the schools of his native land until he had reached the age of thirteen, when he took service in a large dry goods house with a view to learning the business. He remained with the firm for five years, and when he was eighteen he immigrated to America. He located in Minneapolis and for a few months he worked in a dry goods house, where he became familiar with American methods of conducting such a business, and after he had gleaned some experience he removed to Montana. He located in Helena and there secured immediate employment with the New York Dry Goods Company, and that position proved to be so mutually beneficial that he continued in it until 1895. In that time he came to be regarded as one of the most trustworthy and capable employees of the house, and stood in high favor with his employers. In 1895, he, with Fred A. Fligman, a fellow employee of the New York Dry Goods Company, conceived the idea of settling in business on their own responsibility. They cast about for a suitable location and finally decided upon Great Falls, which at that time seemed the most opportune spot in the state for such a business as they proposed to launch. They accordingly severed their connection with their old firm and made all arrangements for opening up an establishment in Great Falls. They began business on a small scale, preferring to feel their way, and increase stock as the trade warranted such procedure, rather than to load up in the beginning and take their chance with the trading public,—a plan which their native shrewdness was much opposed to. The first few months of their operations showed that the store was a pronounced success, and that they must expand to meet the demands of the trade. Thus their policy has been through all the years in which they have operated in Great Falls, creating a demand and then supplying it forthwith. Their establishment is now recognized as the largest and most comprehensive of its kind in this section of the state, and their methods are such that the greatest confidence is reposed in them. Their reputation for fair and square dealing has been their greatest asset, and is one that can not fail to win to them the greatest success possible to attain in their business. Both men are careful buyers, possessing tact, wisdom and foresight, and the business of the house is despatched in a manner highly creditable to the executive ability of the partners. The firm is known as the Paris Dry Goods Company, and Samuel S. Singer is president of the concern. Reasonably conservative, but unhampered by an excess of caution, the firm is easily one of the most progressive and wide-awake in the west today. An example of those qualities might be shown in their identification with the six o'clock closing movement as far back as when Mr. Singer and Mr. Fligman were employees of the New York store in Helena years ago. These young men, ever abreast of the times, were the first to begin the agitation in favor of early closing, and it was they who circulated the first petition among salespeople and tradespeople with that end in view. They gave to the matter such enthusiasm and were so successful in enlisting the sympathies of the public that the movement after being successfully inaugurated in Helena, became general throughout the entire state, and is now in effect in every city in Montana.

Mr. Singer is a member of the blue lodge of the Masonic fraternity, the Woodmen of the World and the Sons of Hermann. He is an Independent in his political views and is never unduly active in the politics of his district.

In 1895 Mr. Singer was united in marriage with Miss Dora Fligman of Helena, Montana, a daughter of Joseph Fligman of that city. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Singer.—Lee F., born June 11, 1897, and Josephine Theresa, born April 25, 1902. Both own Great Falls as their birthplace. The elder, Lee, is a student in the Great Falls high school, while the daughter is attending the grade schools of the city.

JOHN A. COLLINS. In the list of names of those who have been instrumental in developing the resources of Great Falls, prominent place should be given to John A. Collins, a man whose large business interests have served to encourage the city's industrial growth, and the value of whose services in the management of municipal affairs cannot be overestimated. Coming to Great Falls something more than a quarter of a century ago with little capital save an abundant stock of energy, he rose rapidly in the world of business, and so great was the confidence reposed in him by his fellow citizens that he was twice elected to the highest municipal office in Great Falls, and at present is ably acting in the capacity of sheriff. Mr. Collins was born in Ontario, Canada, September 11, 1865, and is a son of William and Mary Ann (Lewis) Collins. His father, a native of Ireland, came to the United States during the early fifties, and subsequently settled in Ontario, Canada, where for many years he was engaged in agricultural pursuits, and where he now resides, being retired from business activities. His wife, also a native of Ireland, immigrated to Canada about the same time, and still resides there, having been the mother of twelve children, of whom John A. is the second in order of birth.

As the family was not in very prosperous circumstances, John A. Collins spent the greater part of his boyhood in the hard, unrelenting work of the home farm, and his education was therefore necessarily somewhat limited. Until he was fourteen years of age, however, he spent a part of each term in the district school, and after he had finished his schooling returned to the farm, where he continued to work until he was nineteen years old. At that time he decided to strike out for himself, and having managed to borrow a small capital in the spring of 1885 he came to Montana, first settling at Anaconda. There he secured employment as a carpenter's helper in the construction of the Mill Creek flume for the Anaconda Copper Smelting Company, for which concern he worked during the summers of 1885 and 1886. On the completion of this work he accepted a position in the smelter, and in all remained in Anaconda for more than a year and a half, in the spring of 1887 going to Granite, Montana, where he worked in the forests at wood chopping until the fall of 1887. At that time he came first to Great Falls to go to work in the silver smelter as a pipe fitter, but later took a position with Hotchkiss & Hawkins, the pioneer plumbers of Great Falls, in whose employ he continued until 1892. In the fall of that year he formed a partnership with Frank F. Goss, in the plumbing business, and in the year following purchased his partner's interest in the establishment, of which he continued to be the sole proprietor until 1896. Mr. Collins then became associated with Frank Huy in the hardware and plumbing business, and in 1898 W. F. Brown purchased Mr. Huy's interest, the firm of Collins & Brown conducting the business until 1903, under the name of Western Hardware Company. At that time Mr. Collins sold his interest in the hardware department, but retained the plumbing business, which he has continued to conduct to this time. His executive ability and business acumen have made this one of the leading enterprises of its kind in the city, and the store at No. 306 First avenue, South, is equipped with all modern improvements.

A staunch Republican in politics, Mr. Collins was elected mayor of Great Falls in 1899, when the voters of the city decided upon a business administration, and so ably did he discharge the duties of his high position that he was returned to the mayoralty chair in 1901. On January 1, 1909, he took the office of sheriff, to which he was elected in 1911, and he still acts in this office to the entire satisfaction of the people of the community. He is a popular member of the Electric and Athletic clubs, and has been prominent in fraternal circles, belonging to Euclid Lodge No. 58, A. F. & A. M., of Great Falls, to the Knights of Pythias and to the Odd Fellows, and served as grand master of the state of Montana, and in 1900 was grand representative to the Sovereign Grand Lodge at Des Moines, Iowa.

Mr. Collins was married January 26, 1905, at Spokane,

Henry Mueller

Washington, to Miss Mary Kaina, of North Dakota. The Collins residence is located at No. 313 Third avenue, South, and is a center of social refinement, where the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Collins often congregate.

HENRY MUELLER. "God's finger touched him and he slept," was the almost universal thought in Butte and many other locations in Montana after the untimely death of the late Henry Mueller on June 29, 1908, at the early age of fifty-seven years. For Mr. Mueller was one of Montana's prominent, influential and most useful and progressive citizens, every activity in his life having been employed directly or indirectly for the general welfare, and his every heart throb having been in sympathy with the righteous aspirations and efforts for elevation and improvement among his fellow men. The people everywhere who knew his worth, his public service, his high character, his benignant disposition and his great and commanding business enterprise, felt that a good man had been called to his final rest, and while all mourned the great loss suffered by the community in his early departure from the scenes of his serviceable activity, there was not one who did not do his memory reverence and account him altogether worthy of the high esteem in which he was held by all classes of the people of the state.

Mr. Mueller's life story contains little that is spectacular and, outside of his early death, almost nothing of the element of tragedy. It is a record of fine and continuous business success due to unusual ability and force of character; of continual willingness and much more than ordinary capacity to serve the public where his services were needed for the general weal, and of the steady flow of a calm, full current of active goodness toward mankind in general and his immediate associates in particular, with every energy and faculty guided by lofty ideals and dominated at all times by a strong sense of duty.

Mr. Mueller was born in the busy industrial and commercial city of Cologne, in the Rhenish province of Prussia, on April 23, 1851, and came to the United States with his parents in his childhood. The family located on a farm near Milwaukee, and some little time afterward moved to Menasha, Winnebago county, Wisconsin, where Henry took up the battle of life partially for himself, going to work in a factory at the age of fourteen, for the purpose of helping to provide for the household, as the parents were in very moderate circumstances, and the family was large, consisting of six sons and one daughter, Henry being the first born of the seven.

After working in the factory for some time he saw an opportunity to do better for himself and the family by going into the lumber and saw mill region of Michigan. He did not, however, confine his industry to the lumber business, but passed one year of his stay in Michigan working in a mine, and another of his absence from home as a sailor on the great lakes. When he reached the age of twenty-one he returned to Menasha and found employment in a general merchandising establishment as a clerk, which position he held for three years, rendering both the firm and its patrons such satisfactory service that he was highly commended for his astuteness and fidelity.

He was united in marriage with Miss Margaret Trilling, the daughter of Henry Trilling, a prominent merchant of Menasha, and soon afterward took charge of his father-in-law's business, which he continued to manage until 1884, when he moved to Chicago and engaged in the commission and produce business on his own account. Chicago did not entirely suit him and in 1885 he sold his interests in that city and changed his residence and the seat of his activities to Butte, Montana.

On his arrival in this city he secured employment as a bookkeeper for Messrs. Schmidt & Gamer, owners of the Centennial brewery. Two years later he purchased Mr. Gamer's interest in the business and the new firm was incorporated under the name of the Centennial Brewing Company. The business was growing, and the introduction of Mr. Mueller's energetic spirit into its management accelerated its progress to such a degree that the erection of a larger plant and the installation of new and improved machinery soon became necessary, and when this requirement was provided the brewery was admitted to be one of the largest and most completely equipped in the whole northwest, and was in a condition to compare favorably with any establishment of its kind anywhere.

Mr. Mueller remained in active management of the brewery until failing health forced him to take a much needed rest. He was also connected with other profitable enterprises, among them mining interests of considerable value. To all his various business claims he gave close and studious personal attention, and they all felt the quickening impulse of his clear brain and ready and vigorous hand. But numerous and exacting as were the demands on his time and attention in a business way, they were not sufficient to abate in the slightest degree his great and abiding interest in the progress and improvement of his home city, county and state, for which he was ever zealous in desire and energetic and effective in action.

He was a firm believer in the principles and governmental theories of the Democratic party and held to it through life with unwavering loyalty. While living in Menasha, Wisconsin, he served as town clerk, chairman of the town board of directors and on the county board of supervisors. In 1889 he was elected a member of the city council of Butte and in 1891 mayor of the city, filling both positions with decided credit to himself and benefit to the community. In addition he took an interest, cordial and helpful, in the organization of the National Guard of Montana and joined Company F in Butte as a private in the ranks. His efforts to promote the welfare of this company resulted in his being elected its captain in 1889. Later he was elected major of the First regiment, and held that office when Harry C. Kessler was the colonel in command. He was also elected a member of the school board in 1899 and served two terms as its chairman.

In the fraternal life of the community Mr. Mueller was a generous and potential factor. He belonged to the Butte Lodge of Elks, the Royal Arcanum, the National Union, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the rank of Select Knights in that order, and gave to each of these fraternities careful and earnest attention and excellent service, directed by intelligence and inspired by ardent and unflagging zeal. Whatever he put his hand to was stimulated to more active life and higher and better achievements. He founded one of the most interesting and appreciated, because one of the most instructive and encouraging, features of the high school work in the city. This is the Mueller Declamation contest for pupils of the high school. Its entertainments are given annually, and Mueller gold medals are awarded to the young man and young lady of the school who deliver the best declamations in the contests, which are public and always attract wide attention.

Mr. Mueller's health began to fail several years before his death, and in the course of his decline a stroke of paralysis weakened him considerably for a time. But he rallied from this and regained a large part of his former health and vigor. In March preceding his death he made a trip to southern California for the benefit of his health, and seemed much improved by his stay in that region. But on his way home disastrous occurrences robbed him of all he had gained, and gave him a decided setback from which he never recovered. Floods had so impaired railroad travel that he was forced to make a wide detour to reach Butte, and this wearied him by its lengthy addition to the journey. Then, when the train had almost reached its destination, a land slide necessitated the transfer of the passengers to another. This additional trouble served to further exhaust him and gave him a cold besides. He apparently gained in strength after reaching his home, but a reaction set in, and his family and friends soon realized that his death must soon occur.

By his marriage with Miss Trilling, Mr. Mueller became the father of three daughters and three sons, all but one of whom are living and all reside in Butte except one daughter, Mrs. Collins West, whose home is in Billings, Montana. The daughter and the sons who live in Butte are: Mrs. Albert Rochester and Arthur H., Walter and Henry Mueller, all of whom are well known and highly esteemed in the city of their home. Mr. Mueller is survived also by five brothers and one sister, and his aged mother was at his bedside at the time of his death. His brothers are: Andrew, who lives in Butte; Paul, who is a resident of Vancouver, British Columbia; William, whose home is in Billings, Montana; and Matthew and Joseph, residents of Menasha, Wisconsin, where the sister, Mrs. Philip Gardner, also lives.

Enterprising, progressive, energetic and far-seeing in regard to matters of public interest, Henry Mueller was also generous in private benefactions and added to their value by the unostentatious manner in which they were bestowed. He had the confidence and respect of everybody who knew him or of him. Few men have ever stood as high as he did in general esteem in Butte, and no one would say that he was not worthy of every degree and evidence of popular regard ever given him, or that the state of Montana had during his life a better representative of all that is best in its citizenship.

At the time of Mr. Mueller's death the Butte Miner of June 30, 1908, said editorially: "Butte has sustained an irreparable loss in the death of Mr. Henry Mueller. Few men have ever stood as high in this community, and he was justly esteemed by all classes. He was a public-spirited citizen, ever ready to devote his time and money in the cause of the general welfare; he was generous to a fault and his private charities were legion. He had the respect of every one who knew him, for he was one of those men in whom all felt confidence. He was progressive and yet conservative, that is to say, he could always be interested in civic enterprises, which in his judgment told him were legitimate and needed. Mr. Mueller's advice was continually sought by business men and others, because, being most successful himself, he was recognized as a man of exceptional capacity. Several times he was called upon to serve his fellow citizens in different positions, such as mayor and president of the school board, and he had the highest sense of that duty which an American citizen owes to his country and community.

"For the last two or three years his friends noticed with sorrow that Mr. Mueller was failing in health, but to even the last those who met him and talked with him felt that he must belie his appearance, for he retained a cheerful disposition and took the same sympathetic interest in the affairs of others that was always one of his marked characteristics.

"Although a very sick man for some time before the final summons came he bore his suffering with rare fortitude and always had a pleasant smile and word for his friends. His death will bring sorrow into every household in Butte, and the deepest regret will be expressed that this kindly man could not have been spared for many years to come. All the members of his family will have the heartfelt sympathy of every citizen of Butte, and in scores of homes throughout the state his death will bring sadness."

CHARLES P. COTTER. Finely educated, and possessing veritable talent and a comprehensive knowledge of the technicalities of law, Charles P. Cotter, of Townsend, occupies a noteworthy position among the rising young lawyers of the city, and is well known as county attorney of Broadwater county.

Born in Townsend, March 14, 1885, he acquired his rudimentary education in the elementary and high schools of the city. Desirous from youth up of entering the legal profession, he continued his studies at the State University, at the University of Chicago, and at Columbia University, in New York City, where, in 1910 he was graduated with the degree of B. A.

Returning then to Townsend, Mr. Cotter began the practice of his profession, and is meeting with excellent success. In the fall of 1910, although he is a steadfast Republican, living in a Democratic stronghold, he was elected county attorney, running far ahead of his ticket at the election, his victory over his opponent showing his popularity as a lawyer, a man, and a citizen. He is financially interested in the Townsend elevator. He is enthusiastic in regard to the development of the mineral resources of the state, being more especially optimistic regarding the gold producing mines of Broadwater county. Mr. Cotter is a member of two college fraternities, belonging to the Sigma Chi, and to the Phi Alpha Delta. He is also a member of the Knights of Columbus.

Thomas H. Cotter, father of Charles P. Cotter, was born, reared and educated in St. Lawrence county, New York. Coming west at the age of twenty-one years, he engaged in ranching and mining in Broadwater county, and at one time carried on a livery business in Townsend. He has holdings in this county, and is now one of the leading farmers of this part of the state, his entire time being devoted to that industry. He married Rose Durnen, a native of Wisconsin, and to them four children have been born, namely: William C., a mining engineer, spent two years at the Montana School of Mines, one year at the Utah School of Mines, and is now engaged in mining and ranching in the vicinity of Canton, Montana; John E., engaged in agricultural pursuits in Broadwater county; May M., a graduate of the Townsend high school and now attending the State Normal School, and Charles P.

SANFORD DAIGLE. A business man of prominence and influence at Dixon, Montana, is Sanford Daigle, who is here engaged in the blacksmith and wagon-making business, being the owner and operator of a finely equipped shop, in which he spends his working hours. Mr. Daigle has traveled throughout the west and declares Montana is the one best state in this section of the country.

A native of Maine, Sanford Daigle was born in Restock county, that state, July 13, 1867, and he is a son of Richard and Flora (Bulger) Daigle, both of whom were born and reared in Maine, where was solemnized their marriage and where they still reside. Mr. Daigle is engaged in the lumber business and in his younger days he was a great traveler, having toured the west and Montana in 1882. Mr. and Mrs. Daigle became the parents of eight children, of whom Sanford was the fifth child and youngest son.

Sanford Daigle was reared to the age of eighteen years in his native county in Maine, where his educational training consisted of such advantages as were offered in the district schools. In 1885 he came to Montana, locating in Missoula, where he was engaged in the lumber business for three years, at the expiration of which he went to Butte, where he resided for the ensuing five years and where he learned the trades of machinist and blacksmith. In 1893 he went to Choteau and there opened a blacksmith shop, which he conducted for two years. He then went to British Columbia, where he followed blacksmithing for seven years and whence he went to Republic, Washington, there engaging in the same line of enterprise for the next two years. In 1903 he took up a government homestead in Washington and subsequently engaged in business at Loomis, that state. One year later he went to Wallace, Idaho, where he followed mining for three years and he then returned to dear old Montana, settling at Dixon and engaging in the blacksmith and wagon-making business here in March, 1911. Mr. Daigle says: "I have traveled in many places and came back to Montana the second time more fully convinced that it beats them all. This is my permanent home from now on."

In politics Mr. Daigle is a stalwart Republican but he does not participate actively in public affairs. He is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which he has passed the various official chairs, and Mrs. Daigle is a valued member of the Daughters of the Rebekah. He is very fond of hunting and fishing and Mrs. Daigle says he will miss his meals, sleep and all else in order to go fishing. He is likewise fond of horses and driving and both he and his wife are greatly interested in music, reading and theatricals. Mr. Daigle earned his first money as a boy digging potatoes back in Maine. He earned fifty cents a day and with his savings purchased his first ready-made suit.

At Colville, Washington, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Daigle to Mrs. Susan Scrafford, of British Columbia. The wedding occurred October 22, 1895. Mrs. Daigle's father was Medders Vanderpool, an old western pioneer, who crossed the plains and came to Flathead lake in 1830. Later he returned to his native state of North Carolina but in 1846 came again to the golden west, going as far as Oregon, where he resided during the rest of his life. He died in 1896, at the patriarchal age of ninety-eight years. Mr. and Mrs. Daigle have no children. Mr. Daigle is a communicant of the Catholic church, while Mrs. Daigle is a Protestant. They are popular and highly respected citizens in Dixon, where they are beloved by all with whom they have come in contact.

DAVID M. TREPP is a well-known newspaper man of Lewistown being himself a writer of much ability. At present, he is the president, chief stock holder and managing editor of the Lewistown Daily News, the only daily newspaper of that thriving city.

His father, Martin Trepp, was born in Nufenen Canton, Graubunden, Switzerland. As a lad he came to America, settling in Connecticut. In 1864 he made the overland journey to Montana. The trip was fraught with hardship and exciting incident but his early life as a mountaineer had prepared him for the former while his love of liberty and freedom, so natural to his countrymen, made him welcome all adventure. Like all of the western emigrants he was attracted to Montana by the tales of her great mineral finds and himself hastened to begin a search for precious ore. After a brief sojourn in the Treasure state, however he began to realize that for him her cattle might assay a higher percent of gold than her ore. So soon as he began to prosper, his dreams of a return to the fatherland took form. When he had made a little home for himself in the new state he journeyed back to his land of eternal hills in search of the Swiss maiden who was to reign over it. The girl whom he sought was Anna Fimian who gladly returned with him to face her future in an unknown country. They lived in quiet and comfort on their ranch home until 1893 when Mr. Trepp suddenly passed away—a man in his full prime and vigor. Of the family who was left to mourn him, his wife now lives in Lewistown with her daughter Margaret who is the chief book-keeper in the office of the Lewistown Daily News of which her brother is president and general manager. The oldest of the family, Lizzie Trepp Klinkman, is the wife of Henry Klinkman who resides in Billings. Elsie, the youngest of the girls, has completed her schooling and is filling a position of trust in the Yegen Brothers bank of Billings.

David M. Trepp, the second of the four children, is the only son of the family. He was born in Townsend, Montana, on the 30th day of October, 1885. When he was four years of age, his parents moved to their ranch in the Judith Basin. Upon the death of his father, the lad, together with his mother and sisters, made their home in Lewistown. While attending school, at the age of thirteen, he earned his first money by acting as janitor of the building. For his services he received the sum of eight dollars a month. That same year he entered the Lewistown high school, completing the course of that institution while still in his sixteenth year. After being graduated from the Montana State University at the age of eighteen, he taught school in Fergus county, working on a ranch in the summer and holding for a portion of the time a clerkship in a mercantile establishment. In this way he was able to acquire a portion of the means with which to take a course in the State University of Minnesota situated at Minneapolis. After finishing his work in Minneapolis, he returned to Lewistown and became reporter on the Fergus County Democrat. Neither the position nor the politics of the paper greatly pleased him and in 1907, upon the establishment of the Daily News, he was pleased to accept the position of city editor on that paper and to assume full charge of the department of general news. Here he invested the remnant of his savings.

Mr. Trepp's interests are not confined to journalism alone although he has given much of his best effort to his editorial labors. He is connected with Al Heinecke, a theatrical manager who is making a name for himself. They are in control of theaters in Lewistown, Moore and Harlow and have obtained an interest in several others.

On the 16th day of January, 1911, Mr. Trepp was united in marriage to Miss Ruth E. French, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. B. French, well-known residents of Lewistown.

LESLIE SULGROVE. One of the prominent citizens of Helena, Montana, is Leslie Sulgrove, who has spent thirty-two years of a busy, useful life in this state, having identified himself with its growing interests, and in many ways has contributed to its development and prestige. In public life he is known as a strong and aggressive worker in the uplift of the community. He has always been an active practical reformer and all of the varied responsibilities which he has assumed since coming to Montana in the territorial days, have been advanced by his accurate, vigorous efforts.

His parents, Berry R. Sulgrove, and Mary M. (Jameson) Sulgrove were both born in Indiana, and were married at, and lived in Indianapolis, where the subject of this sketch, the oldest of four sons, was born on February, 7, 1854. The mother came from a noted Virginia, colonial, family which came west with the early emigrants, and settled on the banks of the Ohio, in Jefferson county, where her father, Thomas Jameson, had large holdings, and who was the first to introduce the culture of silk in the then far west. Her grandfather, Thomas Jameson was born in 1732, the same year as George Washington, served under the latter in the Revolution and died some years after her birth. The father was the son of James Sulgrove, a prominent leather merchant, whose family came from colonial North Carolina and settled near the future capital. Their ancestry dates back to long before the building of the "Sulgrove Manor" house upon the old estate of that name, near the town of Banbury, England, which was confiscated by Henry VIII., and afterwards granted to a Washington family, supposed to be the ancestors of George Washington, and occupied by them for nearly a century. Yet, notwithstanding this fact, the solid built ancient home has retained the original Sulgrove family name, during the four hundred years of its existence, and is still used, unchanged, as the manor house.

Berry Sulgrove was a special protege of Alexander Campbell, of the noted Bethany College, from which he was graduated with the highest honors, and early gained the distinction of one of the most intellectual men of the country. Forsaking the law for which he had been trained, thereby following a family precedent, he entered upon a literary career, drifting into journalism, when it meant more than news gathering and became famous as one of the editors of that period. He was considered a wise political adviser, and was the greatest political writer the Hoosier state has produced and as the editor of the Journal was a power in keeping it loyal during the Rebellion. He was a historian of note and wrote the history of "Indiana in the War;" "Holloway's Indianapolis;" "History of Marion County," and, many sketches of early days. A keen observer and omnivorous reader, he wrote well on any subject and was the author of countless special articles for all sorts of periodicals. A deep student of the original classics and familiar with the whole field of literature his acquirements were well digested and the result was an epigrammatic style, with language clean, clear and compact, and exact in statement, which has made his writings the subject of much study and selections from them are used as textbooks in the public schools of his native state.

It is the natural result of the inherited traits of such an illustrious sire that the son, Leslie, should become so well known for his remarkable memory, wide reading, and the great range of his accomplishments, and that he should in his school days and always after have been devoted to literature. His tastes include nearly everything that has value to existence but from childhood he has favored more the sciences, chiefly chemistry and biology. As a schoolboy he gained fame as an entomologist and his collection of insects was awarded the state prize for excellence and completeness. He strove to make our native silks of commercial value and exhaustively studied the subject. He was a born naturalist and has always loved to freely roam in the forest depths. As a schoolboy he had as an associate and mentor the afterwards celebrated botanist, John Muir and later was the intimate friend and assistant of Dr. Harvey W. Wiley and between them has existed the strongest mutual admiration. As a writer on many subjects, more particularly the sciences, music and the drama, Mr. Sulgrove made quite a name while employed on the various papers of his native city and was quoted as an authority on almost everything connected with outdoor life, and noted as an athlete of great skill and strength. An intense longing for the highlands and tiring of the journalistic life led him to abandon the flat valley land for the mountains and brought him to Montana before the advent of the railroads. Here he was deeply interested in all that was included in the country and this interest has never abated. His pursuits were varied and he was assayer, laborer, prospector, blacksmith, for which his mechanical bent made him well fitted, surveyor and printer. Drifting back into the news line he edited a paper in Butte called the Daily Labor Union, of which his chief remainder and sole remuneration is a stock certificate. Coming to Helena as a legislative reporter for Butte papers he became a syndicate correspondent and was employed on the Herald, the Independent, and later on other publications. After taking part in helping to survey some of the little known portions of the territory he served as clerk of the old first district court at Miles City, when the United States court was held there by the late Judge John Coburn. Upon the change in politics Mr. Sulgrove again entered the newspaper field and built up the Montana Stock Journal, which later developed into four different organs of various interests, and at all times since he has kept in touch with the fraternity and is still active in a literary way.

Mr. Sulgrove has filled official positions with credit and in whatsoever he has served his varied abilities and acquirements have aided in doing well whatever he has undertaken.

He was public librarian of Helena for many years and his literary tastes, knowledge of books and newspaper experience peculiarly adapted him for the position and taking charge of this institution when it was practically defunct he reorganized and advanced it until the public library was the center of literary interest in the capital city and it became of such value to the community by his urbane official work that on the reputation he gained for it was reared the present public library building which, through lodge, labor and other interests, obstructing better plans, forced on the city the insufficient edifice which was used as an adjunct to pull a public auditorium from its scanty treasury. But whatever the merits the plan has since disclosed its inception was due to the splendid work of its hardworking librarian. In the position of health officer Mr. Sulgrove had the advantage of early medical studies supplemented by handily acquired legal knowledge and hard study and brought all of these to bear upon reforming and renewing the efficiency of the health department, in which he was singularly successful and was highly complimented in many ways for his ability in handling contagious disease epidemics, upon which he was considered an authority. He was instrumental in putting the city in good shape and also in establishing the present garbage system. His chief work of which he is most proud is the present county hospital for contagious diseases, the erection of which was due solely to his patient and persistent efforts in behalf of the afflicted.

Mr. Sulgrove still maintains an active interest in all surroundings and does not abate his studies nor athletic work despite that he is verging on three score years. He is as in the past devoted to the Bible, Shakespeare and the Arabian Nights and of these works he has fine collections and of the last one of the best in the country; oriental literature having always appealed to him.

Mr. Sulgrove has always taken a deep interest in the welfare of the young men of the community and when there was an organization for their benefit he was prominent in its work and even now so enthusiastic is he in their behalf that he devotes much of his time to their physical advancement and keeps in touch through the Athletic Club of which he is the manager, and, in other ways labors for their betterment. In politics he is a Republican but free in his expression. He cares nothing for lodge affairs and the only order to which he belongs is the Montana Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, of which he has been for many years the secretary and also president. Mr. Sulgrove was married in 1885 to Miss Sophia C. Dithmer, at Indianapolis, and returning to the Treasure state has since made Helena his home. There are two children, Miss Mary Agnes Sulgrove, and Leslie Berry Sulgrove, a graduate of the Indiana Law school, and now a practicing lawyer in Helena. Mrs. Sulgrove is an enthusiastic worker in the order of the Eastern Star and in the church, and the family is socially in high standing in the capital city.

C. M. Goodale.

W. L. KELLEY. In Providence, Rhode Island, on the twenty-second of October, 1877, W. L. Kelley was born. His father, Patrick Kelley, was, as the tell-tale name assures you, a native son of the Emerald Isle. With the foresight and optimism of the Irish people, his parents had come to America in an early day and established themselves in one of the manufacturing centers of New England. When the barren, rocky soil of their own land had refused to yield them their meager living, they sought and found a land overflowing with promise, only waiting for thrift and energy to discover its treasure. These good people, however, knowing little of the new country, settled in a commercial center. As their son grew to manhood, it is true they found him employment in one of the many factories, he even became head weaver in the largest, but it was left to him, Patrick Kelley, to go still farther toward the west and find that which they had come to seek—a land so rich in itself that it would yield for the slightest effort, not a bare subsistence, but a comfortable living.

In 1885, then, Patrick Kelley located on a Montana farm, situated in the fertile Bitter Root valley four miles from Missoula. Here he lived in plenty until a few years since, when he retired from active life. He purchased for himself a home in the city of Missoula, there to finish his useful life surrounded by every comfort, each one of which speaks to him of some effort of his own. His wife, Hannah Gallagher Kelley, born like himself in the Land of the Saints, lived long enough to enjoy for herself the fruits of their joint labors and to see their son, W. L. Kelley, take rank among his peers in the land of their adoption. She died in 1884.

The son received his elementary education in the district schools of Missoula county. Few city products can brag of a training more thorough, even though it was, at times, gained under difficulties. Later, he graduated from the Garden City Commercial College.

From his boyhood he showed signs of becoming the good "mixer" that he is. Even in the boyish sports he kept pushing to the front. Hardly was he out of school when Mr. Prescott, then sheriff of Missoula county, appointed him as his deputy. This was in 1900. In 1902, when the term had expired, Mr. Kelley embarked for himself in the grocery business, but his commercial career was suddenly cut short when the general superintendent of the Northern Pacific Railway sought him as his private secretary. For only one year did he remain with Mr. Gibson, as at the end of that time the company asked him to fill a clerical position in Butte during some emergency.

Upon his return to Missoula, he entered the employ of D. J. Donahue, doing the book work for the firm. When he left them it was to become chief clerk for S. W. Ramstell, who was at that time chief engineer for the Milwaukee Railroad—during the construction of their line in western Montana.

Mr. Kelley may have been like the proverbial rolling stone. There was certainly never time for him to gather any moss. Perhaps, in this case the stone gathered solidity and polish as it rolled. He certainly never held any one position long, but the new one was always a bit better than the old had been.

In 1907 he became under sheriff once more, this time for H. B. Campbell. Two years later, he was chosen deputy clerk of the district court, a position of much local prominence, and in 1910 he was elected sheriff of the county, an office that he is peculiarly fitted to fill well. November 5, 1912, he was re-elected to the same position by 403 majority, the first sheriff in Missoula county in eighteen years to be re-elected.

Eleven years ago Mr. Kelley was united in marriage to Miss Clare Gendreau, decidedly not of her husband's nationality. Miss Gendreau had come to Montana from Boston, Massachusetts, her native state. Their union has been blessed by the birth of four children: Viola D., who was born in 1902, her sister Loretta M., one year younger, and two brothers, Francis W., aged four, and Daniel L., aged two.

Is it necessary to say that Mr. Kelley is a Democrat? He is a politician not so much from choice, perhaps, as by nature. It is as natural for him to lead as for many men to follow. He is interested in his fellow men and in all that concerns their welfare, hence he must do his part toward the making and enforcing of the laws that govern them.

CHARLES W. GOODALE. The mining industry of Montana has in the person of Charles W. Goodale one of its ablest exponents and most active operators, while the city of Butte regards him as one of her most valuable citizens and men of affairs. A graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, at Boston, Mr. Goodale has been connected with mines and mining matters since his early manhood, and with the passing of the years he has won for himself a reputation for ability in that wide field of industry that is second to none in the state of Montana.

Not only has he become prominent in that particular line, but he has become a power in many other industries, financial and industrial, and his wide affiliation with the best clubs and societies has won to him further popularity which he well merits, in recognition of his genial and kindly disposition.

A man of fine intellectual attainments, travel and culture, Mr. Goodale is representative of the best in western social circles, and his friends are limited only by the bounds of his acquaintance.

He was born in Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands, on the 6th of September, 1854, a son of Warren and Ellen F. (Whitmore) Goodale. The father was born at Marlboro, Massachusetts, in 1825, and died in Honolulu, February, 1897, at the age of seventy-two. Warren Goodale prepared for Yale and while a student at that institution, was obliged to give up his studies owing to trouble with his eyes. A long sea voyage was recommended as means of securing relief, and he started for the Hawaiian Islands, where his aunt, Lucy Thurston, had been for many years engaged in missionary work. Mr. Goodale made the journey around Cape Horn, in 1849, at the time the exodus to the newly discovered gold fields in California was at its height, and proceeded on to his destination. Arriving in Honolulu, in 1849, Mr. Goodale soon afterward became a teacher in the Royal School, and subsequently was appointed marshal of the kingdom, later becoming collector of customs at Honolulu. In 1852 he returned to the United States and was married at Tahlequah, Indian Territory, on the 17th of June, that year, to Miss Ellen F. Whitmore, after an engagement of several years. Mrs. Goodale was the daughter of Levi and Mehitabel Whitmore, natives of Marlboro, Massachusetts, and a lady of unusual intelligence, who in her maiden days was deeply interested in the condition of the American Indian and gave much thought to the matter of their improvement. In 1850, she went to Indian Territory to teach in the Indian schools, and spent two years there as principal of a school established by Chief John Ross of the Cherokee tribes. In those days modes of travel in that section of the country were most primitive, and the journey of the young lady from her eastern home to the wilds of, what was then, Indian Territory is worthy of some mention. Leaving Philadelphia by rail she journeyed thus to Johnstown, Pennsylvania, from thence by canal to Pittsburg, and from there to Cincinnati by steamer "Robert Rogers;" down the Ohio river from Cincinnati to Louisville, Kentucky, by the steamer "Lady Franklin" and then started for Cairo, Illinois, by the steamer "Empress." En route to Cairo this steamer went aground and the passengers were transferred to the steamer "Julia Dean," which landed them at Cairo; next to Memphis and the mouth of the Arkansas river by the steamer "Sultana," then by another steamboat as far as Richmond, Arkansas, and from the latter place to Tahlequah, Indian Territory, by stage coach and wagon, the trip being quite a rough and hazardous one, especially towards the latter end. She reached Tahlequah, her destination, on November 13th, having been en route since the 3d of October.

After his marriage, Warren Goodale with his bride visited their former homes in New England, then started on the long journey to Honolulu, where their home was established and maintained until the death of Mrs. Goodale, in 1861. After this sad event, the father and family of five children returned to the United States and took up their home in Massachusetts.

This was shortly after the outbreak of the Civil war, and Warren Goodale enlisted in the Eleventh Massachusetts Battery, and was active in that great struggle until its close, rising to the rank of captain.

Following the close of the Civil war, Mr. Goodale returned to Honolulu and becoming connected with the sugar business in that country, continued to reside there until his death in February, 1897, at the age of seventy-two. Of his five children all are now living, except one daughter, Mary E., who died at Great Falls, Montana, on September 19, 1908.

Charles W. Goodale was but a boy of six years when he was brought to the United States by his father, and left in the care of an uncle on the old Goodale homestead in Marlboro, Massachusetts. This fine old estate has been in the Goodale family for the past two hundred years. In this old New England town Mr. Goodale attended the public and high schools, after which he was graduated from the English high school in Boston, in 1871. He followed this training by a course of study in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, graduating from that fine old institution in 1875, with the degree of Bachelor of Sciences. He first became associated with the Boston and Colorado Smelting Company after leaving college, and for five years he continued in the employ of that company, one year in Boston, and four years in Black Hawk, Colorado.

He then became connected with the Boston & Arizona Smelting Company at Tombstone, Arizona, and was five years with them, after which, in 1885, he entered the service of the Colorado Smelting & Mining Company at Butte, Montana, and was for thirteen years in their employ. In 1898, Mr. Goodale became connected with the Boston & Montana Mining Company, as superintendent at Great Falls, residing in that city from 1898 to 1901. In December of the latter year he became manager of the Boston & Montana Mining Company, a department of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, in which important capacity he has since remained.

Mr. Goodale is regarded as one of the most able mining men in the country, and is prominent in those societies which have a bearing upon his profession. He is a member of the American Institute of Mining Engineers; of the Mining and Metallurgical Society of America; of the Institute of Mining and Metallurgy of Great Britain; of the American Mining Congress, and served one year as its treasurer; of the Colorado Scientific Society and of the Montana Society of Engineers. He is a director of the First National Bank of Great Falls, Montana, and is president of the Barnes-King Development Company. In his political faith he is a Republican, and, in 1888, served as alderman from the Second ward in Butte.

Mr. Goodale is especially prominent in club circles, holding membership in the Silver Bow Club, of Butte; the Montana Club, of Helena; the Anaconda Club, of Anaconda; the Electric City Club, of Great Falls, and the Engineers Club, of New York City. He is a member of the Episcopal church, and is a vestryman therein.

Mr. Goodale is very fond of out of door exercise, golf being his chief recreation, and is an enthusiastic member of the Butte Country Club.

He has but recently returned from a trip to the Hawaiian Islands and Japan, made in company with a party of eighty, of the American Institute of Mining Engineers, who were guests, while in Japan, of the Mining Institute of Japan. In 1910 he was a member of a similar party that visited the Panama canal, these being but two of many trips, of a similar character, that he has taken.

EDWARD CODDINGTON BABCOCK, founder of the well-known firm of E. C. Babcock & Company, which for many years occupied a high place in commercial circles in this section of the state, was recognized as one of the leading merchants of Helena. His career as a business man and as a citizen was without mark or blemish, and his passing robbed Helena of one of the leading spirits in her communal and civic life. Of rugged New England ancestry, he came of a family of merchants. He was the son of Draper Babcock and his wife, Mary Elliott, the latter being a descendant of the noted Elliott (or Eliot) of Massachusetts, and was one of the four children of these parents, named as follows: Edward C.; Howard E., who was associated for a time with his brother Edward C., in Montana, but died in Monmouth; Jennie, the widow of Allen B. Seaman, who was a well-known attorney, of Denver, Colorado; Lucious A., a resident of Monmouth, Illinois, and the father of two sons,—Draper and Elliott Coddington Babcock.

Draper Babcock was the son of Elisha Coddington Babcock, a pioneer merchant of Monmouth, Illinois, where he for years conducted the leading and largest mercantile business in the place, in which he was succeeded by his son, Draper, who continued in the business for many years, retiring a few years prior to his death. One of the maternal ancestors of Mr. Babcock of this review was Gov. William Coddington, prominent in the colonial history of Rhode Island, and one of the original proprietors of Providence plantations. The original American progenitor of the house of Babcock was James, who came from England and settled at Portsmouth, Rhode Island, prior to 1665, and later moved to Westerly, Rhode Island. From him descended the greater portion of those bearing the name of Babcock in America today. Edward Coddington Babcock was born at Monmouth, Illinois, on March 27, 1854, and received his early education in the schools of that city, and in Monmouth College, of which his father was one of the founders. He later attended Cornell University. Following the completion of his educational training, he entered his father's store, where for two years he received excellent mercantile training under the direction of his father. It was the wish of the elder Babcock that his son continue with him in the old established business, which had come down to him from his father, but Edward Babcock was anxious to have an independent career of his own making. He accordingly came to the west, locating in Leadville, Colorado, which was at that time experiencing a boom of considerable importance, and there he established a clothing and men's furnishing store, which he conducted with marked success for two years. He then sold out, the venture netting him a nice profit. In 1885 he came to Montana, locating first at Butte, where he established a similar store on North Main street. One year later he was joined by his brother, Howard E., who remained in charge of the Butte store and Edward C. Babcock came to Helena, where he opened the store of Babcock & Company, on Main street, opposite Broadway, then one of the choice locations of the city. Later, the keen foresight of Mr. Babcock was evidenced when he moved the business to Main street, near Sixth avenue, and as in the former location, the store was located in the heart of the business center within a short time after he made the move. Here he continued and was engaged in business at this location at the time of his death.

For about three years Mr. Babcock was in indifferent health, and he made frequent trips to other climates in the hope of receiving benefit. He was at all times, however, the head and heart of his business. On the occasion of his leaving the city and upon his return from trips of this nature, the Helena press almost invariably made reference with regret to the necessity which compelled his absence, and pleasure on his return. While in Los Angeles, California, in search of health, his death came quite suddenly, on January 1, 1910, and he was laid to rest, as was his oft expressed wish, in the family lot beside his parents, at Monmouth, Illinois, his native place and boyhood home.

Mr. Babcock was a very successful merchant,—perhaps none in this section of the state gained a greater success in that business than did he. He was a Republican in his political faith, and while he displayed an interest in the election of good men to the public offices, he took no active part in political affairs beyond the casting of his vote. He was a member of no secret societies or similar organizations, but was especially fond of his home and home life, and the pleasures that other men are wont to find in the convivialities of club and fraternal life, he found in his own home, wherein he enjoyed the most ideal domestic relations. He was fond of travel, and with Mrs. Babcock had visited practically every section of interest in this country, and in 1900 and again in 1907 they made European tours.

Mr. Babcock was a man who possessed unusual artistic ability, and his home contained many works of art that he had collected during his travels. He was a man of the most admirable public spirit and was found ever ready to assist in any movement that tended toward the advancement of his city and state. He was noted for the strength of his likes and dislikes, and was an ideal friend, stanch and true in all his friendships, and, indeed, in all the relations of life.

On March 27, 1910, following his death and on the fifty-sixth anniversary of his birth, Mrs. Babcock, in his memory, established the Edward C. Babcock room in St. Peter's Hospital at Helena.

October 13, 1881, at Monmouth, Illinois, Mr. Babcock was married to Miss Minnie R. Swain, a native of that place and the daughter of Alexander Hamilton and Mary Louise (Brewer) Swain, the parents being of English, Scotch and Swiss extraction. Alexander H. Swain, father of Mrs. Babcock, established and for thirty years owned the Monmouth Review, a leading Democratic paper of that section of the state. Mrs. Babcock continues her residence at Helena, on Harrison avenue, her home being one of the handsome residences of the city.

Referring further to the death of Mr. Babcock, the following article appeared in the Treasure State, a Montana publication, which is deemed worthy of perpetuation in this connection: "The effective citizenship of such men as Edward C. Babcock of Helena, who died in southern California the other day, does not perish with them. It will remain for all time as a standard for the emulation of his contemporaries and for the guidance of the younger generations who know and value the intrinsic merits of his career. Mr. Babcock, by instinct and training, was a merchant par excellence. Into the commerce which he held with men, he brought a quality of dignity, of justice, of high toned idea that is too often wanting in the business activities of mankind. Early he found and always held to the idea of excellence, and he expressed it always through the only medium of expression that is open to the professed merchant. Consideration for others, a ceaseless effort to be both fair and generous, a dignified simlicity in his relations with the public, and always a hint of modest, undemonstrative patricianism in the conduct of his private life and personal affairs. His fight, a long and bitter one, against the fatal malady which grew upon him for the last years, was fought with a quiet doggedness none the less admirable for that he himself knew what must be its culmination. Death has few terrors and sometimes brings no regret to those who face him in old age; but it is hard for the young to die bravely, and Mr. Babcock was yet a young man. Helena will always remember him as one of the representative young business men, his death a distinct calamity and his place in the life of the capital city difficult to fill."

The Helena Daily Independent, in an editorial, said of him: "The death of Edward C. Babcock removed from the field of activity a man prominently identified with the commercial interests of Helena for a quarter of a century. Soon after the incoming of the railroads to Montana, Mr. Babcock, with an instinctive longing for the vigorous activities of the west, left his home in Illinois and came to the Treasure state. After a brief view of the surroundings, he chose Helena for his home and to the day of his death he maintained allegiance to the city of his adoption.

"For several years the ravages of disease undermined his strength and at frequent intervals he found it necessary to follow the advice of his physicians and seek whatever benefits may be had in a changed clime. But during these trips abroad his loyalty to the little city in the heart of the Rockies, which he called home, was most marked, and he longed always to return. Mr. Babcock was a man of exceeding honor and probity. In his daily life and in his intercourse with friends and neighbors he earned their sincere respect and admiration. He was a public-spirited citizen and ranked high among the business men of Montana. His death is a distinct loss to this community and his departure will be mourned by a large circle of friends, not only in Helena, but throughout the state."

ELLWOOD H. FISHER. A residence covering a period of a quarter of a century in Bozeman, during which time he has been connected with some of the leading industries of the city, gives Ellwood H. Fisher prestige among the leading business men of his locality, and as secretary and treasurer of the Owenhouse Hardware Company he is known as one of the directing powers in an enterprise that has added prestige to the city's commercial importance. Mr. Fisher was born in Bucks county, Pennsylvania, June 26, 1855, and is a son of Manning Force and Harriet (Rittenhouse) Fisher, natives of Hunterdon county, New Jersey.

Manning Force Fisher was born in 1824 and secured his education in the schools of New Jersey, from which state he removed as a young man to Bucks county, Pennsylvania, and was there engaged in the coal business. He subsequently followed the same line of endeavor in Jersey City, New Jersey, and New York City, and died in 1863, in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church. He was a strong anti-slavery man and a great admirer of Abraham Lincoln, and although his age and illness precluded the idea of his enlisting as a soldier, during the first years of the Civil war he gave his moral and financial support to the Union cause. His wife, who was born in 1829, passed away in 1884, having been the mother of seven children, of whom three are now living, namely: Charles, a resident of Newark, New Jersey; Ellwood H.; and Manning L., of Cleveland, Ohio.

The education of Ellwood H. Fisher was secured in the public schools of Jersey City, and when still a lad he began to clerk in a store in New York City, having lost his father when he was only eight years old. The year 1885 marked his advent in Montana, and for two years thereafter he was identified with the sheep business at Big Timber, Sweetgrass county. In 1887 he came to Bozeman, where he became bookkeeper for the Nelson Story Milling Company, but in 1890 embarked in business on his own account as the proprietor of a grocery store. Three years later this was merged with the Genepe-Owenhouse Company, a general merchandise house, and in 1905 Owenhouse & Fisher took over the business and incorporated it under the name of the Owenhouse Hardware Company, which has become one of the leading establishments of its kind in Bozeman. Among the articles handled by this firm are Buick automobiles, Parlin & Orendorff farm implements, Deering farm machinery, Advance threshing machinery, Lightning hay presses, DeLaval separators, Monarch ranges, Cole's "Air-Tight" heaters and Lincoln paints, as well as a full line of carriages and harness, and a large stock of all kinds of light and heavy hardware. Since his earliest boyhood, Mr. Fisher has displayed ability of a high order and a progressive spirit that refused to recognize any obstacle as insurmountable. Self-reliant and well balanced, his judgment has been recognized by his business associates, among whom he bears the highest reputation for integrity and honest business principles.

On October 4, 1882, Mr. Fisher was married to Miss Clara V. McCabe, who was born in Jersey City, daughter of Charles P. McCabe, born in Vineland, New Jersey. The mother was a native of Chestnut Hill, near Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Mrs. Fisher's parents, who are both deceased, had seven children, of whom four are now living, she having been the third in order of birth. Her father, a wholesale butter merchant for a number of years, was a staunch Republican and a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. and Mrs. Fisher have had four children: Clara, who died in 1907, at the age of twenty-three years; Charles B.; Helen; and Lillian, who died in infancy.

Mr. and Mrs. Fisher are leading members of the Methodist Episcopal church, in which Mr. Fisher has been a Sunday school teacher for a long period, and is now acting in the capacity of teacher of Adner Bible class. In political matters he is a Republican, but has never cared to enter the public arena.

J. W. LENNING, principal of the Benton high school, Fort Benton, Montana, is a worthy representative of his high calling. The teaching profession has only within recent years received the honor which was its due, but lately it has been brought before the people, and they have come to realize that those men and women who have in their charge the training of the children who will in time become citizens of the United States, have perhaps the noblest work of the day. The demands that are being placed upon the profession are becoming every day more severe. To-day a lawyer may prepare for his profession in a shorter time than the teacher, and the teacher must not only be intellectually fit for the position, but his moral and physical qualifications must also undergo a searching scrutiny. Therefore when it is said that Mr. Lenning occupies a high place in his profession one must stop and think what this means.

Mr. Lenning was born in Burlington, Indiana, on the 5th of August, 1872. He was the son of D. A. Lenning, who was a native of Kentucky, removing to Indiana, after he had reached manhood. He is still living, having reached the age of seventy-two and is still engaged in active life, being superintendent of mines. He married Philonia Kidd, who was a native of Indiana, the marriage taking place in that state. She died in 1900, at the age of forty-two, and is buried in the state in which she was born. Three sons were born to this couple, of whom J. W. Lenning is the eldest.

Mr. Lenning was educated in the schools in his home town and when he advanced beyond their curriculum, he was sent to the Indiana State Normal. Since taking up teaching he has never ceased to be a student, and since coming to Montana has attended the Montana State Normal and the Montana State University, from which he was graduated in the class of 1901. He has also taken a post-graduate course at the University of California, at Berkeley. Mr. Lenning had his first experience in teaching in the schools of Woodside, Indiana. He then determined that the West offered the best opportunities in his profession so he came to Montana, and taught school in White Sulphur Springs, for a time. Upon leaving this place he went to Marysville and later came to Fort Benton. He was made superintendent of the Fort Benton schools in 1904, and has held the position up to the present time. He has made a most efficient executive, and has accomplished much for the schools. He has also won popularity both from the children and from their parents. This is a bit unusual but is due to the fact that while Mr. Lenning has the characteristics that enforce respect when respect is necessary, he also has a delightful sociability, and is the master only during school hours.

Mr. Lenning is unmarried. In politics he is a member of the Republican party, and his religious affiliations are with the Protestant Episcopal church. He is interested in fraternal organizations to the extent of belonging to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. One thinks of the teaching profession as being too poorly paid for a man to make more than a bare living at it, and indeed this is practically true, but Mr. Lenning has been able to save enough to invest in a very fine ranch in Chouteau county, and has been able to indulge his fondness for out-of-door life on his own property. He is fond of most sports, and attributes his health to the fact that he spends as much of his spare time as possible in the open air.

MAJOR MARCUS D. BALDWIN. Among the men of Montana, Major Baldwin holds a most firmly established place, and in a history of and biographical work of this nature, it is particularly consistent with the purpose of the publication that mention be set forth of his career thus far, and the many worthy and far-reaching results of his activities in the state to which he has given the best years of his life. As lawyer, Indian agent and statesman, his life has been from the beginning of his business career, one of the most strenuous activity, and the results that have accrued from his unremitting labors in the development of the state that has come to mean home to him are of no meager order.

Marcus D. Baldwin was born in Fremont, Ohio, on September 25, 1851, and is the son of Eleazer and Harriet (Dana) Baldwin. The father was a farmer from the old Green Mountain state, and was also identified there with the manufacturing interests of his locality. He was born in 1813 and died at Woodville, Ohio, in 1900, at the age of seventy-seven years. He came of a long lived family, his mother reaching the age of ninety-four and his grandmother one hundred and one years. His father was a soldier in the War of 1812, and his grandfather was a veteran of the Revolutionary war. The mother of Major Baldwin, Harriet (Dana) Baldwin, born in New York, was a daughter of Joseph Dana of Vermont, and Alcy (Lockwood) Dana also of that state. Israel Putnam, of Revolutionary fame, was a relative of Harriet (Dana) Baldwin. She died in 1883 at Greenspring Ohio, at the age of seventy-one years.

Marcus D. Baldwin as a boy attended the schools of Toledo, Ohio, and after his graduation from the high school of that city attended Oberlin College, at Oberlin, Ohio, after which he was a student in the Normal school at Republic, Ohio, finishing there in 1871. While he was attending school he passed his vacations at work in the stave mills of his father in Toledo, Ohio, and during the winter months of the succeeding year he taught school and read law. So well ordered were his studies and so well he applied his energies that when he was twenty-one he was admitted to the bar of the state of Ohio. He began his practice in Fremont, and was very soon elected to the office of city attorney, an office which he held for six consecutive years, and for six years was examiner of school teachers for Sandusky county, Ohio. At the end of that time he left Fremont and went to Paulding, Ohio, there continuing in the practice of his profession until 1885, when President Cleveland appointed him Indian agent for the Blackfeet, Blood and Piegan Indians, and he came to Montana in that year to assume charge of the agency. The work of the young man in that exacting position was of a character that gave eloquent testimony of his many excellent qualities and the promise of continued successes in the years to come. He succeeded in interesting the Blackfeet Indians in the science of agriculture and cattle raising, and under his wise guidance and understanding and sympathetic treatment, they have reached a state of practical independence and comparative civilization, highly commendatory to the labors which Major Baldwin performed among them. His treatment was such, as to secure their friendship, good will and confidence and he still continues to be their friend and legal adviser. Northern Montana has been free from Indian depredations ever since he took charge of these Indians, and the early settlers felt secure as to life and property during his administration of Indian affairs. In the winter of 1886-7 he was instrumental in effecting a treaty with the Blackfeet, Piegan and Blood Indians, whereby eighteen million acres of the most fertile land in Montana was restored to the public domain. This land embraces the territory lying east of the crest of the Rocky mountains and north of the Marias and Missouri rivers, and is today the home of thousands of settlers, while cities and villages are well distributed over the area. Railroads traverse it in a manner to afford transportation to the people and their products, and the country thereabout is in a splendid state of development. In 1889 Mr. Baldwin resigned his post in the Indian service and came to the Flathead valley, where he fitted out a party to explore the country lying between this valley and the Marias Pass, as well as to obtain information as to its agricultural and timber resources. After spending several weeks in this undertaking he visited James J. Hill, and gave him a report of his observations. Mr. Hill, without delay sent an engineer over the route described by Mr. Baldwin, and his report corroborated that of Mr. Baldwin. Within two years from that time the Great Northern Railway was operating its main line through this territory to the Pacific seaboard. The first brick block in Kalispell was built by Mr. Baldwin and his partner, and it was through his efforts that Kalispell township was created and organized and the city of Kalispell incorporated. He took an active part at Helena in having the Flathead county created, the same making a division of Missoula county, and Kalispell became the county seat of the new county. He drafted the articles of incorporation for the Flathead Fair Association and was one of the incorporators thereof, serving also as a member of its executive committee for several years. This fair association is perhaps the most successful in the state, and has proven a great benefit to Northern Montana.

Since locating in Kalispell Mr. Baldwin has continued in law practice. He is a member of the bar of the supreme court of the United States and is president of the Flathead County Bar Association. He is also a member of the board of trustees of the Flathead County High school, which has a high standing among the schools of Montana.

Major Baldwin is an ardent sportsman, and this trait had much to do with his making his home in the Flathead valley, as it is so well stocked with game as to be known as the "Sportsman's Paradise." His activity in stocking the lakes and streams of this valley with game fish led to his appointment as a member of the fish commission for the state of Montana, and the fine state fish hatchery on Flathead lake is mainly due to his work in this behalf.

Major Baldwin was a law partner for a number of years of Hon. W. D. Hill, who was chairman of the committee on territories, at the time when Montana was admitted to the state, and in further connection with his public work, it may be said that it was largely through his instrumentality that the land office came to be located at Kalispell.

Major Baldwin is a member of the Knights of Pythias, and his politics are those of a Democrat. He has been honored by his party in his election as a delegate-at-large by the Democracy of Montana to attend the National Democratic Convention held at Baltimore, Maryland, on June 25, 1912. In addition to his legal activities in this section of the state, the major has been for twenty-three years, and now is a member of the firm of Baldwin, Tuthill & Bolton of Grand Rapids, Michigan, manufacturers of saw mill and wood working machinery.

On October 31, 1874, Mr. Baldwin was united in marriage with Miss Sarah E. Rogers, of Shelby, Ohio. She is a daughter of Jacob and Harriet (Spangler) Rogers, an old Revolutionary family of Pennsylvania, her ancestors on both sides of the house having been prominent in colonial days and having given service in the Continental army. Her great-grandfather, George M. Spangler, was an ensign in the Revolutionary war and served in the battle of Bunker Hill. He moulded bullets for Gen. George Washington, and the major has in his possession some of the bullets cast by Ensign Spangler. Mrs. Baldwin is a member of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and through the service of Ensign Spangler, who was an officer of the New Jersey Flying Camp, male descendants of that patriot are entitled to membership in the Order of Cincinnati.

Six children were born to Major and Mrs. Baldwin, of which number two are deceased,—Harriet, born at Shelby, Ohio, died while the family were residents of the Blackfeet reservation in 1886, at the age of ten years, and Elsie died in 1883. Their four living children are: Mark R., born at Shelby, Ohio, in 1878. He was the first soldier to enlist in Company H of the First Montana Regiment, for service in the Spanish-American war, and served in the Philippines with credit. He married Miss Nettie M. Stuft of Kalispell, their marriage taking place on February 26, 1903. Two children have been born to them,—Dan and Stanley, both born at Kalispell.

Philip Baldwin was born at Paulding, Ohio, in 1881. When he was eighteen years of age he went to Manila, Philippine Islands, and served for six months in the quartermaster's department. For the past eleven years he has been in the government service in the custom house at Manila, where he is employed as an expert in textiles and fabrics. He is a member of the Columbia Club of Manila.

Kokoa Baldwin is the wife of Charles D. Conrad, the vice-president of the Conrad National Bank of Kalispell. Mrs. Conrad was born on the Blackfeet reservation in 1888, she being the first white child born thereon. They have two children,—Kokoa and Charles E. Mrs. Conrad, like her mother, is a member of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

The youngest child of Major and Mrs. Baldwin is Charles Spangler Baldwin, born August 12, 1893, in Flathead county. At the present time he is attending the high school in Kalispell.

The family are members of the Episcopal church, and also of the Sons and Daughters of the American Revolution.

tion, to which they are eligible for membership on both the maternal and paternal claims, an unusual occurrence, and a circumstances of which they are justly proud.

WILLIAM J. MULLIGAN. One of the best known and most popular railroad conductors connected with the passenger service of the Northern Pacific is William J. Mulligan, of 903 Kendrick avenue, Glendive, Montana, who has also been prominently connected with fraternal work in this city, and a member of a family which has long been identified with the interests of the Treasure state. He was born at Camp Douglass, Utah, January 4, 1870, and is a son of William J. and Mary (O'Hara) Mulligan. His maternal grandmother, Margaret O'Hara, a native of Florida, came to Montana in 1866 and is now living at Fort Ellis, being in her eighty-second year; she was a nurse during the Mexican and Civil wars, and at one time was superintendent of Leavenworth Hospital. Her home now is in Billings, Montana. The grandfather of Mr. Mulligan served in the Civil war, and after the close of hostilities re-enlisted in the army and participated in a number of battles and skirmishes with the Indians. He assisted in building Fort Ellis and while there took part in the trouble with the Cheyennes.

Mr. Mulligan's father was born in Ireland in 1846 and came to this country in his youth on a sailing vessel, landing at New York City, where he enlisted in the New York state cavalry, later becoming bugler for Gen. Phil Sheridan, and when the Civil war closed became a member of the regular army, his service taking him to Nebraska, Wyoming, Utah, Dakota and Montana. During the twenty-five years that he was in the service of his adopted country he acted in various capacities and was at one time a member of the band of the Second United States Cavalry, but eventually retired from the service at Fort Ellensworth, Vermont, and since 1908 has been living in Sacramento, California. His wife, who was a native of Fort Smith, Arkansas, died at the age of fifty-six years, having been the mother of eleven children, of whom four sons and four daughters still survive, and of these, William J. is the eldest. As a brave and faithful soldier, ready at all times to perform his full duty, Mr. Mulligan was honored and respected by his comrades and officers, and had the added distinction of being one of those to assist in putting up Custer monument.

A large portion of the boyhood of William J. Mulligan was spent at various forts throughout the west. When he was a small lad he was at Fort Cheyenne, Fort Saunders, Fort Steele and Medicine Bow, and on coming to Montana resided at Fort Custer and at Fort Keough, near the present city of Miles City, where he attended the first school erected there. His parents then accompanied the army to Fort Walla Walla, Fort Wingate and finally to Fort Ellensworth, Vermont, where his father left the service and retired.

Mr. Mulligan earned his first money working for Paul McCormick, his duties being driving a mail wagon and running a ferry across the Yellowstone river. Later he became a cowboy for Mr. McCormick and subsequently for the H. X. ranch, but eventually returned to Junction. The Northern Pacific having completed its building, Mr. Mulligan then secured employment in the freight house, working at Livingston until 1886, and subsequently became a fireman for the railroad. In 1898 he was made freight brakeman and on April 17, 1900, began his duties as conductor of a freight train. Since 1909 he has had a passenger run. During the many years that he followed railroading in this section, Mr. Mulligan had gained a wide acquaintance, and his popularity has been gained through a courteous and genial manner and the faithful discharge of his duties. He is a member of Hiram Lodge No. 52, A. F. & A. M., at Forsyth; Yellowstone Chapter No. 5, R. A. M., at Glendive; and Damascus Commandery No. 4; he is a member of the Knights of Pythias, the Order of Railroad Conductors, of which he is secretary at Forsyth; and Yellowstone Chapter No. 5, Order of the Eastern Star, of which his wife is also a member. In political matters he is a Democrat, but has never cared for public office, although at all times ready to lend his influence in behalf of any movements which promise to be of benefit to his community.

Mr. Mulligan became acquainted at Forsyth, Montana, with Miss Zelda A. Campbell, and on January 14, 1904, they were married. She was born at Nevada, Missouri, and is the daughter of William H. and Ruth Campbell, natives of Missouri and residents of Little Rock, Arkansas, where Mr. Campbell is engaged in fruit growing. Mrs. Mulligan is the eldest but one of the five children of her parents, four of whom are living, and she was educated at Warrensburg, Missouri. Later she taught school at Ekoloka and Forsyth, Montana, and while teaching in the latter named city, met her husband. They have one daughter, Ethel Elizabeth Mulligan.

WILLIAM HARRISON COBURN. It will not be gainsaid by any resident of Boulder that one of the city's most energetic, progressive and generally valuable and admirable young citizens is William Harrison Coburn. The possessor of splendid executive qualities and an energy that never flags, his success is a logical result. He is extremely versatile and has been interested in many fields of endeavor in his less than thirty years, among them being ranching, mercantile business, hotel business and now is in charge of the Boulder Mine Company, whose interests he has successfully managed for a number of years.

Although of southern parentage, William Harrison Coburn is a son of the great West. He was born in Meacham, Oregon, June 18, 1884, and lived there for the first twelve months of his life. His parents then removed to Boulder, Montana, and there he lived until 1898, and then went to Meagher and Fergus counties. There he resided for the ten years previous to 1908, in which year he came back to Boulder. He began the life of a rancher as a boy but tired of the life to some extent in time and at the age of nineteen went to White Sulphur Springs, Montana, and entered mercantile business at this place. His first position of this character was as an assistant to Anderson Spencer, manager of a mercantile company, and he remained in this association for about six years.

Mr. Coburn decided to cast his fortunes with the new town of Roundup, Montana, and he opened up the first mercantile establishment in the place for D. P. Mumbrue, a railroad contractor, who was concerned with the building of a railroad through the West. Mr. Coburn, whose identification with any business seems to spell success, developed the Roundup enterprise into a successful concern and then sold it for Mr. Mumbrue to H. E. Marshall, who still continues it. After disposing of all his Roundup interests, the subject went to Lewistown, Montana, where his grandfather, Mr. William Trotter, was engaged in the management of the Day House, and there Mr. Coburn tried the role of "Mine Host." In this as in all other endeavors he was eminently successful, being so well fitted to inspire the confidence of his patrons, that he might consistently have chosen this business permanently, had his interests not been in other directions. His grandfather, however, became ill and sold the hotel. It was following that that Mr. Coburn returned to his childhood home—Boulder. He at once took charge of the Boulder Mine Company and has ever since devoted his energies to its affairs. This is one of Jefferson county's largest and most important institutions.

A glance at Mr. Coburn's history shows him ever to have been a very self-reliant young fellow. He earned his first dollar when in Butte, working for his uncle John Berkin, in the Raven Mine, as top boy. His education was received in the public schools at Boulder, but he did not have the advantage of a high school training, as Boulder boasted no higher department to its schools in those days. He belongs, if any one does, to that splendid company—the self made man, and he is almost as strenuous as a certain popular American hero, believing in keeping busy all the time. He has filled a number of positions and most of them have been executive positions. In Meagher and Fergus counties he still retains ranching interests, and he is very loyal to the glorious state of Montana.

In the matter of politics Mr. Coburn has Republican inclinations, but he is far too busy to take an active interest in politics, although, like all intelligent voters he sees the necessity of keeping posted as to current events. His fraternal connections are with the Masons and the Elks, and in the former time-honored order he takes great interest. He is fond of all out-door amusements and pursuits and very appropriately holds the office of deputy state game and fishwarden, for Jefferson county. He is fond of good reading and believes that "He who loves a book never lacks a friend," although he is by no means in want of the latter. In the matter of religion he is a communicant of the Episcopal church.

Mr. Coburn was married November 30, 1909, at Lewistown, Montana, the young woman to become his wife and the mistress of his household being Mabel E. Hoffman, daughter of John and Sadie Hoffman. They have no children.

In glancing at Mr. Coburn's forbears we find that his father, James Coburn, was born in Louisville, Kentucky, but came west first to Oregon and then to Montana. He ultimately engaged in railroad contracting for a number of years, but is now retired, traveling continually and having no permanent residence. The elder gentleman was married in Oregon to Mable Stafford, daughter of George and Mabel Stafford. She is a native of Iowa. Mr. Coburn of this review is the eldest of the three children born to this worthy couple. The subject's maternal grandfather, George Stafford, came to Iowa in his young manhood and died there when his children were very young. His wife's maiden name was Sarah Harris. She is a native of Virginia and is now living in Boulder, having made this her home off and on for a quarter century. The subject's step-grandfather, William Berkin, is still living in Meagher county, aged about eighty-six years. He is one of Montana's stanchest pioneers and shipped the first boat load of ore out to Butte. The ore was hauled by wagon to Fort Benton and then by water to Swansea in Wales. He still has the original bill of lading. The late Colonel Sanders was a great friend of the Coburn family and he and Mr. Berkin were associated in freighting interests in the early days. Mr. Berkin's postoffice address is Lewis postoffice, Meagher county, Montana.

PETER MILLER was born on the twenty-second day of December, 1860, at Oberammerstadt, a suburb of Darmstadt, Germany. Johannes Conrad Miller, his father was a German farmer, himself born in Oberammerstadt. He was an enthusiastic member of the Liberal party in the Fatherland and fought under Hecker and Struve in the unfortunate revolution of '48; fought for a German parliament, freedom of press, trial by jury and the formation of a popular militia. Government and historians of Germany have alike tried to draw a veil across this chapter in the life of the nation. Possibly the bloodshed might have been averted, but the fact remains that such men as Conrad Miller risked their lives for the principles that have since triumphed in their land and the struggle forms a landmark, a dividing point between the ancient and the modern political life of Germany.

After the adjustment following the war, Mr. Miller settled down to till the soil of his beloved province.

He won for his helpmate in future years Christina Geier, a native of Murdrick, Germany. She passed away in July of 1911 at the home of her oldest son, Johannes, in Darmstadt, being then in her seventy-eighth year. Mr. and Mrs. Miller were the parents of four children, one daughter Margaret; a son, Johannes, named for his father; Peter, the subject of this sketch, and Philipp, who still resides in his boyhood home.

Peter Miller received his early education in the schools of Germany under teachers who make the imparting of knowledge their real life work. At nineteen he immigrated to the United States with an education that most of our college men might well envy. He was thoroughly grounded in the common branches, spoke fluently several languages and was a specialist in botany and horticulture. This latter line of study he had diligently pursued during his vacations from general school work. In the spring of 1880 he landed in New York, his expert knowledge of plant life making his services valuable in any land. After one year in that city he moved to Pittsburg, where for three years he devoted himself to the floral business. Having heard much of the great opportunities of the west and knowing that the vast extent of tillable land would be more to his own liking, he left Pittsburg for North Dakota. In 1886, only a few months later, he pushed on to Helena, where he accepted employment in the firm of Miller & Rondy, florists. For only a year was he employed in this capacity before he began purchasing the business for himself. The property was run down and the hot houses neglected and in general need of repair. Not a day during his stay but that he saw where there was a leakage of time or money. Almost from the time of his purchase, his labor and scientific methods began to bring him a small return—small at first but rapidly increasing until now the old hot houses have been replaced with six splendid new ones of the largest size; the grounds are in perfect condition and the equipment of the most modern; and even, with the improvements, there has never been a year that the capital invested has not brought him a good return. Mr. Miller now has the distinction of being the oldest established and one of the best known florists in the entire state of Montana.

Four years after his becoming his own master in the business world, Mr. Miller won for his wife Miss Emeline Drake, a young woman who was born in the Adirondacks of New York State. They were married on the twenty-fifth of June, 1891, but only for twelve short years was she permitted to be the mother of the home. In the summer of 1903, she was attacked by a fatal illness, her life passing out with the summer. She left motherless, in the father's care, six little children, the oldest of whom, a son, Arthur, was not yet five years of age. Bessie, the third daughter and Sarah, the baby, have followed their mother. Arthur is now in his young manhood, while Ruth and Hattie have completed the public school education, and Henry is attending the schools of Helena.

Mr. Miller is devoted to his home and spends all of his leisure among his children and his books. He is a man of the keenest intelligence and has a surprising fund of general information, his knowledge of history being particularly wide and accurate. In his political views, he is independent, believing, like his father in all reforms that tend to strengthen the rights of the people. He is a member of the Sons of Herman and of the Germania Society. The family have for generations, been members of the Roman Catholic church.

FELIX LUDGER ST. JEAN, M. D. Among the successful physicians and progressive men of Anaconda, Montana, should be mentioned Dr. Felix L. St. Jean. He has been a resident of Anaconda for twenty-five years or more, and during this time has risen to prominence not only in his profession but as a business man and able man of affairs. A man now in his prime, the doctor has had years of valuable experience not only along professional lines but in the study of humanity, and his keen judgment of men has given him considerable influence over his friends and acquaintances, who cannot be blind to the observation that years of close contact with men has made possible. Therefore in standing for progressive measures, in deciding that the people are wise enough to govern the country, in spite of his having seen the worst of humanity, the doctor has influenced many to his way of thinking and has accomplished much for the cause of modern political thought in his section.

Dr. St. Jean was born in Sherrington, Canada, on the 9th of March, 1864. His father was Ludger St. Jean, who was born in Canada and is now living in Anaconda, where he follows commercial pursuits. His mother was Sophia Vautrin, also a native of Canada, who is also living in Anaconda. The doctor received his early education in the Montreal normal schools, and after the completion of his secondary education was sent to Laval University, from which he was graduated in the class of 1889, with the degree of M. B., M. D., C. M. He came to Montana before completing his course of study at the University, arriving in Anaconda where he was to make his future home in 1886. Upon receiving his diploma, he came directly to Anaconda and there entered upon the practice of his profession. His practice has grown with the years and now Dr. St. Jean has a large clientele both in the city and in the surrounding country. He is deeply interested in his work and gives his patients not only medical aid but hearty sympathy and brotherly kindness. Not content with preaching progress to others, he has acted on his own theories and has done much to add to the material prosperity of the city. He has built and now owns several business blocks, and is also the owner of a beautiful home. In a business way he is especially interested in mining and mineral lands. In 1890 he became the organizer of the Butte and Georgetown Mining and Milling Company, which owns a large and are gold-bearing placer mines. The future of the company, with the value of their property becoming each valuable property, consisting of mineral lands, whereon day more certain, is a brilliant one.

Doctor St. Jean is politically of the new party, the Progressive Republican, believing that the party standing as it does for reform and the tearing down of some of the custom-made laws that would seem to be a menace to the welfare of the people of the country, is the only one by which the common people of the land can obtain a fair show. As a believer in principles not in men, the doctor himself is one of the strongest arguments for the new party, for it is principles not men that always win in the long run.

Out-door life appeals to the doctor and he is particularly fond of spending a few weeks each year in camp out of reach of civilization. His automobile is also a great source of pleasure as well as being very necessary, for he and his wife spend much time driving around the country and visiting the mining camps. He is a member of a number of fraternal organizations, believing thoroughly, as one of his profession must, in the great principles of brotherhood that all of these organizations are based upon. He belongs to the National Union, the Maccabees, and to many others.

Dr. St. Jean was married to Miss Rosalbe N. Nadau in Butte, Montana, in 1893. Mrs. St. Jean was born in the town of Central Falls, Rhode Island. Four children have been born of this marriage: Aline Marie and Irene Martha are now in the high school; Felix Albert, and Jeanette Eugenie.

JUD A. HASLEY. In business and the general activities of citizenship, Anaconda has during the last quarter of a century had no citizen more prominent than Jud A. Hasley. His name and career need no introduction to the people of Anaconda, and in the history of the state his record has a proper and interesting place. He was born in the city of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, July 1, 1862, and got his education in the public schools of that city. The trade of plumbing has been the basis of his entire business career, and he was engaged in the installation of plumbing in large buildings of various cities throughout the northwest at a time when only the most modern private homes had any sort of equipment of this nature. The learning of his trade and the earning of his first wages came together while he was serving his apprenticeship in Milwaukee. His pay at the start was two dollars and a half per week, and the money he gave to his mother.

After acquiring his trade and reaching the age of twenty-one, Mr. Hasley spent several years as a journeyman in the original sense of the term. That is, for nearly a year he worked at St. Paul, then spent about six months in Kansas City, from there went to Omaha, where he stayed three months, and after that was at Denver for six months. While at St. Paul he worked on the plumbing contract for a new high school then being erected. In continuing his westward course from Denver, he took a very original method of travel and one very little employed then, and which at this modern time would seem even more hazardous and difficult than it perhaps seemed then. He rode out of Denver on one of the old high-wheeled bicycles, and with this vehicle performed the long journey through Salt Lake City to San Francisco, passing through the Yosemite Valley en route. After a short stay in San Francisco, Mr. Hasley came on to Montana, arriving at Helena in November, 1886, and has been a resident of this state ever since. His first job was in placing the plumbing in Sam Ward's residence, and then in the court house at Helena, where he remained nearly a year. During the following year at Butte he installed the plumbing for W. A. Clark's house and the old court house. At Missoula, where he was located for six months, he put in the plumbing for the Florence Hotel. The last stage of his journeyman career was Anaconda, where he came to do the plumbing for the Montana Hotel. This contract finished, he decided to make a permanent location here, and accordingly he opened a small shop and started business in a small way. Since then he has always kept the lead in his line of business, and for a number of years has enjoyed a very large and lucrative trade.

Mr. Hasley was married in Butte August 29, 1888, to Miss Cora B. O'Neil, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John O'Neil, of Laclede, Missouri. Two children have been born to their marriage: Edith M., now the wife of Frederick K. Brunton, of Anaconda; and William A., who is a student in the local high school.

The parents of Mr. Hasley, John B. and Catherine (Brunner) Hasley, were both born in Switzerland, and were married there. Soon afterward they came to the United States and located at Milwaukee, where the father spent the rest of his life. During the Civil war he was a soldier for several years in the Union army, and his body is now resting in the government cemetery at Milwaukee. His death occurred when he was eighty-one years old. The mother still survives and makes her home with a married daughter in Milwaukee. Of the five children in the family, Jud A. is the youngest.

Mr. Hasley and his wife are members of the Episcopal church in Anaconda. He has long been active in Masonry, and is a past master of Accacia Lodge, No. 33, F. & A. M.; a member of Anaconda Chapter, No. 16, R. A. M., at Anaconda, and Montana Commandery, Knights Templar, as well as charter member of Bagdad Temple of the Mystic Shrine, both of the latter bodies at Butte. He also affiliates with the Elks and the order of Eagles. He belongs to the Anaconda Club and is on the board of directors of the Anaconda Gun Club. Hunting and fishing and all kinds of athletic sports are among his diversions, and he has won many prizes for his skill with gun in club matches. He is a member of the Veteran Fireman's Association and was formerly a chief of the old volunteer fire service. He and Mr. Collins, who is now chief of the modern fire service in Anaconda, were both members of the old volunteer department, and as a team they held for three years the championship for hose coupling. As a matter of fact, their record has never been surpassed, so they are still regarded as champions. Some years ago Mr. Hasley took quite an active part in Democratic politics, but his growing business caused him to cease any participation except as a public-spirited citizen who is ready to support any movement for the advancement of his community and state. He was formerly a member of the Anaconda city council. Mr. Hasley and family reside in a beautiful home at 416 Main street. He is a man of strong and pleasing personality, and for many years has enjoyed the esteem of his many friends and associates in this city. His extensive travels and observations long ago convinced him that Montana is the state of states, and here he expects to remain through life.

HENRY AVARE. As might be inferred from his name, the state game warden of Montana is of French descent, although he was born in New England, in the town of Worcester, Massachusetts on December 12, 1868. His father, Peter Avare, was born in Canada, of French parents. The date of his entrance into this life was 1823, and thirty-one years later he immigrated to Illinois, then rather a new state, although it had been sufficiently populated to be a member of the Union for thirty-six years. Mr. Avare did not remain in Illinois, but moved to Massachusetts and later into Connecticut, where he remained until his death in 1883 at the age of sixty. His wife, too, was of French Canadian stock, her parents being prosperous farmers of Canada. Her maiden name was Salina La Cosse, and at a very early age she changed this to Avare. Henry was the sixth of ten children to whom the mother was more than ordinarily devoted. The Avars were parents of the old-fashioned type. The father was a successful farmer and his wife a model mother and helpmeet. She continued to reside on the homestead in Connecticut until her death in 1896, being but sixty-five at the time she passed away. Both she and her husband were members of the Catholic church, in which faith their children were reared.

Henry went to school in Worcester, and later in Stafford Springs, Connecticut. At eighteen he came to Montana and took up his residence in Butte, where he engaged in the lumber and timber business. This he followed from 1886 until 1890, when he sold out to give his attention to mining. He had discovered the Calumet mine near Butte. Mr. Avare operated this from 1890 until 1893 with excellent returns, but in 1893 came the great depression in business and the tremendous slump in silver. The manager of the Calumet concluded that wood was more to be desired than silver, so he again took up the timber business remaining in it for three more years.

In 1896, Mr. Avare was appointed deputy sheriff of Silver Bow county, and when he accepted this office he disposed of his stock of lumber. He was again put up by the Democrats for this office at the close of his first term and again he received the appointment. In 1901 he was chosen deputy state game warden and served in this capacity until 1909. At the beginning of that year, the office of game warden became vacant, and Mr. Avare was appointed to fill the unexpired term. When the three months of his predecessor's time had expired, Mr. Avare was reappointed for a period of four years, and he is now engaged in discharging the duties of that responsible position.

Montana is a happy hunting grounds for devotees of the rod and gun from all parts of the United States, and the efficient work done by Mr. Avare will result in the reservation of the game for many years. He is a fearless officer and one who is not found wanting in the performance of any duty incident to his office. In addition to his public work, Mr. Avare holds responsible positions in several financial companies in which he is interested. He is vice president of the Butte and Georgetown Mining and Milling Company and director of the Butte Copper King Mining Company, and has stock in several other noted companies. Whether serving the public in office or in a commercial venture, Mr. Avare's work is characterized by the painstaking excellence which assures success.

On December 1, 1909, Mr. Avare was united in marriage to Miss Katherine Booth of Butte, Montana. There have been no children of this marriage. Mr. Avare belongs to the Elks and to the Lambs' Club of Helena. His work has taken him into all parts of the state and there, as in Helena, his sociability and his sterling qualities have won him esteem and popularity.

JOHN FRANKLIN CASE. One can scarcely think of the northwest and the Pacific coast states without there entering the mind also a vision of rich metals and ores, and especially gold, silver and copper, so important a part has the mining industry been in the development and upbuilding of the whole section. And among the mining centers of the country none stands out with more prominence than does Butte, Montana, where exists such untold wealth of precious metals. Some of the most prominent and influential citizens of the community are the managers of the various mines and mining properties of this section, and in this list the name of John Franklin Case, superintendent of the Elm Orlu mine, belonging well to the head.

Mr. Case has all his life been in close touch with mining matters, has lived in some of the richest producing centers of the country, and through his own efforts has attained his present enviable position in the ranks of those actively engaged in pursuing the mining industry. His father, Isaac Case, who was a native of Rockland, Maine, went to California in 1852, making the long, tedious trip by the Isthmus route, and was for a number of years engaged in placer mining operations in that state. Later he removed to Nevada, where for many years he was a freighter, and was at Virginia City during the great excitement over the discovery of the great gold mines there. He died at Austin, Nevada, in 1882, at the age of fifty-two.

Mr. Case was born in Indian valley, Yuba county, California, October 10, 1859, the third member of a family of six children. He was left motherless at the age of seven years and in the Golden state his mother, who was born at Belfast, Maine, lies buried. When he was ten years old the family moved to Austin, Nevada, and an incident which helps Mr. Case to remember his age at that time being his employment by a party of surveyors enabling him to earn the first dollar he ever received in wages. He worked in the silver mills at Austin for a couple of years after reaching the age of his majority, but subsequently secured employment in the mines and has ever since been identified with the industry. Twenty years ago Mr. Case was employed in a minor capacity at what is now known as the Elm Orlu Mine, then a silver property, but during the past five years he has been superintendent of this mine, during which time the entire new equipment has been installed. This is now a copper and zinc property.

It was on June 16, 1886, that he first became a citizen of Butte, and since that date he has been continuously connected with mining interests here, achieving his present influential position as a result of his fine executive ability, personal integrity and keen business talents. He is a man of independent thought and action, is non-partisan in political matters and is always ready to give the weight of his influence to furthering the best interests of the city in a social and civic way. In social circles he is a leader and fraternally he is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, having been a member of that lodge for nearly thirty years.

GEORGE E. ROBBINS. One of the prominent citizens of Miles City whose ability and integrity have been recognized by election to various offices of public importance is George E. Robbins, now serving in his sixth year as assessor of Custer county. During a long career of public usefulness, Mr. Robbins has maintained a high standard of citizenship, and his service to his adopted city has been such as to make his position secure in the esteem of his fellow citizens. George E. Robbins was born March 27, 1861, in Syracuse, New York, and is a son of Edmund and Charlotte Robbins, natives of the Empire state.

Shortly after their marriage, the parents of Mr. Robbins moved from the east and settled in St. Louis, Missouri, from which city Edmund Robbins traveled in the interest of the P. J. Peters Company, manufacturers of saddlery and hardware. He also traveled out of New York as a representative of the Smith-Worthington Saddle Company for several years, subsequently engaging in the saddlery and hardware business on his own account in Salt Lake City, Utah. During the seventies, he identified himself with a Frisco banking concern, but eventually returned to his former line of business as an employe of the Simmons Hardware Company, and had charge of one of the departments of this large St. Louis house at the time of his death in 1911. They had three children, of whom George E. is the only survivor.

George E. Robbins spent a great deal of his boyhood in travelling from one point to another throughout the country, as his father was at that time making various changes in his business, and his education was obtained in the public schools of Aurora and Chicago, Illinois, Salt Lake City, Utah and in Wisconsin. His first work was as a farm hand in Dane county, Wisconsin, but he subsequently learned the saddler's and harness maker's trade in Black Earth, that state. He also clerked for some time in a general merchandise store in Black Earth, and in 1880 came west as far as Cheyenne, Wyoming, where he was engaged in working at his trade until 1884. In that year he embarked in the hotel business in Idaho, but in the spring of 1886 came to Miles City, worked at his trade for a time and in the spring of 1891, with a partner, engaged in the saddlery business under the firm name of Robbins & Lenoir. This association continued until 1894 when Mr. Robbins and his partner disposed of the business. He then engaged in business upon his own responsibility and remained thus occupied until the fall of 1902, when he disposed of his interests again. This move was actuated by the fact that he had been elected to the office of county treasurer of Custer county, and so well did he discharge the duties of his official position that he was reelected in 1904. In 1906 he was elected to the office of county assessor, and in that office he has been repeatedly reelected until now (1912) he is serving his third term. That he has filled the office honestly and honorably is evidenced by the fact of his repeated election. He is a courteous, able and conscientious official, and no public servant in Custer county has ever been more deserving of the high esteem and confidence in which he is regarded than is Mr. Robbins. His efforts in the way of suppressing the move to assess property at the full cash value, as contrasted with the present system of assessing at half the cash value, have been diligent and effective, and the people of his county have signified their appreciation of his whole-souled efforts in their behalf in no unmistakable terms. If the people of the state of Montana escape this full value tax, it will be the result of the untiring labors of such men as George E. Robbins, experienced in the duties and responsibilities of the assessorship. Mr. Robbins is at present a candidate for election to a fourth term, and it is practically assured that his past record will place him with the winners at the coming election.

Like his father, Mr. Robbins was a Republican, but he has lined up with the new Progressive party, and his name is on the ticket of the Bull Moose contingent. He is regarded as a strong organization man, and is one of the indefatigable workers for the party. His fraternal relations are represented by his membership in the Yellowstone Lodge No. 26, A. F. & A. M., and the Supreme Lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On September 7, 1883, Mr. Robbins was united in marriage with Miss Mary E. Jones, who was born in Kansas. She is a daughter of Hiram Jones, who died when she was a mere child. Mr. and Mrs. Robbins have one child, Frank, a graduate of Louisville (Kentucky) Dental College, class of 1912. Since 1907, Mr. Robbins has been engaged in the sheep business and has a band of them on his six hundred-acre ranch near Olive, Custer county. His home, however, is established in Miles City, where he is the possessor of a handsome, modern residence at No. 121 North Eighth street.

ALLAN R. DEARBORN, a prominent druggist in Philipsburg and state senator for Granite county, is one of the prominent business men of his city, and at the same time takes foremost rank among the political men of the district. He has been a resident of the state since 1886, the greater part of the time in Philipsburg, and he has witnessed the splendid growth and industrial progress of the state during the past quarter century, while he has contributed a generous part to the life of the community with which he has been so prominently identified.

Born in Cole county, Missouri, on December 14, 1856, Mr. Dearborn is the son of Dr. Ebenezer B. and Malinda R. (Burlingame) Dearborn. The father was born in Vermont and in his young manhood settled in Missouri, where he engaged in the practice of his profession. He died in 1857 and is buried in Missouri. His widow survived him and passed away in Montana at the age of seventy-nine years. She was the mother of three children by her first husband, of which number Allen R. was the first born. By her second marriage she had one son, Frank W. Webster, who is a major in the United States army.

Allan Dearborn was given the advantages of a high school education, and when he finished school at the age of sixteen years he went into a drug store to learn the business. He continued with that line of work more or less constantly until he came west, during a part of the time being engaged as a salesman for a drug line, covering a territory in Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri and Iowa. He was about thirty years of age when he came to Montana in 1886, and before he finally located in Philipsburg he spent some time in Helena and Missoula. When he decided to make Philipsburg his future place of residence, Mr. Dearborn established a drug store in the city, which he has since conducted with all success. He is further interested in ranching and stock raising and has prospered signally in that line of business.

Mr. Dearborn is a Democrat and is active in the political life of his district. He is at present serving Granite county as state senator, and he has been a member of the Philipsburg city council on several occasions. He is one of the most capable men affiliated with the Democratic party and in times of political activity is always to be found in the front ranks. His public speaking talent renders him particularly valuable during campaigns, and has won to him quite a reputation for oratory. He was a member of the Philipsburg school board for eighteen years, and in that capacity, as in every other public position the people have called upon him to fill, he has served with the utmost efficiency and has given ample proof of his intrinsic value as a citizen.

Mr. Dearborn is a lover of nature, and is devoted to all manner of outdoor exercise. He is particularly fond of horses and as a rule keeps a fine lot of fast horses at hand. He is unmarried.

ARNOLD GRIFFIN. In almost every instance the successful men of any profession or business have attained their positions through persistent effort and individual ability. Success is a matter of the application of experience and sound judgment at the right time and in the right manner, and rarely is the result of chance. One of the leading citizens of Glendive, who has gained an enviable place among the business men of the city through his own enterprise and ability, is Arnold Griffin of No. 22 Benham street, a dealer in flour, feed, baled hay, seed, grains, etc., who has also been extensively engaged in railroad grading contracting for nearly thirty years throughout the south and west. Mr. Griffin is a native of Tioga county, Pennsylvania, and was born April 24, 1857, a son of Henry and Ann (Arnold) Griffin, natives of New York state. Henry Griffin removed to Pennsylvania as a young man and there spent the remainder of his life in agricultural pursuits, his death occurring when he was eighty-seven years of age, while his wife passed away when she was only thirty-eight. They had a family of six children, all of whom are living: Merrett, who lives in old Mexico; Ella, the wife of George Wilson, of Tioga county, Pennsylvania; Cornelius E., of Glendive, Montana; Arnold; Fannie, the wife of Charles Mathison, of New York state; and Carrie, who married Edwin Smith and lives in Tioga county, Pennsylvania.

The boyhood of Arnold Griffin was spent much the same as that of other youths who have risen to prominent positions in the world of business. During the winter months he spent his time in study in the district schools adjacent to his father's farm, while in the summers he built up a strong and hearty constitution by working as a farm hand. Remaining under the parental roof until he was twenty-three years of age, the spring of 1880 saw him leave home for the west, and at Mandan, North Dakota, he worked as a section hand for the Northern Pacific Railroad for one summer. Subsequently he engaged in the dairy business in that city with his brother Merrett, and continued therein until 1885. In 1884 they began taking contracts for railroad grading, and from 1885 to the hard winter of 1886-7 followed cattle raising in Dawson county, Montana. In the latter year Arnold Griffin went south with his brother to complete a grading contract, and has subsequently continued to follow that line of work, although he soon returned to Montana. He was engaged in the cattle business again until 1907, when he began to raise horses, a business in which he has since continued, and also at that time established himself in a flour and feed business. This has grown to be one of the leading establishments of its kind in Glendive and has a large and rapidly increasing trade. A business man of more than ordinary ability, Mr. Griffin has been able to give to each of his ventures the same close application, and by giving his personal attention to every detail of his enterprises has been able to protect the interests of his customers as well as those of his own. Although a very busy man, he has not denied himself the pleasure of companionship with his fellows, and is a popular member of Gate City Lodge No. 37, I. O. O. F. Although not a politician he takes a keen interest in the various movements of the day, especially in his adopted county, and stanchly supports the principles and candidates of the Republican party.

On February 5, 1889, Mr. Griffin was married to Miss Amy Ward, who was born in Minnesota, daughter of Asa and Helen Ward, the former of whom is deceased. Mrs. Griffin is the eldest of a family of twelve children, and she and Mr. Griffin have a family of five, namely: Maisie, Carroll, Lloyd, Bessie and Chester.

HON. THOMAS F. HAGAN. Some men attain to more than ordinary prominence through the recognition by their associates of their ability to discharge certain duties, and this is undoubtedly the case of Thomas F. Hagan, who, starting his business career in a humble capacity, so impressed his fellow townsmen with his abilities, that step by step he rose to the cashiership of the First National Bank of Glendive, one of the strongest financial institutions in Dawson county, and to the chief executive office of the city of Glendive. Mayor Hagan is now serving his second term as the head of this thriving municipality, and is giving the citizens a clean, business-like administration, interesting himself in behalf of the welfare of the people and bringing about many needed reforms. The unqualified confidence in which he is held by the people of the city is sufficient evidence as to the excellence of his record. He is a native of St. Croix county, Wisconsin, where he was born October 22, 1864, a son of John and Bridget (Ring) Hagan.

John Hagan was born in Buffalo, New York, from which city he came west with his parents as far as Chicago when a mere lad. After spending ten or twelve years in that city, they removed to Erin, St. Croix county, Wisconsin, where John Hagan grew to manhood, being reared to agricultural pursuits, which he followed for a number of years in connection with stock raising. He was also for a long period engaged in a general merchandise business at Erin, but in 1884 sold his interests there and moved to New Richmond, in the same county, where he erected the New Richmond Opera House, interested himself in other realty transactions, and for some time prior to his death, which occurred in 1905, when he was sixty-eight years old, lived retired. In political matters he was a Republican. His wife, who was born in Ireland in 1838, passed away at Erin, Wisconsin, in 1871, having been the mother of eight children, of whom five are living, and Thomas F. was the fourth in order of birth.

The education of Thomas F. Hagan was secured in the public schools of St. Croix, Wisconsin, and the University of St. John's, Minnesota. An enterprising, energetic youth, he came to Montana in 1886, securing employment as a brakeman on the Northern Pacific Railroad, and being connected with that line for about two years. He was then promoted to the position of fireman, in which he continued for six years, and at that time took the local agency for the Pabst Brewing Company, of Milwaukee, continuing in the retail liquor business for about four years and in the real estate business for two years. In 1904 he was one of the organizers of the First National Bank, of which he has been cashier to the present time. In 1896 Mr. Hagan also embarked in the horse business, and in 1899 extended his operations so that they covered cattle. He does a large and growing business, and is well known to stockmen all over this section of the state. In politics a Democrat, in 1899 and 1900 he served acceptably in the office of justice of the peace, and in 1909 was his party's choice for the office of mayor. He was elected to that office, and the remarkably satisfactory administration that followed made him the logical candidate in 1911 for the chief executive's chair, to which he was re-elected. Progressive and public-spirited, with vast executive ability, Mayor Hagan has made an excellent official and the municipal reforms and improvements that have taken place during his incumbency of his high office have made Glendive an excellently governed city. Fraternally, Mayor Hagan is connected with Miles City Lodge No. 537, B. P. O. E.

On September 12, 1893, Mayor Hagan was united in marriage with Miss Mary Gavin, who was born in St. Croix county, Wisconsin, daughter of John and Catherine (Kelly) Gavin. Mr. Gavin is a native of Ireland, and is now in his eighty-fifth year and a retired citizen of Glendive, whence he came in 1910. He and his wife, who is now deceased, had a family of six children, of whom three are living, and Mrs. Hagan was the fourth in order of birth. Mayor Hagan and his wife have had four children: Phillip, Paul, Mary and Gerald.

OTTO EGBERT SIMONSON. Butte, Montana, has a wide-awake, energetic business element that is prosperous and progressive and helps to sustain the reputation the city enjoys of being one of the most up-to-date and rapidly growing of any in the state. Among the leading representatives in his line of commercial and industrial activity in Butte must be mentioned Mr. Otto Egbert Simonson, who since 1896 has conducted one of the best and most completely equipped livery establishments to be found anywhere. Mr. Simonson came to Montana when a young man of twenty years, fired with ambition and a determination to succeed, and being energetic and industrious and endowed with a high order of business talents he achieved that result.

The first year he spent at Helena, and left there to go to Elliston, in both of which cities he was employed as a teamster. Subsequently he secured work in the mines at Basin and from that place moved to Butte and for several years was a hoisting engineer in the mines of this section. Deciding that greater profit and satisfaction could be gained through independent business operations, Mr. Simonson cast about for an opening suited to his tastes and finally decided upon the establishment of his present business. The decision proved to be a wise one, for his trade has grown steadily and the business now yields him a handsome income.

Mr. Simonson is a native of Wisconsin, his birth having occurred at Stoughton, that state, March 21, 1866. His parents, Engebret and Carrie Simonson, were born in Norway, came to America after their marriage and settled in Wisconsin upon arrival in this country. They had a family of seven children, four daughters and three sons, and when Otto, the youngest, was thirteen years of age the family moved to Minnesota, the parents living there the remainder of their lives, the mother's demise occurring in 1881 and the father's in 1904.

The marriage of Otto Egbert Simonson and Mary Buckley took place at Basin, Montana, May 11, 1898. Two sons and one daughter were born of this union. Helen is now a high school student, while Raymond is attending business college in preparation for a commercial career, and Earl, the youngest, is a student in the graded schools of the city.

Mr. Simonson is a citizen of the highest type, who takes a lively interest in civic, religious and social affairs and keeps himself informed on all vital topics of the day. He is prominent in Democratic political councils and a staunch advocate of the principles of that party. Religious work has for him a great interest and he is counted one of the most valued members of the Lutheran church, having at one time filled the office of trustee of the same. Several fraternal orders also know him as a leading member and official. He belongs to the Knights of the Maccabees, in which order he has filled all the chairs and is now and has been for several years record keeper. He belongs to the Eagles fraternal order and is a member of the Scandinavian Brotherhood of America, of the latter organization being at the present time financial secretary. A man of unimpeachable personal integrity, comprehensive business talents and broad sympathies, he is held in the highest esteem by all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance.

ITHEL S. ELDERED was born March 18, 1862, at Climax, Michigan. His education was received in the public and high schools of Kalamazoo and Battle Creek, after having his first schooling at Climax. He left school at eighteen years of age and then taught for two years at Augusta, Michigan. At twenty years of age he learned telegraphy and began to work for the Chicago and Grand Trunk Railway. He was with that company for three or four years and then came west to Dillon, Montana, in 1886, as telegraph operator for the Utah Northern. He was with that company one year and came to Deer Lodge in 1887. He began to work for the Rocky Mountain Telegraph Company, now the Postal Telegraph Company, and was with them for six years. He then went to the Montana Union, now the Northern Pacific, and remained with them until 1897, as operator and agent, when the Montana Union was leased to the Northern Pacific Railway. The change caused him to be transferred to the general office in Butte, Montana, and he assumed the position of assistant freight auditor and remained one year. Then he was transferred to Deer Lodge as agent in 1900, and remained until August, 1908, when he was appointed by President Roosevelt to the position of postmaster at Deer Lodge, a position he has since filled to the entire satisfaction of the people. His steady advance in life is due to his own efforts, honesty and ability. He is universally well liked.

In fraternal matters he is a Mason. He has been a school trustee for nine years, is a member of the Security Investment Company of Deer Lodge, is an owner of city realty and has a delightful home.

Mr. Eldred married Miss Sadie Harris, a native of Deer Lodge, Montana, a daughter of Henry S. Harris, a pioneer miner and ranch owner. Two children have been born to this union, Irene Rivers Eldred and Ithel Sheldon Eldred, Jr.

The father of the subject of this sketch, Alonzo J. Eldred, was born at Otsego, New York. Later he became a farmer near Climax, Michigan. He died in 1896. The mother was Polly Peckham, who was born at Binghamton, New York. In this family there were nine children: One is deceased; B. A. Eldred is a professional man in New York City; W. H. Eldred, a merchant, Pasadena, California; Allie, now Mrs. Sam Carson, of Fort Lauderdale, in the Everglades of Florida; Eunice, Mrs. N. E. Retallic, of Battle Creek, Michigan; Emma, Mrs. George Steers, Kalamazoo, Michigan; Amy, now Mrs. W. S. Wood, Kalamazoo, Michigan; Inez, Mrs. Sydney Davis, Battle Creek, Michigan; and the subject of this sketch, the sixth child.

Mr. Eldred throughout his whole career has proved himself a man of sterling character and has won the confidence and respect of hosts of friends. His business qualifications have been demonstrated in many situations and he has risen from place to place until he has attained a high position in the esteem of all who know him.

DR. JOSEPH A. TREMBLAY. A native of Canada, but since 1886 a resident of Montana, Dr. Joseph A. Tremblay, county physician and surgeon of Silver Bow county, by his eminence in his profession, his skill in his practice and his high character and sterling manhood, reflects great credit alike on the land of his nativity and the state and city of his adoption. He is one of the leading physicians of Butte, well known all over the city and very popular. He has a large private practice, a beautiful home and an interesting family, and throughout Silver Bow county he stands high in the estimation, regard and good will of the people.

Dr. Tremblay was born in Lower Canada, on March 3, 1845. He received his early academic training in the public schools of his native land and his professional instruction in the medical department of Victoria University. He began his professional career at Marlboro, Michigan, remaining there for a period of seventeen years. In 1886 he came to Butte, when what is now one of the greatest mining towns and most spectacular cities in the world was but a primitive and straggling village, or typical western mining camp. Here he has lived ever since except for the space of seven years during which he was in active practice in Missoula.

His father, Julian Tremblay, was born in Canada and died there in 1873, at the age of fifty-five years. He was a prominent educator and revered by those who had the benefit of his instruction and the people who witnessed his usefulness and devotion to his duties. His wife, the mother of the doctor, Martinie (Robart) Tremblay, was also a native of Canada, and died in that country at an early age.

Dr. Tremblay was married in Missoula, Montana, to Miss Cathryne Nash, who died in Butte in 1903. They were the parents of six children, all of whom are living. Mrs. Mary T. C. Kelley, the first born, is a resident of Butte. She has four children. Mrs. Matilda M. Murray, resides in Seattle, Washington, and has one child. Julian Tremblay, the only son in the family, is attending Washington University in St. Louis, Missouri. Mrs. Rufina Kilpatrick has her home in Butte, and is the mother of one child. Miss Cirie and Miss Emedee Tremblay, who are the only members of the family born in Butte, the others all being natives of Marlboro, Michigan, are still living at the paternal home with their father, and are among its greatest attractions. They are prominent in the social life of the city, and, like their father, very popular.

The doctor is a devout member of the Catholic church. In fraternal relations he is connected with the Order of Knights of Columbus. He was elected county physician, and is still filling that office to the entire satisfaction of the people and greatly to the benefit of the county. He has always been deeply interested in the enduring welfare of the people among whom he has lived and labored, and is at all times ready to do whatever he can to promote it. The citizens of Butte and Silver Bow county regard him as one of the most progressive and useful men among them, as well as a gentleman of high character, upright life and practical public spirit. He possesses, too, the modesty of genuine merit, which adds to his popularity and intensifies the esteem all the people have for him. He is one of Canada's best contributions to the manhood of the United States.

HAVELOCK H. HANSON, M. D. Foremost in the ranks of men of vigorous and forcible character who have taken important and prominent part in the affairs of Butte is found Havelock Horatio Hanson, M. D., whose talents, enterprise and energy command the respect of his fellow men, and whose career is a worthy example and an object of emulation. A knowledge of men whose substantial fame rests upon their attainments, character and success, must necessarily exert a wholesome influence on the rising generation of the American people, and it is therefore peculiarly proper that the life of such a person should have its public record. In this connection it is appropriate to review the circumstances in the career of Dr. Hanson.

Havelock H. Hanson was born at Fredericton, the capital of New Brunswick, Canada, April 31, 1858, and is a son of Edgar and Helen N. (Hanson) Hanson, also natives of the Dominion. The family originated in England, from whence representatives immigrated to America on the Mayflower, but later established itself in Canada, the paternal great-grandparents of Dr. Hanson building the first log cabin on the site of the present city of St. John, New Brunswick. For more than forty years Edgar Hanson held the office of deputy provincial secretary of New Brunswick. The early education of Dr. Hanson was secured in the public schools of Fredericton, and in 1876 he was graduated from Kings College of that city, with the degree of Master of Arts. He then began the study of medicine while being engaged in the drug business for several years, and in 1880 he entered Magill University at Montreal. After spending two years in that famous institution, he took a nine months' course in Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, then entering the Columbus (Ohio) Medical College, where he was graduated with the class of 1881. For a short time he was located at Chautauqua, New York, being surgeon for the Chautauqua Iron and Ore Company, and then went to Van Buren, Maine, where he practiced for two years and met with success. At that time he went to Andover, New Brunswick, and established himself in practice, but in 1886 came to Montana, and for two years was located at Townsend, then going to Missoula. During the ten years that followed he became one of the leading professional men and prominent citizens of that city, but in 1898, seeking a wider field for his activities, came to Butte, in which city he soon took precedence as a physician and surgeon. Dr. Hanson has carried on a general practice, but has devoted his attention chiefly to surgery and has become known as one of the leading practitioners of the state. A recognized authority on various diseases, he has been constantly called in consultation in cases of a serious nature, and his advice and assistance are highly appreciated. He is a close student, a steady-handed surgeon and a man of much personal magnetism and profoundly sympathetic nature, and his reputation has extended over a wide radius. He holds membership in the Montana State Medical Societies, the American Medical Association and the New Brunswick Medical Society, in the work of all of which he takes a great interest, and among the members of which his opinions are held in the highest respect. His greatest recreation is with the rod, of which he is an expert wielder.

On April 14, 1880, Dr. Hanson was united in marriage with Miss Hester E. McKeen, daughter of William and Anna (Hammond) McKeen, natives of New Brunswick, Canada, but for many years residents of Montana. Dr. and Mrs. Hanson have two charming daughters: Margaret and Nellie, both married and living in San Francisco together. Margaret married Roscoe Oakes and Helen married Fred Poss.

HENRY LOWNDES MAURY, city attorney of Butte and one of the best known and leading members of the legal profession in that city, was born in Charlottesville, Virginia, on November 20, 1875, and is a son of Matthew Fontaine and Lydia Ann (Maury) Maury. He is a great-grandson of James Maury, who was appointed American consul at Liverpool, England, by President Washington, and also great-grandson of James Maury, a patriot of Revolutionary fame. Louis Herndon Maury, uncle of Henry Lowndes Maury, was first officer under Admiral Semmes of the Confederate cruiser Alabama, of historic fame, and his great-uncle, Dabney N. Maury, was a major general in the Confederate army. His grandmothers also won distinction. His paternal grandmother, Sarah Hughes Maury, was of Welsh extraction, and one of the best known authors and writers of the United States in her day. Her works were known and read all over this country and secured her considerable renown also in England. The maternal grandmother, whose name was Lucy Price in her maidenhood, was a niece of Gen. Sterling Price of the Confederate army, and has long been prominent in the social life of Virginia. She is still living on the old family homestead in that state, and is regarded as one of the most estimable and representative ladies of the highest class.

Matthew F. Maury, great-uncle of the subject of this review, was the most renowned hydrographer of his period, and one of the most eminent of all time. He entered the United States navy as a young man and soon reached the rank of lieutenant. He studied the Gulf stream, and was the first man to trace its course accurately and map it out definitely on the trackless bosom of the ocean. He also located other oceanic currents and described great circle sailing in a way that has been of great advantage to navigators. In 1856 he published his "Physical Geography of the Sea," a work of the highest merit, and one that attracted the attention and brought him the commendation of the whole scientific world in the domain of thought and investigation to which it was devoted. He was also a civil and mechanical engineer and an inventor of submarine appliances. During the Civil war he espoused the cause of the Confederacy, and in the furtherance of that cause invented the first form of torpedo used in naval warfare, and also the first submarine mines, which were used in the James river below Richmond, Virginia. After the war he was appointed a professor in the Virginia Military Institute at Lexington in his native state, the school from which "Stonewall" Jackson went into the war. He died in 1875.

Henry Lowndes Maury completed his education at the University of Virginia, from which he was graduated in 1894. Soon afterwards he came west and located in Butte, where for six years he was employed as a clerk in the law office of Corbett & Wellcome. During his connection with those gentlemen he studied law and was admitted to the bar, and when he began practicing formed a partnership with Judge Pemberton, which lasted for four years. At the end of that period he formed a new partnership with his present associate, Mr. Templeman. They have a very large and active practice, and the firm is in the highest rank in the legal profession.

Mr. Maury was married in Charlottesville, Virginia, on November 22, 1898, to Miss Ann Perkins, a daughter of George and Lizzie (Watson) Perkins, of that city. Six children have been born of their union, all of whom are living and are residents of Butte. They are: Reuben, born September 2, 1899; George, born December 24, 1901; Lesse Lewis, born October 23, 1903; Lydia, born December 12, 1906; Eliza, born October 2, 1908; and Henry Lowndes, Jr., born July 9, 1911. The first three named are students at the McKinley school in Butte.

In 1911 Mr. Maury was appointed city attorney of Butte, and he is still the incumbent of that office. Politically he supports the principles and candidates of the Socialist party; fraternally he holds membership in the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World; and socially he is a member of the University Club of his Alma Mater, the Silver Bow Club of Butte and the Lambs' Club of Helena. He was president of the Silver Bow Bar Association in 1907. In religious faith and membership he is connected with the Episcopal church in the city of his residence.

Mr. Maury is devoted to the game of chess and is very skillful at it, having defeated some of the experts in the game. He is enterprising and practical in his efforts to aid in the progress and further development of his adopted city and state, and in reference to their welfare is guided by intelligence, breadth of view and excellent judgment.

LEVI S. WILD. An essentially representative citizen and business man of Butte is Levi S. Wild, who has resided in this city since 1886 and who for the past twenty years has been the general manager of the Butte office of the Western Union Telegraph Company. Mr. Wild has traveled extensively throughout the United States and has lived in many of the most important metropolitan centers of this thriving, bustling, American commonwealth, yet we have his word for it that Montana is the "Peerless" state. His loyalty and public spirit in connection with all that affects the general welfare and prosperity of Butte and Montana at large have ever been of the most insistent order.

A native of the fine old Wolverine state, Levi S. Wild was born in Albion, Michigan, March 10, 1846. His parents came from old Revolutionary stock in Massachusetts and were Michigan pioneers, having traveled by team from York state to Michigan in 1834. John E. Wild was born in the state of Massachusetts, in 1810, and his wife, whose maiden name was Hutch, was a native of Elmira, New York, where her birth occurred in 1813. Mr. Wild erected the first frame house on a farm just beyond the outskirts of Albion, Michigan, and he was the first president of that town after its incorporation. He was also a member of the board of trustees of Albion Female College and was a charter member and worshipful master of the first Masonic lodge of Albion. He figured prominently in all the public affairs of his pioneer environment and was paymaster of the first organization of the Michigan State Guards, in 1836. In 1865 Mr. and Mrs. Wild removed to St. Joseph, Missouri, where they passed the residue of their lives, their deaths having occurred in 1870 and 1891, respectively.

The last born in a family of five children, Levi S. Wild received his educational training in his native place, where he attended Albion College for a period of two terms, just prior to the outbreak of the Civil war. He learned telegraphy in 1861, on the Michigan Central Railroad, and in the following year went to Chicago, where he accepted a position with the Western Union Telegraph Company, doing service at the company's office at the corner of Lake and Clark streets. He remained in Chicago until the autumn of 1865, when he removed to St. Joseph, Missouri, whither his parents had removed from the old Michigan home. In 1866 he went to St. Louis to fill a position in the offices of the Western Union. The spring of 1867, however, found him back in St. Joseph and in May of that year he started out on horseback across the plains for California. The Indians were exceptionally troublesome at that time, probably owing to the encroachments upon their old hunting grounds along the Platte river by the Union Pacific Railway. The California outfit was organized at Fort Sedgwick—opposite the then new Union Pacific Railroad town, Julesburg, Nebraska,—and there was joined by an eighteen-wagon outfit. The Indians were exceedingly troublesome all the way up the Platte river to the foot hills of the Black Hills. They made numerous dashes into the camp and while the "train" was in transit tried to stampede the stock. They were repeatedly repulsed and not one of the party suffered injury. The stage stock was driven off and coaches held up both ahead and behind this outfit and many were killed by the Indians, and so it was miraculous that the above party made so clean an escape from Indian cruelty.

Arriving at Salt Lake City early in September, 1867, Mr. Wild left the horseback route and took the Wells-Fargo stage for San Francisco, via Austin and Virginia City, Nevada. The Central Pacific Railroad was completed and had trains running to Cisco, California, near the summit of the Sierras, where Mr. Wild took the steam cars to Sacramento, thence by boat down the Sacramento river and the bay to San Francisco. The roving propensity was not long in check. In October he was back in Salt Lake City and in November of the same year took the stage for Virginia City, Montana, arriving in the then capital city of the territory on November 10 and at once assuming charge of the Western Union Telegraph office there. He remained in Virginia City until the completion of the Union Pacific Railroad, in 1869, when he returned to Utah. In 1870 he was again in San Francisco. In March, 1872, he accepted a position as paymaster for Ben Holladay on his railroad construction work in Oregon and Washington, with headquarters in Portland. He filled the latter position until Jay Cooke's memorable financial smash, in the autumn of 1872, when he returned to San Francisco, whence he later went to Virginia City, Nevada. In 1873 he made a jump to Alabama, Tennessee and other southern states and in 1874 he was in the employ of the Pullman Car Company at Chicago. In 1879 he was again in the south, in 1880 was in Denver and later at Ogden, Utah. On the 10th of November, 1886, after an absence of seventeen years, he returned to "Peerless" Montana and located at Butte, where he again entered the services of the Western Union Telegraph Company. He has continued to reside in this city during the long intervening years to the present time, in 1912, and is perfectly content with the splendid opportunities offered here both for business advancement and pleasure. He has long been in the employ of the Western Union and the fine character of his work has brought him various promotions until he is now general manager of the Butte office.

On December 26, 1886, Mr. Wild married Miss Pauline Bryan, of St. Joseph, Missouri. She is a sister of Mrs. Bryan Irvine, who came to Butte in the early '70s and married Mr. Bryan Irvine, the well-known pioneer, who made twenty-two locations of mines on the Butte hill. Mr. Irvine died in Butte, November 17, 1902. Mr. and Mrs. Wild have one son, John Edgerton Wild, who was born October 8, 1888, and who is now a member of the class of 1912 in the agricultural department of the University of Wisconsin, at Madison.

In politics Mr. Wild accords an unswerving allegiance to the principles and policies for which the Republican party stands sponsor, and in a fraternal way he is affiliated with a number of representative organizations. He is genial in his associations, kind hearted and generous in his dealings with his fellow men, and commands the unalloyed confidence and esteem of all with whom he has come in contact. He is a citizen of whom Butte has every right to be proud.

JENNISON PAUL JONES. The late Jennison Paul Jones, for twenty-six years a resident of Montana and for more than a dozen years one of the most highly esteemed ranch-owners of Jefferson county, was a native of Michigan. His paternal ancestry was Welsh and his maternal ancestral line was of the Pennsylvania German division of early immigrants. Jeremiah R. Jones, his father, was a shoemaker who also conducted a small farm on which he and his wife, Ann (Rote) Jones, settled in Michigan. There they lived until the close of their lives and there they reared their eight children, of whom Jennison Paul Jones was one. He was born near Mottville, Michigan, on January 10, 1854.

Reared to hard work, Jennison Paul Jones received limited educational advantages, his farm duties permitting him to attend the country school for only a few months each year. In the performance of the modest agricultural tasks of the parental homestead he remained in his native locality until he had passed his majority and had reached the age of twenty-three years.

As an early settler in that country which was then new and comparatively unsettled, Jennison P. Jones purchased a small farm in Cherokee county, Kansas, and soon afterward established his home upon it. After his marriage he continued his rural residence in the Sunflower state for about ten years. In 1886 he sold his Cherokee county property and in March of that year he arrived in Montana.

Mr. Jones' first location in the Treasure state was near Burlington, in Silver Bow county, where he was engaged at teaming and in supplying lumber by contract, for use in connection with the mining of that region. For about seven years he successfully followed this business. He and his family then removed to a new home near Virginia City, Montana, where he again followed teaming activities for about three years. At the end of that time another move was made, Whitehall being the objective point of this change. After two years of teaming here he purchased the tract of land which became his permanent home. This property, which he secured from Samuel Wade, is two miles from Whitehall, and he became its possessor in July, 1898. As a landholder and in the pursuit of agricultural and horticultural purposes in connection therewith, Mr. Jones achieved a most substantial and highly reputable position in the county.

While Jennison P. Jones was a self-made man, he was fortunate in the selection of a wife whose exceptional intelligence, thrift and wise counsel contributed much toward his success. Emma D. Gillespie Jones was a daughter of John S. and Esther B. (Moses) Gillespie, who were formerly residents of Pennsylvania, but who had before their marriage located in Illinois. During their residence near Bloomington, in the latter state, on December 6, 1856, the daughter was born whom they named Emma and who lived to become Mrs. Jones. Both in Illinois and in Kansas. John S. Gillespie was very prominent in the affairs of the localities in which he lived. The people of Cherokee county made him their representative to the state legislature and in that capacity he served with ability and distinction. He was particularly active in the cause of temperance and was notably active in the affairs which had as their purpose the accomplishment of state-wide temperance in Kansas. Mr. Gillespie now resides in White Tail Park, Montana. Mrs. Gillespie, the mother of Emma Gillespie Jones, died when the latter was but four years of age.

The Gillespie-Jones marriage took place on December 31, 1882. The children who were born and reared by Mr. and Mrs. Jennison P. Jones are three daughters and one son. Miss Anna Mabel Jones is the superintendent of the hospital department of the State Orphans' Home at Twin Bridges, Montana. John Richard Jones, has charge of the operations on the home ranch. Miss Grace and her small sister, Esther Bertha, are still in their mother's care. Mrs. Jones and her children are active members of the Methodist church of Whitehall.

From his attractive and congenial home the activities of Mr. Jones' life radiated in various worthy lines, but he was ever modest and unassuming in all his relations. staunchly Democratic, he nevertheless preferred to avoid public offices. His religious life was of vital importance to him. He had been reared in the Lutheran church, but before his marriage had united with the Methodist Episcopal church and throughout his subsequent life was one of its most devout and consistent members. He passed from the visible earthly life of men to the existence of that unseen world in which he so fully believed on June 27, 1912, leaving behind him many wholesome and beneficent memories.

JAMES RUSSELL FAULDS, the editor of the North West Tribune, is a man of intrepid spirit, of lofty standards and of gifted mind. A brief view of his antecedents and the development of his career will be of deep interest to his many friends and staunch supporters. In the early 'forties a family of the rare old Scotch Presbyterian type came from their home near Rickerton, Scotland, and settled in Pennsylvania. The head of this family was named James Faulds and he was the father of several sons, who joined him in work in the mines of Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia. Both James Faulds and his son, James Faulds, junior, were engineers, the latter having learned in America to make surveys and to run stationary engines for the various coal companies in the states where they worked. They later removed to Glencoe, Wisconsin, where they lived until the death of James Faulds, Sr., and also of his son, who was the father of the estimable subject of this sketch. James Faulds II married a lady who was a member of a Scotch family who had come from the famous region of Ayr. Her father was a miner throughout his entire life and was one of the historic "Forty-niners," of gold-seeking fame. He died in Placerville, California, in 1886.

In Yellow Springs, Dauphin county, James Russell Faulds was born to James Faulds II and his wife, on the nineteenth day of April, 1853. He was but a child when his grandfather and his father removed with their families to Wisconsin. Hence he owes to that state his educational equipment, obtained from the rural schools, the graded schools and normal schools of the commonwealth that is noted for so much of progress, both educational and otherwise. In all things of an intellectual nature he had ever a keen interest, although practical affairs were by no means despised by him. At the age of fourteen he did his first writing for the press. When only sixteen he first did pedagogical service. This work alternated with study and with the always beneficial and productive work of the farm, until Mr. Faulds was twenty-seven years of age. At that time he purchased the publishing plant of the Independent News and engaged to supervise the graded schools of the same place. Combining this principalship with the editing and publishing of his paper, he remained at Independence for two years, after which he again enjoyed a period of agricultural activity. In the spring of 1886 his plans developed once more in the pedagogical direction and his ambition for a successful future naturally turned toward the promising west. He started westward, but not alone; for he had found his life's mate.

Miss Rosetta Mosimann was a daughter of Christopher Mosimann and his wife, nee Marie Bracher. They were of Swiss descent and followed the vocation of farming. Miss Mosimann became Mrs. Faulds on April 22, 1886, and soon after the marriage accompanied her husband to Montana.

Here Mr. Faulds had been engaged to teach at Thompson Falls. When he arrived at that place he found that a second contract had been made with a lady from New York to fill the same position. Mr. Faulds' natural gallantry and his reluctance to resorting to a lawsuit led him to temporarily seek other employment. The toll road from Thompson to Murray, Idaho, required much transporting of goods. The purchase of a team of horses made it convenient for Mr. Faulds to be of much service in conveying goods to the mining camps. In 1887, he accepted a position as teacher of the Stevensville school, for the ensuing nine months. His energy and ability being of the overflowing sort that constantly seeks new responsibility, Mr. Faulds also made himself valuable to the community by organizing debating teams among the young business men of the place and also by acting as librarian. The residents of Stevensville remember the enthusiasm of that winter's debates, in which Mr. Faulds was such an important factor. In the summer of 1888 he took up a preemption on the west side of the river and during the succeeding year he proved up the same. In the following spring he became secretary, editor and manager of the North West Tribune. During the autumn of the same year he purchased the newspaper from the stockholders, of which he has ever since been the proprietor, manager and editor, with the exception of one year when political duties made it desirable that he lease it to his son.

The Tribune has, in Mr. Faulds' hands, been an instrument directed toward the public's greatest good. Politically it is independent, with clearly and strongly expressed standards of law and order in affairs both national and local. The value of his ideals to the community has been recognized in the numerous offices he has been asked to fill. For several terms he held the office of alderman, and for one term the highest municipal office, that of mayor. During his municipal career the city waterworks were installed—owned by the municipality—the electric lighting system put into operation, and the wide cement sidewalks built. The elimination of grafting and law-breaking received his most earnest attention, and it is a matter eliciting much gratification that Stevensville is now considered one of the cleanest towns in the state. So courageous has Editor Faulds been in the defense of the right and so determined in the exposition of what he believed, or knew to be wrong, that his career of newspaper activity has at times been fraught with difficulty. The five suits brought against him cost him a four years' struggle, but he was successful in his opposition of the "court-house ring," in which conflict he was ably supported by Colonel Sanders. The future of the North West Tribune is a bright one, in which its loyal sympathizers anticipate that it will continue to impartially exercise a worthy influence.

Mr. and Mrs. Faulds are the parents of one son and five daughters. The eldest of the second generation of this family is James Welcome, who was born at Thompson Falls in 1887. The five daughters, all of Stevensville, have been named respectively, Martha, Ruth, Russell, Kathryn and Elizabeth. James Welcome Faulds is his father's able editorial assistant and efficient reporter. In times of especial stress the daughters, and even Mrs. Faulds, also contribute aid to the activities of the publishing office.

Mr. Faulds' personal political tendencies are those of the Democratic party, and it is not surprising that his ardent support of Woodrow Wilson is shared by many of his friends who are not of his political faith. The editor's religion is the religion of a clean moral life, but he is not connected by membership with any church. He is a member of the order of the Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons, in which he has advanced to the rank of the Royal Arch, and also belongs to the Good Templars. With this last order he has been identified for twenty-five years and has held many offices in the order, from sentinel in subordinate lodges to that of grand chief templar. In June, 1893, he represented the grand lodge of this order at Des Moines, Iowa; in 1906, he went to Seattle, and in 1908 to Washington, D. C., as a representative at the national grand lodge; and at the latter place, in 1908, he also attended the international sessions in an official capacity. Mr. Faulds' life is one which has thus far been productive of much good, thus fulfilling the ambition of which he was conscious, when, a little lad and the eldest of twelve children, he studied his first books by the light of hickory splints in that home of early Wisconsin settlement.

GEORGE MILES, at present the postmaster and perhaps the leading merchant of Darby, Montana, was born in Richland county, Wisconsin, on the twenty-fourth day of July, 1860. During his tenth year, his parents moved from Wisconsin to Clay Center, Kansas, where he purchased a good farm and engaged in cultivating it according to the methods of the eastern farmer. Thus even in years of drought he drew a good living from the soil, while in a good wheat year he realized what it means to live in the wheat belt of the world. To-day this farm is very valuable. It was here that George Miles grew to manhood, attending the district schools in the winter and assisting his father with the cattle and crops in the summer. Perhaps the education that he received in the harvest fields and about the stock has been fully as valuable to him in his later life as his book learning. His majority found him still with his father, where he remained until his twenty-third year when he left Kansas for Montana with the intention of taking up a claim of his own. During the winters of 'eighty-four and 'eighty-five he worked in the lumber camps near Victor, Montana. Coming into town the ensuing spring he opened the first general store in that place. This he successfully managed until 1888, when he sold the business at a good profit that he might move to the more thriving town of Darby. To him then, as now, the Bitter Root valley seemed the garden spot of Montana, and Darby the rising town of that valley. In this little city he was the first merchant. The extent of his trade and the esteem in which he is now held in the entire community are only just rewards for his foresight and initiative. In April of 1899, during the service of Postmaster General Charles Emory Smith, he was appointed postmaster of Darby, a position that he could ably fill without severing his connection with his extensive retail business. Mr. Miles is a Republican politician with an extensive acquaintance. For several terms he has acted as justice of the peace in Darby. He is keen of wit and quick at repartee, always appreciating a clever story and ready to tell a better one. This trait has added much to his popularity and made his little store, in the old days, the most attractive spot in Darby.

Just before coming to Montana, Mr. Miles had found his "heart's desire" in the person of Miss Hester F. Bones. The young lady was born in Illinois, her father being a prominent Illinois farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Miles were united in marriage on the seventeenth day of September, 1884. Of this union eight children have been born, of whom two have been called away. The daughters are May, Grace, Georgea and Sarah. May, the oldest of the girls, is married to Andrew Loftus of Hamilton, Montana. The second daughter is now Mrs. Howard Strawn, of Portland, Oregon. The two younger girls are still in Darby. Georgea is the wife of William Sherett, of that city, and Sarah, the baby of the family, is at home with her parents. The son, Dewey, is still attending school in Darby.

George Miles is the son of Thomas Miles, originally from Ohio, and Sarah Wilcox Miles, from the Hoosier state. They purchased their Kansas farm in 1886, Mr. Miles cultivating it in person until his death in 1909. The mother still lives on the old homestead near Clay Center, Kansas. Her son, Frank Miles makes his home with her and manages the property while the youngest daughter, Ella, now Mrs. Alfonzo King, lives on a farm not far distant. Amanda, the oldest of the girls, also resides in Clay Center. She is the widow of John Hunter, a farmer in the neighborhood. The other children are Robert O. Miles, a farmer near Meridian, Kansas, and the subject of this sketch. One brother and one sister, Edson and Effie, passed away in their childhood.

Aside from his business in Darby, which is increasing in extent each year, George Miles owns valuable real estate in and about Darby. He is the only member of the family who has, in the search for fortune left the Sunflower state, and while he possesses only the kindest memories of sunny Kansas, to him no state can equal Montana in the stores of native wealth and vast opportunities that she offers to her sons and daughters. It is a pleasure to him that his own family are native children of her soil.

HON. WILLIAM BRAXTON GEORGE. A man to have accomplished so much in divergent fields and in so short a period of time as has the Hon. William Braxton George, of Billings, must possess unusual qualities and versatile talents. To be a successful man in but one line demands many natural and acquired gifts, and the majority never reach this goal, while in Mr. George's case business prosperity, political leadership and profound public confidence have all been gained, and, more significant still, are maintained. He was born on a farm in Platte county, Missouri, June 1, 1865, and is a son of William Peyton and Frances Mary (Duncan) George.

The father of Mr. George was born in Fauquier county, Virginia, February 1, 1835, and his present residence is at Camden Point, Missouri, while Mr. George's mother, a native of Platte county, passed away in 1909. They had a family of eight children, but four of whom are living, as follows: Ida, the wife of Thomas Bywater, of Camden Point, Missouri; William Braxton; Elizabeth, who also lives at Camden Point; and Clinton, a real estate man of San Antonio, Texas. William Peyton George was a young man when he first located in Missouri, and he there engaged in the general merchandise business. Some time after his marriage to the daughter of Judge Duncan he commenced farming on a property that was cultivated by slave labor, which had been given to the young couple by Judge Duncan and Mr. George's father, and Mr. George after the war helped support them for a number of years. He was engaged in farming and stock-raising until 1895, in which year he retired from active pursuits. He has always taken an active interest in educational matters and for many years served as a member of the school board while on his farm, and as a director of the State Female Orphans' School. He has been treasurer of the Christian church for the last quarter of a century. In politics an ardent Democrat, he was appointed to the position of postmaster at Camden Point, but declined to serve, having no desire for public preferment.

Like all of his father's children, William B. George received excellent educational advantages, attending the public schools, William Jewell College, Liberty, Missouri, the State University at Columbia, Missouri, and Eastman's Business College at Poughkeepsie, New York. He then returned to Platte county, and for a year following was engaged in farming in the summer months and in teaching school during the winter term, and in the spring of 1886 located in Helena, Montana. There he subsequently became assistant secretary of the board of education, then became assistant postmaster at Deer Lodge and was later railway postal clerk between Billings and Helena. He was next appointed railway postal clerk by President Cleveland, but after one year resigned that position to become assistant postmaster at Billings, where in 1890 he engaged in the fruit, jewelry and confectionery business. During that same year he was elected city treasurer and succeeded himself four terms. In 1896 he received the election to the office of county treasurer, in which he served capably for one term, and in 1901 he became his party's choice for the office of mayor, and an administration that was marked by many municipal improvements followed. Among other movements organized by Mr. George was the securing of a site, the selling of bonds and the erection of a new city hall and fire station, which cost upwards of $32,000. He served as state chairman of the Anti-Trust party and as chairman of the Democratic state central committee in 1908, was a delegate to the national convention held in Denver, and was selected to notify William J. Bryan for the Montana delegation. During the same year he was selected by Gov. Edwin L. Norris as one of his advisors to attend the conservation meeting held at the White House in Washington, D. C. In November, 1910, Mr. George was elected state senator by a majority of between 400 and 500 votes, as Democratic candidate in a district that usually polls a Republican majority of 1,000. Through his efforts the eastern part of the state was redistricted, thus giving that section five representatives where it formerly had but one. During the United State senatorial election of 1911 he received thirty votes, but as he was pledged to his friend, Thomas J. Walsh, he refused the nomination, and this resulted in a dead-lock, which was broken when Henry L. Meyers was agreed upon. Mr. George was chairman of the state fair committee, and while a member thereof secured an extension of the street car line which had long been sought, and in addition to showing himself an aggressive member of the senate in other ways made a vigorous fight for a highway law and highway commission. He also introduced the Guarantee Banking Bill and the Public Service Utility Bill, and in every possible manner has worked to advance the interests of his state and his constituents in Yellowstone county.

Mr. George's business interests are mainly connected with real estate and insurance, and in these he has built up a large and profitable patronage. As an organizer and developer he is known throughout the city, and in one transaction alone, that of 1900, when he platted the addition to the west side of the city, he opened up a territory that is now occupied by the residences of some of Billings' leading men. In 1904 he was one of the organizers of the state fair, serving for six years as its president and as a member of the executive committee. In the irrigation and development of the Yellowstone valley he has accomplished as much as any one man in his section, and has about 1,500 acres under irrigation, in addition to 1,000 acres above the ditch, the latter being put to wheat, of which he raises from twenty to twenty-five bushels per acre. Mr. George is also the owner of one of the largest ranches of this locality, a tract of 7,000 acres located seven miles west of the city of Billings, and about 2,500 acres are under cultivation, of which 100 acres are in orchard. The beautiful home of the George family is within one and one-half miles of the city, and is equipped with all modern appliances and conveniences, being connected with the city electric light and water companies. One of Mr. George's hobbies may be said to be good roads, and from time to time he has traveled extensively through the state, urging the importance of well-built thoroughfares. In 1910 he was the organizer of the first good roads congress in the state, and has since been chairman of the committee and active in the work of the organization. His other diversion, to which he gives a great deal of attention, is the raising of cows, sheep and blooded horses, principally the latter. He owns his own breeding stables, has some fine driving horses, and was the owner of two pacers: "Ruby Messenger," 2:14 $\frac{1}{4}$, and "Billings G.," 2:18. He assisted in the organization of the Young Men's Christian Association and the Polytechnic Institute, and in addition to his numerous other interests finds time to devote to fraternal work. He belongs to Ashlar Lodge, No. 29, A. F. & A. M.; Billings Chapter, No. 6, R. A. M.; Aldemar Commandery, No. 5, K. T., and Algeria Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., Helena, being a past master of his lodge and past eminent commander of the commandery. He also holds membership in Billings Lodge, No. 394, B. P. O. E., of which he is exalted ruler.

On June 15, 1892, Mr. George was married to Miss Virginia Florence Sleeper, who was born in Camden, New Jersey, daughter of Nehemiah and Martha (Fleming) Sleeper, both of whom are deceased. Mrs. George was the fourth in order of birth of a large family of children, of whom six are living. Her father was a Quaker, a prosperous business man and a member of the city council of Burlington, New Jersey, was highly respected as a business man and citizen, and known as an influential Republican politician. His wife, who was an accomplished musician, was of Scotch-Irish descent. Mr. and Mrs. George have had a family of eleven children, of whom four died when quite young, while those who survive are: Raymond and William B., Jr., who are attending high school; Preston B., a student in the public schools; and Marie, Virginia Florence, Robert and Mabel.

The career of William B. George has been one of public usefulness, and is free from any stain or blemish. In all the relations of life he has been true to his country and to himself, to the duties that have devolved upon him and to the manifold responsibilities that must be assumed by those who attain such public prominence. In the prime of life, with his best years yet before him, it is safe to predict that still higher honors await him, and that he will do them full justice.

BURT G. SHOREY. One of the best known men of this section of Montana at the present time is Mr. Burt G. Shorey, of Billings, who has for a long period of years been identified in a large way with the development of various portions of Montana. The Shorey family is one of those rugged pioneers of New England who settled in Waldo county, Maine, in an early day, and it was left for the representatives of the present generation to push out into the great northwest, where life is freer and less cramped than in the older parts of the country. Mr. Shorey was born in Belfast, Maine, September 7, 1862, a member of a family of seven children, six of whom are still living. Three brothers, John, Waldo and Raime, are now residents of Montana, the first named living at White Sulphur Springs and the latter two at Forsyth. One brother, William, lives on the old homestead at Waldo, while the only sister, Jennie, who is the wife of John McGrey, is a resident of Knox, Maine. The parents of this family, Wellington and Louise (Durham) Shorey, were both natives of Waldo county, Mr. Shorey having been born there in 1828 and his wife in 1839. He was a young man of twenty-two when he went out into the Maine wilderness and made a clearing for his home and also cleared and improved the land now contained in the family homestead, and he was engaged as a general farmer throughout his life. He was a man of considerable prominence in the community in which he resided and filled various minor offices, among them being that of member of the school board and of the board of selectmen for his township. Politically he was a Republican. His death occurred in 1900, while his wife survived him seven years and died in 1907.

When it came to establishing a home of his own, Mr. Burt G. Shorey also chose for his wife a daughter of Waldo county and a member of an old Maine family, and his marriage to Helen A. Simmons occurred August 11, 1889. Her parents were J. Allen and Addie (Ray) Simmons, and of their family of eleven children eight are now living, as are Mr. and Mrs. Simmons. Mr. Simmons cultivated a farm all his life and he, too, is a man who is active in public affairs of the community and has held numerous township offices. Mr. and Mrs. Shorey have one daughter, Adelaide.

Like his father before him, Mr. Shorey early started out to carve his own fortune in the new and untried part of the world, and on March 15, 1880, when in his eighteenth year left home to go west. He journeyed as far as Ogden, Utah, by railway then finished the trip to White Sulphur Springs, Meagher county, Montana, traveling overland and consuming seventeen days in the entire journey from Maine. He immediately secured employment on the ranch of Cook & Hussey, but remained there only three months, then went to Judith Basin and took up a claim of one hundred and sixty acres of government land. For a year and a half he engaged in sheep raising on the place, then sold out and became superintendent of the big sheep ranch of Miss Carson, at Hoplay Hole. He remained as superintendent of that ranch for two years, then worked for Charles Severance for a short time and in the spring of 1886 again took up independent operations as a sheep rancher, this time locating at Lake Basin, Yellowstone county. Mr. Shorey met with unremittant success in his various ventures, and devoted his earnings and profits from year to year in judicious investments, largely in land and sheep. When he finally retired from active conduct of his ranch it contained thirty-two thousand acres, and in 1908 he sold the property to L. Thomas.

Mr. Shorey had in the meantime erected a residence in Billings and made his home in this city from the year 1901. It was in 1907 that he was first elected to the presidency of the Billings State Bank, and he has held that position continuously ever since. He still retains extensive interests in ranch properties, however, and also owns much valuable property of other descriptions. Among his holdings are a stock ranch of eight hundred and twenty acres in Carbon county; another in Dawson county containing eleven hundred acres, and a half interest in an eighteen hundred acre ranch near Custer station, Yellowstone county. He also has a third interest in the International Coal Company at Bear Creek, is a stockholder in the Babcock office and theatre building here and also owns the Security warehouse in Billings. The mere enumeration of these holdings is prima facie evidence of the financial success Mr. Shorey has achieved and indicates also the substantial character of his business and personal attributes. He is a potential influence in every enterprise of worth which is designed to advance the best interests of this city and state, his public spirit and generosity are well known and his honesty and integrity unimpeachable. His prominence as a lodge man is evidence in his membership in such orders as Rathbone Lodge, No. 28, Knights of Pythias, and Billings Lodge, No. 394, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He has a wide acquaintance throughout this part of the state, and is held in the highest esteem by all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance.

JOSEPH COLLINS WEST. In considering the prominent men of Montana, those who are at the head of large and important business concerns, rule corporations and control vast aggregations of capital, many will be found who have reached these positions of grave responsibility through their own efforts, and this is true of Joseph Collins West, one of the representative men of Billings, Montana. Mr. West was born in the city of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, February 19, 1877, and is the only child of Samuel and Sarah (Hackett) West.

Both parents of Mr. West were born in Philadelphia, where the father died in 1881, at the early age of twenty-nine years. The mother survives and is a resident of Butte, Montana. Samuel West was a wholesale and retail merchant at Philadelphia, dealing in paints and oils.

Joseph Collins West was four years old when he was left fatherless. He completed his education in the university at Notre Dame, Indiana, where he was graduated in the class of 1896. Afterward was employed for some years as a bookkeeper in various business houses, being so engaged after accompanying his mother to Butte, Montana, where, later, he became connected with the Centennial Brewing Company of that city, and learned the brewing business in every detail.

On August 30, 1900, Mr. West was married to Miss Florence F. Mueller, who was born at Sherwood, Wyoming, and is a daughter of Henry and Margaret (Frilling) Mueller. The father of Mrs. West was born at Cologne, Germany, came to America in early manhood and became one of the leading men of this section of Montana. He was engaged first in the lumber and planing mill business in Wisconsin and Chicago, Illinois, and came to Butte, Montana, in 1886. He was one of the owners of the Centennial Brewing Company of Butte and its president, owned also the Olympia brewery and later built the Billings brewery at Billings and at the time of his death was president of the Billings Brewery Company. He was prominent in the Democratic party and served one term as mayor of the city of Butte. In that city he was identified with Silver Bow Lodge, B. P. O. E. He married Margaret Frilling, who was born at Menasha, Wisconsin, and at present is a resident of Butte, Montana. Six children were born to them, three sons and three daughters, Mrs. West being the eldest, and five members of the family survive.

In 1900 Mr. West came to Billings, taking charge of business properties of his own and investing here in property. Formerly he was secretary and treasurer of the Billings Brewing Company, of Billings, later vice-president and manager and at the present time is president and manager, as well as owner of the Eureka Bottling Works and interested also in the Billings Warehouse Company and is a director in the Farmers and Traders State Bank. Politically he is a Republican, but his activities in this direction are only those of good citizenship. When the organization of the Elks lodge at Billings was first proposed he took a very active interest in the move and was elected the president of the first Elks Club and has served three terms since then as exalted ruler of the lodge. He is identified also with the Order of the Moose and with the Red Men.

WILLIAM T. MAULDIN. When death came to William T. Mauldin, of Dillon, Montana, one of the pioneers of the state passed away. He had been engaged in many different occupations in various sections of the state for over forty years, and his death left a gap in the ranks of the business men of Dillon which would be difficult to fill. William T. Mauldin was born in Cecil county, Maryland, on the 3rd of September, 1843, a son of John and Sophia (Simpers) Mauldin. John Mauldin was for many years a shoe merchant of Baltimore, Maryland, and at the time of his death he had removed from Baltimore and was living in northeast Maryland. William T. Mauldin received his early education in the public schools of his native state and then entered the Tuscarora Academy, in Pennsylvania. Completing his course in the academy, he came west as far as Indianapolis, Indiana, and for the next four years was in the employ of his brother James, who was at the time the leading shoe merchant of the capital city of the Hoosier state.

It was in 1865 that he first came to Montana. He brought with him some merchandise, which he disposed of at the high prices which were prevalent during these early days. In the spring of the following year he crossed over into Idaho and there in the Salmon River country he spent the next two years, engaged in mining. In 1869 he made a journey down to Utah, and bought a lot of cattle and drove them back to Montana, where he disposed of them at good profit. There being no way of making any more money in Montana that he could find at that time he returned to the east, and for a time was engaged in the mercantile business in Chicago, Illinois. Then he entered the produce business in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, where he remained for some time, but the charms of the Treasure state served to lure him back to her again at last, and in 1876 he and his brother James began to operate a farm on Beaverhead river. His next move took him to Kansas, where he continued as a farmer for some time, returning at length to Montana. This was in 1886, and he located in the city of Butte and there engaged in the cigar and tobacco business. After some time spent thus he determined to once more invest in land in Beaverhead county, and this time purchased a farm of about eight hundred acres near Dillon, which is now considered one of the valuable properties in the vicinity of Dillon. He became a successful farmer, and had always been a successful business man, in spite of the fact that he had been engaged in so many different lines of work. Of a quiet demeanor, and little given to telling tales of his own prowess, he was well known and had many friends in every community in which he lived. His death occurred in Dillon, August 21, 1907.

Mr. Mauldin was married at Ogden, Utah, February 11, 1877, to Mrs. Nancy Featherly, who in her maidenhood was Miss Nancy Rowley. She was born in Pennsylvania, at Catanon, on the Shenango river, but was reared at Girard in the same state. Her parents were George and Jeannette (McCracken) Rowley. Mrs. Mauldin had three sons by her first marriage, including James S. and George R. Featherly, the latter of whom manages his mother's ranch near Dillon. Mrs. Mauldin is an energetic and wide-awake woman and since the death of her husband she has managed the large estate with wisdom and success. In 1892 Mr. Mauldin, in connection with Simmon Hausworth, built the Columbia Block in Butte and Mrs. Mauldin is still the owner of this valuable property. As a diversion she took up painting and now she gives her few spare moments to the art. She has a rather remarkable memory and many of her canvasses show scenes from her childhood home in Pennsylvania which she has painted from memory. She is one of the leading members of the Presbyterian church and is one of the busiest and most popular women in Dillon.

WILLIAM HENRY DUKE. Ranking high among the successful business men of Chinook, William Henry Duke's life has been a decided success, and this is due wholly to his energy and real worth. Leaving his southern home and friends while yet in his teens, he came to Montana a stranger, and for some time he fought hard to conquer that terrible feeling of homesickness that sometimes came over him. Standing steadfast, however, to his resolutions and his convictions, he remained in the state, became intensely interested in his work, and having succeeded well in his business career, married. He is now one of the most persistent and consistent of Montana's boosters, and one of the most esteemed and valued citizens of Blaine county. A Kentuckian by birth, he was born, March 18, 1869, at Hartford, Ohio county, and was there educated. His father, Thomas Sallinger Duke, spent his entire life in Kentucky, passing away, in 1897, at his home in Hartford. He was a well-known manufacturer, and was quite prominent in public affairs during Cleveland's administration, filling different public offices. His wife, whose maiden name was Eliza Miller, was born in Kentucky and is now living at Livingston, Montana, with a daughter. Six children were born of their marriage, namely: Alva G., of St. Louis, Missouri, department manager for Butler Brothers' wholesale mail order house; Wilbur Thomas, of Chinook; William Henry, the special subject of this brief personal record; Wilbur T., a twin brother of William Henry, who died August 7, 1911; Josie, wife of J. E. Swindelhurst, of Livingston, Montana; and Ida, deceased, who married Dr. A. B. Baird, of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Completing his early education in the public schools of Hartford, Kentucky, William Henry Duke, at the age of seventeen years, came to Montana with an uncle, L. B. Statler, locating at Bozeman, where he worked in a harness shop for a year, following the trade which he had previously learned in Kentucky while working with his father. Going then to Livingston, Montana, Mr. Duke remained there for two years as manager for E. J. Owenhouse. Then, in company with John Work, he bought out his employer, and continued in business for a time as head of the firm of Duke & Work. In 1893 Mr. Duke sold out his interest in the concern, and shortly after became manager of the harness shop belonging to A. W. Miles, of Livingston. Giving up that position in 1898, he came, in July of that year, to Chinook, and having purchased the harness business established by Henry Ettinger, managed it successfully for a year. In 1899 Mr. Duke and his brother incorporated their present business under the name of the A. B. Duke Company, and have conducted it in a most systematic and efficient manner ever since. The business has been developed along modern lines, increasing rapidly from season to season, until now it is one of the best and most thoroughly equipped harness manufacturing concerns in the whole state and the foremost one in Chinook. The officers of the company are as follows: Wilbur T. Duke, president; William Henry Duke, vice president; and Anna Belle Duke, secretary. Through his own exertions Mr. Duke has acquired a large share of this world's goods, much real estate in the city, and valuable business and residential property.

In his political relations Mr. Duke is a Republican, and has served Chinook as an alderman two terms.

Mr. Duke married, September 9, 1889, Anna Belle Martin, a native of Canada, and into their pleasant household four children have been born, one of whom has passed to the life beyond, while three are living, namely: Haydn Olin, who was graduated from the Chinook high school with the class of 1909, and is now studying law at the University of Minnesota; Letha, also attending that institution; and William Henry, Jr., eight months of age.

ROBERT MCINTOSH TRAFTON, the pioneer merchant of Malta, has been identified with the state of Montana since 1886, and during the intervening years has built up a most substantial and profitable business in this place. Mr. Trafton was born in New Brunswick, May 5, 1847, and is the son of Charles and Julia Ann (McIntosh) Trafton. The father was a farmer in New Brunswick, and he came to Brainerd, Minnesota, in 1892, his death taking place there in the following year. The mother died at an early age in the New Brunswick home. Of the nine children born to these parents, seven are deceased, the remaining member besides Robert M., of this review, being Isabelle, the wife of George Jenkins, of Brainerd, Minnesota.

As a boy at home, Mr. Trafton received the usual country schooling in the typical log schoolhouse of his day, and he continued to live with his parents in their home until he was thirty-two years old. When he left home he made his way to Minneapolis, Minnesota, and his first work in that section of the country was about the lumber camps on the St. Croix river, in which work he was occupied for a year. He then went to Bartlett, North Dakota, a new town on a new branch of the railroad which penetrated that section of the country. The surrounding country was filled with people who anticipated settling thereabouts, and Mr. Trafton was persuaded to purchase a hotel at Bartlett, for which he paid fifteen hundred dollars. The threatened boom failed to materialize, and the budding town was effectually "killed." Mr. Trafton was left with a hotel on his hands and no apparent use for it, but nothing daunted, he set about to remove the hotel to the people, since it was apparent that the people would not come to his hotel. He tore the structure down and moved it overland twenty miles to Devil's Lake, then shipped the material across the lake to the town of Minnewanken, where he rebuilt the hotel and operated it for five years with much success and profit. In 1886 he came to Exeter, Montana, and, building him a log house, started a trading post. After remaining there in business for two years he came to Malta and it was he who built the first store and dwelling in this place, several years before the town was laid out. He erected his building from railroad timbers which he purchased from the Great Northern. The structure was forty-two feet square, and he used half for the store and the remainder for the dwelling.

Mr. Trafton's business for a time consisted chiefly in the buying and shipping of buffalo bones. The first year he was located at Malta he shipped over thirteen hundred tons, or one hundred carloads, and the second year his shipments aggregated over twelve hundred tons. From this beginning Mr. Trafton has built up a mercantile business second to none in the city of Malta, or, indeed, in Valley county. His present store is a large brick structure, entirely modern in every way, and one of the best in Malta. In addition to his mercantile interests, Mr. Trafton is also a large ranch owner and cattle raiser, to which business he gives considerable attention. He was the first president of the First State Bank of Malta, and is the owner of a quantity of valuable city property, as well as being the proprietor of a branch store at Coburg, Montana, carrying a stock of eight to ten thousand dollars.

Mr. Trafton is regarded as one of the leading business men of this district, a position which is conceded to him by reason of his splendid accomplishments in a business way since he has been connected with Malta. He is a man of extraordinary business ability and acumen, although he himself accredits his success to his steady attention to matters in hand and to his exemplary moral habits. He has never used intoxicants or tobacco in any form, and his general integrity is of a most unimpeachable character. Mr. Trafton is a Republican, but not politically ambitious, and in a fraternal way is affiliated with the Masonic order and the Knights of Pythias, in which latter society he has passed all chairs during the years of his membership.

In 1880 Mr. Trafton was united in marriage with Marion Rankin Knolton, daughter of Edward Knolton, a prominent farmer of Carlton county, New Brunswick, now deceased.

CHARLES COLLINS. In the modern city no municipal service has been developed to a higher point of efficiency and of greater usefulness to the property and welfare of citizens than the fire protection service. In its fire department the city of Anaconda need fear comparison with no other city of Montana, for both in equipment and personnel it is modern and to the highest degree effective.

As organizer of the old-time volunteer service and present chief of the modern department, Charles Collins has long been one of the valued citizens of Anaconda, and his civic and personal record is very interesting. He was born in Marengo, Iowa, on April 1, 1869. In that town while a boy he attended the public schools, but at a very early age began his practical experience. In a drug store of his home town he was hired at a salary of twelve dollars a month, most of which he gave to his mother, and he gained a good working knowledge of the drug business while there. When about fourteen years old he left home and continued employment in the drug business at Omaha for one year.

In 1886, at the age of seventeen, he came out to Montana, and this state has since been his permanent place of residence. During the subsequent years he has made trips of greater or less duration to Alaska, British Columbia, Nevada, Utah and elsewhere, but never with an idea of leaving the state as a home. His first town on coming here was Anaconda, and he has acknowledged no other home town since that date. For three years he was employed in the concentrator plant of the A. C. M. Company. For six years he was actively connected with the fire department, after which he was for a similar period engaged principally in mining. He also studied and learned steam engineering, and with his long experience and technical knowledge was eminently fitted for the position of chief of the fire department, to which he was appointed in October, 1911.

In 1888 he organized the first volunteer fire company of Anaconda, and later was the first paid fireman appointed in this city. More or less actively, he has been identified with this service all the years of his residence here, and the city owes much to him for its present fire protection. In the early days he was captain of the fire department athletic team, and led it in competitions all over the state. This company held the state championship for five consecutive years. During the existence of the volunteer organization he and J. A. Hasley, of this city, held the record for three years as the champion pair of hose couplers, and their record has never been excelled since then. Chief Collins believes in the best of improvements both in equipment and training of the members of the fire department. The department is now altogether a paid service, and is motorized with modern apparatus, a new $6,000 truck having been recently added.

Mr. Collins was married in British Columbia, February 17, 1900, to Miss Laura J. Boyd, daughter of John and Sophia Boyd, of Anaconda. Mr. and Mrs. Collins have three children, Flora, Lillian and Evelyn, all of whom are in school, and Miss Flora is a student of music.

The parents of Chief Collins were Joseph H. and Mary (Francis) Collins. The father, who now lives retired and spends his time with his children, was born in Tennessee and settled in Iowa in 1846, about the time Iowa was admitted to the Union. A farmer and merchant by occupation, he also became prominent in politics. He is one of the old guard of the Republican party, and was a delegate to the national convention in Chicago in 1860. He carried a rail with him and was one of the enthusiastic supporters who backed Abraham Lincoln for the nomination as president. He was married in Iowa, and his wife passed away in 1910, when about seventy years old. Her death occurred while visiting a daughter in St. Anthony, Idaho, and she is buried there. Of the seven children in the family, Charles was the fifth and the youngest son. One sister is the wife of Dr. W. C. Gutelius, a well-known dentist of Anaconda. The rest of the family are located in various western states.

Mrs. Collins is a member of the Presbyterian church, and he leans toward the Methodist denomination. In politics he is Republican, but not active in party affairs. All forms of athletic contests appeal to him, and he is especially fond of witnessing a good boxing match. Music is one of his delights, and for six years he was a member of the Anaconda band.

What the state of Montana means to him personally is well stated in his own words. He says: "I have traveled all over Washington, Oregon, Alaska, British Columbia, Idaho and Utah, and put in my boyhood's hardship days in Iowa. I saw a great deal of Missouri, Nebraska and the Dakotas, and with due respect to them all, I say when a man leaves Montana he is leaving home, and will only be glad to return. There is no place on the American continent where opportunity and success go hand in hand so harmoniously as in Montana."

FRANK REYNOLDS. The history of the growth, development and success of a state is a record of the achievements of its individual citizens. Butte is well favored in its number of energetic, enterprising and progressive business men, one of whom is Frank Reynolds, well known in the city and throughout this section of Montana as a successful real estate man. Born in Waseka, Minnesota, May 24, 1870, he grew up under the influence of the alert, progressive western spirit, which influence, together with his natural abilities, well fitted him for an aggressive business career.

He received his education in the public schools of his Minnesota home, on leaving which he was engaged for a time at various occupations until he came to Fort Buford, North Dakota. There he followed the cattle business six years, during which time he passed through many trying and oft times amusing experiences. He finally gave it up for a more settled life and came to Butte, Montana, where he started in the grocery business, at first on a very small scale, as his capital at that time was very limited. Push and pluck, combined with exceptional business acumen, soon led to success. His business grew steadily until it had reached that proportion that in 1909, when he disposed of it, the stock alone netted him $15,000. The store was one of the best of its kind in Butte, and Mr. Reynolds may well be proud of the magnificent business he developed.

Upon disposing of his mercantile interests he decided to engage in the real estate business and opened offices in the State Savings Bank building in Butte. He was successful from the start, for he entered upon his new line of endeavor with the same push and energy that had characterized his previous business career. He bought a large tract of land in Silver Bow Park, and after improving the property laid it out in lots for building purposes. Since August, 1911, or in less than six months' time, he has disposed of 159 of those lots wholly through his own efforts, which accomplishment of itself characterizes the spirit of the man and his business methods. Mr. Reynolds has made an enviable record thus far upon life's journey, and his prominence and high standing in Butte as a business man and as a citizen are but the just rewards of his activities and industry.

The parents of Mr. Reynolds are Robert and Annie (Corr) Reynolds, the former of whom was born in Pennsylvania in 1843 and at an early period came westward to Minnesota, where he engaged in farming, was successful and is still actively interested in that pursuit. Annie Corr was born in Wisconsin in 1853, but was married to Robert Reynolds in Minnesota, which state has since remained their home. They reside in Waseka. Robert Reynolds is a veteran of the Civil war, in which he loyally served the Union three years as a member of a Minnesota volunteer company of infantry. He received his honorable discharge at the close of hostilities, after having participated in a number of the hardest fought battles of that conflict.

On May 22, 1899, was solemnized the marriage of Frank Reynolds and Miss Marguerite Carver, of Butte, Montana. Two children have blessed their union: Gladys, born September 28, 1901, at Butte, who is now attending school, and Bernice, who was born at Butte on November 8, 1905.

Though interested in the problems and issues of the day, Mr. Reynolds takes no active part in political affairs. Fraternally he is a member of the Woodmen of the World and the Loyal Order of Moose. Busy as his life is, he reserves a rightful share of his time for recreation, and especially enjoys hunting and other outdoor sports. Mr. Reynolds and his family enjoy an elegant home which he owns in Silver Bow Park.

JAMES D. GRAHAM. In every nook and corner of the wide world the traveler will find the Scotchman ever determined, steadfast, reliable, prosperous and none are better American citizens than the natives of the country which never conquered, though often beaten, finally gave kings to England, field marshals to France, Russia and Prussia, cardinals to Rome, the second greatest man to the Reformation, and to America a body of citizens whose priceless value can not be reckoned and who have made such an imprint upon our history that any of our citizens are proud to claim Scotch or Scotch-Irish blood. Prominent among the Scotch-Americans in Helena is James D. Graham, proprietor of the Montana News, a Socialist organ, and one of the leading Socialists in this part of the state. He was born in the "land o' cakes" February 2, 1873, and is a son of Malcolm Graham, a native of that country. The elder man brought his family to America in 1886, when James was still a lad and made location at Livingston, Montana, where he successfully followed his trade as a machinist. He is now a resident of LeGrand, Oregon. The maiden name of the subject's mother was Bessie Denholm, and she was a daughter of George Denholm, a native of Scotland. This worthy woman died while the family were living at Livingston, on June 29, 1890, and her remains are there interred. James was the first born in a family consisting of five sons and two daughters.

Mr. Graham received his early education in the schools of Scotland and continued his studies until about the age of thirteen, when the more serious duties of life confronted him, the family being in modest circumstances. His first employment was in the ship yards of his native Scotland, and he remained thus engaged for three years, coming to America with other members of the family in 1886. After arriving at Helena he was apprenticed to learn the machinist trade and followed the same until 1902. In 1905 Mr. Graham came to Helena and founded the Montana News, a Socialist paper, then owned by the Socialist party, but which is now entirely in the hands of Mr. Graham. His heart is in the cause and his word has great influence and weight in the councils of the new party which is every day gaining ground. He has the distinction of being the first Socialist candidate for alderman in the state of Montana, running for this office while in Livingston, and he came within five votes of being elected. He was one of the principal factors in the defeat of the primary law in Montana and also did much toward putting a quietus to the Ronahue Militia bill and forcing the referendum, thus requiring the acquisition of 8,000 signatures. Wherever Socialism is a live issue, the name of Graham is well known.

Mr. Graham has fraternal affiliation with the Farmers' Society of Equity and the Master Machinists' Union. He subscribes to the faith of his countryman, John Knox, being a valued member of the Presbyterian church. He is a powerful advocate of municipal ownership and it is one of his fondest ambitions to live to see this in force all over the state of Montana. No one is more interested in public affairs and more intelligent and advanced in his ideals concerning them.

Mr. Graham laid the foundation of an independent household by his marriage October 24, 1901. Both he and his wife are highly esteemed by all who know them and have a wide circle of friends in the city of Helena.

WESLEY P. FRANKLIN. Possessed, as a general rule, of great industry, energy and enterprise, the average Montana ranchman is usually loath to retire from active participation in the industrial affairs of his community, even when he has earned well-merited rest through long years of continuous labor, but when he finally turns over the management of his operations to younger hands and moves to the nearby city, he invariably becomes one of its most valued citizens and is welcomed as a recognized addition to his new community's population. Wesley P. Franklin, a highly esteemed retired citizen of Big Timber, was for many years engaged in the sheep and cattle business in Sweet Grass county, and throughout his career was known as a man of the most upright principles and highest integrity. He was born in Owen county, Indiana, March 15, 1837, and is a son of John and Mary (Puett) Franklin. John Franklin was a native of North Carolina and as a young man removed to Owen county, Indiana, where he settled as a pioneer farmer. During the spring of 1850 he went to McLean county, Illinois, and there the remainder of his life was spent in farming and stock raising, his death occurring when he was fifty-seven years of age. He belonged to the Christian church all his life, and in political matters was a stalwart Whig. His wife, who was a native of Tennessee, survived him for a long period, attaining the remarkable age of ninety-nine years, and they had nine children, of whom four are living: Elizabeth, the widow of Seldon M. Paine; Noah; Nelson, and W. P. Franklin.

The education of Wesley P. Franklin was secured in the public schools of McLean county, Illinois, and as a youth assisted his father in the work of the home farm. When his father died he began farming and stock raising on his own account, and in 1886 came by way of the Northern Pacific to Montana, and located near Big Timber, where he first took up a squatter's claim on Fish creek, about thirty miles from the town. There he engaged in the sheep business with his son, Herschel P., who had come to the state before him and had managed the business since 1881. They remained on Fish creek until the fall of 1886, then removing to what was known as the Puett ranch, a tract of 480 acres which they purchased in 1889. To this they added by purchase, homestead, pre-emption and desert claims until they had 9,330 acres, and carried on the sheep business until 1898, when all the sheep were sold and they turned their attention to raising cattle. They also did an extensive business in buying and selling cattle until 1900, when Mr. Franklin retired from the business and moved to Big Timber. He now has large interests in the A. F. & K. Elevator Company, in addition to owning 4,000 acres of fine ranch land situated about fifteen miles from Big Timber, and is known as one of his city's most substantial business citizens.

On March 21, 1858, Mr. Franklin was married to Miss Hannah Puett, who was born in Georgetown, Illinois, and is deceased, having been the mother of four children: Mrs. Estella Mowdy, a widow; Herschel P., now living in Melville, Montana, married Miss Lee of Indiana; Lillian, the widow of Dr. J. C. Graham; and Daisy, who married Charles Scrogin, of Lexington, Illinois. On January 13, 1909, Mr. Franklin was married (second) to Miss Bessie Bryan, a native of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Mr. Franklin is a Democrat in his political views, but his business interests have demanded all of his attention, and he has never found time to enter the public arena. He is a consistent member of the Christian church, and is esteemed and respected by all who know him, as a man whose career has been an upright and honorable one, and who has had at all times the welfare of his community at heart.

LOUIS A. ESCHLE is a man of unusual enterprise and initiative and has met with such marvelous good fortune in his various business projects that it would verily seem as though he possessed an open sesame to unlock the doors to success. Self-made in the most significant sense of the word, he has progressed steadily toward the goal of success until he is recognized as one of the foremost business men and citizens of Butte, where he has resided since 1888, and where he conducts one of the finest and best equipped plumbing establishments in the entire state.

A native of the fine old Gopher state of the Union, Louis A. Eschle was born in the city of St. Paul, Minnesota, the date of his nativity being the 22nd of September, 1866. He is a son of Henry and Mary (Wey) Eschle, both of whom were born and reared in Germany, whence they immigrated to America. Henry Eschle was one of the early settlers in St. Paul, Minnesota, having come to that place when it was populated by not more than half a dozen white men. He was a contractor and builder of note and figured prominently in public affairs. He was a soldier in many of the Indian wars of early Minnesota and at the time of the inception of the Civil war gave evidence of his intrinsic loyalty to the cause of the Union by enlisting as a soldier in the Second Minnesota Volunteer Infantry. He served through the entire period of the war and participated in many of the most important engagements marking the progress of the war, having been several times wounded. He was summoned to the life eternal in 1881, at the age of fifty-six years. Mrs. Eschle came to St. Paul when young and there was solemnized her marriage; she passed away in 1909, at the age of seventy-six years.

The seventh in order of birth in a family of ten children, Louis A. Eschle received his early educational training in the public schools of St. Paul. At the age of thirteen years he entered upon an apprenticeship to learn the plumber's trade in the shop of Wilson & Rogers, at St. Paul, the largest plumbing concern west of Chicago. He served an apprenticeship of six years and during that time mastered the business in all its branches, becoming an expert plumber, gas and steam-pipe fitter. He was employed in the shop of Wilson & Rogers for three years as a journeyman and in 1886 he came to Montana, locating first in the city of Helena, where he secured a position with the plumbing concern of Dutton & O'Brien. He remained with the latter concern for one year and then was in the employ of Stark & Brown for one year, at the expiration of which he decided to open a plumbing shop of his own. Coming to Butte, in 1888, he established his present business, beginning in a modest way and gradually spreading out the scope of his operations until he now does business throughout the state. His success is due entirely to his own persistency and well-directed endeavors and as such is the more gratifying to contemplate. In connection with his work he is a valued and appreciative member of the Master Plumbers Association.

At Helena, Montana, in November, 1889, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Eschle to Miss Ida S. Ganote, who was born and reared at Jeffersonville, Indiana, who is a daughter of George Ganote, a representative citizen at Union Store, Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Eschle are the parents of two daughters,—Juanita and Lulu, both of whom are attending school at Butte.

In his political proclivities Mr. Eschle is aligned as a stalwart in the ranks of the Republican party. He has no time for active participation in public affairs but is ever ready to do all in his power to advance the general welfare of his home community. In a fraternal way he is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World. Mr. Eschle is exceedingly fond of the national game of baseball and at one time played on a nine at Butte. He is popular with all classes of people and by reason of his exemplary life and fair and honorable dealings is accorded the unalloyed confidence and high regard of his fellow citizens.

JOHN W. VAN DOREN. Ranking among Livingston's prominent men, who have been honored politically and who have achieved a high standing in the realm of business and finance, stands the subject of this sketch, John W. Van Doren. A native of New Jersey, he was born January 1, 1846, a son of Henry O. and Letitia Van Doren, also natives of that state, who spent their lives in agricultural pursuits, the father passing away when eighty years of age and the mother when John W. was but a child. They had five children, of whom three survive: David, John W. and Martha.

John W. Van Doren was reared on his father's farm, and when he could be spared from the duties thereof, during the winter months, attended the district schools of his native vicinity. In 1869 he removed to Knox county, Illinois, where he first worked as a farm hand for about two years, and after his marriage removed to Montgomery county, Kansas, and continued to engage in agricultural pursuits for the next three years. Returning to Knox county, Illinois, he was engaged in farming and stock raising until 1886, in which year he came to Park county, Montana, where the cattle business occupied his energies until 1900. He then established his home in the city of Livingston, where he has a comfortable modern residence at No. 723 East Calendar street. He disposed of his farm in 1905. In political matters Mr. Van Doren is a Democrat, and stands high in the counsels of his party in Park county. He has served as alderman of the city for one term, and during the past eleven years has acted efficiently as a member of the school board. He was one of the leading spirits in the organization of the First State Bank of Livingston and one of the original members of the directing board of this well-known institution, later became vice-president, was then president for several years, and at the present time acts in the capacity of vice-president. Other large enterprises have had his support and co-operation, among them the Shields River Telephone Company, of which he was one of the organizers. He and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Mr. Van Doren was married in Knox county, Illinois, December 6, 1870, to Miss Harriet Wagner, who was born in Canton, Fulton county, Illinois, daughter of Jesse and Nancy Wagner, natives of Pennsylvania. Mrs. Van Doren's parents were married in their native state, and in 1840 removed to Fulton county, Illinois, and engaged in farming, later going to Knox county, Illinois, where Mr. Wagner carried on farming and stock raising until some years prior to his death, when he retired from business activities. He died at the age of eighty-eight years in Knox county, and his widow survived him but two years, having also reached the age of eighty-eight. They had a family of eight children, of whom but two survive; John, living in Kansas; and Harriet, who married Mr. Van Doren. Mr. and Mrs. Van Doren have three children: Thirza, the wife of Harry Blair; Dr. Halsey, who is a dentist, working in Livingston, who married Montana Meyers; and Bessie, the wife of Charles Landis. In conclusion it may be said of Mr. Van Doren that as a man he is honorable, upright and conscientious; as a citizen untiring in his efforts for the advancement of Livingston; and in business possesses acumen, keen insight and great general ability. These have been the characteristics and guiding principles of his life, and to them is due the fact that he is one of his section's most respected and highly esteemed citizens.

JOHN HAWKE, through persistency and a determination to forge ahead, has gained a high place for himself in the business world at Butte, where he is conducting an extensive and prosperous livery business. At the present time, in 1912, he is a member of the city board of aldermen and his citizenship has ever been characterized by loyalty and public spirit of the most insistent order.

A native of England, John Hawke was born at Cornwall, that country, on the 3d. of January, 1867, and he is a son of Henry and Matilda (Veal) Hawke, both of whom are now deceased, the former having passed to the life eternal in 1882 and the latter in 1881. The father was a farmer by occupation and he passed his entire life in England, where he reared to maturity a family of six children, five of whom are living at the present time, in 1912.

As a youth John Hawke attended school in the vicinity of his home in England and when fifteen years of age he became a farm hand on one of his father's estates near Cornwall. Soon thereafter he came to America with an older brother and the two located at Warren, Warren county, Pennsylvania, where John was variously engaged until March, 1886, in which year he came to Montana. After his advent in this state, Mr. Hawke worked on the construction of the Blue Bird Mill at Butte for a time but in September, 1886, he removed to Granite, this state, where he eventually became interested in the occupation of stage driving. He ran a stage from Philipsburg to Granite for three years prior to 1890 and in that year engaged in the livery business at Granite in connection with his work as stage driver. In 1894 he removed his livery business to Great Falls, where he remained until October, 1895, coming at that time to Butte, where he has since maintained his home and business headquarters. He is conducting a splendid livery business in this city and it may be said concerning him that his success is on a parity with his well-directed endeavors. He has money invested in a number of other business enterprises in Butte and as a financier holds prestige as a man of splendid executive ability and good judgment.

In his political convictions Mr. Hawke is allied as an unswerving supporter of the cause of the Republican party, in the local councils of which he is an active factor. In the spring of 1911 Mr. Hawke was elected alderman from the Fourth ward to serve for a term of two years. In the Masonic order he is a valued member of Silver Bow Lodge No. 48, Free and Accepted Masons, and Deer Lodge Chapter No. 3, R. A. M., and in a social way he is a member of the Butte Driving Club. He is well known and popular amongst the best citizens of Butte.

At Butte, Montana, on the 20th of September, 1888, Mr. Hawke was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Champion, a daughter of Joseph Champion, who came to this city from England in the pioneer days. Mr. and Mrs. Hawke are the parents of six children, as follows: Nora Jane, Gertrude Ellen, Hazel Pearl, Ruby Elizabeth, the latter attending the Butte Business College; Lillian is in high school; and John is a pupil in the McKinley school.

WILLIAM F. KESTER. At the head of the Montana Implement Company, William F. Kester is actively identified with the manufacturing and mercantile interests of Great Falls, and is contributing his full share towards the industrial development of the city. A native of Ohio, he was born, December 8, 1865, at Arcanum, Darke county, coming on both sides of the house of thrifty German ancestry.

His father, Henry Kester, a native of Germany, lived in the Fatherland until twelve years old. Being an ambitious and venturesome boy, he then bade farewell to relatives and friends, and came alone to America, hoping in this land of promise to improve his material condition. Going directly to Eaton, Ohio, he continued his studies in the public schools for a short time, and later learned the trade of a carriage maker, which he followed successfully until his death, in 1889. He married Wilhelmina Kester, who was born in Germany, and came to this country with her parents in girlhood, and is still a resident of Eaton, Ohio. Eight children were born of their union, William F. being the fifth child in order of birth, and the only one living in Montana.

Educated in Eaton, Ohio, William F. Kester attended the common and high schools regularly until sixteen years old, after which he served an apprenticeship of three years at the trade of a carriage blacksmith. He subsequently did journeyman work at Eaton for six years, the pecuniary result of his labors being not at all satisfactory. In May, 1886, borrowing money with which to pay his expenses, Mr. Kester came to Montana and for about seven years followed his trade in Helena, meeting with fair success. Early in the spring of 1893 he came to Great Falls with a view of making a permanent settlement, and a few weeks later embarked in business on his own account as a carriage maker and blacksmith, beginning in a small way at the corner of Second avenue and Second street. Overcoming all obstacles, he became quite successful in his undertakings, and in 1895 added an implement department to his plant, and organized his business as the Great Falls Carriage Works. Prosperity smiled upon his efforts to such an extent that in 1898 the business was incorporated under the name of the Montana Implement Company, and is now one of the largest of the kind in Northern Montana, William F. Kester being president of the organization, while Mrs. Estella Kester, his wife, is vice-president, secretary and treasurer. Mr. Kester is a man of excellent business judgment and ability, and has made wise investments of his money, owning not only city property of value, but large tracts of ranch lands. He likewise has interests in other organizations, being vice-president of the Northwestern Automobile & Engineering Company of Great Falls; president of the Merchants Association; and is now a director of the State Merchants' Association, which was organized in 1907, and of which he was the first president.

Independent in his political opinions, Mr. Kester invariably casts his ballot in favor of the best men and measures regardless of party prejudices. He was formerly actively interested in military tactics, and while a resident of Helena was for six years a member of Battery A, Helena State Militia. Socially he belongs to the Electric City Club; and fraternally he is a member of Lodge 214, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Great Falls; and of Queen City Lodge, No. 42 Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Helena. Literary in his tastes, he is fond of reading, and for recreation prefers hunting and fishing to any of the other outdoor diversions.

Mr. Kester married, at Midcanon, Montana, December 8, 1895, Estella Wantz, who was born in Indiana, a daughter of James P. Wantz, who came with his family to Montana in 1882, being a pioneer settler of the state. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Kester, namely: Estella Ruth, whose birth occurred at Great Falls, Montana, March 8, 1906; and Wilhelmina Katharine, born at Great Falls, September 1, 1908. Mr. and Mrs. Kester have a pleasant home at 505 Fourth avenue, North, it being an abode of plenty, comfort and peace.

FREDERICK A. TINTINGER. During an industrious career Frederick A. Tintinger, of Cascade, Montana, has gained a strong position by the ability with which he has conducted his business, making steady progress in the peaceful accumulation of the fruits of his vocation, and today holds prestige among the business men of his adopted community, as well as in the public arena. Mr. Tintinger was born in Kossuth county, Iowa, April 30, 1875, and is a son of Nicholas and Mary (Delnoa) Tintinger, natives of France.

Nicholas Tintinger came to the United States as a boy in 1838, first settling in Illinois and in 1860 becoming an early farmer and stock raiser of Kossuth county, Iowa. In the fall of 1886 he came to Montana and in 1887 located in Big Timber, where until his death, in May, 1910, when he was eighty-three years of age, was engaged in the sheep and cattle business. His wife, who also came to the United States in 1838, still survives her husband, and makes her home at Big Timber, being seventy-five years old. Of their ten children, Frederick A. was the ninth in order of birth.

Frederick A. Tintinger received his early education in the schools of Kossuth county, supplementing this by a course in the Engelhorne Business College, Helena, Montana, and subsequently attending the high school at Great Falls, from which he was graduated in 1891. On completing his studies he entered the sheep and stockraising business in Sweet Grass county, Montana, where he owned three sections of land at the time of his retirement from that industry in 1908. At that time he sold his stock and ranch and moved to Cascade, where he entered the real estate and insurance field, in which he met with immediate success, and his interests have continued to grow. He is also owner of the City Stables, a successful livery business. In political matters, Mr. Tintinger is an ardent Democrat, and has taken a great deal of interest in matters of a public nature, and in 1910 was the Democratic nominee for the office of state representative. With his family, he attends the Roman Catholic church in Cascade.

Mr. Tintinger was married at Big Timber, Montana,

July 9, 1896, to Miss Grace Bain, daughter of Lee Bain, and a native of Iowa. Six children have been born to this union: Lillian and Lloyd, born at Big Timber; Carl, born at Stanford; Mamie and Russell, born at Big Timber; and Ethel, born at Cascade. While resident of Big Timber, Mr. Tintinger was a member of the National Guard for three years. Since he left home as a lad of fifteen years, he has worked industriously at whatever occupation he devoted himself to, and all of his enterprises have turned out successfully, marking him as a man of diversified abilities. In the conduct of his business he has so managed his affairs that the most ultimate good would result to his community, whose interests he has always held at heart. A high type of American citizenship, he is eminently worthy of holding a place among his community's representative men.

JOHN DOLL has been a resident of Montana since 1886 and has been identified with the blacksmith and wagon making business in the state since that time. Since 1888 he has been the proprietor of a shop of his own in Missoula, and in the passing years he has built up an extensive and lucrative business. He is an expert wagon-maker, having been apprenticed to the trade in his young manhood, and he learned his trade from beginning to end. The establishment which he conducts today is second to none in the state in its equipment and in the class of work it produces.

Born in Germany, February 23, 1863, John Doll is the son of Stephen and Luzia (Schoenberg) Doll. The father was born and reared in Germany and there passed his entire life. He was a blacksmith and farmer and was comparatively well-to-do. He died in 1890 at the age of seventy-three, and is survived by his widow. John Doll, the subject of this review, was the only one of the family to come to America. As a boy in the Fatherland he attended school in his early years, and he also learned the finishing work in the stone cutting trade. When he was thirteen years of age he was earning about $2.00 per week, which he always turned over to his parents. In addition to this work he helped his father about the farm and in the shop, and on the whole led a useful and busy life. When he was nineteen years old he came to America, settling first in Minnesota. It was there he learned the blacksmith trade. For three years he was apprenticed to one Gerhard Richter, receiving for his labors the first year $75.00; the second year, $125.00; the third year he received $20.00 a month, and at the end of that year he left Minneapolis and went to Spokane, Washington. There he secured employment at his trade in the construction department of the new railroad then being built from Marshall Junction to the Palouse country. He worked with this firm for several months and in 1886 came to Montana, where he has continued ever since without a break. Mr. Doll first settled at Thompson Falls in Sanders county, and there he was employed at his trade for about one year. He then came to Missoula and after a few months work on a salary basis he resolved to try his fortunes in the business in which he had been so well trained, and which seemed to offer such an opportunity to a capable man in Missoula. Thus was launched the present business which John Doll so ably conducts. He started on a small scale, as befitting his German caution and wisdom, but as the town reached out, the blacksmith shop and wagon factory has broadened perceptibly, until today it is one of the finest establishments of its kind in the state. It is thoroughly equipped with the most modern machinery, and is in every detail qualified to properly handle the splendid trade it has drawn to itself.

Mr. Doll is fitly recognized as one of the solid men of Missoula today, and his judgment is accorded generous credence in business circles of the city. He is a Republican, although he takes no active part in political matters. His interest is not extended to the intricacies of machine politics, but he fulfills his duty as an honest citizen by voting at the proper times.

Mr. Doll is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and of the Woodmen of the World; at one time he was council commander in the Woodmen. He is a man of quiet tastes, and he finds the greatest pleasures in life in the successful conduct of his business and in the maintenance of his home. He is fond of music, and the expression of that art is encouraged in that home.

On March 6, 1901, Mr. Doll was united in marriage with Miss Cora M. Lincoln, daughter of Lemuel and Jennie T. Lincoln of Missoula. Two daughters were born to them, Jennie May, deceased, and Cora Winona.

The family home is at 610 West Spruce street, while his place of business is located at 221 West Cedar street.

HON. FRANK J. MORGER. No man can attain the honor of occupying the highest office within the gift of a municipality unless he is possessed of more than average ability and is capable of so handling affairs as to redound to the public good. Naturally a man's success in life is measured by his prestige in business, political or social circles, and when he has figured prominently in all, then he may be said to have accomplished much. Frank J. Morger, former mayor of Fort Benton, Montana, was chosen for this present high office largely because of the ability he had shown in handling his own affairs, and the efficient manner in which he is discharging the mayoralty duties fully vindicates the confidence reposed in him. Mr. Morger was born in Jones county, Iowa, March 3, 1863, and is a son of Franz Joseph and Jemima Jane Morger.

Mayor Morger's father was a native of Switzerland, from which country he came to the United States as a very young man, locating in Jones county, Iowa. At the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in an Iowa infantry regiment, serving throughout the Rebellion and participating in a number of hard-fought battles. At the close of hostilities he located in Nebraska, where he was engaged in farming until his death at the age of forty-four years, his demise being probably hastened by the hardships he had endured while fighting under the flag of his adopted country. His wife, a native of Pennsylvania, accompanied her parents to Iowa in early life, and still survives her husband, being eighty-two years old and a resident of Colorado.

Frank J. Morger accompanied his parents to Nebraska, and in 1873 went with his mother to Colorado, where he attended the public schools of Longmont for three years. He commenced work at an early age, and until eighteen years old was engaged in various occupations, at that time going to Fort Fetterman, Wyoming. During the next six years he worked as a cowboy with the Northeastern Cattle Company and the C. Wright Cattle Company, and in 1886 came to Fort Benton, Montana, securing employment with the Milner Cattle Company, in Chouteau county, a firm with which he was connected for ten months. He continued in the same line with the St. Louis Cattle Company for a number of years, but in 1898 engaged in the liquor business in Fort Benton, in which he continued four years, selling his interests to engage in the cattle business, with a ranch on the Shonkin river, which he carried on for seven years with much success. Selling out at the end of that time, Mr. Morger returned to Fort Benton and bought an interest in the general merchandise business of Davis Brothers, the firm name now being Davis Brothers & Morger. He is interested in various business ventures and holds a directorship in the Benton Drug Company.

On November 24, 1892, Mr. Morger was married to Miss Ruby Estella Davis, daughter of William Davis, an early pioneer settler of Fort Benton, and they have had five children: Earl Romatus, born on October 12, 1893, and Myrtle Lenett, born on August 15, 1895, both attending high school; and Frank Fenton, born on December 7, 1896; Mary Jane, born on January 10, 1897, and Walter J., born on April 15, 1901, all attending the Fort Benton graded schools. The family is well known and highly esteemed socially, and Mr. Morger is a popular member of the Odd Fellows, having passed all the chairs in his lodge. In 1910 Mr. Morger became the independent candidate for mayor of Fort Benton, and the large majority by which he was elected testified to his general popularity and the recognition of his executive ability. He gave the city an admirable administration, and in his official capacity displayed the same conscientious attention to detail and earnest enthusiasm that have made his business ventures so successful. He has a wide acquaintance throughout the county, and numbers among his friends some of the most prominent and influential men of the section. The family attends the Methodist Episcopal church.

JOHN J. BUCKLEY was born at Delhi, New York, in April, 1853. In this town his father, Horatio M. Buckley, practiced medicine for half a century. He was born in the state of New York, but not in Delhi, where he practiced his profession until his death, but in the town of Unadilla. His mother's native place was Franklin, New York, and her maiden name was Elizabeth Case. Both belonged to families who were well known in the state, and who had served in the war for Independence.

Dr. Buckley was educated in the public schools of Delhi and also in the Delaware Academy in the same town. He early decided to follow the profession in which his father had attained success and honor and studied for this work in Columbia University. In 1878 he graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons, connected with that institution. For a short time after this, he practiced with his father in Delhi, but the newer country attracted him, and so he went to St. Paul and opened his office there. He remained here until 1883, when he went to Fargo, North Dakota, and after three years in that city, came to Missoula, as Chief surgeon for the western division of the Northern Pacific Railway, having charge of the line from Billings, Montana, to the coast.

For seventeen years Dr. Buckley was in the employ of the railroad, and then in 1903, he left the railroad service and took up practice for himself. His specialty is surgery, and he also gives a great deal of attention to electrical treatment. He belongs to the American Medical Association, as well as to the State and County Associations. His work for the railway won him wide recognition and he has served as vice-president of the National Association of Railway Surgeons.

The Masonic order has an influential member in Dr. Buckley. He belongs to all the Masonic bodies of Missoula, and to the consistory in Fargo, and he is a thirty-second degree Mason. Politically, he gives his allegiance to the Republican party. Another organization in which the doctor is deeply interested is that of the Sons of the American Revolution.

ROBERT T. BOATMAN. As one of the representative agriculturists and stockmen of his native county, Mr. Boatman merits special consideration in this publication, and he is one of the well-known and highly esteemed citizens of Madison county, as well as a scion of one of its leading pioneer families. His extensive ranch is situated in the beautiful Centennial valley and is about twenty-two miles distant from Monida, which is his post-office address. Reared under the pioneer conditions of the great West, Mr. Boatman has had many interesting experiences in connection with activities in Montana and other sections and through his well ordered enterprise has contributed to the civic and material development and progress of the state in which the major part of his life has been passed.

On the old homestead ranch of his father, near Laurien, Madison county, Montana, Robert T. Boatman was born on the 21st of April, 1866, and he is a son of George T. and Harriet L. (Johnson) Boatman, the former of whom was born in Kentucky, about the year 1831, a representative of one of the old and honored families of the South, and the latter of whom was born in Ohio, about 1835. The marriage of the parents was solemnized in the state of Missouri, and there they continued to reside until 1865, when they came to Montana, making the journey across the plains with ox teams and arriving at Alder Gulch, the site of Virginia City, in September of that year. There they passed the winter, and in the spring they removed to an embryonic ranch situated between Laurien and Sheridan, Madison county. There the father entered vigorously upon the work of developing his pioneer ranch and there he remained until the autumn of 1887, when he sold the property and removed to the village of Dillon, where he and his wife still maintain their home and where they are numbered among the sterling pioneers of this favored section of the state. In addition to reclaiming a valuable farm George T. Boatman was at one time owner of the Silver Springs flour mills, which he operated about seven years. Through industry and good management he gained success and independence, and his loyalty to the state of his adoption has been marked by the deepest appreciation of its manifold attractions and advantages. Of the eight children Robert T., of this review, was the fourth in order of birth and the first to be born in Montana. Of the other children three sons and four daughters are now living.

In his boyhood days Robert T. Boatman learned the lessons of practical industry in connection with the operations of the pioneer farm, and he attended the common schools of his native county until he had attained to the age of fifteen years, when he initiated his independent career by going to British Columbia, where he remained seven years. He assisted in driving a herd of cattle into northwest Canada, and for two years thereafter he was engaged in freighting operations, after which he was in the employ of I. G. Baker & Company about five years, with headquarters at Fort Benton, Montana, from which point he freighted supplies into Canada. In the winter of 1887-8 he returned to Madison county, Montana, and here he continued to be successfully engaged in the buying and shipping of horses until 1907. Since that time he has given his attention to agricultural pursuits and the raising of live stock. From 1898 until 1907 he had charge of the Home Park ranch, in the upper Ruby valley, and in his independent operation he now has a fine ranch of four thousand acres, in the Centennial valley, where he conducts a large and prosperous business in the feeding and sale of cattle and in the raising of the various crops best suited to the soil and climate. He is well known in his native county, is alert and progressive as a business man and citizen, and is one of the representative farmers and stock-growers of Madison county, where his circle of friends is limited only by that of his acquaintances. The section of Madison county in which he lives, known as Centennial valley, was transferred into Beaverhead county by the legislature two years ago.

In politics Mr. Boatman is found arrayed as a staunch supporter of the cause of the Republican party, and he is affiliated with Virginia City Lodge No. 1, Free and Accepted Masons; Virginia City Lodge No. 7, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; and with the lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks at Pine Bluff, Arkansas. From the time of his birth until the present Mr. Boatman has maintained his home continuously in Montana, save for the interval of about seven years passed in British Columbia.

In the year 1906 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Boatman to Miss Elizabeth J. Peterson, who was born in the Upper Ruby valley of Madison county, and whose father, Ferdinand Peterson, was one of the honored pioneers of that section of the county, whither he came from Oregon and where both he and his wife continued to reside until their death. Mr. and Mrs. Boatman have two children—Thornton T., who was born on the 10th of February, 1907, and Harriet E., who was born May 10, 1910.

PATRICK F. SCOTT is the son of Thomas Scott, a loyal native of the good old Emerald Isle. His mother was Catheryn Flannery, a clever Irish woman. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Scott were the parents of eight children of which their son Patrick, himself born in Ireland, is the oldest. They arrived in America just at the outbreak of the Civil war and the father with the instinct of the Irishman to be in the midst of all action, enlisted in a Pennsylvania regiment and fought for three years for the cause of the Union, the country to which he looked for his future welfare. At the close of the struggle he, with his little family, followed the westward tide and found themselves in Idaho, where the father engaged in ranching and stock raising. He lived this free and wholesome life until he passed away at a good old age. His wife is still living on the Idaho home.

As Patrick Scott was the oldest of eight little children for whom his father must provide, it was necessary for him to become a wage earner at a very early age. After his tenth year he made his own way in the world although he lived under the paternal roof until he was almost twenty-six years of age.

Born in the north of Ireland, on the 15th day of April, 1869, and brought to America while still in his infancy, he spent the first six years of his life in Pennsylvania. At a very early age he began to earn small amounts by running errands for the neighbors and helping with light work. In 1876, when the family settled in Idaho, he was sent, for a time, to the public schools of Utah. Later, he became a pupil in the first Episcopal school established in northern Utah. At the age of seventeen he became a helper or "cub" in the blacksmithing and iron trade. It was here in a small town on the southern border of Idaho that he learned the trade at which he has worked ever since. While still only a "cub" he received one dollar a day, a large wage for those times and one more proof to his father of the wisdom of rearing his children in the west. This money was, according to the old country custom, turned into the family coffers.

In 1886, being then twenty-six years of age, it seemed to Mr. Scott time that he began living his own life. So saying, he crossed into Montana of which state he has been a resident ever since. His first venture was at Granite. From there he went to Butte and later to White Sulphur Springs. Later he tried Belt and Niehart, and in 1897 came to Fergus county, settling in Utica. For two years he managed a shop at Utica and then moved to Kendall in 1901 and managed a shop there for nine years, and three years ago came to Lewistown and opened up a blacksmithery of unusual proportions. His business is large and lucrative.

Mr. Scott says that a book which could hold his opinions of Montana would be a large volume indeed. He believes her to have more natural resources on the surface than any other state of the Union, not to mention her other attractions.

While living in Sulphur Springs, Mr. Scott met Miss Margie Shorey, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Shorey of that little city. Miss Shorey became Mrs. Patrick Scott on the 15th day of October, 1894, thus proving that his sojourn in White Sulphur Springs was not in vain. Of their seven children only two are sons. All seven were born within the confines of the Treasure state, although their birthplaces are represented by several different towns. Mabel, the oldest of the family, is the only one now of school age. The others are Justin, the eldest son; Margie, named for her mother; Bernice; Catherine; John, who bears the name of his maternal grandfather, and Ida, the baby of the home.

Mr. Scott is very active in the Knights of Pythias lodge, having filled all of the chairs of the order.

He is devoted to the rod and the gun as no loyal son of Montana could help from being. In his youth, Mr. Scott was quite a baseball player and has never lost his love of the sport. He is now one of the most enthusiastic fans of Lewistown. His favorite pastime, however, is keeping, riding and driving fine horses. As a cattle herder on his father's ranch, he learned how to handle horse flesh and his fondness for these, the most interesting of animals, gives him much pleasure.

FRANK H. PINGS has been a resident of the state of Montana since 1886, and in all the years that have elapsed he has been actively identified with the contracting and building industry, and has in that way added his full quota to the material growth and advancement of those places with which he has been variously connected. He is a native of the state of Wisconsin, born in Roxbury, Dane county, that state, on December 15, 1864. He is the son of Cornelius and Theresa (Brandstatter) Pings. Both were natives of Germany. The father came to America at the age of sixteen, in the year 1848, and settled in Wisconsin, where he worked in the copper mines at first, but the greater part of his life was spent in farming in the fertile Wisconsin agricultural district. The mother came to America a young girl in company with friends of the family, and they settled in Michigan. There she met Cornelius Pings and married him in 1861. She was born in 1831 and is still living. They became the parents of eleven children, Frank being the third born of that number.

Frank Pings was educated in the country schools of Dane county in Wisconsin to the age of sixteen years. Following his sixteenth year he was employed in the carpentering business, and in a few years of constant application to the details of the work, he had mastered the trade, and from that time until 1898 he gave his full time and attention to the building and contracting business. In 1886 Mr. Pings removed to Montana and settled in Helena, where he followed his regular business, remaining there until 1893. In that year he located in Marysville, continuing for three years, after which he spent another year in Helena in the same business. In 1898 Mr. Pings went to Teton county where he homesteaded a tract of government land, located within four miles of Black Leaf postoffice, which he has since proved up on. He and his brother, Anton Pings, own thirteen hundred acres of ranch land in this section of the country and are engaged in the cattle business, which is proving a most fortunate venture for them both. Frank Pings located in Conrad before that place boasted a single building. They pitched a tent and lived in it for a time, until building activities were commenced, and it was they who built the first buildings in the town. They built the first bank building and the first store building the latter for F. D. Kingsbury & Company, merchants, and they continued in contracting there until 1910, in which year Mr. Pings engaged in the lumber business, and he is the sole proprietor of the Pondera Lumber Company. He also deals in all kinds of farming machinery and conducts the largest business of its kind in the town of Conrad.

Mr. Pings has the distinction of being the first mayor of Conrad and has just completed his second term, being succeeded to the office on May 1, 1912, by Mr.

R. Ferguson. He has also served three years as a trustee of the schools, and much of the credit is due to him for the present modern building which houses the school children of the town. Mr. Pings is a Democrat and has always been active in affairs of a political nature wherever he has been located. He is a member of the Woodmen of the World, Conrad lodge, and is a member of the Catholic church.

On May 30, 1889, Mr. Pings was united in marriage with Miss Anna Schwab, of Helena, Montana, the daughter of Joseph and Katherine Schwab, who are natives of Michigan. Eight children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Pings, of which number six are living. They are: Genievieve, Hilda, Cornelius, Joseph, Vincent, and Francis.

FRED E. FRENCH. Among the many men in Montana who have started in life with practically nothing and have attained success in spite of the handicap, Fred E. French should be given a prominent place. He has been a resident of the state of Montana for twenty-six years and in this time has taken an active part in the upbuilding of the state and of the towns in which he has lived at various times. In partnership with his brother he now owns and operates one of the largest laundry plants in this section, and has succeeded far beyond his expectations. He has devoted himself to making this business succeed in a way that has won the admiration of the business men of the town, but in doing so he has never forgotten that there was a more important duty than attending to his business and that was his duty to society as a citizen of a great commonwealth. The public services which he has rendered to the town have always been given with a generosity and a real interest in the welfare of the town and her people that many men with more time to spare would do well to imitate.

Allegan county, Michigan, was the place of the birth of Fred E. French, the date being the 4th of March, 1861. He was the son of William H. French, who was a native of New York state. The father was a pioneer settler in the state of Michigan, moving here about 1849, and settling upon a farm in Allegan county. He was primarily a farmer, but in those days men were able to turn their hands to practically anything, and he took a prominent part in many of the pioneer activities of the day. Among these was the first railway built in Michigan, which he helped to construct. With the outbreak of the Civil war he laid down his peaceful farmer's life to enlist as a private in the Twenty-first Michigan Infantry. He served in this regiment for three years, taking part in the battles of Missionary Ridge, Lookout Mountain and in many other minor engagements, and he was one of those who followed General Sherman on his famous march to the sea. The death of the brave old veteran occurred in 1897, at the age of sixty-nine, in the old home in Barry county. He married in Allegan county, Michigan, in 1854, Sarah E. Hooker, who was a native of Connecticut. She only lived two years after the death of her husband, dying in 1899, at the age of sixty-nine. Nine children were born to this union, five sons and four daughters, and of these three are residents of the state of Montana. The latter are Fred E., William H., and Mrs. Carrie Hanlon, all of whom live in Kalispell. Fred E. was the fourth child and his brother William was the youngest.

The education of the French boys was had in the common schools of their native state. At the age of eighteen Fred E. French said good-bye to his school days and spent the next three years on the farm, helping his father. He then determined to start out for himself and thinking it wise that everyone should know some trade, he selected the barber's, at which he soon became an adept. He followed this trade for eighteen years, and in 1886 he came to Montana. On his arrival in the western state he first settled in Helena, and there engaged in business with William Hartwig, a partnership which lasted for two years and in which Mr. French gained much valuable experience. The next three years he was in business alone, and at the end of this time he removed from Helena to Great Falls, and there engaged in business. He was quite successful in Great Falls, and remained here for nine years, but determining that Kalispell offered greater opportunities of the sort for which he was looking, he removed to the latter place in 1900. Immediately after his arrival he organized the business in which he is interested at present, the American Laundry Company. This is the second business of its kind to be established in Kalispell and is operated on the co-partnership plan, the firm being known as the French Brothers, Fred E. and William H. being the sole proprietors. When the business was started it was quite modest but has grown to large proportions. It is housed in a building 25 by 142 feet and the equipment is of the latest and most up-to-date machinery. No small part of the profit from this business is derived from the out of town trade, for the laundry receives patronage from as far west as Troy and as far east as Shelby. It is distinctly a profitable concern and this is due in large measure to the quality of workmanship that Mr. French insists upon, and the pains which he takes to satisfy his customers.

In politics Mr. French is an independent voter, preferring to vote for the man he thinks is best suited for the place rather than anyone whom his party should select. He was alderman of the city of Kalispell in 1904, serving two years, and was one of the builders of the present city hall. In his fraternal relations he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and of the Modern Woodmen of America. He is also a member of the Kalispell Club and of the Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. French has been twice married. His first wife was Miss S. A. Willerton, a daughter of Daniel Willerton, of Sauk county, Wisconsin. This marriage took place in 1887, in Eau Claire, Wisconsin, and one son, Ralph, was born of this marriage, his birth occurring in Helena, Montana, on the 17th of January, 1890. His second marriage was on the 18th of September, 1912, in Portland, Oregon, and his wife was Miss A. C. Thompson, a daughter of a Mr. Thompson of Bradford, Pennsylvania. They reside at 641 Second avenue, East, and the laundry is located at 37 Main street.

H. H. GARR has been a resident of the state of Montana since 1886, and has thus seen a full quarter century of development in the great Treasurer state of the West. He has borne his full share in the labors that have fallen to the best citizens, and in one capacity and another has ever been found active and energetic in behalf of the state. First as superintendent of Indian schools under Major Marcus Baldwin, he has from that time on held important positions under the government or in local politics. When he came to Whitefish to look after his ranch interests here, he was appointed police judge and justice of the peace, and is now serving his fourth term in the latter capacity.

H. H. Garr was born in Elmira, New York, on April 9, 1840, and is the son of Jacob and Euranid (Wittam) Garr. The father was Jacob Garr, the descendant of an old German family, the first of the name to locate in America being George Garr, who came in 1600 and settled in Virginia. The mother of Jacob Garr came to America from Holland in 1700 and settled in Connecticut, where many relatives of the Garr name and family are yet to be found. The grandfather of Judge Garr of this review was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. Jacob Garr was a well-known farmer and builder in the middle part of the nineteenth century. He died in 1876 when he was sixty-six years of age, his death resulting from a fall on the ice. The mother, Euranid Wittam, was born in Connecticut, where so many of the Wittam and Garr families are to be found today. She died in California at the age of seventy-five years, while her mother lived to reach the age of ninety-four years.

Judge Garr, as a boy at home, attended school in Elmyra, and also received some private schooling, after which he attended an eastern university for some time. In April, 1861, he enlisted in Company F, of the Twenty-third New York Regiment, and served two years under Captain W. F. Dughdee. He was at the battles of Bull Run, Antietam, Fredericksburg, and a number of other important engagements. He served throughout the term of his enlistment, without once being disabled or suffering aught but the usual discomforts of war attendant upon camp life. After leaving the service he came to Fort Wayne, Indiana, where he remained until he removed to the West in 1886. In that year he settled in Montana on the Indian reservation as superintendent of the Indian school on the Flathead reservation. He retained that position for a year and a half under Major Baldwin, and after leaving the government service he removed to Great Falls where he assisted in the building of the smelter there. He then removed to Columbia Falls where he remained until 1906, when he came to Whitefish, and since that time he has continued to reside here. In addition to his private interests, he has been police judge and justice of the peace, and he has held various other positions of a similar nature.

In December, 1868, Judge Garr married Mrs. Helen M. Hunt of Elkhart, and to their union three children have been born. George Garr, the eldest, was born in Elkhart, Indiana, and died in early life. Ralph F. Garr, also born at Elkhart, and now a resident of Whitefish, Montana. He is the father of four children: Myron, Helen M., George and Mable. Mable Garr, the third born child of Judge and Mrs. Garr, died in early life. The wife and mother died on May 14, 1903, while en route from California to her home in Whitefish.

Judge Garr is an independent Republican, and is acknowledged to be one of the influential men of his district in affairs of a political nature. He is a Mason of the blue lodge and chapter, and is a charter member of the Great Falls lodge, also a member of Kane Lodge No. 183, of Elkhart, Indiana. He has been a Mason since March 15, 1865, and is well known in Masonic circles throughout the state.

OLON BUCKLEY STONE, M. D., comes of a family which has contributed much to the advancement of the medical profession, and he possesses much of the skill and ability that have gone to make national reputations for his ancestors in the medical profession. He was born in Boston, Massachusetts, on February 26, 1859, and is the son of Orville Buckley and Malvina (Lincoln) Stone. He is the grandson of Uriah Stone, and the great-grandson of Prof. Nathan Smith, M. D., the founder of the medical department of Yale University, and a cousin of Dr. David P. Smith, late professor of surgery of Yale.

Solon Buckley Stone was educated in the common and high schools in Massachusetts, and in 1875 he commenced the study of medicine at Washington, D. C., under the preceptorship of his uncle, Prof. Nathan Smith Lincoln, M. D., and his great-uncle, Prof. Nathan R. Smith, M. D., the inventor of Smith's anterior splint. He attended four courses of lectures at the National Medical College, Medical Department of the Columbian University at Washington, and was graduated in 1879. In October of the same year Dr. Stone was commissioned acting assistant surgeon in the United States army and was stationed at Fort Bowie, Arizona, for two years, at Fort Maginnis five years, at Fort Missoula for one year, where he built a new military hospital, and then at Fort Shaw for a year. He then resigned from the army and has been a private practitioner since that time. He was at Lewistown for about fourteen years, then located at Kalispell where he remained for one year. From there he went to White Fish, and later to Cut Bank as division surgeon for the Great Northern Railway. He then came to Eureka, and has here continued in the active practice of his profession. In addition to other posts which Dr. Stone has held, he was surgeon to the Fergus County Hospital at Lewistown from 1892 to 1896. While he is a general practitioner, he is chiefly interested in surgery, and has performed many operations.

Dr. Stone is a fellow of the Massachusetts Medical Society, and fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and of the Whitefish Order of Eagles. He is a Republican.

In 1885 Dr. Stone was united in marriage with Miss Mary P. Sword, a niece of Colonel Parnell, retired from the United States army and since deceased. Two children were born to them: Amy Winifred, now the wife of J. Rathbuns, a mining engineer of Los Angeles, California, and Katharine Malvina, born at Fort Shaw, Montana, and living in Eureka, Montana, with her parents.

JOSEPH A. EDGE has gained prominence in Kalispell and in Flathead county, not alone as a rancher of prominence and a man of considerable influence, but as a county official who has done as much for the development of the Flathead district as any other man who might be mentioned. In his capacity as county commissioner he was directly instrumental in the building of a road system which gives the county a high standing in the northwest, owning as it does twelve hundred miles of made road, all of a high standard, and eminently calculated to enhance the many attractive qualities which the district already offers. He entered the office with but one thought in mind—to give to the county the best service in his ability, and to do as much for the county as his ability and the resources at his command would permit. The result has manifestly justified the wisdom of the voters in securing him to the office, and has won to him the encomiums of all who have a genuine and unselfish interest in the development of the state.

Mr. Edge was born in Ottawa, Canada, on March 11, 1874, and is the son of Peter N. and Margaret (McAlinder) Edge. The father was a native born Canadian, who came to the States on April 11, 1886, settling on a tract of homestead land located one mile from Kalispell. He has lived there continuously since that time, improving his land and prospering in true western fashion, devoting his time in later years principally to stock raising. The mother, also a native of Canada, is of Scotch-Irish ancestry, and was born in 1842 in the vicinity of Ottawa, Canada. She was there reared and there married Peter Edge in 1867. They were the parents of three sons, Joseph A. of this review being the eldest of the three. Lenox P., the second, was born in Ottawa in 1878. He is now a resident of Flathead county, and is engaged in contracting and construction work, where he is a man of some prominence and is highly esteemed by all who know him; Lester P., born in Ottawa in 1881, is a resident of Spokane, Washington, and is engaged in the practice of law. He is prominent in political circles in that state and is a member of the state legislature from Spokane county. He has also served as prosecuting attorney for the county. He is a young man of considerable brilliance and undoubted ability, and since he was admitted to the bar in 1902, when he was twenty-one years of age, his rise has been rapid and gratifying to all who have his interests at heart.

Joseph A. Edge received his primary educational training in the schools of his native county. When the family removed to Flathead county, in 1886, Joseph Edge was but twelve years of age. He thereafter attended the common schools of Ashley up to the age of fifteen, and it is worthy of mention that he attended in these years the second school to be built in the Flathead district—a fact most eloquent of the phenomenal growth of the district, in view of its splendid educational advantages of today. Up to the age of eighteen the boy remained on his father's farm, but after that age he engaged in freighting between De-Marsville and Libby, the time being particularly appropriate for such work, as the Great Northern Railway was then in course of construction. After the completion of the new road he changed his route and freighted from Kalispell to Fort Steele, and carried on the work for a period of five years. He then took up agricultural business, seeing the enormous possibilities in the work, and located in the lower valley, where he is now farming more than a thousand acres of fertile land, and is known throughout the district for raising some of the most abundant crops in the Flathead region. He has extended his interests to include various other enterprises, and is identified prominently with many of the more important commercial enterprises in the county. He has gone into politics in the county solely that he might be in a position to do for the county in an official capacity that which as a mere voter he would not be privileged to perform, and his work as a member of the board of county commissioners and as highway commissioner of Flathead county stands forth pre-eminently in the records of the county, and is constantly witnessed by the miles upon miles of perfect roads which he has made possible to the district, as mentioned in a previous paragraph. He is a citizen of the most worthy instincts and of a caliber that has placed him high among the men who have accomplished something for the good of the communal life.

Mr. Edge is a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks of Kalispell, the Knights of Columbus and the Kalispell Club. He is a member of the Roman Catholic church, likewise his family. On February 16, 1898, Mr. Edge was united in marriage with Miss Mary E. O'Toole, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Michael O'Toole, a native of England, of Irish parentage. He came to America in 1878, locating in Butte in 1885 and in the Flathead district in the following year. In former years he followed mining in Leadville, Colorado, and in Butte, but in the late years of his life was devoted to agriculture in the Flathead district. He died in Kalispell in 1910 at the age of seventy years. The mother of Mrs. Edge is now living on her farm near Somers.

Mr. and Mrs. Edge are the parents of two children: Leonard J., born in the Flathead valley on August 5, 1900, and Alice Edge, born on May 13, 1902.

The family residence is now maintained in Kalispell, where they have a beautiful residence at 405 Third avenue, East, erected there in 1911. Mrs. Edge is popular and prominent in the social life of Kalispell and their home is the center of true western hospitality and good cheer.

PATRICK BERNARD MCKOWEN. The ancestry of Mr. McKowen on both sides is Irish. His father, John McKowen, came to this country at the age of ten with his parents, who were among the earliest settlers of Wisconsin. He grew up on their farm there and attended such schools as the newly settled district afforded. When he grew to manhood, he married Mary Joyce, born in Ireland in 1831, five years after his own entrance upon this mortal scene. Their son Patrick was born at Dodge, Wisconsin, in 1863 on October 7th. Three years later, the family moved to Minnesota and settled in Hastings county. Here the father continued to farm in different parts of the state, until he retired and went to live in Minneapolis. His death occurred in that city in 1909. His wife had died at Brook, Minnesota, in 1892.

Patrick McKowen attended school in Hastings county and also in Waseken county. For a few years after this he worked on the farm, but left it to engage in railroad work. This brought him, in 1886, to Helena, where for a few years he worked for wages. His first independent venture was a dairy business and after conducting it for a time, he sold out and went into the contracting business, doing contract work in the teaming line. During this time Mr. McKowen was street commissioner, being elected to that office in 1895. From this he went into the coal industry, and is now one of the large coal merchants of the city.

On October 12, 1892, Mr. McKowen was married to Miss Mary E. Davies of Helena. Her father, the late H. R. Davies, was one of the early settlers of Helena, coming here from New York state. He died in 1907. Of their children Michael is now living in North Dakota; John resides in Minneapolis; Mary in St. Paul and Anne in Idaho. Both the daughters are married; Mary to Mr. Maher and Anne to Mr. Koherer. All of the family are members of the Catholic church.

Mr. McKowen is a member of the Woodmen of the World. In politics he follows the general bias of his compatriots, or rather those of his ancestry, since he is very much of an American, and is affiliated with the Democratic party. As a business man he is known as one of the live and energetic members of the commercial circles of Helena, and socially he is a man of a large acquaintance and a wide popularity. His favorite way of spending his leisure time is to pass it in the quiet of his home, either with his family and friends, or with a favorite book, for reading is perhaps his dearest indulgence.

A. LARSEN. Among the prosperous business men of Chouteau county, Montana, A. Larsen of Galata, ranks prominently. His earliest associations with the West date back to 1876, when he came to Leadville, Colorado, as a young man barely twenty-one years old, and there engaged in mining. Since that time he has been identified with various business ventures, all of which have proved successful enough to justify his connection with them, and he has today reached a place of prominence and prosperity altogether in keeping with his sturdy, honest and untiring efforts.

Mr. Larsen is a native son of Norway, born in that far away land on January 15, 1855, and he is the son of Lars and Martha (Larsen) Toreson, both natives of Norway. In 1867 Lars Toreson came to America with his family, and settled in Iowa where he became a successful and prosperous farmer. He died in Norman county, Minnesota, in 1908, at the advanced age of seventy-nine years. The mother died in the same county in 1903, aged eighty-two years.

Up until the removal of his family from the Fatherland Mr. Larsen attended school in his native town in Norway, and when the family located in McKee county, Iowa, when he was in his twelfth year, he continued his studies in the public schools of that district. He left school in his later 'teens and went to work on a farm, continuing in that service until he was twenty-one years old. In that year he went to Leadville, Colorado, as noted in a previous paragraph, and engaged in mining. After some time thus occupied he went into business on his own responsibility, but subsequently went to Minnesota, locating in Gary, Norman county, and there also engaging in business. This business venture held his continued attention for a period of eight years, after which he disposed of his interests and returned to the West, locating in Galata, Montana. He was quick to avail himself of the homesteader's opportunity, and soon was the owner of three hundred and twenty acres of Montana land, which he still owns and operates, and is the proprietor of a thriving general store in Galata. He also is engaged in various mining ventures in the state, and has realized a most generous measure of financial success in every enterprise with which he has been identified.

In November, 1887, Mr. Larsen was united in marriage with Miss Annie Munsen, at Aspen, Colorado, and they have one child, Alice, born November 15, 1902, in Norman county, Minnesota. At the present time, she is attending the public schools of Galata. The family are members of the Lutheran church, and Mr. Larsen is a progressive Republican, a characteristic which has not alone been operative in his political opinions, but in his every relation of life. He is a leader in thought and action, and is of the timber which is required to make the best citizens.

WILLIAM P. SHERMAN. An unusually energetic and progressive citizen at Kalispell, Montana, is William P. Sherman, who is here most successfully engaged in the undertaking business, his establishment being one of the most fully equipped and best conducted concerns of its kind in the entire state. Mr. Sherman likewise handles the agency in Kalispell for the Star pianos.

In Dubuque county, Iowa, October 8, 1860, occurred the birth of William P. Sherman, whose father, P. H. Sherman, a native of Iowa, was a well known railroad and bridge builder during his lifetime. P. H. Sherman built a portion of the Illinois Central Railroad to Galena, Illinois. He likewise conducted a beautiful farm in Dubuque county, Iowa, where his demise occurred in 1875, at the age of sixty-seven years. He married Miss Sarah Elizabeth McAtee, a native of Kentucky, where her marriage to Mr. Sherman was solemnized. She is still living, at the age of eighty-four years, and is now a resident of Dillon, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Sherman became the parents of five children, of whom the subject of this review was the third in line.

William P. Sherman attended school in his native county and from that time until he reached his legal majority he was engaged in various occupations, principally railroad work and farming. In 1886 he came to Montana and settled in Butte, where his first employment was in a large furniture concern. Subsequently he began to work for his brother, a well known undertaker in Butte, and after thoroughly familiarizing himself with that line of enterprise he became a partner in his brother's business. He disposed of his interests in Butte and went to Spokane, Washington, where he conducted an undertaking establishment for the following two years and whence he removed to Seattle, there engaging in the same business. On coming to Kalispell, he opened an undertaking establishment here. His business in the surrounding country has grown to such large proportions that he now has branch offices at Eureka and Libby. In connection with his undertaking business he is, as before stated, agent at Kalispell for Star pianos. He is a man of fair and straightforward business methods and as such commands the unalloyed confidence and esteem of all with whom he comes in contact. In 1906 he was elected county coroner and later was again elected to fill that office, of which he is incumbent at the present time, in 1912.

Fraternally Mr. Sherman is affiliated with blue lodge, Free and Accepted Masons; the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Although while he has neither time nor ambition for the honors or emoluments of public office he is deeply and sincerely interested in all matters affecting the good of the general welfare and is an ardent worker for progress and improvement.

In the city of Butte, Montana, April 20, 1892, Mr. Sherman was united in marriage to Miss Nora K. Daugherty. Mr. and Mrs. Sherman have seven children, as follows: William E. resides in Butte; Nora K. and Clara L. are attending high school in Butte; Harry is a pupil in the graded schools at Spokane, Washington; Gracie K. is attending school in Seattle, Washington; Edward is a pupil in the Kalispell schools; and Roger Arthur, born in March, 1910, is the baby of the family. In religious matters Mr. and Mrs. Sherman are devout communicants of the Protestant Episcopal church, to whose charities they are most liberal contributors.

NICHOLAS HOWARD GRAMLING. A self-made man in every sense implied by the term, Nicholas Howard Gramling began life for himself way down in the valley of limited circumstances, but through untiring industry, wise management and well directed efforts he has attained noteworthy success in his undertakings and won a record of high accomplishment, being now one of the most active and prosperous real estate men of Butte, and widely known as president and general manager of the Montana Orchard Land Company. Of German parentage, he was born March 11, 1862, in Waukesha county, Wisconsin, where his childhood days were spent.

John Gramling, his father, was born and reared in Bavaria, Germany. A little while after his marriage with Josephine Scholl, he started with his young wife for America, and while they were en route the birth of their first child, Peter Gramling, occurred. With his family he settled in Wisconsin, becoming a pioneer of Waukesha county. In common with his few neighbors he suffered all the privations and hardships of frontier life, and during the Indian wars of that early period fought the savages in many a battle. He cleared and improved a homestead from its virgin wildness and on his farm resided until his death, at the venerable age of eighty-seven years. His wife, too, has passed to the life beyond, her death having occurred in 1903, on the home farm.

Having completed his studies in the district schools, Nicholas H. Gramling, tired of farm life at the age of fourteen years, ran away from home, determined to seek more congenial employment. Going to Milwaukee, he was fortunate enough to find a place wherein he could make use of his native mechanical ability and tastes, for five years serving as an apprentice at the trades of a blacksmith and machinist. He subsequently followed his trade in many of the large cities of the middle west, and being a man of unquestioned mechanical and executive ability, was invariably made foreman of the shop in which he was employed. On January 21, 1887, Mr. Gramling located permanently in Butte, Montana, a city with whose growth and material prosperity he was evidently destined to become associated, and until 1900 followed his trade, the first three years of his residence in this vicinity having his shop in South Butte.

In 1901 Mr. Gramling, with the Hoffman Brothers, embarked in the real estate business, and in this line of business has met with marked prestige, being one of the most extensive dealers in realty in the state. He is an extensive land holder, some of his most valuable lands being in the fertile fruit district of Carbon county, Montana, where he has large interests, being president of the Montana Orchard Land Company of that county. The lure of the great northwest is now the apple rather than gold, and no finer specimens of this fruit are anywhere grown than in southern Montana, the McIntosh Red, grown in Carbon county, having met the unqualified approval of all concerned at the International Apple Show held in Spokane, Washington, while at the Montana State Fair, at Helena, in September and October, 1909, the Carbon county apples secured nineteen first prizes, thereby winning the trophy for the finest and best apples raised in the state, a handsome silver cup. The Montana Land Company is becoming widely and favorably known through Mr. Gramling's efforts, and land is sold in five-acre tracts, under most favorable terms to the buyer. Mr. Gramling with Mr. R. C. Ross organized, in February, 1912, the Montana-Wyoming Land Company. This company, while but recently organized, has had a remarkably successful career, probably surpassing results achieved by any similar company in the state. Their sales during the first six months of existence exceeded a quarter of a million of dollars.

In his political views Mr. Gramling is independent, voting according to his own good judgment, without regard to party affiliations. He was formerly identified by membership with the Commercial Club of Salt Lake, Carbon county, and with the Commercial Club of Billings, Montana. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and of the Fraternal Brotherhood of America.

Mr. Gramling married, April 20, 1887, at La Crosse, Wisconsin, Amy A. Hoffman, who was born in Wisconsin, a daughter of Frank Hoffman, who during his life was a man of much prominence in local and state affairs, and had the distinction of serving as a member of the first legislative assembly of Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Gramling have one child, Ferne Amy Gramling, who was born in Butte, Montana, June 18, 1888. Miss Gramling is a woman of rare talent and accomplishments, and has acquired distinction in musical and theatrical circles, in addition to her superior vocal ability having great talent as an actress. The quality of her voice is mezzo-soprano of singular clarity and richness and yet timbrous in one of the longest ranges of any singer of the present day, sustaining perfectly three octaves and one tone without any apparent effort. To her natural and acquired musicianship she brings the invaluable gifts of rare physical beauty, an ardent temperament, histrionic talent of a high order and a sympathetic adaptability which marks her as one of the most versatile of the rising young singers of America. The Musical Leader, commenting upon her treatment of selections from Goring Thomas' "Nadeschda," describes her voice as broad and beautifully poised, with perfect enunciation handled with absolute control of all her resources and a vitally strong and glowing example of correct vocalism. Participating in a grand revival of "Martha" in Chicago, she achieved the hit of the performance. The Evening Post commented both upon the superiority of her voice and her "singularly matured comprehension of histrionic requirements." Her first public appearance was with the Thomas Orchestra, in the Auditorium at Chicago, and she at once sprang into the favor of critics and public by the sheer splendor of her voice and her remarkable aptitude as an actress. Graduating from the Chicago College of Music, under the direction of Dr. Seigfeldt and the personal tuition of the famous Herman Devries, she won the honor medal over 116 contestants and a school of over four thousand students. Subsequently in the scholarship competition, open to the world, she won the diamond medal over 150 aspirants. Pope Pius X conferred upon her the much coveted Leo medallion in recognition of her voluntary and always brilliant services in the leading Catholic cathedrals and churches of this country.

HENRY WASHINGTON STEPHENS. The proud record of being the oldest physician and surgeon in the city of Anaconda, belongs to Dr. Henry Washington Stephens, and in addition to having the oldest practice he has also one of the largest. Coming to the west when the country was new, he has grown up with it and has given of himself not only in a professional way, but along other lines of service for the betterment of conditions both politically and socially. Feeling the responsibility to society which all educated men must feel today, and which is so truly one of the earmarks of the times, Dr. Stephens has ever placed himself at the call of the people, and in his various positions of public trust has shown himself to be a wise and able executor.

Dr. Stephens was born on the 17th of March, 1862, at St. Joseph, Missouri, the son of Peter Stephens. The latter is a native of Kentucky, the year of his birth being 1833. When the strife between the north and south broke out, Peter Stephens was among the first to enlist, and served through the whole four years of the war as Captain Stephens of the Federal army. His command was Company B, of a Missouri regiment of cavalry. He is no longer in active life, being retired and living at Anaconda. His wife was Pernina Crank, a native of Ironton, Ohio, who died at the age of sixty-eight in Anaconda. Only two children were born to Captain and Mrs. Stephens: Dr. Stephens and his sister Anna, who is the widow of Charles Graham and makes her home in Anaconda.

FERNE GRAMLING.

Wm. H. H. H. H.

The childhood and boyhood of Dr. Stephens were spent in St. Joseph, Missouri. Here he attended the public schools and was graduated from the high school in 1879. Having long since determined to become a doctor, he then took up the study of medicine at St. Joseph's Medical College, and after four years there received his degree of M. D. This was in 1883 and the next few years were spent in St. Joseph in the practice of his profession. That part of the country was fairly well settled and life for a struggling young physician was not easy, for in all old communities the professions, such as law and medicine, are apt to be over-stocked. The young man, therefore, determined to try his fortune in the west, and in 1887 came to Anaconda. He arrived in the town without even a dollar in his pocket, but with knowledge in his head and skill in his fingers. These possessions soon brought him a practice and it has grown until today he has one of the largest in the city and county. The doctor's sympathy with progress and with modern ideas was shown in 1900 when he went east and took a post-graduate course in one of the New York medical schools. He specialized in obstetrics and was graduated from the school in the fall of 1900.

The appreciation and belief of the people of Anaconda in the ability and honesty of the doctor was shown in 1898, when they elected him as an alderman. This was further emphasized when he was elected to the mayoralty chair in 1900 and served one term. During this term of service men realized, as they had never done before, how Dr. Stephens had learned to understand and estimate men through his long and intimate association with them as their physician. He clearly showed this wisdom gained through actual experience with the souls of men in his admirable management of the city's affairs during his mayoralty.

In fraternal affairs Dr. Stephens is a member of the Knights of Pythias and has been through all the chairs of the Elks, being past exalted ruler. He is a great believer in the benefits to be obtained from athletics and enjoys nothing more than a good game of basketball or of baseball. He is the owner of a fine residence and of other valuable city real estate.

Dr. Stephens was married on the first of January, 1888, to Katherine J. Allcott, who is a native of San Francisco. Dr. Stephens and his wife are the parents of seven children. Lucinda is a graduate of the high school of Anaconda and is now a teacher in the public schools; Ruth Phyllis is a graduate of the high school; and the younger children are Katherine Drucilla, Anna, Francis, Howard W. and Helen Virginia. They are a charming and cultured family and are prominent in all the social and public interests of their home city.

JOHN SOCKERSON. Montana has furnished the opportunities for many successful careers, and one that is noteworthy and deserves mention in this history is that of Mr. John Sockerson, of Basin, who has been identified with this region for a quarter of a century. Prosperity and many friends have come to him, and all his success is the result of his own efforts and character.

A native of Sweden, he was born near Stockholm on the 13th of December, 1860, and was reared and received his education in that country. In 1880, when he was twenty years old, he immigrated to America, and at Manistee, Michigan, found employment in the lumber camps. During the next four years his industry and ability found favor with his employers, the Lewis Sands Lumber Company, which company in 1884 sent him up into the northwest to take charge of their saw mill and lumber camp on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Maple Creek. This responsible place he filled for three years, and in 1887 decided to see and explore the northwestern country. Buying a team of mules, with wagon and outfit, he drove across country to Fort Assiniboine, and thence to Helena, Montana, where he arrived after a month's journeying. At Helena he engaged in the teaming and transfer business, and did very well at it for a year or so. He then sold out, and moving to Elk Park, engaged in the wholesale wood business, which he continued four years. It was then that Mr. Sockerson moved to Basin, where he has since been one of the leading citizens and business men. Within a year after his arrival he erected the first brick business block in town. He is now one of the large owners of property both in the city and county, and also has substantial investments in productive mining property. Fraternally Mr. Sockerson is affiliated with the Fraternal Order of Eagles, and in politics is Republican.

WILLIAM COZENS SIDERFIN. The able and influential business men of Butte have no finer representative than William C. Siderfin, manager of Hon. W. A. Clark's mining and real estate interests in Butte district and Wallace, Idaho, with which interests he has been identified since 1896. A native of Great Britain, he was born on July 4, 1863, in Llantrissant, Glamorganshire, South Wales. His father, Thomas Siderfin, a retired farmer, died at his home in Newport, Shropshire, England, in December, 1907, aged eighty-seven years. His mother, whose maiden name was Frances L. Cozens, died at Newport, Shropshire, in January, 1908, aged seventy-three years.

Brought up in his native country, William C. Siderfin received excellent educational advantages, being graduated from one of the English colleges in 1881, and successfully passed the preliminary examination of the Incorporated Law Society of London in that year. Not meeting with a satisfactory opening in his chosen profession and being ambitious and hopeful, he immigrated to Canada in 1884, and for three years was associated with the Grand Trunk Railroad, first being employed in the auditor's department, and later in the train service department. Coming from there to Butte, Montana, in 1887, Mr. Siderfin was for two years storekeeper for the Montana Union Railway. Accepting a position as storekeeper and bookkeeper for the Alice Gold and Silver Mining Company at Walkerville, Montana, he retained that position from 1889 to 1895. He made an extended visit to his old home in England, and on his return to Butte in 1896 he entered the employ of Mr. W. A. Clark at the Butte reduction works. During the first seven years of his employment there, he was assistant assayer and chemist. In 1904 he became Senator Clark's assistant general manager, and, proving himself efficient in the performance of the many duties devolving upon him in that capacity, he was made successor to Mr. A. H. Wethey, who resigned his position in January, 1911.

In his political affiliations Mr. Siderfin is a Democrat, and religiously he is an Episcopalian. He is a Mason and is past master of Silver Bow lodge No. 48. A. F. & A. M., a Knight Templar and a member of the Scottish Rite. He is also a member of the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine of Bagdad Temple, in Butte, and a member of the Woodmen of the World.

At Butte, Montana, on January 10, 1900, Mr. Siderfin was united in marriage with Alberta A. Hammer, a daughter of John G. Hammer of this city, and they are the parents of three children, all of whom were born in Butte: Dorothy Gwendolyn, born June 16, 1902; Evelyn May, born December 10, 1905; Marion Jean, born December 26, 1909, and Eric Cozens, born September 2, 1912.

JAMES DEERING, descended from Irish ancestry, and the youngest of six children, was born at Hancock, Houghton county, Michigan, January 29, 1876. During the early years of his life he attended the public schools at Calumet, Michigan, and at the age of eleven years came to Montana and first resided at Marysville with his parents and later became a resident of Helena, Montana. He attended the public school at Marysville and business colleges at Helena until 1893-1894, during which year he was a student of All Hallows College, a popular Catholic institution of Salt Lake City, Utah. He was graduated in the commercial course of this institution and upon obtaining his degree returned to Helena and entered a law office as a clerk and stenographer, which position he held for four years, during which time he read law. Thereafter he entered the government service as chief clerk of the United States land office at Helena, Montana, where he remained until August 1, 1902, when he was transferred to the United States land office at Great Falls, Montana. He remained in the government service until June 1, 1904, when he resigned to accept the management of the office of the Collins Land Company at Helena, which position he still holds. He is one of the most prominent land attorneys of the state, being admitted to practice before the local land offices and also the land department at Washington, D. C. Mr. Deering is also president of the Collins Realty Company, incorporated, which company deals extensively in lands throughout the state. He is also secretary and treasurer of the Brady-Collins Sheep Company and vice-president of the Marysville Gold Mining Company, which latter company is the owner of extensive mining property in the Marysville district and he also personally owns other mining property in that district. In his political views Mr. Deering is a staunch Republican and an active worker for the party, but has never had any ambition to become an office-holder himself. Religiously he is a Roman Catholic and is a member of the Knights of Columbus, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Montana Club.

James Deering is the son of Maurice Deering, who was born in Ireland, in 1842, and departed this life at Great Falls, Montana, on October 3, 1903. The elder Mr. Deering was employed as a stationary engineer by the Drum Lummon Mining Company at Marysville for eighteen years. Before immigrating to this country he married Bridget Duffy at Dublin, Ireland, and of this union six children were born, two of whom now survive, viz: Annie and James. Mr. Deering's mother and sister still reside at Marysville, Montana. During the early days in California, Mr. Deering, Senior, was employed as a stationary engineer by the Bodie Mining Company and came to Montana in 1883. He was very domestic in his tastes and habits, caring little for amusements, and, unlike most of his countrymen, was a staunch Republican.

James Deering was married June 30, 1904, to Miss Mabel Cochran, who prior to her marriage was a teacher in the public schools at Great Falls, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Deering have no children. They reside at 710 Harrison avenue, Helena, Montana.

HEDLEY FLETCHER SMITH. To say that Mr. Smith has had an active part in the upbuilding of Helena is no figure of speech, although it happens to be true in both a literal and a figurative sense, for the occupation of this progressive citizen of Helena is that of a contractor and he has had a share in the erecting of more than one of its notable buildings.

Mr. Smith is a Canadian by birth, being a native of Prince Edward Island. Here he was born on April 19, 1862, on the farm of his father, Isaac Smith. In the year 1817 Christopher Smith, the grandfather of Hedley Fletcher Smith, immigrated from Yorkshire, England, with his wife and infant son, Isaac. He was a civil engineer and when he came to Canada he engaged in farming, besides following his profession. His son continued in the same occupation and became one of the influential citizens of that district. He lived to be more than ninety years of age and died, "full of years and honors," in 1909. One of his brothers, the Reverend Matthew Smith, is now, at ninety-eight, still filling the pulpit of a church in New Brunswick. Age has had no power to sap the mental and spiritual vigor of this minister, and the Baptist denomination of New Brunswick regards him as one of the able leaders in the army of those who "climb the steep ascent to heaven, mid terror, toil and pain." Hedley Smith's mother was of Welsh descent. Her family came to America in the same year (1817) as that in which his father's people settled there. Anne Meyers was born in Canada, and died in Prince Edward Island in 1900, at the age of sixty. Her people engaged in farming and also followed the sea-faring occupations. Mr. Smith has inherited a large share of the sturdy qualities of his ancestors and has proved himself a worthy descendant of the race which has shaped the destiny of the western hemisphere.

The provincial schools of Canada provided Mr. Smith with his elementary education, and for a time after completing his study there, he worked on his father's farm. Obeying the impulse which seizes most young men to seek newer country, he went a thousand miles or so to the west and settled in Winnipeg. He remained in that flourishing town for one year, and then moved to Cooperstown where he followed the same occupation he had been working at in Winnipeg, that of a carpenter. At the end of three years, Mr. Smith left North Dakota, and in 1887 went to Butte. Half a year was then spent in the mining city of Montana; at the end of which period Mr. Smith came to Helena. He adopted the capital as his permanent residence, and has been engaged in business there ever since. Until 1905 Mr. Smith did not operate as a contractor, but was employed by other building concerns in various capacities of an executive nature. For nine months he was foreman on the Montana Club building. When the state capitol was in process of erection, he was for a year and a quarter in charge of the entire force engaged upon it, and of the private residences put up in this period, he was employed on that of W. G. Conrad for eight months, as well as upon a number of other contracts. Since starting in the contracting business, Mr. Smith has been connected with many of the most important building enterprises entered upon in Helena during the last seven years. Among these may be mentioned, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows' home, the T. A. Marlow residence and a number of the well known office buildings recently erected, not to mention many private residences.

For twenty-two years Mr. Smith has been a member of Montana Lodge No. 1, I. O. O. F., and in that time has filled all the chairs. He also belongs to the Fraternal Order of Eagles. He is much interested in politics, national and municipal, and gives some little time to such activities. At present he is serving his second term as alderman from the Seventh ward, and, politically, supports the Democratic party. At the fall election of 1912, which was such an overwhelming Democratic victory, he was chosen as a representative to the state legislation from Lewis and Clark county. He is a member of the Helena Commercial Club and the Lambs Club.

Mr. Smith's family consists of four members, besides himself. His eldest son, Walter Harold Smith, born in Helena in 1892, is now at work at his trade. The one daughter, Victoria Ruby, is attending business college in Helena, and Herbert N. is in the grades at school, being thirteen years of age. Mrs. Smith was formerly Miss Anne Catherine Gallagher. Her birthplace was Ireland, but she was reared in England. In 1891 she came to America alone and the same year was married to Mr. Smith at Helena. Mr. and Mrs. Smith are communicants of the Episcopal church. Both have a wide acquaintance in the city and are prominent in the various social and commercial activities of the capital. Mr. Smith has interests in a number of the enterprises of Helena and is a stockholder in the Courad Bank and Trust Company.

ROBERT JOHN SCHWENINGER. The mining industry has attracted to its ranks men of the keenest intellect and most comprehensive business ability, the rewards possible to gain in this line of endeavor being a strong inducement to one who has energy and ambition of unusual degree. As the center of one of the richest mining districts of the world Butte has its full quota of successful mining operators, prominent among which must be mentioned Mr. Robert John Schwenger, who came here in 1887 and has ever since been engaged in mining and has assisted in opening up and operating some of the most valuable properties of the Butte district.

Mr. Schwenger has spared no effort to equip himself with all possible knowledge by study and travel that would enable him to take his place as one of the most dependable mining experts of the country, and his present influential position in the industry is the direct result of years of persevering application to the study of the subject. His early education embraced work in the public schools, including high school, and a course in a business college at Painesville, Ohio, and this he supplemented later on with four years of personal study and experimentation in chemistry and assaying, in order that he might gain the fullest possible knowledge of metals and ores, and become competent to intelligently pass upon the value of mines and mine prospects. Previous to engaging in mining work Mr. Schwenger followed the trade of cabinet maker and upholsterer, and spent twelve years in that line of business. He maintains an establishment in Butte, with offices and headquarters here.

Mr. Schwenger is a born manager of men and knows how to inspire their respect and confidence, while at the same time dealing familiarly with them. When he visits his properties he often takes off his coat and works by the side of his men, inspiring them with his counsel and good example. He is filled with enthusiasm in regard to his chosen work and after having traveled extensively through all the western states, British Columbia and Alaska, states without reserve that Montana offers the best mining opportunities of all the places he has visited.

As his name indicates, Mr. Schwenger is of German extraction. He was born in New York City, November 17, 1860, the son of John George and Caroline Schwenger, both of whom were born in Germany. They came to New York when young and were married in that state, lived there for a period, then went to Cleveland, Ohio, and finally settled at Painesville in the same state and spent the remainder of their days there. The father was a man of wide travel and had a fine education, his ability as a linguist being especially marked. He was master of nine different languages and during his residence in New York acted as interpreter for various foreign people in that city. His commercial and industrial activities in New York embraced the sale and manufacture of furniture and he also did some work as an architect. He reared a family of five children, the subject of this sketch having been second in order of birth. Robert John was six years old when the family moved to Cleveland, and it was four years later that they became residents of Painesville. From Ohio he first went to Colorado and remained there one year before finally settling permanently at Butte.

Throughout the years of his residence in this city he has always evinced a great interest in all phases of the best elements in the life of the community and has taken an active part in promoting its higher moral interests. Although he has no interest in party politics, he is a believer in Republican principles and his interest in civic affairs is of the character that should be maintained by all high minded citizens of the best type. He is a member of the First Congregational church and contributes liberally to its support. The American Mining Congress knows him as an influential member. Mr. Schwenger possesses unimpeachable personal integrity, he is a gentleman of broad gauge, liberal and progressive in his ideas and methods and is held in high esteem by all who know him.

ALEXANDER C. RODGER. Among the native sons of Scotland who have become closely and worthily identified with Montana is this well-known and representative member of the bar of Silver Bow county. Mr. Rodger came to Montana when a lad of sixteen years and here he has won distinct prestige in the profession for which he carefully fitted himself. He is one of the representative members of the bar of Butte, the metropolis of the state and the secure place maintained by him in the regard of his professional confreres is indicated by the fact that he has served as vice-president of the Silver Bow County Bar Association. In the active work of his profession he is associated with Joseph Binnard, under the firm name of Binnard & Rodger, and they control a substantial and representative law business of general order.

Alexander Cuthbert Rodger was born in Aberdeenshire, Scotland, on the 30th of July, 1870, and is a son of Alexander and Isabella Rodger, both representatives of staunch old Scottish lineage. The mother previous to her marriage was Miss Isabella Willox.

In the excellent schools of his native land Alexander C. Rodger gained his early educational discipline, and that he early had a predilection for ventures far afield, that he might gain experience and learn more of the world, is shown by the fact that in 1887, when sixteen years of age, he severed the home ties and set forth for America. His maternal uncle, William C. Willox, had become one of the successful ranchmen of Deer Lodge county, Montana, and the young man made this state his destination. He remained with his uncle on the ranch for a period of a few years, and in this connection he had his full quota of experience in the free and invigorating life of the west. Well satisfied with the land of his adoption, Mr. Rodger determined to prepare himself for a definite sphere of endeavor and the result of this decision was that he began reading law in the office of John N. Kirk, of Butte. He made rapid and substantial progress in his absorption of the science of jurisprudence and in furtherance of his technical knowledge he continued his studies under the preceptorship of Joseph Binnard, one of the leading members of the bar of the state and who is now his coadjutor in practice. Mr. Rodger was admitted to practice in June, 1906, and forthwith formed a partnership alliance with his former preceptor and valued friend, Mr. Binnard, with whom he has since continued to be associated. He has been concerned with important litigation in which he has won professional prominence. The firm of Binnard and Rodger controls a large practice and is numbered among the representative law firms of the metropolis of the state. Mr. Rodger is one of the active and appreciative members of the Silver Bow County Bar Association and has served as vice president of the same.

Mr. Rodger has deemed his profession worthy of his undivided allegiance and has thus held himself aloof from the more or less turbulent current of so-called practical politics, though he is well fortified in his views concerning matters of public polity and accords a staunch allegiance to the cause of the Republican party in so far as national and state issues are involved. He is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which he has passed all of the official chairs in Fidelity Lodge, No. 8.

In May, 1904, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Rodger to Miss Gertrude Devine, of Butte. Mrs. Rodger was born in the state of Colorado and is a daughter of Peter Devine, a pioneer of the west.

SAMUEL E. MCCLEES, mayor of Philipsburg and a prominent jeweler of this city, was born in Taylors-town, Pennsylvania, on August 1, 1867. He is the son of Alexander E. and Belle (Hodgen) McClees, both natives of the old Keystone state. They were married there and there spent their lives. The father was engaged in mercantile business, and was one of the prominent men of his town. He took a leading part in the political activities of his community and held many important public offices in his day in response to the call of the people. For sixteen years he was postmaster of his town. He was highly respected and esteemed for his sterling character, and was known to be a devout Christian gentleman, as well as an active church worker. He died in 1877, at the age of sixty, and is buried near his old home. His widow still resides there. They became the parents of three children, Samuel E. of this review being the second born and the eldest son.

Until he was fourteen years of age Samuel McClees lived in the town of his birth, after which time he went to Washington, Pennsylvania, and worked in a jewelry store. He served an apprenticeship of four years, drawing absolutely no salary during that time, but he learned his trade from beginning to end. His apprenticeship concluded, the young man started for the west. When he reached Fargo, North Dakota, he located there and remained for about two and a half years. He was employed in a jewelry shop there, and it represented his first salaried position. He next returned to the east and took engraving lessons for a few months, after which he was employed in the escapement room of the Elgin Watch Company's factory for three months. His idea was to secure any additional knowledge that might be of benefit to him in the business, and he has ever adhered to that mode of procedure, with the result that his reputation in the jewelry line is of the highest order. After his service with the Elgin people, Mr. McClees went to Butte, Montana, where he entered business on his own responsibility, and there he met with his first reverses in a business way. Thirty days after he opened his establishment the place was burned out, but he soon reopened, remaining in business in Butte for about two years, when he sold out and went to Granite. He remained there three years, working at the jeweler's trade, and then moved to Philipsburg, where he opened a store. He has since continued in business in this location and has prospered in a most unquestionable manner.

Mr. McClees has not shifted any of the responsibilities of citizenship during the years of his identification with Granite county, and at the present time he is serving as mayor of the city of Philipsburg, a position which he is filling with all satisfaction to the people. He is a Republican, and his allegiance to the party is well known in this district. He is now chairman of the Republican county central committee. He was a member of the city council for five years, and with reference to his official position as mayor of the city he has just been renominated for another term.

Mr. McClees is a member of the Chamber of Commerce of Philipsburg, and in a fraternal way is associated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which society he has filled all chairs, and is now district deputy. He is not a member of any church, although he holds all denominations in equal respect and aids them all in a financial way. The death of his father when he was ten years old placed Mr. McClees as a boy in a difficult position, and since he was fourteen he has practically "shifted" for himself, as the saying is. When he was twelve years old he earned his first money harrowing grain, walking a distance of two miles night and morning to reach his work. He received for his services twenty-five cents a day, and considered himself well paid at the time. After that experience he followed various occupations until he left Taylors-town to take up his apprenticeship to the jewelry trade. Thus he has seen some of the hardships and difficulties of life, although he does not regard them today as other than excellent discipline, which has been an important factor in his later success.

On April 19, 1898, Mr. McClees married Miss Kate Fox at Philipsburg, formerly of Winnipeg, Manitoba.

FRED A. BELEY is the prosperous proprietor of one of the finest bottling plants in Granite county. He was born in Oswego county, New York, on September 30, 1863, and is the son of George and Catherine (Le-Vieux) Beley. Both were born in France. The father came to the United States when he was about ten years of age and settled in New York state, near Syracuse. There he followed farming all his life. He died in 1897, at the age of seventy-six years. His wife, who immigrated to this country in her childhood, and whom he married in Syracuse, died at the family home when she was in her seventy-fourth year of life. Eight children were born to them, of which number Fred A. was the youngest. He has two brothers and a sister in Montana, as follows: Charles, married and living in Walkerville; Frank, also married, a resident of Livingston; and Emma, the wife of Alfred George, and living at Big Timber, Montana.

The educational advantages which Mr. Beley received in his youth were rather better than those accorded to most country youths, and were represented by his finishing of the public schools of his home town, followed by a three years' academic course at Mexico, New York. He continued at farm labor until he was about twenty-four years old, when he came to Montana, in February, 1887. He first settled in Deer Lodge, remaining there but a few weeks. His next stop was in Butte, where he remained for a year, and his experience in that city eventually led to his future business establishment. Since 1888 Mr. Beley has been a resident of Philipsburg and since 1890 he has been the proprietor and owner of the bottling works of which he was at one time manager. He has prospered most agreeably, and is regarded as one of the successful business men of the city.

Mr. Beley is a member of a number of fraternal societies, among them being the Knights of Pythias and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. In the first named society he has filled all chairs, and has twice been a delegate to the Grand Lodge. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, and was a member of the board of aldermen for six years. He is at present a member of the board of county commissioners, and in all his relations to the communal life has been a valued factor, and one whose influence has always been of a high order and tending to advance the general good.

On December 12, 1893, Mr. Beley was married at Parish, New York, to Miss Lena Warn, daughter of Nelson and Nancy Warn, of Parish. Mrs. Beley died in 1902, at the early age of thirty-one years. Her remains were interred in the old home town where she was born and reared.

Mr. Beley is a great lover of all field sports, and athletics in general. He is especially devoted to the game of base-ball and was something of a player in his younger days. Withal, he is a man of somewhat quiet and studious habits, and is particularly fond of literature. He regards Montana as the coming state of the Union, and predicts a most brilliant future for the great Treasure state.

HAVELOCK G. COY. A quarter of a century ago Mr. Coy, then a young man of twenty-one years, came to Anaconda, and without making any particular stir in this vicinity began working for wages. Among his natural endowments and the results of self-training, energy and business ability have been conspicuous, and upon these qualities as a foundation he has developed and prospered until today H. G. Coy is recognized as one of the foremost merchants of Anaconda and the state. His department store is an extensive establishment, carrying builders' and general hardware, paints and household furnishings, vehicles and farm implements, and is the only vehicle supply store in this county.

Havelock G. Coy was born in New Brunswick, Canada, April 30, 1866. His progenitors, of Scotch-Irish stock, were settlers at Pomfret, Connecticut, in the early part of the eighteenth century. From there, in 1763, about the close of the French and Indian war which brought Canada under the British dominion, his great-grandfather moved with his family to New Brunswick, and they were the first English-speaking people to make permanent settlement on the St. John river. There in 1768 the grandfather was born.

Mr. Coy's father and mother died in 1881-82, when he was sixteen years of age, and he then left off his attendance at the public schools and took charge of the home farm, where he lived for five years and supported himself and sister. His sister, Minnie, married Mr. David Coy, and now resides in Toronto, Canada. After attaining his majority in 1887 Mr. Coy and sister sold the farm, and he then came west and began his career in Anaconda. After working a time as a wage-earner, he started a teaming business. His next venture was the opening of a stone quarry, the first one in Deer Lodge county, and for some time he was the only stone contractor in the county. Later, with H. P. Leck, he formed a partnership as contractors and builders, and they constructed the Orphan Asylum, the Normal School, the court house at Dillon, and also built a hotel at Meeteetse, Wyoming, when that town was sixty-five miles distant from the railroad. Other large building enterprises were undertaken by this firm during its existence, which continued from April, 1898, until 1903.

The firm of Leck & Coy then bought the stores of John Claybaugh and of Young & Dezell at Anaconda, combining them, and from this beginning has been developed the present large and up-to-date hardware, harness, implement and vehicle store in Anaconda. In 1904 Mr. Coy bought out his partner and has since been sole proprietor of the establishment. He is a Republican in political faith, and was appointed in July, 1912, county commissioner of Deer Lodge county, to fill the unexpired term of the late Albert Bourbonniere.

Mr. Coy has been a member of the Good Templars for the past thirty years, and served as grand chief for two years. His family are active members of the Baptist church. In addition to his business he is owner of valuable city property and of a pleasant home. He was married at Boston in 1893 to Miss Annie M. Edmunds, also of New Brunswick. They have two children: Annie May, who is attending the high school, and Edmond H.

JOHN BALL WELLCOME. The late John Ball Wellcome, lawyer and extensive ranch owner, was born in the state of New York on September 22, 1857, and received his education in law schools in his native state. In 1887 he came to Butte, where for the ensuing twelve years he was successfully engaged in the practice of law. Not long after the beginning of his legal activities here he formed a partnership with Frank E. Corbett. A considerable proportion of the business of this firm consisted of the affairs of the Hon. W. A. Clark; they were also attorneys for a number of large mining companies in Butte. Mr. Wellcome had a wide reputation for being a very careful and reliable lawyer, and after the death of Mr. Corbett became the partner of Jesse B. Roote, so continuing until 1898. Mr. Wellcome took part in the fight for United States senator before the legislature of 1899, in behalf of W. A. Clark. From the differences that arose Mr. Wellcome was not exempt, but subsequent readjustment in so far as he personally was involved, righted him.

After that time Mr. Wellcome felt practically little interest in the practice of law, having acquired extensive landed interests in Madison and Jefferson counties, owning 7,000 acres in the former and 5,000 in the latter county. Creeklyn, the Jefferson county ranch which was his home and on which he spent the latter part of his life, was the center of his broad and important interests. There he spent all his time, except when business called him elsewhere; there he lived a home life which his friends have pronounced ideal; there he systematized and developed various phases of his ranch work, which was to him a pursuit of the greatest enjoyment. His favorite line of ranching was the raising of high grade cattle; as a skilled breeder he made a record throughout the state and did much, by his exhibitions in Chicago in competition with stock fanciers from all over the world, to give Montana exceptional prestige as a specially favored spot for the breeding of cattle. Besides his interests in land and stock he was connected with mining enterprises in several places; and for a number of years he conducted coffee and rubber growing operations in Mexico. He had planned, moreover, to carry out vast schemes in making his rural properties factors in the building up of the state. Fraught with great possibilities were his reclamation projects for bringing water to the arid districts and thus to make of them homes for colonists.

Then—in the prime of his strength and at a time when the returns for his energetic work were stamping him as one of the most far-sighted men in the west—he was stricken with a sudden illness, so brief that few of his friends had known of it, but so severe that death soon claimed him on March 23, 1908. His friends, shocked by his sudden going, his social intimates, including members of the Silver Bow Club and the Montana Club of Helena, representative citizens of Butte, where he had been so prominent a citizen, and men from all sections of the state, throughout which he was so well known, thronged to the memorial service said over his body. In referring to his death, The Butte Miner said editorially:

In the presence of death, it is oft-times easier to write of some one whose personality is unknown to the one who endeavors to indite his obituary than it is to say the parting word for him who has been your loved associate, companion and friend.

The over-full heart is apt to remain all but speechless and the hand which should write paralyzed in the face of great personal sorrow.

Thus it is that The Miner today feels incapable of doing complete justice to the worth, the loveliness and amiability of Mr. John B. Wellcome, who so unexpectedly passed away yesterday.

Good citizen, loving husband, indulgent father, kind friend, he was a man among men and admirable in every sphere of life that he was called upon to fill.

The beauty of his home life, the perfect sympathy which existed there, the charm of his nicely brought up children have long been proverbial in Butte as coming as near the ideal as anything in the world can come.

In the outside world he was recognized as a brilliant lawyer, who has climbed to the head of his profession, and a man of broad-gauged mind.

There was nothing small about the man; he thought big thoughts and executed great things.

He had his tribulations, and though often given sympathy, he never asked for it, though he appreciated it, and at no time in the stormy political days that are past and gone did he ever lose his courage or his cheerfulness. If optimism was ever completely personified, it was in this man.

The hearty greeting, the winning smile and firm hand-clasp which he always had for a friend spoke of the sincerity of his nature, and are things that can never be forgotten by those who knew him. He naturally attracted friends to him, for he was a most genial companion, and having mixed much with the world, he had an exceptional fund of anecdote and story, which always assured him an interested audience at any social gathering.

A man of splendid physical proportions and possessed of much magnetism, he was a born leader of men and one who would have been picked out of any assembly as a dominant spirit.

He appreciated the good things of this world and always enjoyed them, and the value he placed upon money was largely the amount of happiness it would buy. After he stopped practicing law and took up ranching, his broad, generous spirit was again exhibited, for he built a palatial residence upon his home ranch, installed his electric lighting and water systems and stocked his fields with the finest Hereford cattle to be purchased in the United States.

Not satisfied with this, a few years ago he extended his operations into the Madison Valley, where he acquired another large tract of land and spent large sums of money in reclaiming it. He never did anything by halves, for such was not his whole-hearted nature.

If the friends of Mr. John B. Wellcome thought well of him and should mourn that "God's finger touched him and he slept," the grief of those who were attached to him by more sacred ties can be appreciated, and there is not a friend of his whose heart does not go out in sympathy and sorrow.

Mrs. Wellcome, who as Miss Emily Irvine, of Butte, had been married to Mr. Wellcome on December 17, 1891, and the five children of that happy Creeklyn home—Charlotte I., Katherine P., Richard F., Emily I. and John B., Jr.,—constitute the family who were bereaved by the swift passing from life of the head of the household. The beautiful estate on which they had lived remained in Mrs. Wellcome's possession until 1912, when an eastern syndicate secured the purchase of all except the homestead and a few surrounding acres. And there, on a lot within sight of the house, as he had chosen, the physical being of John B. Wellcome rests in the heart of the soil he loved so well; while to those who dwell near and to those who pass by, the place is still silently eloquent of him whose personality radiated such cordiality, such good cheer and such gracious charm.

WILLIAM E. CANNON, one of the successful business men of Stevensville, Montana, has illustrated in his career the opportunities that are presenting themselves to the youth of to-day who are possessed of enterprise, have the ability, and are not afraid of hard, persistent labor. He is president of the Stevensville Trading Company, whose operations cover the city of Stevensville and the surrounding country, yet only a few years ago he began his career with a capital of but a few dollars. He possessed, however, the courage of his convictions, and when his opportunity came he instantly recognized it and did not hesitate to grasp it. His confidence in the future of the Bitter Root valley was pronounced and unflinching, and this confidence has been justified by the development of the prosperous and rapidly-growing business of which he is the head. His success, however, has not been a matter of chance, as he is possessed of abilities that would, no doubt, have enabled him to succeed in whatever line or whatever locality he found himself. Mr. Cannon is a southerner by birth, being a native of Gainesville, Georgia, where he was born May 6, 1867, a son of M. C. and Dicy (Smith) Cannon, natives of Georgia. His father, who served as an officer in the Confederate army throughout the Civil war, eventually engaged in agricultural pursuits, and died on the homestead place in 1902, while Mrs. Cannon passed away at the home of her son in Stevensville in 1906. They had five children: James T., who is engaged in farming in Oklahoma; David L., who is engaged in building and contracting in Stevensville; Mary, who married James Phelps, a rancher of Ravalli county; Luella, the wife of J. C. Brown of Hamilton, Montana, and William.

William E. Cannon was educated in the public schools of Gainesville, Georgia, and when just past his twentieth birthday left home with only a few dollars for the west, and arrived at Stevensville, July 10, 1887. His first employment was as a farm hand, and for the greater part of two years worked for wages, but being ambitious and desiring to be his own master and work independently took his carefully hoarded savings and leased a farm, on which he worked assiduously during the next six years at farming and stockraising. At the end of that time he had accumulated enough money to purchase a quarter of a section of land one mile north of Stevensville, which he sold at a decided profit after two years, then buying the noted Napoleon DeMontier ranch of one hundred and sixty acres, to which he added from time to time until he was the owner of six hundred and forty-seven acres of some of the finest land to be found in the Bitter Root country. As time went on, his holdings increased in value and he soon began selling his land, continuing until it was all disposed of, and later bought the Edward Weil ranch, three miles northeast of Stevensville, which he sold in 1908, to Prof. E. P. Sandsten for state agricultural and scientific purposes. Mr. Cannon then decided to give up the arduous work of the farm, and in 1908 came to Stevensville and purchased city realty, where he erected a handsome modern home. When the Stevensville Trading Company, in which he was a stockholder and originally capitalized at $10,000, was reorganized, the capitalization was made $50,000. Mr. Cannon became president of this company, the officers being Calen Cook, vice-president; Charles H. Buck, secretary, and John W. Brice, treasurer. The business of the company was expanded rapidly since Mr. Cannon's incumbency as its head, the ability and energy which characterized his operations in the agricultural industry being brought to bear with like success in the mercantile field. He is recognized as a shrewd, capable man of affairs whose operations have always been carried on along strictly legitimate lines and his business associates have displayed their confidence in his judgment on all occasions. Quiet and unassuming in manner, courteous and genial to all, with the true southern suavity, he is extremely popular in Stevensville, where he has numerous friends. He has identified himself with Odd Fellowship, having passed through all the chairs in the local lodge, and in political matters is a Republican, although he has taken no active part in public life.

On June 12, 1902, Mr. Cannon was married at Stevensville, to Miss Maud A. Manning, and they have one interesting son, Charles Clifford.

GEORGE T. BAGGS, the leading attorney of Stevensville, Montana, has led a life full of incident and activity and not altogether in the romantic and picturesque. He now has the most lucrative practice not only in Stevensville but in Ravalli county and is engaged on difficult cases throughout the district and sometimes in distant parts of the state. Although an office lawyer of ability, it is his power as a pleader that has brought him distinction. As an orator and public speaker he is also much sought after, on occasions not of professional nature.

Mr. Baggs was born in the busy little town of Smyrna, Delaware, known throughout the east as a grain and fruit market. Here the father, William H. Baggs, had married Sarah M. Denning, and together they reared a family of four children. Of these, George T. Baggs, who came to them as a New Year's gift, on the first of January, 1857, was their last born. Until the age of nineteen years he attended the schools of Delaware and then taught in his native county until he reached his majority. Life in the little eastern state did not offer to him the hardships that he so longed to override, nor did it hint of a goal worth the struggle. In a word he wanted real life with its experiences, its failures and its victory. It was in search of life that he set out for the west and his search was amply rewarded. In the spring of 1887, he located in or near Stevensville, Montana. His funds were low and he worked at whatever offered, laying up little capital but a fund of experience that was later easily "cashed in." Sometimes he worked as "cow puncher" on the vast ranch lands, again as hand in the grist mills or laborer in the lumber camps. Opportunity offered him a variety of occupations and necessity demanded that he accept what came, without hesitating to pick or choose.

In 1879, the senior Mr. Baggs was appointed postmaster of the small Delaware town and in order to bring the youngest son once again within the home circle, he offered him the appointment as his assistant. The youth started on his long journey eastward, driving an ox team from Helena to Fort Benton. At the latter point he took passage on a steamer for Bismarck, North Dakota, and thence by rail to Delaware. His wanderings had taught him the value of a reliable profession and scarcely was he settled once more in Smyrna, when he began the study of the law in conjunction with his other duties. In the autumn of 1880, he entered the legal department of the University of Maryland, at Baltimore. In one year he completed the entire three years' course, partially owing to his previous study, and was graduated from the law school of Maryland University in the class of 1881. He began his professional life in Easton, that state, but after one year became persuaded that success would come as easily in a city as in a village and removed to Baltimore. After almost ten years in the practice, he was appointed, by President Harrison, United States consul to New Castle, New South Wales. Being a very staunch Republican, he resigned his office immediately upon the inauguration of President Cleveland.

It was the call of the west, with its vast distances and even more vast opportunities, that had been ringing in Mr. Baggs' ears for more than a decade. Now that he was once more foot-loose, he returned at once to Stevensville, Montana, where he took up the practice assured of a warm welcome and of ultimate success. He is a leader not at the bar alone, his attractive personality and fine voice cause him to be much in demand at social gatherings, as well as in political circles. In politics he has ever remained loyal to his party, and willing to give much of his own time and effort to her success. During the difficult campaign of 1912, the Republicans of the state counted much on the aid and advice of Mr. Baggs. In that campaign he supported President Taft for reelection. While living in Baltimore, in 1886, the state was hopelessly Democratic, but he, putting aside his own preferences in the matter, went cheerfully down to defeat in the uneven race for state senator. His only idea had been to give substance to his party's forlorn hope.

Since coming to Montana, Mr. Baggs has been in active military service for thirty-one days, when fighting with a band of fellow citizens against the Nez Percés Indians. In 1910, he was elected vice-president of the First State Bank of Stevensville, which position he now holds. He also served as alderman for his city until April, 1912, and in the Odd Fellows' Lodge is past noble grand of Garden Valley Lodge of Stevensville.

On the ninth day of October, 1895, George T. Baggs was united in marriage to Miss Agnes T. Towers, a native daughter of the Emerald Isle. Mr. and Mrs. Baggs have three attractive children. The little ones are Dorothy, George Towers, and John T. Baggs. The family occupy one of the pleasantest homes of Stevensville and have a large circle of friends.

LAWRENCE MULHOLLAND. One of the progressive citizens of Butte, Montana, whose position entitles him to mention in the history of this section of the state, is Lawrence Mulholland, who has resided here for twelve years and is at present filling the office of city electrician of Butte.

Mr. Mulholland has spent the greater part of his mature life in active work in electrical lines and is entirely competent in every way to discharge the duties of his office with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of the people.

Mr. Mulholland was born in Randolph county, Illinois, May 14, 1864. His father, William Mulholland, came to the United States from Dublin, Ireland, his native city, when a young man. Some years after his arrival he entered a homestead in Randolph county, Illinois, upon which he resided until his death. He married Mary Stipe, a native of Westmoreland county, Virginia, whose maternal ancestors, the Turmans, settled in Virginia at an early day. The Stipe family is of Dutch origin. The elder Mulhollands were the parents of ten children.

Lawrence Mulholland spent his early boyhood days on the farm. He attended the district schools of the county, and the high school at Sparta, Illinois, and subsequently became a student at the Carbondale Normal College. After teaching two terms of school he decided to go west, arriving in Montana in 1887. He at once went to work in the construction department of the Great Northern Railway Company, between Fort Buford and Fort Benton, later entered the electrical department of the same road and the next year entered the employ of the Northern Pacific Railway.

Upon attaining proficiency in the work, Mr. Mulholland was soon placed upon the regular staff of electrical workers on the railway's lines, and until 1898 he remained in the employ of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, where he joined the rush to the Klondike region and spent nearly two years in prospecting and placer mining in the vicinity of Dawson. On his return, in 1900, he immediately resumed his former position with the Northern Pacific Railway Company, in the electrical department, being employed in its various lines and at various places on the system between St. Paul, Minnesota, and Portland, Oregon. It was in 1900 that he first made Butte his headquarters, and he has been a resident of this city ever since that time.

In 1909 Mr. Mulholland left the employ of the Northern Pacific and engaged in telephone and electrical work in Butte, working as an electrician in the High Ore mine for more than a year, preceding his appointment as city electrician, May 1, 1911, which office he still holds and devotes his whole time to its attendant duties. Although a Republican in political tendencies, he takes no active part in partisan affairs.

On April 10, 1895, Mr. Mulholland married Miss Hattie MacKenzie, a native of Sparta, Illinois. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Mulholland, the elder son dying in early infancy. Kenneth, the surviving son, is a native of Butte, born July 20, 1902.

Mr. Mulholland is fraternally connected with several lodges, including the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and the Woodmen of the World. He is a man who enjoys great popularity wherever known, and he has many traits of character that endear him to his friends and that have won for him the highest respect of all interests and factions in this city of which he is an honored resident.

GEORGE L. TRACY, for many years an honored resident of Helena and the founder of the brokerage firm of the George L. Tracy Company, with headquarters in Helena and branches in all the more prominent cities of the northwest, was one of the best known men in his line of business in that section. His death took place in Chicago, Illinois, on January 29, 1907. Helena suffered a severe loss in the sudden passing of her beloved citizen, and she will long remember with affection and regret the simple, kindly man who had been identified with her best interests since the years of his young manhood. When Mr. Tracy first connected himself with this section of Montana in a business way, his resources were of slender order in a material way. But he possessed the splendid ability which was necessary to build so large and definite a success out of an infantile business venture, and his strong inherent traits of determination, executive ability and far-sightedness were all sufficient to overbalance his lack of financial possessions. When he died in 1907 he left a valuable estate and a flourishing business which is still being conducted under the name with which he endowed it at its inception twenty years previous.

George L. Tracy was born in Utica, New York, on the 25th day of March, 1846. He was the son of George and Caroline (Tracy) Tracy. The mother was of Dutch extraction through her mother, Caroline von Lansing, while through the paternal line, she was a descendant of George Drake, the brother and heir of Sir Francis Drake. The father settled in New York state in early life, and while still a young man he migrated to Wisconsin, locating in Milwaukee in 1857, where he passed the remainder of his life. He was prominent in commercial and mercantile circles of that city in an early period, but in his declining years he lived a retired life. The wife and mother died in Milwaukee on April 10, 1886. She was the mother of Olive Drake, who married Captain Vaughn, of the U. S. Army, and George L., of this review. The daughter, who was born in July, 1840, died in June, 1909.

George L. Tracy received his early schooling in the public schools of Milwaukee, to which city his parents had removed when he was a small child. Finishing the public schools, he attended a business college, after which he secured work as a shipping clerk with the firm of Sibley, Endicott & Company, in Chicago in 1866. He remained with this firm, winning promotion from time to time, and he was finally sent to Montana to adjust a settlement of a business matter for his firm. After completing the business he returned to Chicago and he had managed the matter so skillfully that his firm kept him on the road constantly from that time on, attending to similar business affairs. He continued thus until the disastrous Chicago fire, when the business place of his firm was completely destroyed. A few days after the fire Mr. Tracy assisted in the erection of temporary quarters under tents on the lake front, where the firm continued to carry on business for several weeks, until a more substantial shelter was arranged for. Later, when all matters had been adjusted in connection with the fire, Mr. Tracy severed his connection with the firm with whom he had been employed for so long, and became a traveling representative of the firm of Sibley, Dudley & Company, also of Chicago, and was assigned to the states of Utah, Idaho and Montana. He remained in their employ a few years, after which he became connected with the firm of Reid, Murdoch & Fisher, with the same territory. In the meantime, Mr. Tracy had been giving some attention to matters on his own responsibility, and had laid in a small way the foundations of what developed into the flourishing brokerage firm of which he was the head for so many years. The business, as first organized in 1885 by him, was in charge of Mr. Tracy in Utah, while Mr. Cory looked after the Montana interests. In 1887 Mr. Tracy took over the interest of his partner, and thereupon proceeded to sever all connection with his old firm, giving up his entire time and attention to the management of the business. Thus from a small beginning was evolved the business which, at the time of the death of its founder, maintained branch offices in a half a dozen or more of the more important cities of Montana. Following his demise, Mrs. Tracy took up the reins of control and with the aid of Mr. Cottingham, manager of the firm, she has conducted the business with a pleasurable degree of success for the past five years.

Mr. Tracy was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, being a Knight Templar and a Shriner, and was for many years treasurer of Algeria Temple of Helena. He was a member of the Montana Club, and in Milwaukee, a member of the Presbyterian church, but never united with the church in Helena. He was a Republican, although he never took an active part in political matters. He was a faithful citizen, and regarded his duty to the community as of equal importance with his duty to the state. As a result, he cast his vote with a view to exerting his influence on the side of right, regardless of party lines or sentiments.

On May 24, 1881, Mr. Tracy was united in marriage with Miss Eva May Hubbard, at Geneseo, Illinois. She is a daughter of Alonzo and Sarah Ann (Brown) Hubbard, a family held in high repute in Geneseo, where they are well known. The grandparents on both sides of the Hubbard family are of old and honored Revolutionary stock, and Mrs. Tracy's paternal great-grandfather was an intimate friend of General Israel Putnam. He was often heard to tell that when the first gun of the Revolutionary war was fired he was engaged in conversation with General Putnam, while plowing a field on the Hubbard farm. Mrs. Tracy attended the public schools as a child and in her teens was sent to a young ladies' academy in Illinois, after which she took a business course in one of the foremost business colleges in the state. Mrs. Tracy still resides in the beautiful home which her husband built some time before his death. It is situated at 702 Harrison avenue, one of the handsomest residence streets in Helena, and lends an air of distinction to that fashionable avenue. Mrs. Tracy is one of Helena's most estimable ladies, whose interest in the improvement of the city is keen and constant.

HON. THEODORE BRANTLY. The Brantly family is of Dutch origin, and the American branch has a history antedating the Revolutionary war, in which several doughty Burghers participated. The grandfather of Theodore Brantly was a soldier in the War of 1812, and his son Edwin Theodore, entered the ministry. The latter was born in 1820, at Conacuh, Alabama, and in the course of his life lived in different cities of the south. He preached and carried on his pastoral duties in the Presbyterian church until his death in 1904. All his sons are professors of the faith by which he lived, as well as preached, and one, Erskine Brantly, has followed the same calling and is now living at Antlers, Oklahoma, where he has his present charge.

The mother of Theodore Brantly was Eliza Brown, daughter of Duncan Brown, a Tennessean of Scotch descent. The founder of this line of the family was Jacob Little, a captain in the Revolution, who was later advanced to the rank of colonel. He first settled in Robeson, South Carolina. Eliza Brown was born in George L Tracy.

1820, and died in 1853. She was the mother of three sons: Erskine, mentioned above; Theodore; and George, who died in infancy. Her husband, Edwin Theodore Brantly contracted a second marriage in 1856, and there were four sons and two daughters born of this union. Samuel, the eldest of these, became a farmer and died eight years ago in Wilson county, Tennessee; William, the second son, died in infancy; Mary became the wife of E. T. Fleming, of Nashville, Tennessee; William Brantly, an implement dealer in the same city; Edwin D. Brantly, a physician, and Alta Brantly. All reside in Nashville.

Theodore Brantly, the distinguished member of the Montana bench, was born in Wilson county, Tennessee, on the anniversary of Lincoln's birthday, 1851. Like that great American, received his early education in somewhat primitive schools, but, unlike him, he was born of the stock who regarded every scholar as wealth to the commonwealth, as old John Knox had declared, and who had been used to culture and prestige always. When the boy was older he went to the Southwestern Presbyterian University at Clarksville, Tennessee, and from this school he received his A. B. in 1875. For his legal training he went to Cumberland University, at Lebanon, Tennessee, and in 1881 received his diploma from the legal department of that college. For the following three years he practiced law at Lebanon with J. S. Gribble, the firm being Gribble & Brantly. In 1883 Mr. Brantly gave up the law for a time to accept a position in Lincoln University, at Lincoln, Illinois. Here he had the chair of classical languages, and for four years he taught Latin and Greek. From Lincoln he was called to the College of Montana at Deer Lodge, and was a member of the faculty of that institution from 1887 to 1889. In July of 1888 he was admitted to the Montana bar, on certificate from the state of Tennessee, and in the June of the following year opened his law office in Deer Lodge and practiced there until January 1, 1893.

In the meantime, Mr. Brantly had been elected district judge of the third judicial district of Montana, and he took the bench, where he served one and a half terms, from 1893 to 1898, inclusive. The occasion of his leaving this office was his election as chief justice of the Supreme court of the state, upon which he succeeded Judge W. Y. Pemberton. On January 1, 1912, Justice Brantly completed his thirteenth year as a member of this dignified judiciary, in which he has served as befits one of its scholarly attainments and lofty personal character.

Justice Brantly maintains his legal residence in Deer Lodge, and it is there that he has his membership in the Masonic order. He has been grand master of the state of Montana. In Helena, Justice Brantly belongs to the Lambs' Club, and also to the Elks, while he is a Knight of Pythias in Lotus Lodge, No. 14, at Lebanon, Tennessee. His politics are Republican, and his church is that of his father, the Presbyterian.

While at Lincoln University, Justice Brantly became acquainted with Miss Lois Reat, daughter of James and Sarah Reat, both of Illinois. Four years after settling in Montana, Justice Brantly returned to Lincoln to be married. The wedding occurred on June 9, 1891, and there are three children born to the union. Theodore Lee Brantly was born on December 19, 1892, and is now in Yale University. Lois Brown Brantly is two years her brother's junior, and her birthday is on Christmas eve. She is now attending school at Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania. Neill Duncan Brantly was born on July 8, 1896, and is attending the Helena high school. All of the children were born in Deer Lodge.

Judge Brantly is a representative of all that is best in what we term the characteristic American. His inheritance is one of which any patriotic citizen would be proud, and he has worthily done his part for the country which his fore-fathers helped to win. In the high duty of passing the torch of progress, with its light undimmed, he has not merely done his share, but has given without stint or measure.

HON. THOMAS M. EVERETT is one of the successful and prominent men of Blaine county, in which he has been located since the year 1889, settling there when the county was known as Chouteau. He first engaged in ranching and was particularly successful as a breeder of horses and cattle. His operations have not alone been confined to the ranch business, although he has given a generous share of his attention to that enterprise and has added very materially to his ranch holdings in the years that have passed, but he has acquired a quantity of valuable city realty as well. He organized the First National Bank of Harlem and is its president, and he has so far won the confidence and esteem of his fellow-men in this section of the country that he has served them four terms in the state legislature—two in the house and two in the senate. Mr. Everett is a Progressive, stanch and true, and a valuable factor in the party in Blaine county.

Mr. Everett was born on Christmas day, 1865, at Princeton, Missouri, where he spent the early years of his life. When he was but a lad his parents moved to Kansas, locating in Butler county, and there he attended Baker University until 1885, pursuing a course in literature. He returned to Princeton after his graduation and remained there one year, in 1887 moving to Helena, where for two years he engaged in contracting and building. In 1889 he came to Harlem, and since that time his fortunes have been bound up in the great Treasure state of the Union. His success has been of the most unquestionable order from the beginning of his identification with Harlem and this county, and he has advanced financially, socially and politically with each succeeding year.

With regard to the parentage of Mr. Everett, he is a son of Hosea and Jane (Bectcher) Everett, natives of Ohio, and now residing in Harlem. The father retired from his farming activities some years ago and is passing his declining years in Montana. They were the parents of nine children. The eldest, Annie and Antoinette, are twins. Annie is the wife of Alonzo Ellis of Harlem, and Antoinette is married to P. M. Bosley, also of Harlem; Josephine, who married E. M. Kinney of Harlem, was killed in an automobile accident; Melissa married W. E. French of Indianapolis, Indiana, and there resides; John M. is engaged in ranching in Harlem; Lucy is married to G. M. Phillips of Harlem; Amos is a clergyman of Bozeman, Montana; Mary is the wife of C. E. Farnum, of Harlem; Thomas M., of this review, was the fourth child of his parents.

Mr. Everett is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and of the Odd Fellows. He married Miss Addie Brewer, of Maiden Rock, Wisconsin, in 1895. They have no children.

BARNEY HOGAN. By proving himself a man of honesty and integrity and one of the world's industrious workers, Barney Hogan, clerk of the court in Deer Lodge county, Montana, through these admirable traits rose rapidly in the confidence and esteem of the people of Anaconda and Deer Lodge county during but a few years' residence and by them was placed in his present official position of responsibility.

But his own generation removed from the soil of Erin's Isle, he was born in Calumet, Michigan, June 23, 1876, and has inherited the warm and generous heart and the happy temperament of Irish blood. John Hogan, the father of Barney, was born in Ireland and came to America when a young man, settling in northern Michigan, where he resided many years before his subsequent removal to Montana. He died in 1896, at the age of fifty, and is buried at Helena. Various occupations were followed by him during his years of industrial activity. In Calumet, Michigan, he married Margaret Thornton, who is still living and now resides in Anaconda. Five children were the issue of this union, as follows: James S., who is married and resides at Anaconda; Barney, the subject of this review; Mary A. and Agnes M., residing with their mother in Anaconda; and Bartholomew J., who is assisting his brother as deputy clerk of the court.

Until about eleven years of age Mr. Hogan lived in Calumet, Michigan, and began his education there, completing it, however, in the public schools of Marysville, Montana, whither the family had removed in 1887. During thirteen years' residence in Marysville a few months were spent as an employe in a mill, but the greater portion of his time as a wage earner was given to the meat and grocery business. About 1900 he came to Anaconda, where the first five years were spent in the employ of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company. Following that, he was engaged in the grocery business here until his election as clerk of the court in January, 1909, which office he has continued to fill in the most acceptable manner to the present time. He is a Democrat and an aggressive politician, ardently devoted to the interests of his party. Fraternally he is united with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Woodmen of the World, and in church membership both he and Mrs. Hogan are affiliated with the Roman Catholic church. He enjoys hunting and fishing and all forms of athletic sports, especially baseball, a game of which seldom has a more enthusiastic spectator than Mr. Hogan. He is intensely loyal to Montana, for he says it is a state which adapts itself to the needs of all classes better than any other in the Union, encourages effort in every way, maintains the highest standard of excellency in its educational institutions, and for business and wage conditions cannot be equalled anywhere.

On the 23d of February, 1905, at Anaconda, Mr. Hogan was united in marriage to Miss Mary Hagerty, a daughter of Dennis and Mary Hagerty, of Anaconda. Three sons have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Hogan—John B., now in school, and James E. and Bartholomew D., who are not yet of school age.

FRANK WALKER. One of the well-known business men of Butte whose success in life has been the result of his own efforts entirely, beginning life's battle with practically nothing but his energy and ambition, he has done well whatever he has undertaken, whether as employe or employer. Mr. Walker was born at Kernville, Kern county, California, September 3, 1863, and is a son of George P. and Amanda M. (Warden) Walker, the former a native of Georgia and the latter of Texas. George P. Walker passed away in San Diego county, California, and his widow is now a resident of Los Angeles.

Frank Walker was the second in order of birth of his parents' nine children, and his education was secured in the schools of San Bernardino county. The greater part of his tuition, however, was obtained in the school of hard work, as at the age of thirteen years he was compelled to give up his studies and start to do his share in supporting the family, and even before this age he was kept out of school a great portion of the time. After several years spent in farming, Mr. Walker turned his attention to mining, and when sixteen years old was employed in the mines of San Bernardino county, where he continued to be engaged for a few years. On March 8, 1887, he came to Butte, and while residing here was employed in the mines until November, 1895, prior to which time, however, and while employed in the mines, he was engaged in the retail liquor business at Burlington, Montana, about three and one-half miles west of the town, near the Blue Bird mine, in which he had been first employed on coming to Butte. In 1889 Mr. Walker disposed of this business and purchased the establishment of Costello & Rossiter, then located at No. 17 North Main street, but in the following February sold out and returned to the mines. For some time he was engaged in leasing and developing mining properties, but these were never of a very profitable nature, and then for five years he was employed as a bartender for A. Wetzstein and King & Lowry. On March 1, 1901, Mr. Walker established himself in the retail liquor business at 12 West Park street, where he has since remained, and where he has built up the leading business of its kind in Butte, and one of the best known buffets in the northwest. No business house of this character anywhere has more modern equipment or is conducted on a more business-like and systematic plan. Doing a business of more than $100,000 per year, carrying a stock of $25,000, with fixtures costing upwards of $20,000, and employing fourteen men, are figures applicable to this business, which was started but a little more than a decade ago on a capital of $750.

In the management of his business Mr. Walker gives the closest attention to details, and never overlooks an opportunity to add to the attractiveness of his place or to improve the quality of his merchandise. He is the type of man who would have succeeded in any business he undertook, for being resourceful and original he has introduced a number of innovations that have not only proven popular, but have done much to dignify his business. His place of business is one of the show places of Butte. Here may be found one of the finest collections of specimens of the taxidermist's art, minerals and curios in the United States, including finely mounted heads of elk, moose, mountain goats, eagles, etc., many of which have succumbed to Mr. Walker's prowess as a hunter.

The idea of having a ladies' day was original with Mr. Walker, and the great success of this innovation was shown when for several hours in the afternoon his store was open only to ladies, and nearly one thousand of the fair sex took advantage of the opportunity to view the magnificent collection referred to. He is the owner of a ranch of 6,000 acres, located near White Sulphur Springs, in Meagher county, Montana, which he devotes to the raising of hay and wheat, and in addition has various city realty holdings, his residence at 410 West Granite street being one of the attractive residence properties of the city. From time to time he has interested himself in various business enterprises, and is considered a man of great business sagacity and absolute integrity.

In November, 1892, Mr. Walker was married to Miss Bertha M. Fleming, daughter of A. C. Fleming, a native of New York state, who has been a resident of Butte since 1885 and is engaged in carpentry. Mrs. Walker's mother is deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Walker have had one child, Georgie P., born at Butte, August 8, 1893. Fraternally Mr. Walker is an Elk and an Eagle and is very popular with the members of the local lodges of these orders. In the life of this gentleman there is presented a lesson for the youth of today; something to be found in it of a nature encouraging to the young aspirant who without friends or fortune is struggling to overcome obstacles in his efforts to acquire a comfortable competence. Hard, persistent, untiring labor, directed along legitimate channels is bound to bring success, and this fact has been demonstrated in no better way than in the life of Mr. Walker.

ROBERT E. HAMMOND. An able lawyer and influential citizen, Robert E. Hammond has been identified with Montana for a quarter century and for the past ten years has had his office and residence in the city of Havre. Like many successful men, he began life as a school teacher, was a teacher in Montana during the territorial period, and by individual ability and a fine integrity has attained his prominence.

Grant Waelder

Mr. Hammond was born in Boyd county, Kentucky, September 17, 1859, attended the public schools there, and then began teaching in his native county. In 1887 he came out to Montana and continued his work of teaching in this state. He then took up the reading of law with one of the well-known legal firms of Kalispell, and was admitted to the bar in that city in 1902 and began his practice there. The following year he located in Havre, and has since acquired a generous share of the legal business of this city and vicinity. Mr. Hammond has the distinction of having been a member of the constitutional convention which framed the first organic law for the state of Montana in 1889. He represented Jefferson county in that body.

Mr. Hammond's father was Robert Hammond, a Virginian by birth, who came over the mountains into Kentucky and was connected with the iron industry there. He was born in 1822 and died in 1900 at Boulder, Montana, having come to this state during his later years. The mother was Rebecca (Gard) Hammond, a native of Pennsylvania who moved with her parents in Kentucky, where she was married. She died in 1881 in Ohio, where she is buried.

Robert E. Hammond was married at Radersburgh, Montana, June 12, 1889, to Miss Ella Ritchart, daughter of John Ritchart, of Radersburgh. Mr. and Mrs. Hammond are the parents of two children: Lillian, who was born at Radersburgh, July 7, 1890, is a graduate of the Hamline University; Maurice Eugene, who was born at Kalispell, March 18, 1903, is attending school at Havre.

Mr. Hammond is a member of the Masonic blue lodge at Kalispell. In politics he is Republican, and his church is the Methodist. During the busy years of his career in this state he has always been very fond of outdoor life, especially of hunting and fishing. He has many warm friends in different parts of the state, and has an unwavering affection for Montana and its welfare.

WILLIAM B. PYPER. The present United States Commissioner at Havre, William B. Pyper, became a resident of Montana while it was yet a territory, and has been identified with business and public affairs for many years. Born in Ontario, Canada, August 6, 1869, he was a son of George A. and Edith C. (Ball) Pyper, his paternal ancestry being Scotch, and his forefathers on his mother's side were Hollanders who had emigrated to America about the time of the "Mayflower" voyages. George A. Pyper, the father, now deceased, was born in Ontario, was a successful merchant and took an active part in political and public life. The mother, who was born in Ontario, where she still resides, is a descendant of the old Loyalist stock whose members received grants to lands in America from the crown, and about the time of the Revolution moved from the colonies to Canada.

Judge Pyper, the second of three children, attended the public schools of Woodstock, Ontario, until he was fourteen years old. From that time forward he has depended on his own resources for his advancement in life. On leaving school he was apprenticed to the druggist's trade, and served an apprenticeship of four years in Woodstock. In March, 1888, he came to the United States, first locating in St. Paul, but in the following September became a resident of Montana, which has been his permanent home, and the state above all others to which he gives his full loyalty. During the first year he was manager of the drug department for Churchill & Webster at Great Falls, and then became connected with a drug house in Missoula. In January, 1899, after having spent some time in several towns and cities of this state, he came to Havre, and was first employed as clerk in the store of A. J. Broadwater and H. W. Stringfellow, but in January, 1902, established a business of his own in this city. In 1904 Judge Knowles appointed Mr. Pyper to the office of United States commissioner, and at the time of taking up the duties of this position he sold his store, and has since given practically all his time and ability to the office and other places of public honor and responsibility. In April, 1904, he was elected police magistrate of Havre, and the next fall was elected justice of the peace, an office to which he has been re-elected and fills at the present time. In 1902 he also was county coroner.

As one of the leading Republicans in this section of Montana, Judge Pyper for the past twelve years has taken an active part in the county and state conventions, and for five years was chairman of the Chouteau county central committee. He is a citizen whose work and influence may always be counted upon to advance the best interests of his home city and state. For the past seven years he has been secretary of the Havre Chamber of Commerce. In fraternal affairs he was first master of Havre Lodge No. 55, A. F. & A. M., and is past grand patron of the Eastern Star in Montana. He was one of the organizers and has held office in the Havre Lodge of Elks, and is worthy president of the Fraternal Order of Eagles. He was reared in the faith of the Presbyterian church. Judge Pyper is owner of a stock ranch in Hill county, where he indulges his tastes for good stock and raises only blooded horses.

At Havre on July 8, 1908, he was united in marriage to Miss May R. Sanderson, daughter of George T. Sanderson, a prominent citizen of Havre. Mr. and Mrs. Pyper are the parents of one child, Edith M., who was born in Havre, February 17, 1911.

GEORGE T. SANDERSON. A resident of Montana for a quarter of a century and long prominent in public and business life at Havre, George T. Sanderson is one of the citizens who have done much for the development of this state since its admission to the Union. He was born in Hamilton, Ontario, September 25, 1856. His father, John C. Sanderson, who was born in Ontario in 1830 and is still active in business, running a lumber yard at Jarvis, Ontario, spent most of his career as a railway builder. He was for a number of years superintendent of construction for the Great Western and for other roads between Niagara Falls and Windsor. He married Mary Taylor, who was born in Ireland in 1833 and died at Jarvis in November, 1893. She came to America when a young girl.

George T. Sanderson, the oldest of their nine children, received his early education in the public schools at Galt, Ontario, where he spent most of his youth. He began the serious endeavors of life when still a boy, and has been the architect of his own prosperous career. At the age of fifteen he was apprenticed to learn the machinist's trade, spending four years with Goldie, McColloch & Company at Galt, after which he took a business course in a commercial college of London, Ontario. In 1879 he began learning locomotive works at Hamilton, and thence came west to Winnipeg as machinist and locomotive foreman in the service of the Canadian Pacific. With that railroad he spent six and a half years, until the spring of 1887, when he became master mechanic on the Montana division of the Great Northern. For four years his residence was at Fort Assiniboine, but since 1891 he has made his home in Havre. Mr. Sanderson continued in the railway service in the responsible post of master mechanic until November, 1899, since which time he has been engaged in the land business.

Mr. Sanderson's name is often mentioned in the history of his home city. He was one of the first public school trustees of the town, and when the city was incorporated in 1892 he was one of the first aldermen elected to the council. He also served as mayor during 1896-97, and in April, 1912, was again elected alderman. He was vice president of the Havre Commercial Company seven years, is an active member of the Havre Commercial Club, and has been especially instrumental in bringing people to Hill company and establishing them on government lands. His fraternal associations are with the Knights of Pythias and the Elks.

Mr. Sanderson was married at Preston, Ontario, in 1882, to Miss Mary Smith, a native of Galt. They are the parents of three children: Mae is the wife of Judge W. B. Pyper, of Havre; Georgiana is the wife of Dr. J. S. Almas, of Havre; and John is the present assistant city engineer of Havre.

ANTHONY SHOVLIN. At the time of his death, which occurred on the 9th of December, 1911, Anthony Shovlin was the efficient and popular incumbent of the important office of treasurer of Silver Bow county, and the fact that he was called upon to serve in this fiscal office stands in significant evidence of the confidence reposed in him by the people of the county. He had maintained his home in the city of Butte for more than a quarter of a century, and during the major part of this period he was actively identified with mining operations. He was a man who won for himself an appreciable success as a member of the world's noble army of productive workers, and his strong personality and admirable traits of character gave to him secure vantage ground in the confidence and esteem of his fellow men. His was a staunch heart and one that pulsed in sympathy with those upon whom the burden of life rested more heavily than in justice due. His was an alert mentality, and he had fine powers of leadership in thought and action. His was an integrity of purpose that never permitted any compromise for the sake of personal expediency, and, all in all, he was a true man and one who accounted well to the world in service to the fullest measure of his abilities and powers. He had been in somewhat impaired health for several years before his worthy life came to an end, and the immediate cause of his death was a stroke of paralysis.

A scion of the staunchest of Irish stock, Mr. Shovlin was proud to claim the fair old Emerald Isle as the place of his nativity. He came to America when a young man, to win for himself such success as lay within his powers of achievement, and he was one of the honored and representative citizens of the Montana metropolis at the time of his demise. Mr. Shovlin was born in County Donegal, Ireland, on the 4th of March, 1864, and was a son of Edward and Ellen (McNelis) Shovlin, both of whom still reside in that county,—venerable in years and honored by all who know them. The father, who is now an octogenarian, devoted his active career to agricultural pursuits and is now living retired in the enjoyment of the rewards of former years of earnest toil and endeavor. He came to America in 1880, his wife remaining in Ireland, and here he remained for two years, at the expiration of which the lure of his native land proved sufficient to attract him again to its gracious borders. Both are devout communicants of the Catholic church, in the faith of which they carefully reared their children, of whom two sons and two daughters still reside in Ireland, and the other surviving children are Mrs. Patrick O'Donnell, of New York, and Mrs. Patrick Craig, who maintains her home in Butte, Montana.

Anthony Shovlin was reared to the sturdy discipline of the home farm and obtained his early educational discipline in the schools of his native county. He remained in Ireland until he had attained to his legal majority, when, in 1884, he severed the home ties and came to the United States. He soon made his way to Arizona, where he remained about two years, and thereafter he was a resident of Nevada for a short period. In 1887 he came to Montana and located in Butte, which city continued to be his home until his death and in which his activities were principally in connection with the mining industry. Dependent upon his own resources, his sterling character and strong mentality proved adequate to enable him to make substantial advancement. He was one of the world's workers and there was naught of apathy or indolence in his career.

Well fortified in his convictions as to matters of public import, and essentially loyal and progressive as a citizen, Mr. Shovlin took an active part in political affairs in his home city and county and gave effective service in behalf of the cause of the Democratic party, of which he was a stalwart adherent. On the 6th of November, 1910, he was elected treasurer of Silver Bow county, for a term of two years, and he was giving a most careful and admirable administration of the affairs of this important fiscal office at the time of his death, which occurred about nine months after he assumed the duties of the position. In an article written by the city attorney of Butte and published in the Butte Socialist on the day of the death of Mr. Shovlin, appeared the following significant statement: "In all of the cities and counties of Montana there is one treasurer who is getting interest for his employer, the people, on its money. A working-man treasurer, Anthony Shovlin has a regular interest account in the States Savings Bank, and at the end of each quarter the interest on Butte's money is turned into Butte's treasury."

Soon after his arrival in Butte Mr. Shovlin became a prominent and influential factor in organized-labor circles, and he was a charter member of the local Knights of Labor. He was very active in the affairs of the Miners' Union and served as secretary of the local organization of the same in 1898-9. For several years thereafter he was the incumbent of the office of tax collector, under the regime of James Meagher as county treasurer, and he also served several terms as justice of the peace in South Butte. He was a communicant of the Catholic church and was a prominent and honored member of the local body of the Ancient Order of Hibernians. He was held in unqualified esteem in the city that so long represented his home, was kindly, companionable and generous and won staunch friends in all classes. He never married. His funeral was held from the Church of the Sacred Heart and called forth a representative gathering of all classes of citizens, who thus assembled to pay a last tribute of respect to one who had well merited their high regard.

RUDOLPH F. W. MOLT. Self reliance, energy, honesty, all these traits of character have been instrumental in attaining for Rudolph F. W. Molt, of Billings, the remarkable measure of success which has attended his efforts, but, more than anything else perhaps, credit must be given the indomitable resolution that has been bestowed on his operations and caused him to forge steadily forward in the face of all difficulties and discouragements. The extent of the various enterprises in the sheep industry in Montana would no doubt prove a matter of astonishment to the residents of the eastern states, and the magnitude with which this business has been carried on by many of the progressive citizens of this formerly barren country is probably unknown to the majority who have never visited the Treasure state. One of the men who has proven this to be a profitable occupation is Rudolph F. W. Molt, who for many years has been successfully engaged in the sheep and cattle business. He is a native of the Fatherland, having been born in Klein Waabs, Germany, January 19, 1859, and is a son of Hans and Louisa (Witt) Molt. Hans Molt spent his whole life in agricultural pursuits in his native country, where he passed away at the age of sixty-six years, while his wife died when she was forty-nine years old. They were the parents of seven children, of whom two are now living, Rudolph and Emma, the latter the wife of Frederick Paulsen, living in Germany. The Molt family has always been connected with the Lutheran church.

Rudolph F. W. Molt received a public school education in his native country and came to the United States in 1886. In March of the following year he located at Billings, and here secured employment as a sheep herder, but in 1889 he engaged in the business on his own account, starting out in a small way and each year increasing the size of his flocks until he became one of the large sheep raisers of this part of Montana. His ranch is located in the Lake Basin country, the scene of many years spent in the sheep and cattle business, where he witnessed both success and reverses, and which holds for him many pleasant memories of the days he spent in this industry, and there he still owns 30,000 acres of land. He has lately disposed of his sheep and cattle, as eighty per cent. of this land is farm land, and the demand in Montana has become so great in recent years for agricultural land that Mr. Molt has concluded, like hundreds of others, that the grazing on the tillable land is about at an end, and hence the great portion of his 30,000 acres in the Lake Basin country will from now on be utilized in the farming industry. His abundant success has been brought about by progressive methods, persevering labor and untiring energy, and his ranch is one of the finest in that locality, although he makes his home in Billings, at No. 318 South Twenty-ninth street. Mr. Molt is one of those who proved that the advantages of personal advancement in connection with the industrial life of Montana do not lack for appreciation. Coming from a foreign country and changing his line of occupation, entirely through his own efforts he has reached a measure of success that cannot be otherwise than gratifying, and he is now respected and esteemed as one of the foremost men of the Yellowstone Valley. He is a Republican in his political views, but he has never cared for political preferment.

In 1894 Mr. Molt was married to Miss Alvina Lehfeldt, who was born at Dennison, Crawford County, Iowa, a daughter of Rudolph and Mary (Witt) Lehfeldt. To Mr. and Mrs. Molt have been born three daughters, Emma and Bertha, both attending high school, and Alma, who died November 13, 1910, at the age of nearly twelve years.

THOMAS BAIRD. The qualities and attributes that go to make up the character of the successful man of affairs have always proved of great interest to the biographer and student of human nature, who invariably finds that perseverance and the ability to remain firm under misfortune play no small part in determining the outcome of a career. In this connection the life of Thomas Baird, president of the First State Bank of Stevensville, furnishes an excellent example of pluck, tenacity of purpose and determination, with which also is connected the ability to recuperate from misadventure. Today Mr. Baird stands in a foremost position among those who have accomplished results in the field of business and finance, and owes his enviable place entirely to his own efforts. Mr. Baird is a native of Canada, born March 27, 1863, in New Brunswick, a son of Samuel and Elizabeth (Snodgrass) Baird, farming people of New Brunswick, who still survive, being eighty and eighty-two years of age, respectively. There were seven children in their family: Robert, who is engaged in agricultural pursuits in New Brunswick; Thomas; Isaac, also a farmer in New Brunswick; Mary, who resides on the homestead with her parents; Rev. Frank B., pastor of the Presbyterian church at Woodstock, Canada; Edward, a well-known merchant of Boston, Massachusetts; and Margaret, who married Cecil Jones, chancellor of the University of New Brunswick, at Fredericton.

Thomas Baird completed his education in the public schools of New Brunswick at the age of sixteen years, and from that time until he was twenty remained with his parents, assisting his father in farming and lumbering. His first employment on his own account was in the lumber camps of Vermont and New Hampshire, where he continued to work for three years, and then returned to his home. Mr. Baird had intended to remain in his native locality, but his experience in the United States had bred in him a predilection for the methods and activities of this country, and in 1887 he came to Montana and secured employment in the lumbering business at Bonita. Although the business was flourishing, wages in the sawmill were unsatisfactory, and Mr. Baird went to Evero for six months, and when the opportunity presented itself established himself in a logging business, with which he was connected for seven years. He was beginning to become prosperous and had erected a large sawmill, but in making a contract for five years' work underestimated the cost, a mistake which caused him to lose his capital, although he fulfilled his contract and turned over his mill to his creditors. In the meantime he had purchased a small timber tract in the Bitter Root country, and this proved his salvation in the business world. Although he was somewhat discouraged by the turn his fortunes had taken, he doggedly refused to acknowledge defeat, and as his credit was still unimpaired gathered together the broken strands of his fortunes, secured a small capital and began his business life anew. Leasing a new mill, he cut the timber from his land, converted it into lumber, and was soon again on the highroad to success, paying off his indebtedness and rapidly expanding his interests. Since 1901 his rise has been rapid and steady, and today he is recognized as one of the able, alert and dependable financiers of his community, being president of the First State Bank of Stevensville, and the owner of a fine residence and much valuable city property, timber land and saw mills, logging, railroad and equipment. A kindly, genial man, Mr. Baird is considerate of the rights of others, and at various times has assisted those in need to a start in business life. He is a great lover of home and family, but also takes pleasure in fraternal work and has reached the Shriner degree in Masonry. In political matters he is a Republican.

In January, 1892, Mr. Baird was married to Miss Annie Fowler, of New Brunswick, Canada, and they have four children: Alva, a graduate of the Stevensville high school, and now attending the University of Montana, and Hazel, Harold and Eloise.

JOSEPH LUTEY, SR. The late Joseph Lutey, Sr., was closely identified with business and civic interests in Montana for many years and his life, in its success and integrity, was one that offers both lesson and incentive. He won advancement through his own energies and abilities, was earnest, fair and honorable in all of the relations of life, and by very virtue of his sterling attributes of character he commanded the confidence and esteem of his fellow men. He was the founder of the grocery business now conducted by his two sons in the city of Butte, and in addition to building up this representative retail enterprise he had been identified with various other lines of productive activity in the state. He was a man of strong personality, with well fortified convictions, so that he could not but prove a loyal and valuable citizen. He was progressive and public-spirited and was ever ready to give his cooperation in the support of those agencies and enterprises which tended to conserve the general welfare of the community. His name will be held in enduring honor in the state which so long represented his home and to whose development and progress he contributed his quota.

Of sturdy English stock, Mr. Lutey was born in the town of Morvah, in the extreme southwestern end of Cornwall, England, December 25, 1849. Concerning the family history but few data are accessible, but it is known that his parents were sterling citizens of Cornwall and that there his father was identified with mining operations,—a line of industry for which that section of England has long been noted. Mr. Lutey received the advantages of the common schools of his native place but his education was largely acquired through self-application and through the lessons gained in connection with the practical duties and responsibilities of life. His career was one of earnest and consecutive endeavor, and he developed a strong and symmetrical character,—became a man of mature judgment, wide information and marked business acumen. As has been intimated, his educational privileges in the purely academic sense were very limited, and it was largely due to his remarkable memory that his fund of knowledge eventually covered so wide a range.

Mr. Lutey gained his initial experience as one of the world's workers by his association with mining operations in his native land, and at the age of nineteen years he severed the home ties and set forth to seek his fortunes in America, where he believed he could find better opportunities for achieving success through individual effort. For several years after his arrival in the new world he was identified with mining operations in the states of New York and New Jersey. In 1874 he came to the west and for about a decade thereafter he was variously engaged in Colorado and Nevada, where his activities during the greater part of the time were in connection with mining operations. Early in 1887 he came to Montana, after having passed three years at his old home in England, whither he went for the purpose of visiting his venerable parents, who there continued to reside until their death. He found in Montana ample scope for successful endeavor and here his interests were centered during the residue of his long and useful life. For about two years after coming to this state he continued to be engaged in mining and he then turned his attention to the operation of a stage line and a general transfer business between Philipsburg and Granite, in which latter town he finally engaged in the retail grocery trade. There he conducted a prosperous enterprise in this line from 1890 to 1895, in which latter year he removed the business to Philipsburg, in the same county. In the autumn of 1897, seeking a still broader field of enterprise, he removed his business to Butte, and here he founded one of the largest and most metropolitan retail grocery establishments in the state, the same being conducted by his sons since his death, which occurred in the city of Los Angeles, California, on the 13th of July, 1911. His remains were laid to rest in that city, where he was passing the winter, and his widow still maintains her home in Butte.

Mr. Lutey was in the most absolute sense the architect of his own fortune, and that he builded well none familiar with his career can doubt. He had a high sense of stewardship and thus was not self-centered or narrow in his views. He viewed men and affairs in correct proportions and his honesty of purpose was never a matter of doubt, though he had the courage of his convictions and was never reluctant to express his opinions when he felt that injustice or other wrong had been done to himself or others. He was generous, loyal and companionable and had the faculty of making and retaining friends, of whom he was ever appreciative and who in turn valued his friendship. He was never known to compromise with conscience for the sake of personal expediency or business policy, and was ever zealous in the support of what he believed to be right. He was diligent in business and had the deepest appreciation of the dignity and value of honest toil and endeavor, as his own advancement had come through earnest labor and close application. He took great pride in the fine store which he established in Butte and in the conducting of which he was associated with his sons until his death. The establishments are conceded to be the finest retail groceries west of Chicago and cater to a large and representative patronage, the while it is gratifying to note that the unvarying policy of the establishments has been from the start to handle no intoxicating liquors of any kind or in any form,—a policy upon which the founder of the enterprise insisted without the slightest deviation and one which has consistently been upheld by his sons, who have fully maintained the highest prestige of the honored name which they bear and who are numbered among the representative business men and popular citizens of the Montana metropolis.

Mr. Lutey was a man of deep religious convictions and abiding faith, though he made no parade of the same. He was for many years a zealous member of the Methodist Episcopal church, in which his widow likewise has long been an active worker, and he was also a staunch supporter of the varied activities of the Salvation Army, the value of whose work he fully appreciated. He was ever ready to aid those in affliction or need and was a generous contributor to charitable and benevolent objects. As a citizen he was essentially loyal and public-spirited and though he had no predilection for the honors or emoluments of public office, he was a staunch supporter of the cause of the Republican party. He was a man of marked vigor and of pleasing address, and his life was guided and governed by those high ethical principles which, as thus followed, ever beget popular confidence and approbation. His interests centered in his home, whose relations were ideal, and thus he had no desire to identify himself with any number of social organizations, though he was affiliated with the Knights of Pythias for a number of years prior to his demise.

At Dover, New Jersey, on the 14th of September, 1872, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Lutey to Miss Catherine E. Bone, who was born in St. Just, Cornwall, England, and whose parents, John and Elizabeth Bone, came to America from Cornwall, England. Mrs. Lutey proved a true companion and helpmeet to her husband and aided him admirably in the years which marked his advancement to the status of a substantial and prosperous business man, the while her gentle and gracious personality has endeared her to those who have come within the sphere of her influence. Mr. and Mrs. Lutey became the parents of seven children, of whom only three are living,—Joseph, Jr., William J. and Miss Mary J. The two sons, each of whom is married, are associated in the conduct of the business enterprise founded by their honored father, and the only surviving daughter is now residing in the city of Los Angeles, California.

J. SIDNEY ELLIS is president of the corporation known as the Ellis Paint Company, one of the largest concerns of its kind in the state.

A native of Canada, J. Sidney Ellis was born on the 22nd of October, 1870, and was 17 years of age at the time of his advent in Butte, in 1887. For four years thereafter he was in the employ of the Richards Paint & Oil Company of Butte and from 1898 to 1900 he was a partner in the paint firm of Carder Brothers. In 1901 he established the Ellis Paint Company, which was incorporated under the laws of the state of Montana, with a capital stock of twenty thousand dollars, in 1901. The official corps of the Ellis Paint Company is as follows: J. S. Ellis, president; J. S.

Cornelius B. Nolan

Dutton, vice-president; and Wyman Ellis, secretary and treasurer. This concern holds prestige as being the leading wall-paper jobbing house in Montana and it makes a specialty of handling wall paper and paints, employing traveling salesmen who do business throughout this section of the northwest. The home of the Ellis Paint Company is at No. 24 Granite street and according to recent statistics the company does an annual business of about one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars.

Fraternally, he is connected with the time-honored Masonic order and he is also a member of the Silver Bow Club. His religious faith is in harmony with the teachings of the Methodist Episcopal church.

FRANK BELEY. A residence of nearly a quarter of a century in Livingston, during which time he has been identified with business enterprises of an important nature and rendered efficient and valuable service in various official capacities, entitles Frank Beley, present chairman of the Park county school board, to a position among those who have been instrumental in the development of this part of the Treasure state, while the fact that he has been the architect of his own fortunes makes a review of his career additionally interesting. Mr. Beley was born in Oswego county, New York, July 22, 1859, and is a son of George and Katherine (Levens) Beley.

George Beley was born in Paris, France, September 10, 1823, and was ten years of age when he accompanied his parents to the United States, the family landing at New York City, from whence they went to Syracuse, New York. There Mr. Beley secured employment in the salt works, but after his marriage removed to Oswego county, and was engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, March 5, 1901. His wife, who was born in France, September 12, 1823, died February 1, 1890, having been the mother of eight children: Louise, born January 28, 1844, who died March 24, 1897; Catherine, the widow of Jules Jaquin; Mary Ann, the wife of Nathaniel Carr; George; Charles; Emma, the wife of Alfred George; Frank, and Fred.

Until he was eighteen years of age, Frank Beley attended the district schools of Oswego county, New York, and spent the summer months in work on his father's farm, and he then went to New York City and secured employment in the picture store of his brother-in-law, Nathaniel Carr, for whom he worked two years. He next engaged in the picture business on his own account in Brooklyn, New York, but after one year lost his establishment and stock in a fire, and somewhat discouraged returned to the home farm in Oswego county. A year and a half later, having secured capital with which to make a fresh start, Mr. Beley came to Deer Lodge, Montana, and on October 1, 1887, started working on a ranch, but during the following spring removed to Butte and entered the employ of the Centennial Brewing Company. On October 1, 1889, he came to Livingston and engaged in the ice and bottling business, and was successfully connected therewith until 1904, at which time he took up general contracting in cement work, principally in the building of sidewalks, in which he has continued to the present time. Mr. Beley's operations have been very successful, and he has built up a large and lucrative business. He has been a prominent figure in Democratic politics, serving as alderman from the first ward for two years, being later mayor of the city for a like period, and then again serving as alderman. In 1900 he was elected sheriff of Park county, and since 1903 has been a member of the school board and since 1905 the chairman of that body, and November 5, 1912, he was elected one of the county commissioners of Park county. This election came unsolicited on the Democratic ticket. He has shown marked executive ability and as an official has had the community's interests at heart. Fraternally he is connected with Livingston lodge No. 246, B. P. O. E., Yellowstone lodge No. 10, Knights of Pythias, and the Woodmen of the World. His place of business is situated at No. 208 South F street.

On September 29, 1881, Mr. Beley was married to Miss Amelia J. George, at Oswego, New York, she being a native of Oswego county, and a daughter of Matheran and Annette George, natives of France. Mr. George was born in November, 1826, and came to the United States on a sailing vessel in young manhood, the remainder of his life being spent in agricultural pursuits in Oswego county, where his death occurred March 14, 1906. His wife, who was born June 8, 1829, passed away August 31, 1906. They were married in New York City, and were the parents of the following eight children: Pauline; Alfred; Emile; Amelia J., who married Mr. Beley; Alphonse; Jule; Anna, who died April 20, 1872; and Fannie L. Mr. and Mrs. Beley have three children: Ernest G., who married Mabel Ross, lives in Olympia, Washington, and has one son,—Junior; Fred W., attending Northwestern University, Chicago; and Florence.

CORNELIUS B. NOLAN is junior partner in one of the best known legal firms of Montana, that of Walsh & Nolan at Helena. Few attorneys have had better training for general practice. Since coming to Montana in 1886 he has served in the capacity of court reporter, county attorney and attorney general of the state. An eloquent and forceful speaker, possessed of much personal magnetism and a commanding presence, he is a powerful leader. His native Irish wit and facility of speech cause him to be much in demand as a campaign leader.

He was born on the day before Christmas in the year 1855, in County Limerick, Ireland. His father, Bernard Nolan, and his mother, Catherine Hickey Nolan, were both natives of the county in which their son was born. The father passed away in his Irish home in 1886, the widowed mother following him two years later. Of their six sons and two daughters, five immigrated to the United States. Cornelius remained at home until his sixteenth year, attending school only during the winter terms that he might be of assistance on the place during the spring and summer seasons. Subsequently, however, he completed his school education at Dublin and soon after set out for America, reaching here in the autumn of 1873. He remained at and around Owego, Tioga county, New York, for four years. There he attended the academy made famous by such pupils as Thomas Platt, General Tracy and John D. Rockefeller. And much more than book learning did the quick young Irishman acquire during these years of association with the youth of America. After this he moved, in 1877, to Allegheny, Pennsylvania, where he was employed in a leather establishment. In the following year he went to St. Louis where he entered the law office of Robert B. Foster. Here he gained much valuable experience while learning his Blackstone. In 1881 he entered the St. Louis Law School, where he remained three years, after which time he was admitted to practice law in the courts of Missouri. During his years of study he acquired a proficiency in stenography, realizing its value to the young attorney. To perfect himself in this line he spent three years in a wholesale house in Chicago, going from there to Montana that he might become the private secretary to the general manager of the freight and passenger service on the Northern Pacific Railroad. Soon, however, he relinquished this position to become official stenographer and court reporter for the First judicial district of Montana, a vocation much more to his liking. The First district embraced at that time Lewis and Clarke, Jefferson and Beaverhead counties. Reporting for Judge N. W. McConnell and later for Judge Henry N. Blake, the training which he received during this period has proved invaluable to Mr. Nolan in his subsequent career of distinction. It was while filling this position that he was elected, in 1899, prosecuting attorney of Lewis and Clarke county on the Democratic ticket. In 1884 he received the nomination for representative in the legislative assembly, but with the entire ticket went down to defeat. He was a member of the Twelfth general assembly.

In 1896 Mr. Nolan was elected attorney general of Montana, which office he filled with more than usual ability. During his term he not only retained the confidence of his friends, but won the respect and approval of his political opponents. At the expiration of his term he resumed the active practice of his profession, and in the fall of 1906 formed the partnership with Mr. Thomas J. Walsh, above referred to. His large acquaintance has greatly aided his present lucrative practice. He is one of the best known members of the State and County Bar Associations, is a member of the Montana Club, and is a past grand master of the Grand Lodge of Montana Free Masons, a member of Helena Commandery, Knights Templar, and is past potentate of Algeria Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Helena.

In 1894 Mr. Nolan was united in marriage to Miss Harriette Shober, a niece of John H. Shober, one of Montana's early pioneers. They have no family.

OLIVE V. BRASIER, M. D. Actively engaged in the practice of the profession which she loves, and in which she is fast winning a reputation for skill and ability, Olive V. Brasier, M. D., of Butte, is meeting with well-deserved success in her career. A daughter of Robert T. Brasier, she was born, May 14, 1886, in Winnipeg, Manitoba. She comes of English ancestry on the paternal side, her grandfather, Robert Brasier, having been a life-long resident of England.

Born at Hastings, England, in 1849, Robert T. Brasier was there brought up and educated. At the age of twenty years he crossed the Atlantic, and in search for fortune located in Canada. Coming from there to Montana in 1887, he lived first in Helena, but for several years past has been in business in Butte, where he is a well-known contractor. He married Mary Muirhead, who was born in Hamilton, Ontario, in 1851, where her father, William Muirhead, settled on coming from Scotland, the country of his birth, to America. Five children blessed their union, namely: William, born in Toronto, Canada, in 1882, is now manager of a manufacturing concern in Butte; Olive V., the subject of this brief biographical sketch; Walter, a ranchman, born in Helena, Montana, in 1888; Charley, attending the Butte high school, was born in Helena in 1892; and Mary, the oldest child, who married Harry Kitto, of Denver, Colorado, editor of the Denver Post, has two children, Olive and Genevieve.

Having completed her early education in the public schools, Olive V. Braiser entered the medical department of the University of California, and was there graduated with the class of 1906, by thorough study earning the degree of M. D. Returning then to Montana, Dr. Brasier began practice at Elkhorn, remaining there eight months. Coming to Butte in 1908, she has here acquired a good practice, her patronage being large, and bearing evidence of her skill, ability, and popularity as a physician.

The doctor keeps well informed in regard to all the advances made in the medical science, and is a member of various organizations, including the Montana State Medical Society, and the American Medical Association. She also belongs to the Silver Bow Medical Society.

FREDRICK SEUBERT belongs to one of those German families who settled in western Illinois, and who have been so active in the development of that state. Martin Seubert, his father, came to America with his father when he was a child, and settled in Philadelphia. Later his parents moved to Illinois, and they were among the pioneers of that region. Mr. Seubert was a successful farmer near Galena and lived to the age of eighty-six years, dying in 1906, a man respected by the entire community in which he had lived so long. His wife was also a native of Germany, who had immigrated to Illinois when young. It was here that she became acquainted with Mr. Seubert, to whom she was married in 1865. Two sons were born of their union: John and Fredrick. The former still resides in Galena, the birthplace of both children. He is an engineer by profession and is married and the father of one daughter, Bertha. The mother of our subject and of John Seubert died in 1881 at the age of fifty-seven years.

Fredrick Seubert was born on July 24, 1867, in Galena. His education in the public schools of that city was supplemented by instruction in a private German school, and when he had finished his course here, he went to work on the farm, remaining there for several years. This sort of work was not entirely to his liking, so he decided to learn a trade. Going to the city he apprenticed himself to a tinner, and stayed with him until he had completely mastered the theory and the practice of that occupation. In 1887, he decided to go west, as he had heard of the great opportunities there for men of energy and skill, so he made his way to Denver. After a short time there, Mr. Seubert concluded to go still further in the direction of the course of empire, and came to Butte. Here he secured a position with the Kenyon Hardware Company and his connection with them continued for thirteen years. His employers regarded him as almost indispensable to their establishment, and he justified their opinion. However, he made up his mind that if his services were so valuable he would go into business for himself, and get the entire benefit of his business ability and he acted upon this resolution. Getting a start for himself was a slow process but Mr. Seubert had both confidence and patience and was willing to build slowly in order to lay a sure foundation of future competence. He has built up an extensive and a profitable tinning business, and his progress has been steady and satisfying. Mr. Seubert has made several judicious investments in Butte property and has put his financial affairs on a solid basis in other matters than his thriving business concern. He has made the best possible use of his chances and his prosperity has kept pace with the advance of the city.

Mr. Seubert is an independent voter politically, and while public-spirited in all that concerns the interest of the community, he is not one who is interested in public affairs from the politician's point of view. Personally he is a man of sociable disposition, and his cordial manner has not been the least of his assets in the achievement of the success which has rewarded his commercial enterprises. Like the typical Montanian, he is fond of fine horses and he indulges his taste in this line to a considerable extent. Mr. and Mrs. Seubert have no family. She was formerly Miss Mary Lubbo of this city, and was married to Mr. Seubert on November 6, 1901.

WYLLYS A. HEDGES. The Hedges family is of New England origin and Cornelius Hedges, the father of Wyllys, was born in Westfield, Massachusetts, on October 28, 1831. He was married in Southington, Connecticut, in May of the year 1856, his bride being then but twenty years of age. The young couple moved to Iowa to begin making their way in the world, and in Buchanan county of that state, on July 3, 1857, was born Wyllys Hedges, the eldest of their eight children. Seven years later the family came to Montana. The trip from Omaha to Fort Benton was made by boat, and thence to Helena overland. In the Capital city

Wyllys A. Hedges.

Cornelius Hedges entered upon the practice of law and was one of the well-known figures of the Montana bar. He enjoyed the honor of being called the father of Free Masonry in this state and at the time of his death in 1909 was the oldest living grand secretary in the United States. He was seventy-five at the time of his death and he is survived by his wife, Edna L. Hedges, and five children. Mrs. Hedges makes her home in Helena, where her husband is buried. Two of her children also live in that city: Cornelius Hedges, junior, who not only bears his father's name, but holds the office of grand secretary of the grand lodge of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, which his father held before him. Mr. H. B. Palmer, a broker of Helena, married Edna C. Hedges, also of Helena. Henry Hedges was for a number of years a resident of Valley county, Montana, and he still retains his interests there, though he and his wife now live in California. Emma, the other living member of the Hedges family, is now Mrs. John Woodbridge of Boston, Massachusetts.

Wylls Hedges began his training in the schools of Helena. He was of a scholarly turn of mind and he early put his fondness for books to practical use. In 1869 the first city library was formed in Helena and Mr. Hedges, at the age of thirteen, was appointed city librarian at a salary of $40.00 a month. He was the second person to hold this office and was undoubtedly the youngest librarian in Montana, if not in the entire country. Mr. Hedges continued at this post for a year and two months and then he took his earnings and returned to his father's native town to go to school. When he had finished the high school he entered Yale, and upon leaving college, returned to Montana and filed on a tract of land, which is now a part of the town of Great Falls. He was the first to receive a patent in that district and it was there that he began the business of stock-raising, which he has followed ever since. In 1881 he came to the Mussellshell valley and settled where the present town of Hedges stands.

In 1884 on September 3, Mr. Hedges was married in the same Connecticut town where his parents' union had been consummated twenty-eight years before. His bride was Miss Ida S. Beach, a native of Southington, which place had been the girlhood home of Mr. Hedges' mother. None of the four daughters born of this union lived past the period of childhood. Both Mr. Hedges and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church.

Like his father, Mr. Hedges is active in Masonry. It was almost inevitable that the son of a man who was one of the best authorities in this country on Masonic laws and literature, and who was a prolific writer for Masonic journals, should have a leaning toward that honored fraternity. Mr. Hedges is a member of the blue lodge and of the chapter, and has filled various offices in both bodies.

Politically Mr. Hedges is a Republican, and an active one. He was a member of the fourth, sixth, seventh and ninth legislative assemblies. He was speaker of the house in the last-mentioned session. It was during this session that a bill was introduced to create a west side county to be called Paradise. Mr. Hedges vacated the chair and introduced an amendment to change this name to Sanders county. This was passed without a dissenting vote, as all recognized that it was a just tribute to Col. Wilbur F. Sanders. In 1906 President Roosevelt appointed Mr. Hedges receiver of the United States land office at Lewistown, Montana, and four years later he was reappointed by President Taft and is now serving his second term. Mr. Hedges is one of the members of the Judith Club. He says he intends to spend his life in the Treasure State.

All sorts of out-door pleasures find favor with Mr. Hedges and he is especially fond of good horses. Withal he is a man of literary and cultured tastes, in which his wife also shares. Both are great music-lovers and will go far to see and hear a good play.

D. H. Ross is another good Montanian who was born in Canada. His birthplace was Andover, New Brunswick, and the year of his nativity was 1858, the day being January 14. His parents, John and Mary Kearney Ross were both natives of Canada, and both died there, Mr. Ross, in 1900, at the age of seventy-eight, and Mrs. Ross, in 1885, when she was sixty-eight years old.

D. H. Ross attended school in Canada, and after finishing his course in the common branches, spent some time in various occupations until the year of 1884, when he came to Missoula. He entered the employ of the Eddy Hammond Company, which later became the Missoula Mercantile Company, and for six years remained in that establishment where he filled several different positions. In 1890, he and Mr. Henry Hammond organized the D. H. Ross Lumber Company. At the end of three years, Mr. Ross disposed of his interests in that concern and the same year was elected police magistrate, serving from 1894 to 1896. At the expiration of his term of office, he went into the real estate and insurance business with Mr. F. C. Stoddard, the firm name being Stoddard & Ross. In 1903, Mr. Ross was appointed postmaster and still holds that office.

In politics, Mr. Ross is an active Republican, and he is a person who takes the keenest interest in all matters of public interest. From 1886 to 1890 he had charge of the interests of the Missoula Mercantile Company at Corvallis and at Victor, and was school trustee in the former place. He is a most able public official, as well as a most popular one. He brings to the performance of his duties the same energy and efficiency which achieved his success in his various business ventures.

Mr. Ross was married before leaving Canada, in 1883, to Miss Ida Gunter, a Canadian by birth. One child, Anabel, has been born of their union. She is a native Missoulan, born May 18, 1884. In the fraternal orders, Mr. Ross is connected only with the order of the Odd Fellows.

JUDGE SIDNEY SANNER. The roster of distinguished jurists who have brought honor to the bench and bar of Custer county contains many names of deserved eminence, and the place which Sidney Sanner, of Miles City, occupies among these leaders of the legal profession is one of high credit and distinction. He assumed the duties of judge of the district court on January 1, 1909, and on November 5, 1912, was elected to the supreme bench of the state of Montana. As a lawyer, Mr. Sanner took a foremost place among the leading practitioners at the local bar, his gifts as a speaker and his capacity for a close logical reasoning making him a peculiarly forceful and effective advocate. As a judge he has made a record that holds out a stimulus and example to all men who are called upon to bear the high responsibilities of a place upon the bench. Judge Sanner was born in Maryland in 1873, and is a son of James B. and Maria (Beetley) Sanner, natives of Maryland and Virginia, respectively, and the parents of thirteen children. The father was a soldier in the Confederate ranks during the war between the states, and both he and his wife were descended from Revolutionary stock.

Judge Sanner was thrown upon his own resources at a very early age, and until he reached the age of fifteen his education was wholly self-directed. At fifteen years of age he came to Helena and commenced to work his way through the Helena high school, and in 1892 was graduated from that school. In the meantime he had given all his spare time to the study of law, and after his graduation he continued his studies under the able preceptorship of Judge H. C. Smith, and was admitted to the bar in 1893. During the next two years he practiced his profession in Helena, and then spent four years at Big Timber, in 1899 coming to Miles City, where he formed a local partnership with Judge George Milburn. This association was dissolved by mutual consent after a short time, and Mr. Sanner then began to practice alone, building up a large and representative clientele. The reputation that came as a result of the successful termination of a number of important cases conducted by Mr. Sanner brought his name prominently before the public, and it was not long ere he became a candidate for public office on the Democratic ticket. Once in Sweet Grass county and again in Custer county he was the candidate for the office of county attorney, but on each occasion political conditions were such as to nullify his chances for election. From 1903 to 1907 he served as a member of the high school board, and in 1908 was chosen by the citizens of the first ward of Miles City to represent them as a member of the city council. During the same year he was elected to the office of district judge, taking his place on the bench in January, 1909. During his incumbency Judge Sanner has displayed the sound judgment, the well-balanced judicial mind, the intellectual honesty and freedom from bias which are required in a judge—attributes which have enabled him to maintain the best traditions of the judicial office, and which have so acquainted his fellow citizens with the calibre of the man that he was nominated on the Democratic ticket for the vacant seat on the supreme bench of the state, the nomination coming to him entirely unsolicited, and he was elected on the 5th of November, 1912, by a large majority. A Miles City paper has this to say concerning the election of Judge Sanner:

"The elevation of Judge Sanner to the supreme bench will mean the loss to this community of one of the brightest legal minds in this section of the state. Regardless of party lines, local people will be glad to know of the honor which has come to the Miles City man, and they believe he will establish the same record for probity, fairness and efficiency in the supreme court that he has in the district court since assuming his judicial office here."

Judge Sanner has been a conspicuous and influential force, not alone in the legal profession, but as a leading citizen, interested in the important public movements of the day, and it is but natural that he should have the esteem of the entire community and the sincere friendship of a wide circle of acquaintances.

The fraternal relations of Judge Sanner are represented by his connection with Yellowstone Lodge No. 26, A. F. & A. M., and Miles City Lodge No. 537, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, while socially he is a member of the Miles City Club.

Judge Sanner was married in 1901 to Miss Kirtlye of age.

A. J. GIBSON, one of the pioneer residents of Missoula, was born in Ohio. He was born on a farm two miles from Savannah, in Ashland county, Ohio, on April 1, 1862. A few months' schooling in the country school house each winter was the extent of his educational advantages. But he had what the schools cannot give and that is common sense, an unflinching sense of humor and tireless industry. Added to this was an ambition to succeed. From the first it was easy to see what his life work was to be. He was never happier than when working out some mechanical problem. The harder it was to solve the better it suited him.

Between Sam Seymour, a neighbor, and Albert Gibson, as he was called, there sprung up a warm friendship. The fact that Seymour was an old man and Albert a boy did not in any way interfere with the warmth of their regard for each other. To Sam Seymour Albert took his knotty problems and together they worked them out. Albert had what amounted to almost a genius for the use of tools, but the problem that had to be solved was how to obtain the tools. They say that we do not value the possessions that we obtain without effort. If this is so, Mr. Gibson should greatly value what he has acquired, for it has come by the hardest kind of work. As an instance, he secured his first tools by trapping mink, weasels and musk-rats, and selling their pelts to get money with which to buy the tools. That he made good use of them is evidenced by the fact that before he was eighteen the neighbors were invited to the Gibson farm to a barn raising. Every log, every timber, every part of the barn went to the place designed, and fitted accurately and every bit of the work was planned and done by an eighteen-year old boy.

When Mr Gibson was twenty-one years old, his father died. The other boys stayed on the farm and Albert struck out for himself. He went to Butte, Montana, to work for an old-time friend, H. M. Patterson. After five years spent at Butte, he decided to go into business for himself. Looking over the field, he picked Missoula for a winner. In those days it was a village. Today it is a metropolitan city. He and another ambitious young carpenter became partners, under the firm name of Selander & Gibson.

Some time later Bob Mentrum and A. J. Gibson became partners. They say that poets are born and not made. It must be so with architects, for from building from someone else's plans Mr. Gibson soon began preparing his own plans. He took up the study of architecture and before long he was securing the most important contracts. One of his first large jobs was St. Patrick's Hospital. To drive over Missoula is to see on every hand evidence of his skill and ability. He built the high school, the Hawthorne School, the Sacred Heart Academy, the Harnois Theater, all of the University and Montana buildings, and innumerable others.

It is said that no better building, for the money, and no building more complete and up-to-date has ever been built in the West than the court house, built in Missoula from Mr. Gibson's plans, and under his supervision.

When Mr. Gibson first settled in Missoula, he saw the possibilities of the town, and as soon as he was able to do so he began purchasing business lots. When he put up the handsome brick block, the Gibson Block, his fellow townsmen smiled at his folly, but today the Gibson Block is in the heart of the town on Missoula's busiest corner. Besides this Mr. Gibson owns other important revenue producing property.

In 1909 he retired and since that time has devoted his time to a personal investigation of the roads of the United States and Canada. He is an enthusiastic advocate of "good roads," and his wife shares his fondness for "across the continent" trips in their automobile. They were among the first from Missoula to drive their car across the country to New York City.

In 1911 they made a trip through Canada going by the Crows Nest route. In 1912 they toured California, coming home through Nevada, Utah and Montana.

Mr. Gibson was married on January 30, 1889, to Maud Lockley, the daughter of Frederic Lockley, a veteran of the Civil war, and a pioneer newspaper man. He was editor of the Salt Lake Tribune from 1872 to 1879 and was the first editor of the Butte Inter-Mountain.

Geo. H. Stanton

HON. HARRISON N. SYKES. During a residence in Montana of more than thirty years, the record made and maintained by the Hon. Harrison N. Sykes, state senator from Custer county, both as business man and public official, has been one worthy of emulation in every respect and has demonstrated his right beyond all doubt to be classed among the men whose activities have been the cause of the growth and development of the best resources of the Treasure State. He is a native of Van Wert county, Ohio, and was born October 10, 1850, a son of George S. and Hannah (DeCamp) Sykes.

The father of Senator Sykes was born in Niagara county, New York, November 5, 1825, and in young manhood removed to Ohio. In the Empire State he had been engaged in farming, but on taking up his residence in Middlepoint, Van Wert county, engaged in the flour milling business. In 1859 he removed to Newark, Knox county, Missouri, where farming and stock raising enlisted his attention, and he was so engaged until 1910, when he came to Montana to visit his son, at whose home he died on May 1st of that year. Originally a Whig, he later engaged in supporting the principles of the Republican party, and in fraternal matters was a Mason and an Odd Fellow. Mr. Sykes was married in Ohio to Hannah DeCamp, who was a native of that state, and she died when only 51 years of age, having been the mother of four children, three of whom are living, two being Harrison N. and Edwin A, the latter a resident of the state of Missouri.

Harrison N. Sykes secured his educational training in the schools of Middlepoint, Ohio, and Newark, Missouri, and until he attained his majority worked on his father's Missouri homestead. At that time he learned the business of telegraphy, and spent three or four years in the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. Subsequently he returned to farming, and for about seven or eight years was engaged in tilling the soil in Knox county, Missouri. In 1880 he came to Montana, with the idea of looking the country over for a suitable location to engage in business. He spent two or three years in Montana, during a part of which time he was engaged in working for contractors for the United States government, in getting out wood at Fort Shaw, and then returned to Missouri and followed farming up to 1889. On his return to Montana he settled in Custer county, and engaged in the cattle and sheep business near Eklaka, where he is now the owner of two ranches, one being devoted to sheep and the other to cattle. Mr. Sykes has been uniformly successful in his operations, and while conducting his business along strictly legitimate lines has benefited not only his own interests, but those of his community as well. A stanch and active Republican, and a hard worker in the party's ranks, he was first elected state representative, and after serving two terms was, in November, 1910, sent to the Montana State Senate. In his official capacity he has capably conserved the interests of his constituents and faithfully and conscientiously discharged the duties of his office, being known as one of the active members of Montana's distinguished body. Fraternally, he is connected with Sandstone Lodge, A. F. & A. M., at Baker, Montana; Beaver Lodge, I. O. F., Eklaka; Miles City Lodge No. 537, B. P. O. E., and Eklaka Lodge, M. W. A. The Senator is unmarried.

IGNATIUS MATTINGLY. For many years Ignatius Mattingly has been connected with the upbuilding of Butte and he has just reason to be proud of the fact that to his efforts can be traced many a substantial enterprise or advancement contributing greatly to the growth and prosperity of this city. In every sense of the word he is a representative citizen and a business man of marked capacity. Since 1899 he has been engaged in the gentlemen's furnishing business in Butte and his establishment is recognized as complete in every detail.

Ignatius Mattingly was born in McClain county, Kentucky, the date of his birth being the 5th of August, 1861. Both his parents, Edward and Eliza (Buckels) Mattingly, were natives of the fine old Bluegrass commonwealth and the former figured prominently as major of a Kentucky regiment in the war between the states. After the close of the Civil war Major Mattingly devoted his attention to grist milling and mechanical pursuits in Kentucky, and he was summoned to the life eternal in 1899, at the age of seventy-two years. Mrs. Mattingly died in 1867. Of the six children born to Major and Mrs. Mattingly but two are living, in 1912, namely,—Henry T., a prominent railroad man in Texas; and Ignatius, the immediate subject of this review.

To the public schools and Western College of Kentucky Ignatius Mattingly is indebted for his educational training. As a young man he became interested in the mercantile business as a clerk in a store at Livermore, Kentucky. In 1887 he decided to try his fortunes in the Northwest and accordingly came to Montana, locating first in Helena, where he was in the employ of Babcock & Company for one month, at the expiration of which he was transferred to the Butte office of that concern. Mr. Mattingly continued to work for Babcock & Company for a period of twelve years and in 1899, in company with W. A. Smith, he bought out his employers, continuing to conduct the gentlemen's furnishing business at Butte under the firm name of Smith & Mattingly. In 1903 Mr. Smith withdrew from the partnership and since that time Mr. Mattingly has conducted the business individually. He has proved distinctly successful in his particular line of enterprise and takes great pride in catering to the best class of trade in the state.

On the 23d of January, 1895, Ignatius Mattingly was united in marriage to Miss Julia Pelkey, a native of Holyoke, Massachusetts. There have been no children born to this union. Mrs. Mattingly is a woman of most gracious personality and is deeply beloved by all who have come within the sphere of her gentle influence.

While Mr. Mattingly does not take an active part in local politics he gives a stalwart allegiance to the principles and policies for which the Democratic party stands sponsor and contributes in generous measure to all projects forwarded for the good of the city and state at large. In fraternal circles he figures prominently as a member of the Woodmen of the World, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Silver Bow and Butte Country clubs. He is fond of horses and horseback riding and is an expert horseman. He is genial in his associations and is decidedly popular with all classes of people. His citizenship is a valuable adjunct to Butte, where he is recognized as a man of sterling worth and impregnable integrity.

GEO. H. STANTON is a native of Indiana. His parents died before he was twelve years of age. Came to Montana October, 1887, while yet a boy. Was graduated from the law department, Yale University, 1893, and at once began the general practice of law. Continued in general practice of law until 1912 when he became president of Commercial Trust & Savings Bank of Great Falls. Was a member of the house in the fifth legislative assembly. Was elected to the state senate in 1898, serving four years when he quit politics, declining all offers of further political preferment. He was president pro tem of the senate and chairman of the judiciary committee. Mr. Stanton was married February 5, 1910, to Miss Dorothy Potter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Potter of Chicago. A son, Potter Stanton, was born December 15, 1911. Great Falls has been the home of Mr. Stanton from the time he came to Montana.

EDMUND WRIGHT. Ranking high among the substantial business men of Lewistown is Edmund Wright, who deals in real estate and insurance, and negotiates loans, and who is a persistent and consistent believer in the city and its citizens, and can always be counted upon to do his full share towards promoting the material welfare of Montana, which has been his home for a quarter of a century. A son of Edmund Wright, Sr., he was born, December 14, 1869, in Penn Yan, New York, where his earlier years were spent.

Born in England, Edmund Wright, Sr., came to the United States when a lad of eight years, and has since been a resident of New York state. Having learned the trades of a carpenter and cabinet maker when young, he located in Penn Yan, where he has since continued in business. He married Sarah Walton a native of the Empire state, and they became the parents of eight children, two of whom are living in Lewistown, Montana, namely: Edmund, the subject of this sketch; and Frank E., who is here engaged in the banking business.

Brought up in Penn Yan, New York, Edmund Wright attended the public schools as a boy and youth, and being a little hustler he began work at the age of nine years, in a truck garden, earning three dollars a week, money which he conscientiously carried to his parents each pay day. At the age of fifteen years, he went to Elmira, New York, where he worked his way through a business college, selling newspapers, clerking in stores, ushering at theatres, being willing to engage in any remunerative employment. In 1887, foreseeing the undeveloped possibilities of Montana, Mr. Wright made his way to Lewistown, where he has since resided. Until 1890 he was connected with the bank of Fergus county, and the ensuing three years was deputy county clerk and recorder. He was afterwards deputy in the office of the clerk of the district court for another three years, and the following eight years was clerk of the district court. In 1902 Mr. Wright embarked in the real estate, loan and insurance business, and in its management has met with great success, being now one of the largest operators in Montana, his finely equipped offices being located in Lewistown.

Politically Mr. Wright supports the principles of the Republican party. Fraternally he is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and of the Knights of Pythias, and in the lodges of both orders he has filled all the chairs. He likewise belongs to the Judith Club, and to the Lewistown Commercial Club. Having the utmost confidence in the future of Montana, Mr. Wright firmly believes that it offers the greatest of inducements to settlers and for investment, and takes an active interest in any movement tending towards the betterment of Lewistown, being a believer in the "doing of things." He takes much pleasure in the study of history; likes theatricals and music; is interested in all outdoor sports, particularly baseball; and is fond of automobiling, owning two fine motor cars.

Mr. Wright married, in Lewistown, Montana, in May, 1890, Lizzie M. Gudgell, a daughter of Robert G. and Atilla Gudgell, and they are the parents of two children, namely: Frank A., now taking a law course in the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor; and Robert G., a student in the Lewistown high school.

SAMUEL K. WEBSTER. A resident of the state of Montana for more than a quarter of a century, during which time he has been prominently identified with the cattle and sheep industry, Samuel K. Webster, of Newlon, Custer county, comes of an old and prominent New England family. He was born at Unity, Waldo county, Maine, March 13, 1866, and is a son of Charles M. and Ann M. (Kelley) Webster. His grandparents, David and Martha Webster, were both natives of Maine, the former being a prominent Whig and serving as selectman and in numerous township offices, while his business was that of an agriculturist.

Charles M. Webster was born in the town of Freedom, Waldo county, Maine, in 1836, and spent his boyhood days under the parental roof. Although given but few educational advantages, he early in life displayed traits of energy and industry, securing employment in the shipyards of the Maine coast during the summer months, while his winters were spent in clerking in stores at Bath. In 1862 he enlisted in Company A, Fourth Regiment, Maine Volunteer Infantry, with which organization he served three years, participating in all the engagements in which it took part and securing an honorable discharge at the close of hostilities. At the battle of Bull Run his horse fell upon him, inflicting injuries from which he never fully recovered. He was popular and a valued comrade of the Grand Army of the Republic. In political matters he was a staunch and active Republican and served as a member of the township school board for several years. During middle life Mr. Webster engaged in carpenter work and farming, and in 1882 left the east and came to Meagher county, Montana, where he followed carpentering, contracting and building, and erected the Clendenning Hotel and store at Martinsdale. In the summer of 1883 he went to White Sulphur Springs, where he also followed contracting, but eventually returned to his native state, where his last years were spent in contracting and farming, and there his death occurred July 2, 1911. A man of exceeding kindness of heart, he was ever ready to assist those who had not been as fortunate as he, and the extent of his charities probably will never be known, while his high moral character and strict temperance served as an example worthy of emulation by the youth of his locality, and he was esteemed and respected by all who knew him. He married Ann M. Kelley, a native of Unity, Waldo county, Maine, who survives him and makes her home at Redlands, California, and they had three children: Alice, who was the wife of Wellington Knight and died in 1888 at Newburg, Maine; Samuel K.; and Elizabeth, who was the wife of Edward Rand, and died in 1907, in Waldo county, Maine.

Samuel K. Webster secured his education in the public schools of his native state, and until he reached his majority made his home with his parents. In the spring of 1887 he came to Meagher county, Montana, locating on the banks of the Musselshell river, where he first worked on a sheep ranch. Later he engaged in business on his own account, and also acted as superintendent for Ralph Berry, who did a large sheep exporting business. In this connection, Mr. Webster made a trip to Liverpool, England, with a consignment of stock, and was also in charge of the business at different points in Montana, Wisconsin, Illinois and North Dakota. Mr. Webster later became manager for W. E. Harris, in Custer county, where he subsequently formed a partnership with J. L. Wilson, in sheep and cattle raising, under the firm name of Wilson & Webster, but after a period of successful operating the firm dissolved, Mr. Wilson taking the sheep and Mr. Webster the cattle. In 1911 Mr. Webster sold his ranch and cattle and located in Dawson county, where he carries on farming on the United States irrigation lands. This property, located about thirty-five miles from Glendive, is the site of the new Northern Pacific Railroad station, established in the fall of 1912, the building of which so advanced land values in this section. Mr. Webster is a far-seeing business man of exceptional ability. Possessing a gift of recognizing opportunities, the courage to grasp them and the ability to carry his ventures through to a successful conclusion, he has been identified with transactions of an extensive nature, and is known all over this section as one of the leading representatives of the ranching industry. Politically he is a Republican, but has never cared to hold public office, although he has done his duty as a public-spirited citizen by serving three years as a member of the school board in Custer county. Fraternally, he is connected with Star of the West Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of Unity, Maine.

Sincerely yours

Peter De Siere

On December 13, 1896, Mr. Webster was married to Miss Lorna Edna Lovering, who was born in Miles City, Montana, daughter of Frank and Sylvia (Godfrey) Lovering, the former a native of New Hampshire and the latter of Minnesota. Mr. Lovering died in December, 1910, but his widow survives him and makes her home in Dawson county. Four children were born to them: Charles, Lenora, Lorna, Edna and George I. Mr. Lovering came to Montana in 1880, locating in Custer county near the present site of Miles City. Coming up the Missouri river by boat, he was engaged in hunting buffaloes for their hides, but subsequently removed to Dawson county, on the Yellowstone river, where he took up government land and engaged in farming. For two years he was also engaged in fruit culture in the Wenatchee valley, of Washington, but then returned to his homestead, where he spent the remainder of his life. He was a staunch Republican in political matters, served as a member of the school board for many years, and was one of the organizers of the Newland school. Mr. and Mrs. Webster have four children: Charles M., Cecil L., Daniel W. and Alice Edna.

WILLIAM C. RAE. Among the representative and enterprising citizens of Carbon county is the gentleman whose name here appears, occupying as he does a position in the front rank among those noted for success, integrity and fair business dealing, as well as having occupied various positions of public trust during the last six years and displaying executive ability of a high order. Mr. Rae was born at Fort Dodge, Webster county, Iowa, and is a son of John and Margaret (Carroll) Rae, natives of Scotland, the former born January 19, 1842, and the latter ten years later. John Rae came to the United States at the age of twenty years on a sailing vessel, and after landing in New York City, made his way to Ohio and subsequently to Webster county, Iowa. He was employed as a stationary engineer and mining foreman, and moved to Red Lodge, September 22, 1887, here being engaged in developing coal mines for the Rocky Ford Coal Company. In 1911 he retired from active business cares, and at this time is making his home with his children at Gebo, Wyoming. In his native country he was initiated into Masonry, and here became a member of Star of the West Lodge, No. 40, A. F. & A. M. In political matters he is a Democrat. In Iowa he was married to Margaret Carroll, who died in 1902, having been the mother of seven sons and seven daughters, thirteen of these children still surviving, and William C. being the seventh in order of birth.

William C. Rae was educated in the public schools of Red Lodge, Montana, and his first employment was a clerk for Col. L. Whitney, of Carbanido, in whose employ he continued for about six years. At the end of that time he returned to Red Lodge, where he was employed as a clerk, and also spent some time in the same occupation at Butte and Billings. In the latter city he was associated with Col. A. L. Babcock, in the hardware business until 1905, when he became manager for the Bear Creek Mercantile Company, at Bear Creek, and was connected with that concern until March 1, 1906. At that time he took up the duties of county treasurer, to which office he had been elected, and continued to serve therein until 1910, when he was elected county clerk and recorder, being the present incumbent of the office. His long business experience has been of great value to him in managing the county's affairs, and his administration has been such as to win the unqualified approval of the citizens of his community. But higher honors have been accorded him; on November 5, 1912, he was elected state treasurer of Montana. In political matters he is a staunch Democrat and is influential in the councils of his party in Carbon county. Fraternal matters have demanded his interest to some extent, and he is a valued member of Star of the West Lodge, No. 40, A. F. & A. M., and Carbon Chapter, R. A. M., and past exalted ruler of Bear Tooth Lodge, No. 534, B. P. O. E.

On May 7, 1905, Mr. Rae was united in marriage with Miss Eleanor Lennon, who was born at St. Paul, Minnesota, and they have one daughter, Ruth Eleanor. The family home is situated at No. 19 West Third street, Red Lodge, Mr. Rae's official duties making it necessary that he maintain an office in the court house in this city. He and his wife have a wide acquaintance here and are general favorites socially.

MONSEIGNEUR PETER DE SIERE. The Catholic church, which is in many respects one of the most wonderful organizations among men, is in nothing more conspicuous and renowned than in its knowledge of genuine merit and its reward of faithful and valuable services performed by its hierarchy, individually or collectively. One of the striking proofs of this was given on June 17, 1911, when Rev. Peter De Siere of Butte, Montana, was elevated to the rank of Monseigneur, or Domestic Prelate. This action by the church gave the Catholics of the Northwest great gratification, as they had long known Father De Siere's commanding ability and devotion to the church, and were delighted that they had not been overlooked in Rome.

Father De Siere was born in Flanders, Belgium, on April 16, 1843, and is a son of Peter and Mary (Vienne) De Siere, natives of Belgium, and the second of their eight children in the order of birth. He obtained his academic education in good schools in his native land, and was also prepared for the priesthood there, completing his course of training in theology in 1867. He was ordained to the priesthood by Bishop Faict and after serving as professor in Dixmude College for twelve years, served as assistant pastor of the church in Roulers and later pastor in Westende in his native land until 1887. In that year he came to the United States and the state of Montana, locating first at Deer Lodge without a regular charge at the time. For sixteen months he labored arduously and effectively as assistant to Father De Ryckere at Deer Lodge, and was then appointed assistant to Father Van de Van of St. Patrick's church in Butte. Three months later he was made pastor at Anaconda, and in that city he built St. Paul's church and parish house. From his youth he has been progressive and aggressive. Difficulties have never daunted him, and where others have feared to tread he has walked boldly forward, challenging Fate herself into the lists and meeting her on almost equal terms. He was therefore just the man to accomplish what he did in Anaconda, and what he has since done in Butte.

Before he left his native land he built at Westende, on the shore of the North Sea, the first sisters' school in that parish. The bishop of the diocese at the time thought the undertaking was impossible of accomplishment, but the indomitable spirit of the man who afterward crossed the Rockies to administer to the scattered population of a then practically unexplored section of this country was not to be daunted. He started the school with two sisters and seventy-five children. Twenty-five years later it had seven sisters in charge and its pupils numbered two hundred and thirty-five, and in that period its standing in public estimation had grown enormously and become as firmly fixed as Gibraltar.

In 1893 Father De Siere was appointed pastor of St. Patrick's church in Butte. When he took charge of the parish he found a debt of $48,000 on the school building confronting him. He has since cleared the school building of debt, built the Sisters' Home at a cost of $19,000, enlarged the church at an expenditure of $15,000, and erected a priests' home at an outlay of $21,000. The ordinary running expenses have steadily increased also, but he has been able to provide for them without again going heavily into debt for any purpose in connection with the church.

The elevation of this fine scholar, excellent business man and devout representative of holiness to the rank and dignity of domestic prelate was well deserved by him and enthusiastically received by the people of Montana without regard to their religious affiliations, and has been universally recognized as an honor most worthily bestowed. Persons of all nationalities and creeds have found the recipient deserving of their highest esteem and have freely and gladly bestowed it on him. The honor dates back to the eleventh century. The college of cardinals was then created by the pope to look after the temporal administration of the church, and at the same time the order of domestic prelates was founded, its members to be intermediaries between the cardinals and the Holy See.

At first exacting qualifications of a most severe nature were demanded of those to be so highly honored. A five years' course in canon law was necessary and two years' practice in an ecclesiastic court. But as these very exacting conditions barred many men of great capability, especially missionaries in remote districts, from holding office, the requirements were lowered in course of time. But even now, the honor is rarely conferred, and only on those whose learning, worth and work are far above the ordinary. At the present time, before any priest can be raised to the dignity of domestic prelate, the bishop of the diocese must certify, along with other things, that he is a doctor of canon law or Sacred Scripture, that he has done uncommon service for the welfare of the church, and that he will add honor to the office.

In the case of Father De Siere these requirements were easy to meet. His extensive learning, both in reference to the Scriptures and in general, was well known. His services to the church in this part of the world and in his native land were conspicuous, and his high character and admirable manhood would give distinction to any position he might occupy. And these facts were so patent to all who know the monsigneur that the bishop must have had unusual pleasure in certifying to them, as the pope must also have had in receiving the certificate.

JOHN MCPARLAND. A resident of Montana for more than a quarter of a century, John McParland, justice of the peace and prominent rancher of Harlowton holds prestige among the leading citizens of his community, where he is known as a man who has led an industrious and useful life and whose activities have served in no small measure to advance the interests of his adopted state. Like many of the Treasure state's most successful citizens, Mr. McParland is a native of the peaceful country to our north, the Dominion of Canada, where he was born February 29, 1864.

Mr. McParland secured a good education in the common schools of his native vicinity, and as a youth earned his first money working on a dairy farm. While still there he started to learn the trade of jeweler, which he has followed for many years. At the age of twenty-one he left Canada and went to North Dakota, locating in the city of Pembina, where he worked at his trade and also as a farmer until 1887, which year saw his advent in Montana, this state having been his place of residence ever since. Locating first at Fort Benton, he remained in that city and vicinity for about sixteen years, following the jeweler's trade and watch repairing, and on leaving Fort Benton settled in Utica for one year. Since 1904 he has been a resident of Harlowton, where for four years he was engaged in following the jewelry trade and watch repairing, but in 1908 took up a homestead, on which he has since proved up. The success which attended his efforts in a business way has been equalled by that which has rewarded his agricultural operations, his industry, energy and enterprise bringing about excellent results. With an intense faith in the agricultural future of Montana, whose climate and soil conditions he believes to be unexcelled, he has applied progressive methods and modern ideas to his work, and is acknowledged to be one of the leading farmers of his section.

While a resident of Fort Benton, May 7, 1896, Mr. McParland was married to Miss Rosa A. Wood, formerly of New York state, and to this union there has been born one child, a son, John V., who is a student in the public schools of Harlowton. Mr. McParland takes an active interest in political matters, being a staunch adherent of the principles and candidates of the Republican party. Known to be a just man and one of sound judgment and upright character, his fellow citizens have elected him justice of the peace on and off since 1905, and in this capacity he has shown marked ability. Religiously he leans towards the faith of the Methodist church, of which his wife is a member. A rooter of the first water, Mr. McParland heartily enjoys a baseball game, while hunting and fishing find him a skilled devotee, while he is also a lover of fine horses, and devotes a good part of his time to driving and to athletics in general. He also appreciates music, whether instrumental or vocal, and regularly attends the theatre, although he is also fond of home and may be found there almost every evening, engrossed in a book from his library, he being an omnivorous reader. During his long residence in Montana he has formed a wide acquaintance, and he and Mrs. McParland are very popular in their social set.

HARRY J. SKINNER. Foremost among the leading business men of Cascade county, Montana, is Harry J. Skinner, president of the State Bank of Belt, president of the State Bank of Stockett and vice-president of the Commercial Trust & Savings Bank of Great Falls, Montana. He is accounted, and with every good reason, to be one of the most progressive and public-spirited citizens of this section of the state. Mr. Skinner was born April 4, 1866, in the city of Grand Rapids, Michigan, the son of Adolphus L. Skinner, one of the most eminent and influential men of that city. Adolphus Skinner was a native of New York, but in 1840, while still a child, he became a resident of Michigan, then an infant state. There he later entered actively into business, public and political life, as a citizen of Grand Rapids, where he engaged in real estate and insurance business, and as a member of the Democratic party filled various offices, among them that of county clerk, county recorder, alderman, supervisor, and other official stations of not less importance. In fact, he held office in divers capacities twenty-four times, with a record of but four defeats against twenty-four victories. He was a successful man in a business way, and one of the suburbs of Grand Rapids is known as the A. L. Skinner addition, of which he was the original owner, and which he platted. In 1895, when he was sixty-five years old, he passed away in the city with which he had been so long identified. His wife was Lucinda Provin, a native of Michigan, who passed away in 1882. Of the three sons born to them, Harry J. was the second, and Frank, the eldest, died at the age of six years. The other surviving son is Mark Skinner, now cashier of the Commercial Trust & Savings Bank of Great Falls.

Mr. Skinner was reared in Grand Rapids and received a common and high school education in that city. At the age of twenty-one, or in 1887, he came to Great Falls, Montana, where he took a position in the First National Bank, beginning in the work at the extreme lower rung of the ladder, but with a thorough determination to become a master of the banking business. After a year in the first position he assumed, he became manager of the interests of the bank in Tribune, remaining in charge for two years. At the close of that period he severed his connection with the bank and became one of the organizers and the cashier of the Bank of Sand Coulee, with which he continued to be identified in an important capacity until 1891. Following that he was for a time associated with the State Bank of Neihart, first as cashier and then as president, and also was cashier of the First National Bank in that place for a short time. Returning to Great Falls, Mr. Skinner entered into the real estate, insurance and loan business in association with Webster & McNair, the firm style being Webster, McNair & Skinner, and for thirteen years continued to be thus occupied. In the meantime, Mr. Skinner had in 1895 assisted in organizing the State Bank of Belt, which had previously existed as a private institution, called the Bank of Belt. He became president of the re-organized bank and has since continued to fill that responsible position. In July, 1911, he organized the State Bank of Stockett, of which also he officiates as president. The State Bank of Belt is capitalized at $25,000, has a surplus of $5,000 and undivided profits of $6,000, with average deposits of $190,000. Its official personnel, besides Mr. Skinner, are D. A. McLeod, vice-president, and W. C. Blomquist, cashier. The State Bank of Stockett has a capital of $20,000, deposits averaging $150,000 and its present loans aggregate $116,626. In its management Mr. Skinner has as associates L. C. McCoy, vice-president, and H. E. Dawson, cashier. On November 16, 1912, the Commercial Trust & Savings Bank opened its doors for business, its capital stock amounting to $150,000. Of this new concern Mr. Skinner is vice-president. These accomplishments represent twenty-five years of diligent effort and the exercise of good business discernment on the part of Mr. Skinner, who may well have a pride in his record of accomplishment.

Mr. Skinner is a Democrat in his political allegiance and is a prominent factor in both political and public affairs. He is a member of the Belt Commercial Club, and fraternally is affiliated with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks at Great Falls. He seeks diversion from confining business cares by operating a fruit and poultry farm which he owns at Spokane, Washington.

Mr. Skinner was married at Great Falls, Montana, on November 9, 1891, to Miss Estelle E. T. Welch, a daughter of Alonzo Welch, who was a native of Canada. Four children have been born to them: Mark G., born December 12, 1892, at Great Falls; Gertrude, born May 10, 1894, at Neihart, Montana; Olive, born April 29, 1899, at Great Falls, and Ruth, born on February 17, 1904, also at Great Falls, Montana.

ERNEST A. SAVORY. In 1884 Ernest A. Savory, a young Englishman who had just attained the legal age of manhood, came to the United States to avail himself of the opportunities here afforded young men of character, energy and ambition to work out a career. Nearly thirty years have passed since then and today finds him established as one of the most successful stockmen of Teton county, Montana.

Mr. Savory was born October 24, 1863, a son of Henry A. and Anna (Upjohn) Savory, both of whom also were natives of England. The father died in Thornage, Norfolk county, England, in 1909 at the age of seventy-four, but the mother is still living and resides at Thornage. Sixteen children came to their union and of these Ernest A. is sixth in order of birth.

To the age of seventeen our subject was educated in the schools of his native shire, being then apprenticed to learn the miller's trade, and it was upon the close of his four years' apprenticeship that he came to the United States. Locating at Minneapolis, Minnesota, he followed his trade there two years and then in 1887 pushed farther west, settling at Dupuyer, Teton county, Montana. Here he engaged in the raising of live stock and he has now spent twenty-five years in that line of business with large profit. There are six hundred acres in his estate and he raises and grazes large numbers of horses and cattle. His residence is at Dupuyer. His capital with which to begin his independent career consisted of a thorough knowledge of his trade, pluck, energy, a large stock of perseverance, and good business ability, and by their use he has acquired that competence which makes him one of the substantial men of Teton county.

A Democrat in politics, Mr. Savory has long been an active worker in the interests of his party and has served four years as assessor of Teton county, having been first elected to that office in 1907 and re-elected to it in 1911. He has also served three terms as a member of the Dupuyer board of education. Fraternal associations are sustained as a member of Mountain Meadow Camp No. 234, Woodmen of the World, and of Chouteau Lodge No. 44, Free and Accepted Masons. His religious faith finds expression as a communicant of the Episcopal denomination.

In September, 1897, at Dupuyer, Montana, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Savory and Miss Annie Bail, whose birthplace also occurred across the water, she being a daughter of Erin's Isle. Mr. and Mrs. Savory have no children.

GEORGE FRANCIS STANNARD. It is not often that one finds a successful man, with as broad an experience with many phases of life as is revealed in the story of George Francis Stannard, of Kalispell, Montana. It is the idea of many people of today that in order to attain success, a man must turn his mind exclusively to one kind of business and must not diverge a hair's breadth from this line until he has reached his goal. This notion has been borne out in many instances, for this is truly the age of specialization, but on the other hand there are many men, like George Stannard, who have attained prosperity, but have tried their hands at many things, and no one will deny that they have gained much more from life than the other type. To be sure, it takes a great amount of natural ability, and versatility, and a man must be above the average intellectually, in order to succeed in this latter sort of career. Mr. Stannard has lived in the state of Montana for many years, most of the time being spent in the section in which he now lives and he is well and favorably known, not only as a keen business man, but as a man of strength of character and high ideals.

George Francis Stannard was born in a spot dedicated, in the minds of most of us, to romance, this being the Island of Guernsey, one of the Channel Islands. The date of his birth was the eleventh of November, 1860, and his father was James P. Stannard, a native of County Wexford, Ireland. He was born in this county in 1814 and died there in 1900, at the age of eighty-six. The Stannard family had lived on their great estates in this part of Ireland since the time of Charles the Second, by whom the estates were granted to them. James Stannard spent all of his life as an Irish landlord, having the care of a thousand acres of land, with the many tenants, the hundreds of petty worries, that daily perplex the mind of a large landholder. His wife was Elizabeth Power, also a native of Ireland, having been born in Mallow, County Cork, Ireland, in 1826. She died in 1890, at the age of sixty-four. George Francis Stannard was the thirteenth child in a family of fourteen, seven of whom were girls and seven boys. As the seventh and youngest son, there was not much for him to look forward to in the way of inheritance, so from his childhood he was prepared for a life different than his father's.

The early education of the young Irish boy was received in the Kingston school, in County Dublin, and upon completion of his preparatory work he was sent to Dublin University, where he received his B. A. degree with the class of 1881 and continued his studies in the university in civil engineering. With the intention of entering the Indian Engineering Service, he determined to take a course in Cooper's Hill College in Staines, England, but since the age limit has been lowered from twenty-one to nineteen, he only had one trial for entrance which was given by competitive examinations. Being unsuccessful he now turned to the military service, and entered the Kilkenny Fusiliers, receiving a commission as sub-lieutenant, or as we would say, second lieutenant. He remained in the service for three years being attached to the Sixth-fourth Regiment of the British army. Then feeling that the pay was not sufficient to justify his remaining in the service any longer, and that he would be of more use in some other sphere of activity, he resigned from the army. Soon afterwards he received an appointment as civil engineer at the Banff coal mines in Alberta, Canada.

As a consequence the month of June, 1886, found him embarking on a steamer at Liverpool bound for the Dominion of Canada. He arrived in Maple Creek, Alberta, Canada, on the 1st of July, 1886, feeling as though he were in a different world, for not only the vastness and immensity of the country was a contrast to the bits of islands where his days had for the most part been spent, but the crudity and roughness of the life was, in comparison with the culture and refinement of the civilization whence he came, like being taken out of a warm bath and being plunged into an icy one. It takes a strong man, with moral as well as physical courage to endure such a test, and many a young Englishman in a similar position has given up the fight and returned to the mother country. Not so with Mr. Stannard. To his great disappointment he learned that the position which he had come to fill would not be open until January of the following year, and consequently there were six months that must be disposed of somehow. He first visited Colonel McIllree, assistant commissioner of the North Western Mounted Police. While staying here he met Joe Conrad, brother of W. J. Conrad and J. Howard Conrad. These brothers owned ten thousand head of Texas cattle on the range near Cypress Hills in Alberta, and they invited Mr. Stannard to go on the round-up with them. Eagerly accepting this invitation to see one of the characteristic sights of the country, Mr. Stannard became so filled with the spirit of cowboy life, that he offered his services as cow puncher, and was accepted. He received to his great delight, a salary of forty dollars a month and remained a cowboy for two years, thoroughly enjoying the free, healthy out-of-doors existence, in the days when the life on the range was somewhat like the popular novels of life in the cattle country depict it. After loading steers on the Missouri river at Fort Poplar, which were destined for the markets at Chicago, he gave up the range and came over into the states expecting to get a position with T. D. Baker & Company at Fort Benton.

It was in the winter, however, and there was no work to be had, so he went on to Helena, with letters of introduction to Colonel Broadwater, Judge Hunt, C. S. Ashley, Judge Carpenter and others. He remained in Helena during 1887-88, and during this time he met T. J. Demars, of Frenchtown, near Missoula. Mr. Demars took a fancy to the young Irishman, on account of the fact that he spoke French fluently, having resided in Brittany from 1861 to 1870. He insisted therefore that Mr. Stannard come to Flathead and take the position as bookkeeper in the general merchandise store, which was located at the head of navigation on the Flathead river, and was the first large store in the Flathead valley. In this position, therefore, Mr. Stannard remained until the death of Mr. Demars, which occurred in 1889. At this time the Missoula Mercantile Company purchased the store, and Mr. Stannard turned to another line of business, this being the real estate business.

The first platting in Flathead valley had been done by Mr. Stannard, and he had acquired an interest in a vast area through Flathead valley, all of which he had platted himself. He named the townsite, Demarsville, and in a short time quite a small town had grown up. In 1891 the engineers of the Great Northern Railroad surveyed lines for the transcontinental road, which was then being built, through the valley, and laid out the townsite of Kalispell three miles to the north of the site of Demarsville. Since Kalispell was thus made the railroad town it was natural that the population of Demarsville should transfer itself to the former town, and hither also came Mr. Stannard. He has since remained in Kalispell and the town has no more loyal citizen. He continued the real estate business which he had begun as a resident of the Flathead valley, and added the insurance business. In 1893 he became associated with W. H. Griffin, in the real estate business, the firm name being Griffin & Stannard and is now known as Griffin, Stannard & Johnson. This firm which is the oldest real estate firm in the valley, does a large amount of business, and Mr. Stannard personally owns great tracts of land in the county as well as valuable realty holdings in the city.

As an athlete Mr. Stannard has as wide a reputation as he has as a successful business man. He was the honored recipient of a certificate from the Royal Humane Society of England for saving lives from drowning, and as coxswain of the Kingston Harbor Boat Club, he was the winner of every big rowing race held in England, Ireland and Scotland, during his membership in the above club. His rooms are full of cups, medals and prizes won in various kinds of athletic contests, and among these is the Henley medal.

The prominent part which Mr. Stannard takes in the business world of Kalispell may be seen by the positions which he has held in that important center of the city's commercial life, the chamber of commerce. From 1902 until 1905 he was secretary of the chamber of commerce, and he is now the president of the above body. He has also been a valued member of the board of directors of the Bank of Commerce for four years. In his fraternal relations Mr. Stannard is a firm believer in the principles of Masonry and is a member of the chapter and of the blue lodge, also being a Knight Templar. He also belongs to the Elks and is past exalted ruler of that body. Of the more strictly social clubs he holds membership in the Kalispell Club. In religious affairs Mr. Stannard is a communicant of the ancient faith of England, and of the Episcopal church of America.

Mr. Stannard was married in Kalispell on the 20th of July, 1910, to Miss Jeanette Swaney, a daughter of Hugh Swaney, the public administrator of Flathead county, although he is an old resident of Missoula county, and has spent the greater share of his life there. Mrs. Stannard is a native of Pennsylvania.

Such is the life of one of Montana's successful men. When he came to this section of the country, he had about five hundred dollars in his pocket and unlimited courage and determination. He succeeded in whatever he undertook, in spite of numerous disappointments, and now he holds a high place in the community and is one of the men who is looked upon to decide questions affecting the welfare of the people of Kalispell, for he has proven to them over and over again that he is entirely worthy of their confidence.

WILLIAM H. REID. During the nearly twenty-five years of his residence in Missoula, William H. Reid has been actively connected with the industrial and mercantile life of the city in a leading way. His record is therefore well known to all classes of the people of the community, and the high regard and genuine esteem they have for him is based on demonstrated worth and usefulness, which has been made manifest in both private and public life, in business, social and official channels, and in all the lines of activity appertaining to and finding expression in good citizenship.

Mr. Reid is not a native of Montana or of this country. But he is as true and loyal an American as he could possibly be if he were. He was born in the province of New Brunswick, Canada, on July 12, 1855, and his family was not long resident in that country either, for his parents, John and Elizabeth (Henry) Reid, were natives of Ireland. The father was born and reared in Londonderry, in the Emerald Isle, and came to New Brunswick when he was a young man. He made that country his home until his death in 1897.

William H. Reid grew to manhood in his native province and obtained his education in its schools. He also learned his trade of tinsmith there and for a number of years worked at it in that country. In 1883 he came to the United States and located in Minneapolis, Minnesota, where he remained four years. Then, in 1887, he sought a home in the farther west, moving to Montana and taking up his residence in Missoula. Here he entered the employ of the Missoula Mercantile Company, and for twenty-three years had charge of all the manufacturing done in its tin and sheet iron department. The business was extensive and his position was one of great responsibility, but he met its requirements in a way that gave entire satisfaction to the company and won the approval and commendation of its patrons.

In 1910, determining to go into business for himself, Mr. Reid bought the store and shops he now owns and conducts, and since then he has largely increased their output and popularity. Although the business is an old one, established early in the eighties, and notwithstanding it was extensive and well managed under its former proprietor, Mr. Reid has made many improvements in its equipment and facilities, extended its trade and raised it in rank among the industrial and commercial institutions of the city until now it is one of the most prominent among them.

The public interests of the city and county have long engaged Mr. Reid's attention and the promotion of their welfare has been an object of special solicitude to him. He has aided in every way open to him in augmenting their industrial, mercantile and commercial importance, and done everything he could to add to the comfort, convenience and prosperity of their residents and advance the general weal along all lines of wholesome growth and development, moral, mental, material and social. He is a Democrat in politics, and as such was elected mayor of the city in April, 1911. But he was legislated out of office when the commission form of government was adopted on June 1 of the same year.

On January 14, 1880, Mr. Reid was joined in wedlock with Miss Eliza Mayer, the nuptials being solemnized in New Brunswick, Canada, where both of the contracting parties were then living. Mrs. Reid is, however, a native of England. Two children have blessed their union and brightened and sanctified their domestic shrine: their daughter, Harriet, who is now the wife of E. B. Hord of Superior, Montana; and their son, William G., who is associated with his father in business. The father is a member of the order of Knights of Pythias.

HARRY C. KEITH. Success in any of the pursuits of life usually challenges the admiration of the world. It matters not whether in the profession of law, medicine or literature, or in the theological domain, in the military or civil life, or mercantile pursuits, it is the one distinguishing and distinctive characteristic of all business transactions. In the commercial world alone Harry C. Keith, in his sphere of labor and activity, has distinguished himself as an active, energetic business man, and has demonstrated the fact that to a man of merit belongs the full measure of success and worldly prosperity. Mr. Keith, who is president of the First National Bank of Kalispell, and vice-president and manager of the Kalispell Mercantile Company, is one of the best known figures in business circles of Montana. He was born in the province of New Brunswick, January 9, 1863, and is a son of Lewis and Rebecca (Blakney) Keith. He was reared on his father's farm, gaining the benefit of a country school education, until he was sixteen years old, when he took a three-months business course at a commercial college at St. John, New Brunswick. He then commenced clerking in J. S. Trites & Company's general store at Sussex, remained there eighteen months, then attended commercial college for three months, and subsequently took a clerkship in a store at Upper Corners, Sussex, New Brunswick, the firm being W. J. Mills & Company, a branch store of George H. White & Company. After a time this was discontinued and Mr. Keith returned to Lower Sussex to clerk in their store, where he continued until the spring of 1887, when he came to Missoula, Montana, arriving there in April. From there he soon went to Stevensville, to take charge of the mercantile interests of the Missoula Mercantile Company at that point. He was later sent to open a branch store at Victor and was there for eighteen months, when, returning to Missoula, he became the treasurer of the company. In 1890 the Missoula Mercantile Company purchased the large business establishment of T. J. Demers at Demersville, on the Flathead river, and Mr. Keith was placed in charge. At that time a historian wrote: "The unparalleled success of the Missoula Mercantile Company (their business for the last year amounting to nearly $2,000,000) illustrates what capital and push can accomplish. The firm is a close corporation, with headquarters at Missoula, and branch establishments placed in the best agricultural section of western Montana. Their extraordinary facilities have had much to do in assisting and increasing their exceedingly large business. In less than three years the Demersville store has built up a larger and more extensive trade than any other in all Montana. Under the management of Mr. H. C. Keith this branch institution promises to outgrow the parent house ere a decade passes away. Mr. Keith is a young gentleman well and thoroughly drilled in business, of recognized business sagacity and probity and large capabilities. He controls the entire business of the various Flathead concerns owned by the firm of which he is assistant treasurer." This store was moved to Kalispell in 1893, the business here being at first confined to hardware and implements, and one clerk being employed. In 1898 was erected a grain elevator with a capacity of 40,000 bushels, run by a gasoline engine of twelve horse-power. Groceries were added in March of that year, and fifteen clerks were hired, and the business has so increased that the working force now amounts to a small army of men. On February 20, 1911, the name of the firm was changed to the Kalispell Mercantile Company, and the business incorporated, Mr. Keith becoming vice-president and general manager, while C. H. McLeod is president. The trade of the firm extends along the line of the Great Northern from Bonner's Ferry on the west to Havre on the east, a distance of 370 miles, north to the international boundary, and northwest to Tobacco Plains, ninety miles. Extensive shipments are also made to Butte. The business is by far the largest in western Montana, if not in the entire state.

Mr. Keith is a Republican in politics, and a Baptist in his religious belief. He belongs to Kalispell Lodge No. 42, A. F. & A. M., and was made a Knight of Pythias in Laurel Lodge No. 11, at Missoula, in 1889. Purchasing control of the First National Bank of Kalispell, in December, 1907, he was chosen for its vice-president, and in August, 1908, he became president of this institution, a position he has retained to the present time. Mr. Keith's career has been one of remarkable activity and remarkable success. Every venture with which his name has been connected has been brought to a satisfactory conclusion, and by his example he has materially advanced the growth and development of Montana's commercial interests. A man whose business interests demand constant application, he has still found time to devote to movements that promise to be of benefit to his community or its people, and as a citizen who stands for education and morality he has the entire esteem of his fellow townsmen.

In August, 1894, Mr. Keith was married to Miss Mary Hunt, an adopted daughter of Daniel Hunt, of Avoca, Iowa, she being a native of Des Moines, Iowa. Of their children, nine survive, namely: Harry, Robert, Helen, Francis, Louise, Irma, Hattie, John and a baby daughter.

LOUIS K. POOL. The Pool family were pioneers of Montana, and the name has been prominent in political life, business and professional affairs for forty years. Louis K. Pool is a civil engineer with a large and growing practice at Polson and vicinity. He was born in Radersburg, this state, March 20, 1887.

His father is Hon. Gustavus E. Pool, a well-known Montana citizen, now residing at Townsend. A native of Missouri, he came to Montana in the early seventies, first settling in Jefferson county, later served eight years as sheriff of Broadwater county, represented that district in the first and second assemblies of the state legislature, and for many years has been one of the influential Democrats of Montana. At the present time he is justice of peace in Townsend, where he is proprietor of the Townsend Drug Company. He married Eldora Morgan, who represents another prominent pioneer name. She was born in Illinois but came to Montana when four years old. Her father, Walter R. Morgan, immigrated to the Northwest in the early sixties, coming up the Missouri river to Fort Benton and settled at Diamond. For a number of years he was engaged in mining, which was the chief industry of that period, and later homesteaded at the foot of Confederate Gulch.

Louis K. Pool, who was the second in a family of five daughters and three sons, received his early education in the Broadwater county schools and then took his technical course at the State College in Bozeman, where he was graduated with the degree of civil engineer in 1910. In June of the same year he located at Polson, succeeding to the practice of A. D. Maynard, and has since built up a large practice from official and private sources. He is the city engineer of Polson, and is also owner of a homestead of one hundred and twenty acres, four miles from Polson. Politically he is a Democrat, but takes no active part in party affairs. His church preference is the Presbyterian. On June 4, 1912, he married Miss Gretchen Fiske, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Fiske, Helena, Montana.

CHARLES GIES. Many of the more enterprising and prosperous citizens of our great country are of foreign birth and breeding, noteworthy among the number being Charles Gies, of Great Falls, Montana, whose birth occurred at Hesse Cassel, Germany, November 10, 1868. His grandfather, Johannes Gies, Sr., was born in 1797, and spent his entire life of eighty-one years in Germany, being well known in military circles.

Johannes Gies, Jr., the father of Charles Gies, was born, lived, and died in the Fatherland, his death occurring in 1903, at the age of seventy-nine years. He, too, was widely known in the army circles of Neustadt, having a fine military record as a member of a troop of Hussars. He married Katherine Rickel, who was born in Germany, and there died, in 1896, aged sixty-two years. Ten children were born of their union, two daughters and eight sons, Charles, the subject of this sketch, being the sixth child in order of birth.

Having completed his studies in the public schools of his native land, Charles Gies was employed in a bakery until sixteen years old. Coming then to America with an uncle, he followed the baker's trade in St. Paul, Minnesota, until 1887. Foreseeing the grand opportunities offered a young man of ambition in the far west, he then made his way to Montana, which had not at that time donned the garb of statehood, and for a year was engaged in the restaurant business at Maiden. Disposing of his interests there in July, 1888, Mr. Gies was engaged in the bakery business at Great Falls, Montana, the ensuing four years. Selling out then at an advantage, he embarked in the manufacture of soft drinks at Great Falls, being one of the first to erect a factory for that purpose in that part of Cascade county. In 1896 Mr. Gies made another change of occupation. Selling his factory, he formed a partnership with Mr. Frank Glab, with whom he was associated in the wholesale liquor business until 1900. The partnership being then dissolved, Mr. Gies has since continued in the same business alone, being now one of the leading wholesale liquor merchants of the city.

On September 2, 1896, at Great Falls, Montana, Mr. Gies was united in marriage with Mary Miller, a daughter of Matthias and Katherine (Bauer) Miller. Mr. and Mrs. Gies are the parents of five children, namely, Arthur, born June 16, 1898; Olive, November 18, 1899; Katherine, born July 16, 1905; Noel, born December 9, 1908, and Rosemary, born November 21, 1911. In his political affiliations, Mr. Gies is a steadfast Democrat. Fraternally he belongs to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; and religiously he is a member of the Roman Catholic church.

WAKEMAN SUTTON. Starting life for himself as a poor young man, with no capital except his strong arm, his clear and well trained brain, his strong desire for success and his unwavering determination to win it, Wakeman Sutton, one of the promising mining men of Butte, has reached a position in his industry that is highly creditable to him, and is all the more commendable because it has been won over difficulties and in spite of disasters. Adversity has attended him at times, but has not been able to quell his spirit. Neither has success unduly elated him or made him careless of details in his business. He has literally been tried by both extremes of fortune and has never been seriously disturbed by either.

Mr. Sutton was born in the city of Bloomington, McLean county, Illinois, on August 30, 1857, and is a son of Benjamin and Mary (Barnard) Sutton, the former born in the state of New York in 1824, and the latter in North Carolina in 1827. The mother died in June, 1899, and the father in August, 1900. Both passed away at Santa Barbara, California, where they located in the year 1872. The father was a physician, and was seventy-six years of age when he died. He and his wife were the parents of five children, of whom their son Wakeman was the second in numerical order.

He began his education in the public schools of Bloomington, Illinois, and completed it at a high school and college in Santa Barbara, California, leaving school at the age of eighteen. Becoming at once the master of his own movements and controller of his affairs, he entered the employ of Wells Fargo Express Company and remained in their employ until the fall of 1876, when he became bookkeeper for the wholesale commission house of Rouse & Laws, San Francisco. In 1879 he removed to Arizona, where he was engaged in mining and mercantile pursuits for about eight years, during a portion of the time being the manager of the large mercantile establishment of the Roger Brothers, their stores being situated in Benson, Fairbanks and Bisbee. He came to Montana in 1887, first as a traveling salesman for the firm of Castle Brothers of San Francisco, extensive importers of teas, coffees and spices, and dealers in high class groceries of every kind. He traveled through all parts of Montana for this firm until 1894, then decided to take up his residence permanently in Butte and devote himself wholly to mining operations.

Watman Fulton

He began mining in 1895 and has been continuously engaged in it ever since, being connected, in the course of his activity in the industry in this part of the country, with the Nora mine, now an Amalgamated Copper Company property, the Silver King mine and the Modoc mine, as well as with other properties.

He is now president of the Silver King Leasing Company, which is working the Silver King mine, the shaft of which is located at 212 West Quartz street, right in the heart of the city, and in the rear of Senator Clark's residence and the new county courthouse. At present, with a depth of only three hundred feet, it yields about fifty tons of ore per day.

On September 6, 1881, Mr. Sutton was married in Tucson, Arizona, to Miss Lillie Sargent, a native of New York state and the daughter of Charles and Jane Sargent. Three children have been born into the Sutton household, and two of them are living. These are: Addie, now the wife of Dr. J. S. McKinley, of Butte; and Dorothy, who is still living with her parents. The one son born in the family, William, died in Butte, in December, 1901. The family residence is at No. 205 West Quartz street, near the Silver King mine.

FRED L. MELCHER, secretary and treasurer of the Western Iron Works at Butte, Montana, is a native of Brunswick, Maine, born there on April 27, 1858. He is a scion of families long resident in that state and prominent in its history for generations. His father, Osborn A. Melcher, was born in the same house where occurred the birth of the son, as was also the grandfather, it having been the family residence for years and handed down from one generation to another as its representatives came and went.

Osborn A. Melcher was a farmer, as his progenitors for successive stages had been, and he passed his entire life on the family homestead on which he was ushered into being on February 7, 1825, and where he died on June 18, 1899. His wife, whose maiden name was Margery Y. Loring, also passed all her days in Maine. She was born in Yarmouth, on May 23, 1823, and died on May 5, 1904.

Fred L. Melcher was educated in one of the little red schoolhouses in the neighborhood of his home which were prevalent in his boyhood and have not yet altogether disappeared from that part of the country and still abound in many other sections. He lived with his parents on the home farm until he reached the age of eighteen, and then went to Newfields, New Hampshire, and learned the trade of a machinist, at which he worked there for twelve years.

On April 23, 1888, he arrived in Anaconda, Montana, to take a position as master mechanic in the employ of the late Marcus Daly. After two years of service in that capacity he moved to Butte and became master mechanic for the Butte & Boston Mining Company, with which he remained six months. At the end of that period he transferred his services to the Western Iron Works as superintendent. This old and prosperous manufacturing institution was founded in 1890 by H. F. Brown and J. E. Gaylor, who incorporated it, and was conducted by them until Mr. Melcher and W. G. Bawden bought them out. They retained the old name of the establishment, which it still bears. The company manufactures general mining and smelting machinery and does an extensive business. Its name stands high in the industrial world, and gives all its products a full guarantee of excellence in every particular.

Since coming to Butte Mr. Melcher has been a very busy man, energetic and capable in pushing his business, and working hard himself. Aside from personal matters he has taken an earnest interest and an active part in the public affairs of the community. He served as alderman from the Seventh ward of the city in 1897, 1898 and 1899, and has been on the school board since 1904, being made its chairman in 1909. He is a Republican in politics, zealously loyal to his party and energetic and effective in its service at all times. In the fraternal life of the community, too, he has been deeply and serviceably interested. He was made a Master Mason in Butte Lodge, No. 22, A. F. & A. M., and is a member of Deer Lodge, Chapter No. 3, R. A. M., Zabud Council, No. 2, R. & S. M., and Montana Commandery, No. 3, Knights Templar. He is also a member of Butte Consistory, No. 1 attaining the thirty-second degree in Scottish Rite Masonry, and on June 15, 1910, he was honored by selection to the thirty-third degree. He is a Noble of the Mystic Shrine affiliating with Bagdad Temple at Butte. He is also a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

On September 23, 1886, while living in New Hampshire, Mr. Melcher was united in marriage with Miss Etta S. Swett, a native of that state. Mrs. Melcher holds the official position of vice-president of the Western Iron Works. She sympathizes with her husband in all his undertakings and shares in his devotion to the public welfare of the city of their home. Mr. Melcher is accounted one of the best and most useful citizens of Butte, and is well worthy of the high estimate placed upon his merit.

JOSEPH LEPKE. German enterprise and influence have entered strongly into every branch of industrial activity and into every avenue of commercialism in our country. In the professions no nationality is more largely represented, and what a potent influence Germans have exerted upon the Americans through the art of music is universally recognized. Joseph Lepke, a prominent business man of Anaconda, Montana, where he is established as a wholesale cigar manufacturer, is by birth and generations of ancestral inheritance a German and by his own success has added to the achievements of his countrymen in the United States. Born in Germany on February 12, 1867, five years of his life were spent in the Fatherland before he accompanied his parents, August and Johanna (Lourenz) Lepke, both natives of Germany, to the United States in 1872. Settling in Wisconsin, the parents there reared a family of twelve children, of whom Joseph is the eldest, and they have continued residents of that state to the present time. The father is a contractor and is still actively engaged in his line of business.

The grammar school education which Joseph Lepke acquired in the public schools of Wisconsin was later supplemented by a course in a business college at Helena, Montana. He began early to earn money and to realize its value, thus learning to rely on his own resources. Errand boy was his first position and he began to fill it at the age of eight, one of his first employers being ex-Congressman Price of Wisconsin, who on one occasion gave the lad a dollar, his first one, and this he gave to his mother. When about ten years old he entered a cigar factory to learn the trade, continuing his school studies in the meantime, however, and from that time to the present his whole activity has been in connection with the cigar and tobacco business.

In 1888 Mr. Lepke came to Montana, and spent one year at Helena and two years at Livingston in the cigar business before he came to Anaconda in 1891. For five years, or until 1896, he worked on a salary there; then he established his present business. He manufactures a general line of cigars for wholesale trade and has built up a very profitable business. Mr. Lepke has traveled all over the United States and has also visited parts of British Columbia, but remains loyal to Montana, for he considers it the garden spot of the world and predicts a great future for this commonwealth.

In February, 1896, Mr. Lepke was married at Anaconda, Montana, to Mary Bloing, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Bloing, of Hurontown, Michigan. Two sons and a daughter have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Lepke. Joseph E. Lepke, the eldest son, is now a student in the Anaconda high school, and Leora T. and George M. are pupils in the grades.

In religious faith Mr. and Mrs. Lepke are Catholics and the latter takes an active interest in church work. Mr. Lepke sustains fraternal membership in the Order of Eagles, the Woodmen of the World, the Sons of Hermann, and the Improved Order of Red Men, and has filled all the offices in his local lodge of Red Men and also in the Order of Eagles, having been president of the latter order four years. With a stanch devotion to the Democratic party in politics, Mr. Lepke is a zealous worker in its behalf and has given official service as alderman in Anaconda. While he is essentially a business man, yet he has a large capacity for the enjoyment of social life and sports. He and his rod have visited many of the streams and lakes of Montana and he is also interested in athletics and is at the present time an officer in the Washoe Athletic Club. As is characteristic of the German, he is highly appreciative of music and was at one time a member of the Anaconda Band. Anaconda numbers him among those of its citizens and business men who are contributors to the prestige of Montana.

EDWARD L. FLAHERTY. The father of Edward Flaherty, Robert Flaherty, was born in Cork, Ireland, in 1828, and although he came to America in his twentieth year he never ceased to be proud of his Irish blood. For five years after crossing the ocean he lived in New York City, where he plied his trade as wood carver and turner. In 1833 he was offered a good position in the line of his trade in Rome, New York. He at once accepted and there he worked steadily for fifty-four years, always in the same building. For much of this period he was manager of his department. Three times the business changed hands, but always Mr. Flaherty remained. He was much too valuable a man to lose and his employers seemed to realize this. The last owner of the factory was Mr. Arthur Soper, who later became the president of the Iron Mountain Railway System. During the half century of his residence in Rome, Mr. Flaherty acquired some valuable property in the city, most of which was in the form of improved rental property. He lived until August 15, 1905, passing away in the home where he had spent the greater part of his life. His wife had gone before, ten weeks to the day, and this may have shortened the honest and busy life of her husband.

Mrs. Flaherty was Katherine Steppe, a native of Frankfort, Germany. From this unusual union of races four children were born: Elizabeth, their first born, is now the wife of E. L. Gately and still resides in Rome, New York; Edward, the subject of the sketch is the only other member of the family now living; William, the oldest son, lived until his forty-second year but now lies buried in the Black Hills of Dakota; while Albert, the third in age, died suddenly at Niehart, Montana, in 1901.

Edward attended both the elementary and secondary schools of Rome, one of his teachers being Mr. Root who served as United States senator from New York, and was formerly secretary of state in President Taft's cabinet. Before the end of his high school course, however, Edward Flaherty was forced to leave school in order that he might learn a trade by which he could become self-supporting. The barber's trade appealed to the boy as one that would be easily mastered, and at this avocation he earned his living in Rome for the next four years. The indoor life and confinement of his calling began to tell upon his physical strength and his physicians ordered a complete change of climate. In 1875 he went to Denver, Colorado, where he worked in a shop until January, 1876. Like hundreds of others he was then overcome by the prevailing epidemic—"gold fever." He was one of the number who rushed from Colorado to Black Hills in a vain attempt to locate the precious metal. His trade in that region stood him well, as he was able to earn, while not prospecting, sufficient for his actual wants. In April, 1881, he had about decided to turn his face again eastward when news reached him of the excitement in New Mexico where, it was reported, there was gold enough for all. This second venture proved no more remunerative than the first, and, after making an honest "try" of it for five months, he left the Black Range for the little city of Santa Fe, where he opened a prosperous barber shop. Here, too, he formed a partnership with John W. Oligan and opened an establishment for undertaking and embalming. For eight years this business paid large dividends, but Mr. Flaherty had heard much of the attractions of Helena and felt that to Helena he must go. Accordingly, he sold out his interests to his partner and reached Montana on May 18, 1888. At Helena not an unoccupied store building was to be had, but Mr. Flaherty, his Irish optimism nothing daunted, purchased the undertaking parlors of A. B. Taylor which was the foundation of his present business, the best equipped and most modern of its kind in the city. He was fortunate in reaching Helena at the psychological moment for business development and this, added to his natural perspicacity, has made of him a wealthy man. From 1891 until 1898 he served as alderman for the city, being elected county coroner in 1909. Mr. Flaherty now owns large fruit orchards near Kalispell, one orchard alone containing twelve hundred apple trees. He is interested too, in the Penwell sheep ranches and several pieces of mining property in and about Montana.

On the thirtieth day of October, 1878, Mr. Flaherty was married to Miss Ida Runkle of Cohoes, New York. They became the parents of two daughters: Estella is the wife of Mr. R. W. Church, the general manager of the Independent, one of the daily papers of Helena; Miss Mae makes her home with her parents.

Mr. Flaherty is most popular in fraternal circles. He is past chancellor of the lodge of the Knights of Pythias, past noble grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Queen City Lodge, and a member of the Woodmen of the World. In the Masonic order he is very active, being a thirty-second degree Mason and a Shriner, as well as past eminent commander of the Knight Templars. The entire family are members of the Episcopal church of Helena of which Mr. Flaherty is one of the vestrymen.

JAMES WALKER was born near Belfast, in County Antrim, Ireland, his natal day being the twenty-fourth of February, and the year of his birth, the one most important in the memory of American citizens, 1861.

The father, John Walker, himself a native of the same county, spent most of his life near the town of Moira, which is only about twelve miles from Belfast. There, until his sixty-first year, he conducted a mercantile establishment, being also interested in farming several extensive tracts of land. He was a political leader in his community, a Liberalist, working for the Irish land-rights and home rule. When in his sixty-second year he was induced to come to America that he might spend his remaining days with his sons, James and John, who were then well known merchants of Helena, Montana. After only one year's residence in the western city he was injured in a runaway between Helena and Unionville and lived but a month, his death being preferable to a crippled and enfeebled life.

John Walker had married, during his younger days, Mrs. Elizabeth Swan, the widow of William Swan of Belfast. She passed away in their Irish home in 1867, leaving him three children—of whom Grace, the oldest, is now living in the north of Ireland, herself the widow of Theodore Sinton. John, the younger brother, is a member of the firm of Lindsay Walker Company, wholesale fruit and produce merchants of Billings, Montana.

James, the older of the two sons, received his schooling in Lurgan, Ireland. There, after finishing the elementary course, he did some work in the secondary scientific schools and then apprenticed himself to a grocer in Belfast, with whom he remained, in one capacity or another, for five years. At the age of twenty he set out for New York City and, with his savings, established himself in the wholesale commission business, his potatoes and many of the other vegetables being supplied by his father from the home farms near Moira. So profitable was this venture that he shortly returned for a brief visit to the little island that was still home to him. On his return to the United States he settled in North Dakota, being one of the first white men to locate in Cooperstown, Griggs county. Fargo was at this time (1882) a mere village, the streets knee-deep in mud—if the season was sufficiently wet to produce a crop. In Dakota, he labored for six years, leaving the state much poorer than when he entered it. Year after year his crops (for this time he had tried farming) were killed by the frosts or the droughts. It was, then, in the autumn of 1888 when he first came to Montana, securing employment for a short time in the grocery of John T. Murphy. The proverbial difficulty in "keeping a good Irishman down" applied to this case. Soon he had established, in his own name, a small store in the Woods block. Shortly after he was joined by his brother, John, who purchased the stock Gander & Fuller, groceries. For ten years they remained in one location, when the brother withdrew from the partnership and James Walker built the commodious store building and attractive residence on the corner of Davis and Broadway.

Mr. Walker's mercantile efforts have brought a large reward, but thus far his mining ventures have not proved so satisfying. He lost in one investment in Jefferson county, a fortune of over twenty thousand dollars; but this did not squelch his native enthusiasm and optimism. He now has city property in both Idaho and Montana, in the future of which he has the greatest faith. He owns some real estate of value in Helena, and much good ranch land, well stocked with horses and cattle. In addition to this, he has recently assumed the state agency for the Jackson Automobile Company of Jackson, Michigan. He was married in Helena to Miss Ida Peterson, a young woman originally from Marsja, Sweden. Of their union, one son was born to them. As he grew to young manhood he showed so marked a talent for the pencil and brush that his parents are now sending him to the Minneapolis School of Art. Some two years ago, he succeeded in completing his high school and business course. This son, whom they have called James Edwin, has just reached his majority, having been born in 1891, and his friends predict for him a brilliant future.

Mr. James Walker, Senior, as he is known to the associates of the boy, is not a "Joiner" nor a politician. His political sympathies are, however, as might be expected from his father's son, with the Progressive Democrats.

PHILIP GREENAN. The aptitude of the Irish for statecraft and politics is proverbial. Perhaps it has become rooted in their blood from the centuries of struggle with adverse political conditions which have hampered the wonderful island of Erin. Possibly they are not really any more ardent politicians than they are poets and warriors; for certainly they go into these pursuits with zeal and emerge with distinction. The Celtic revival has drawn our attention anew to the literary exploits of that people and meanwhile they are continuing to exert their genius for organization upon public concerns, very much to the advantage of said concerns. Mr. Greenan is a notable example of Montana's able public men of Irish blood.

The first twelve years of Philip Greenan's life were spent in Ireland, and there he received all his training in the schools. He came to America with some relatives and obtained employment in a rubber factory at Millville, Massachusetts. This was in the year of 1881 when child-labor laws did not yet forbid the children under fourteen to work in factories. Mr. Greenan remained here for three years, and in 1884 came west. His first stop was at Leadville, Colorado, and in that lively mining town he obtained work at the smelting plant, and thus the next three years were spent. The following twelve months he was in Denver, and from that city he came to Montana in 1888. At Anaconda he found work easily in the smelter, and for ten years he stayed in the city and worked at this same occupation.

When the Spanish-American war broke out in 1898 Mr. Greenan enlisted with Company K which went from Anaconda, and was sent to the Philippines. Here he served until the company was mustered out at San Francisco. On March 23, 1899, he was wounded in a skirmish and obliged to spend some time in the hospital. He did not remain long, as he was eager to rejoin his regiment at the earliest possible moment. After being mustered out, Mr. Greenan returned to Anaconda and there resumed his work in the smelter, remaining there one year.

It was in 1900 that the Democratic party selected Mr. Greenan as their candidate for clerk of Deer Lodge county. He was elected to the office and two years later was again a candidate for the same office and a second time the choice of the county for the position. His term of service expired in March, 1904, and then he again resumed his work at the smelters and for the next five years was busied with this occupation. Though not in public office, he was, however, still active in the party councils and recognized as one of its strong men. On March 4, 1909, Governor Norris appointed him adjutant general and he still holds that position. The filling of this position made it advisable for Mr. Greenan to move from Anaconda to Helena and since his appointment he has resided at the capital, with his family. This consists of his wife, Bridget Dorian Greenan, and their one son, Philip Gregory, a lad of nine who is attending the public schools of Helena. Another child born to this union died in infancy. Mrs. Greenan was born in Wisconsin, but came to Montana when a young girl and here met Mr. Greenan. The family are members of the Catholic church.

Both of Mr. Greenan's parents are now deceased. Neither Peter Greenan nor his wife, Anne Finnegan Greenan, ever immigrated from county Monaghan, Ireland, which was their birthplace and that of their children, and is now their last resting place.

Mr. Greenan's only lodge is the insurance order of the Woodmen of the World. He is, however, a man of most sociable disposition and has a talent for making and keeping friends. He has supplied the deficiencies of his early school advantages by much judicious reading, being especially fond of books of travel. His many friends throughout the state speak confidently of the bright political future, which they feel sure will be possible to Mr. Greenan if he wishes to seek preferment in that line.

HENRY NICKOLAI was born of German parentage, in Buffalo county, Wisconsin, on the twelfth day of December, 1866. His father, Joseph Nickolai, emigrated from Germany with his parents while yet in his early youth. They settled in Wisconsin, and preempted a forest claim which they cleared and cultivated. For his entire life, Joseph Nickolai devoted his energy to farming and stock raising in Wisconsin. He died in 1871, leaving a comfortable estate consisting mostly of ranch lands. His wife, Mary Nickolai, herself of German parentage, had lived since her childhood on a farm not far distant from the one owned by her husband's people. Both families were of devout Roman Catholic faith. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Nickolai on their Wisconsin farm, four boys and one daughter. Christian, the oldest son, was for a number of years an agriculturist and stockraiser like his father. Quite recently, he has taken up contracting in masonry and makes his home in Arcadia, Wisconsin. The daughter, who with her mother bears the most beautiful name in the language, was Mrs. John Felsheim of Cody, Wyoming. Mathew, the third son, has so prospered on his farm near Sac City, Wisconsin, that he is now practically retired. Jacob is making a success of his farm land in Buffalo county, Wisconsin. Mrs. Nickolai, some years after her husband's death, was married to his cousin, Jacob Meyer, and is living in Arcadia, not far distant from two of her sons.

Henry, the second of the boys, like his brothers, attended the parochial schools of Buffalo county. When fifteen years of age, he left school in order to assist his father with the growing work of the farm. Unlike most of his family, he was not interested in that line of work. Although he longed to learn a trade or a profession he remained with his parents until he was twenty-three years of age. At that time, feeling that the younger boys could assist in the care of the ranch, he set out for Montana. In the fall of 1888, he settled in Helena and began the study of the blacksmithing and the wagon maker's trade. Already he had much practical knowledge along this line, as the care of the farm machinery had largely fallen to his lot. In a surprisingly short time he had completely mastered every detail of the trade. By 1907 he had been able—thanks to his native German thrift—to accumulate sufficient capital to set up in business for himself. His start was, naturally, a small one—the establishment of a smithy with a wagon repairing department attached. His business is one of the most thriving in Lewis and Clark county. This is only one more proof that a peniless young man may succeed in that land where a man is judged by his worth alone, and success without assistance other than from within.

In 1895 Mr. Henry Nickolai was married, in the Catholic church of Helena, to Miss Mary Anderes. Miss Anderes was born in Pennsylvania although her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Mathias Anderes, were, at the time, living in Barnesville, Montana. Mr. Anderes was a soldier in the War of the Rebellion, fighting through almost the entire struggle. At present he is living the life of the prosperous retired farmer. Mrs. Anderes finished her useful life some years since and was laid to rest in the Barnesville cemetery.

Mr. and Mrs. Nickolai are the parents of three little girls. Their oldest daughter, Margaret, passed away in her eighth year. Marie and Helen attend the parochial school of Helena. Both Mr. and Mrs. Nickolai are most loyal to the faith of their fathers. Mr. Nickolai is a member of the St. Joseph Verein and of the Woodmen of the World. In politics, he is a Democrat.

THOMAS KAIN, the president of the Kain Granite Company, though he has passed the milestone of three-score-year-and-ten in this earthly journey, has not yet slackened his pace nor relaxed the vigor with which he has made his way in the world.

Born in Scotland on March 14, 1842, he lived in that country until he was twenty years old. He attended the schools of Scotland, and also learned the trade of a stone cutter before immigrating to America. Here he first settled in Quincy, Massachusetts, where he resided for a number of years, following his trade as a journeyman. In 1888 Mr. Kain came to Montana, and here went into business for himself. He was the first to develop the quarries in this section, and has always been at the head of the industry in Montana. The quarries which he owns are located at Shingle Gulch on the Great Northern, and at Baxendale on the Northern Pacific. The cutting plant is in Helena; it is equipped with pneumatic machinery and is one of the most up-to-date in the country, having track connections with both railroads.

The Kain Granite Company has its offices and salesroom at the corner of Seventh avenue and Jackson street. Its officers are Thomas Kain, president; Henry Kain, vice president; John Kain, manager; and William J. Fuchs, secretary. This organization has been in existence only since July 1, 1911. Previous to its incorporation the company was known as Thomas Kain & Sons, and was conducted by Mr. Kain and his two sons, Henry and John. An average force of seventy-five hands is required to carry on the work of the company, and in busy times this number is doubled. In the course of its existence it has furnished the stone for most of the principal buildings of the state, including the state capitol wings and a number of the most important office buildings; the court-houses of numerous counties throughout the state are built of stone from the Kain quarries, as are also many of the palatial homes of Montana's citizens. In connection with the quarries the company maintains a monumental business, which is the largest and most extensive in the state. They have erected mausoleums in many of the larger cities and are constantly called upon to undertake this class of work for families of prominence throughout the state.

The animating spirit of this extensive business is Thomas Kain, for fifty-eight years a stone cutter, and still an active worker. The veneration in which he is held by his sons, both as a father and as the head of the business, is an eloquent tribute to his ability. They regard his advice as the most valuable, and his decisions as final in all matters of business policy.

Mr. Kain is a man devoted to his home, and to his large circle of friends. Mrs. Thomas Kain was born in Liverpool, England, in September, 1846. She was married in that city on May 1, 1865, and has been the mother of thirteen children. She has done her share in helping her husband to achieve the success which his strict attention to the matter in hand and his initiative have made his.

HENRY E. CARSTENSEN. The proprietor of the Rodney Hotel was born in the city of Husem, Germany, where for several generations his family has been successfully engaged in business. His father, Peter Carstensen, was born on October 19, 1823, and is still living in Husem having acquired a comfortable fortune which enables him to spend his later years in retirement from the mercantile life in which he was so successful. He never visited America, nor did his wife, Christina Peterson Carstensen, who passed from this life in 1907 at the age of eighty-one. Her father, Hans Peterson, was a well known liquor dealer of Husem, and he too lived past the four-score year mark, as he was born in 1800 and died in 1886. Henry Carstensen was born on October 4, 1867, and lived in the town famous as the birthplace of the gifted author, Theodor Sturm, until he was seventeen. He attended the public school, and then learned the trade of cigar-maker before emigrating to America; he settled at once in Chicago, where he secured work at his trade. In 1885 he left Chicago and went to Denison, Iowa, to work on a farm, and he remained there for three years. But Iowa was not enough west to satisfy Mr. Carstensen's desire for new country, so in 1888 he betook himself to Montana and the Prickly Pear valley, where he obtained work on the ranch of Huntley & Pruitt. Two years after he went to the Flat Head country, but the locality did not appeal to him and his stay was of short duration.

Thomas Kain Frances Ann Kain

When Mr. Carstensen returned from the northwestern part of the state he settled in Helena, and took a position as clerk for one of the larger mercantile houses. He remained here until 1903, by which time he had accumulated enough capital to begin business on his own account. His first investment was the Atlas saloon, which he purchased in partnership with Mr. Peter Wagenbach, and they ran it for four years. The opportunity to buy the Rodney hotel presented itself in 1907, and as it was a prosperous house Mr. Carstensen availed himself of the chance to make a wise investment. His management of the place has been such as to continue to hold the patronage of the hotel, and to add to it in large measure. It has yielded him handsome returns, and made him financially independent.

Mr. Carstensen's marriage occurred at Helena, on January 26, 1898, when Miss Minnie Loeb of this city became his bride. Two sons and one daughter are the issue of this marriage, all attending school. Ernest was born December 1, 1898; Leonora, in August, 1900; and George in March, 1902. Mr. Carstensen has one brother, John, who also came to America, and to Montana.

Though a thorough American, taking active interest in municipal affairs and serving as councilman for the Second ward, Mr. Carstensen is also loyal to the land of his birth, and is known as one of the workers in the lodge of the Sons of Hermann. He is also a member of the Eagles and of the Red Men. In these circles, as elsewhere, he enjoys a high degree of popularity. He is aligned with the Democratic party.

CHESTER J. MURPHY. If history teaches by example, the lessons inculcated by biography must be still more impressive. We see exhibited in the varieties of human character, under different circumstances, something to instruct us in our duty and to encourage our efforts under every emergency. And, perhaps, there is no concurrence of events which produce this effect more certainly than the steps by which distinction has been acquired through the unaided efforts of youthful enterprise, as illustrated in the life of Chester J. Murphy. It is one of the most encouraging facts that can anywhere exist that, in this country, a large proportion of those individuals who, by their activities, have attained a greater or less degree of eminence have risen by their own exertions. In this sketch there should be found something to encourage the exertions of those youths who, without fortune or influential friends, are struggling to overcome obstacles in the acquirement of wealth and position.

Chester J. Murphy, familiarly and affectionately known everywhere as "Chet," was born in Fayette county, Iowa, September 24, 1866, and is a son of Joseph and Cynthia (Alvey) Murphy. His father, a native of Ohio, died when Chester was five years of age, and his mother, who was born in Illinois, now lives at Glendive. There were two children in their family: Chester J. and Mrs. B. F. Dawson, of Glendive. Chester J. Murphy was given what advantages were gained in the public schools of Iowa, and at the age of eighteen years left his native state and went to North Dakota. One year later, however, in 1885, he decided to try his fortunes in the Judith Basin, and succeeded in securing employment on the sheep ranch of Bower Brothers, with whom he continued to remain three years. At the end of that period he went to Neihart, in Cascade county, Montana, and until 1894 worked in the silver mines there, that year seeing his advent in Dawson county, when he settled on Burns Creek, thirty miles north of Glendive, and embarked in the horse and cattle business. From the very start Mr. Murphy's operations were decidedly successful, and as the years passed he kept adding to his herds and lands until he was universally recognized as one of the most able and progressive stockmen in the state. At this time he is the owner of 4800 acres of land, 2000 acres being under cultivation, and 500 acres being in wheat, flax and oats. In addition to vast herds of cattle, he has 300 head of English Shire horses, and all of his holdings have come to him as a result of his own efforts. Wealth and friends have been given him, and these he enjoys without a trace of that offensive ostentation that has so often shaded the lives of other men, for "Chet" Murphy is one of the most popular men in Dawson county.

On January 1, 1907, Mr. Murphy was married to Miss Grace Skinner, a native of Iowa, and daughter of W. A. and Marietta (Hendrickson) Skinner, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of Ohio. They migrated to Iowa during pioneer days, and there spent the remainder of their lives, Mr. Skinner being a well-known newspaper man. Mrs. Murphy came to Montana in 1893 and was a teacher in the schools of Glendive several years before being elected county superintendent of schools of Dawson county. She is a member of the Congregational church, and has been active in religious, club and social life, and like her husband has many warm friends in this section. Mr. Murphy is a member of Miles City Lodge, B. P. O. E. In his political views he is a Democrat, but has never allowed public life to interfere with his business interests, although often urged to become a candidate for official preferment. A typical Montana ranchman, with the business integrity and sense of honor that that title implies, his home and his business demand all of his attention, and the friendships that have been maintained throughout many years are in no danger of being severed by participation in the turmoil of the political arena.

CHARLES S. HAIRE, a member of the firm of Link & Haire, architects, and one of the best known men in his line of business in Montana, was born in Hamilton county, Ohio, in 1857, and is a son of George W. and Catherine (Porter) Haire, natives of that state also, whence his paternal ancestors came from the state of Virginia as early as 1796. His maternal ancestor came to Ohio from Allegheny City, Pennsylvania. George W. Haire was for many years county surveyor of Hamilton county, where he died in 1910.

After completing the public school course and graduating from the Cincinnati high school in 1876, Charles S. Haire followed the profession of a teacher for three years, and while thus engaged prosecuted his studies along the lines of architecture. Drafting in his native state occupied his attention until 1886, in which year he removed to Pocatello, Idaho, and there secured a position in his chosen work with the Union Pacific Railroad. In the following year he acted in a like capacity with the Great Northern Railroad at Butte, Montana, and one year later he came to Helena, which has since been his field of operations. After he had spent some time with the real estate firm of Wallace & Thornburg, Mr. Haire began to give his whole time to architectural work and was engaged in preparing the plans and specifications for the Denver block, one of the finest business structures in the city. He also designed most of the houses in Lenox, the suburban addition to Helena. The fine business block of A. P. Curtain, the State Agricultural College at Bozeman, the Dillon Normal School and the Boulder Deaf & Dumb Institution were erected by him while he was serving two years as superintendent of buildings for the state, and it was during his incumbency of that office that he did some of his best work. He also designed and superintended the erection of St. Vincent's hospital, the Parmly Billings Memorial Library, the Ursuline Convent at Miles City, and numerous large and valuable dwellings. In his work Mr. Haire showed that his training has been a long and thorough one. A certain individuality has given distinction to his designs, and his plans have always been characterized by their appropriate treatment.

On January 1, 1906, Mr. Haire formed a partnership with J. G. Link, of Billings, Montana, under the firm name of Link & Haire, and this firm is recognized as the leading one in its line in Montana. They maintain offices at Helena, Butte, Billings, Miles City and Livingston. Among the principal structures designed by the firm may be mentioned the Silver Bow Club, the State Savings Bank building and the Silver Bow county court house at Butte; the east and west wings of the Montana state capitol building at Butte; the Montana Block at Missoula; the First National Bank building at Miles City; the present work on the state institutions at Boulder; the Granite county court house at Philipsburg, and the Rosebud county court house at Forsythe.

Mr. Haire was married on August 7, 1889, to Miss Frances A. Corwin, a native of Ohio, and a relative of the Hon. Thomas Corwin, the eloquent orator and statesman. Minor Corwin, the father of Mrs. Haire, was engaged in merchandising until his death some years ago, and her mother, Martha (Morgan) Corwin, was a native of Indiana. Mr. and Mrs. Haire have one son, Thomas Corwin, who was born March 25, 1892, and is taking a course in architecture at Columbia University, New York.

HON. SAMUEL W. KELSEY. The pioneering impulse which led to the establishment of the Kelsey family in Montana, may be traced far backward, even to the grandfather of Hon. Samuel W. Kelsey, of Miles City, leading him from the South Atlantic coast to the interior of the United States and his descendants to the Rocky Mountain region. In their migrations the Kelseys have left records of good citizenship behind them, having been industrious and law abiding, supporters of schools and churches, people of stability of character. Samuel W. Kelsey was born at Paxton, Greene county, Illinois, December 20, 1868, and is a son of Theodore B. and Rhoda N. (Gray) Kelsey, and a grandson of Thomas and Mary Kelsey.

Theodore B. Kelsey was born in 1834, in South Carolina, and died in Montana, January 30, 1911. He was three years old when his parents migrated to Indiana, where they settled in a wilderness, out of which they developed a farm before moving on into Illinois, and afterward pushed on farther west, into Kansas, locating there just before the Civil war. Thomas Kelsey was first a Whig, then a Democrat and later a Republican. Theodore B. Kelsey assisted his father on the Illinois farm, accompanied him to Kansas and afterward moved from Kansas to Iowa, where he engaged in farming and also merchandising up to 1888, when he moved to Montana and located within three miles of the present site of Stacey, Custer county. He continued in the stock business, dealing in cattle and horses, until 1902, when he retired to Moorhead, where the closing years of his life were spent and where he conducted a mercantile business until the end. In 1862, while a resident of Kansas, he enlisted for service in the Civil war and was a soldier in Company D, Twelfth Regiment, Kansas Volunteer Infantry, for two years and eleven months. He was then honorably discharged and was a valued member of the Grand Army of the Republic. For a number of years he was identified with the Republican party, having voted for General John C. Fremont in the early days, but later he became a Populist. He was a member of the United Presbyterian church. He married Rhoda N. Gray, who was born in Indiana and now is a resident of Moorhead, Montana. Seven children were born to them, six of these still surviving, namely: William H., living at Grand Forks, North Dakota; D. B., residing in Montana; Arthur R., a resident of Stacey, Montana; Samuel W.; Ettie, wife of Arthur N. Hotchkiss, of Moorhead, that state; and Frank T., also a resident of the above place.

Samuel W. Kelsey obtained his schooling at Allerton, Iowa, but entered business when only twelve years of age, making use of his vacations to earn money as a clerk in a confectionery store. Afterward he worked for his father and other farmers in the neighborhood until 1888. In the meanwhile the father had acquired a small band of cattle but had no land for pasturage and this led to the coming of the family to Montana. It was determined that the cattle should be driven to the range in Montana and arrangements were made for all the family to assist in this removal, with the exception of the two oldest sons who were otherwise engaged. After three months on the trail the family reached Stacey, Custer county, on April 6, 1888, and for several years afterward Mr. Kelsey worked on sheep ranches and at farming in this neighborhood. In 1892 his brother, Arthur R. Kelsey, proposed that they should take a band of sheep on shares, and they prospered together in this enterprise on land some thirteen miles west of Stacey, until December, 1910, when a division was made, Arthur R. taking the cattle for his portion, and Samuel W., the sheep, and the latter interest has been continued up to the present time.

Mr. Kelsey now owns about 5,000 acres of well stocked land. In 1910 he removed with his family to Miles City in order that his children might have better school advantages, and here he has since been engaged in the real estate and livestock commission business. His political affiliation has always been with the Republican party. Formerly he served as a member of the school board at Brandenburg, Montana; in 1908 he was elected a member of the Montana state legislature, and during his period of public service he gave the same careful attention to his public responsibilities as he has given his own affairs for so many years. He is a broad-minded, far-seeing, intelligent man, and in the hands of such as he, Montana promises great things for the future.

Mr. Kelsey was married July 12, 1898, to Miss Amelia M. Miller, who was born on her father's farm near Shenandoah, Iowa, the oldest of eight children and one of the six survivors of the family born to her parents. Edward and Mary E. Miller. Mrs. Kelsey became an orphan when seventeen years of age. To Mr. and Mrs. Kelsey the following children were born: Walter Emerson, Austin Monroe, Marian Gray, Eugene Bass and Frances. Mr. Kelsey is a member of Yellowstone Lodge No. 26, A. F. & A. M.; Miles City Chapter, No. 11, R. A. M.; Miles Commandery, No. 11, K. T.; and Algeria Temple, Mystic Shrine, at Helena, Montana.

JAMES H. LOOMIS, a resident of the state of Montana since 1888 and now serving his fourth term as treasurer of the city of Philipsburg, is a native product of the east, born in Sandisfield, Massachusetts, on November 7, 1840. He is the son of Alanson and Polly (Richards) Loomis. The father was born January 21, 1806, in Vermont, and lived in various eastern states during his life time. He eventually settled in Fulton, New York, where he was engaged in the tanning business. He died July 22, 1874, while on a trip to Illinois, and lies buried at the old home in Fulton, New York. He married his wife March 20, 1827, in Ohio, going from Connecticut to that state on horseback for the event. She died in Fulton, New York, August 2, 1862, aged fifty-two years. Eight children were born to this couple, of which number James H. was the seventh born and the youngest son.

When James H. Loomis was seven years of age his parents moved from Winsted, Connecticut, to Fulton, New York, which place he made his home until 1888. He was educated in the schools of Fulton and attended Falley Seminary. After leaving school the young man entered the general wood working business, and by degrees picked up a fair working knowledge of carpentering, and gradually worked himself into the contracting business. A singular fact in connection with his career is that he has never worked on salary for anyone. From his earliest working days he has been engaged in business on his own responsibility, and always with success. When he has twenty years of age he bought an interest in a furniture factory, and later acquired an interest in a machinery factory as well, in both of which he enjoyed a fair degree of prosperity. He suffered heavy loss by fire in 1888, which caused his removal to the west. For a time after locating in Philipsburg, Mr. Loomis engaged in carpenter work and some mining, but eventually gave that up, and for the past four terms has served as city treasurer of Philipsburg, a position which he has filled in a manner wholly creditable to himself and with all satisfaction to the people.

Mr. Loomis is an Independent Republican and is active in local politics. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity and the Redmen and was treasurer of the Redmen Lodge of Philipsburg for five years. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, and is active in every movement launched for the best good of the community.

On October 12, 1862, Mr. Loomis was united in marriage with Mary E. Buell, daughter of William and Elizabeth Buell, of Fulton, New York. Mrs. Loomis passed away on March 17, 1912, at the age of seventy-two, and is buried in Philipsburg. She was a lifelong member of the Methodist Episcopal church, consistent in her profession of belief and living a life of faith and charity to the last.

JOHN O. LAGERQUIST. Like many other of Montana's prosperous and respected business men, John O. Lagerquist, of Hamilton, was born across the sea, his birth having occurred, January 21, 1865, near Carlstad, Sweden. Olaf Lagerquist, his father, has never left the fatherland, but is still living on the old home farm. His wife, whose maiden name was Katherine Larson, died in 1910, leaving three children, as follows: August, assisting his father in the management of the homestead; Matilda, wife of Olaf Olson, of Skosberg, Sweden, and John O., the special subject of this brief biographical record.

Receiving excellent educational advantages as a boy, John O. Lagerquist left the high school of his native town at the age of sixteen years, after which he spent an apprenticeship of three years at the carpenter's trade, working with an uncle in Stockholm. Then, conformable to the laws of Sweden, he served two years in the army, being mustered out at the age of twenty-one years. Immigrating to America the following year, Mr. Lagerquist followed his trade for two years in Minneapolis, Minnesota. Coming to Montana in 1888, he was employed as a carpenter in Anaconda for two years. Settling then in Butte, he began a career which proved most successful, taking contracts for building houses in that city, while thus engaged superintending the building of the Daly mansion and other important structures on the Daly estate, remaining with Marcus Daly until 1904.

Mr. Lagerquist's next large contract was the erection for the Anaconda Copper Company, of the largest flume in the world, a gigantic work which he completed successfully and satisfactorily. Locating then in Hamilton, he, in company with Erick Ericson, built the only independent planing mill and sawmill in Montana. They conducted it successfully until 1908, when Mr. Lagerquist purchased his partner's interest in the plant, which he is managing alone, carrying on an extensive and remunerative business under the name of the "Riverview Manufacturing Company." In the manufacture of inside house furnishings, store fronts, stairs, counters, doors, shelving, etc., he employs many hands, endeavoring at all times to meet the demands of his customers promptly. Mr. Lagerquist takes great pride and satisfaction in the fact that he is not affiliated with any trust or combination, being the owner of the only independent plant of the kind in the state. He has acquired considerable property, owning valuable city realty, and being interested to some extent in the mineral resources of Montana. He is independent in politics, with a tendency towards Democratic principles and party. Although not an office seeker, he was elected alderman of the city in 1908. Fraternally, he is a member and past noble grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and of the Order of Eagles.

In June, 1900, Mr. Lagerquist married Sarah K. Parsons, a native of Sweden, and of the seven children born of their union, two have passed to the life beyond, and five are living, namely: Elmer, Nancy, Ruth, Victor and George. Mr. Lagerquist is a firm believer in a great and prosperous future for Montana, basing his faith on the fact that everything needful for its growth and advancement can be produced in the state, which is rich and fruitful in its resources.

C. M. PARR. This gentleman, who is one of the leading members of the bar in Butte and is also interested in the mining industry and fruit culture, has lived in three states of the American Union and had a varied and instructive experience in each. He therefore entered upon his professional career with a broad knowledge of men and the springs of action that animate them, and with extensive information of the country, and the pursuits and customs of its people in different and widely separated localities. For from his youth he has been studious and observant, laying all the lessons of experience to heart and making the most of them for his own advantage. He became a resident of Hamilton, in June, 1912.

Mr. Parr is a native of Jefferson county, Iowa, where his life began on September 2, 1859. He is a son of William and Susannah Parr, both of Pennsylvania. The father was born at Uniontown, Pennsylvania, but both he and his wife passed the greater part of their lives in Iowa, and both died in that state, well esteemed by the people among whom they lived and labored, and known far and wide for their uprightness and usefulness.

Their son, C. M. Parr, received his academic education in the public schools of Burlington, Iowa, and in 1885, came west as secretary to the superintendent of the Oregon Short Line Railroad. His residence during this employment was at Pocatella, Idaho, and there he remained three years, acquiring a good knowledge of the railroad business and also of western country, as his duties obliged him to spend much of his time in travel. The life had variety and spice enough in it to give it zest for him, but he had aspirations to become something more than a clerk, and bent his energies toward the goal of his desires.

In 1888 Mr. Parr came to Butte and the next year was appointed court reporter for the fifth judicial district of Montana. This position proved to be the very avenue to his ambition that he needed, and he made progress toward the destination he aimed at during every hour he occupied it and with all the powers and facilities at his command. While he occupied the office he studied law with diligence and acuteness, and on completing his preparation in 1893 was admitted to the bar. He has ever since been actively engaged in the practice of his profession, with a steadily growing clientage and a steadily rising and extending reputation as a lawyer and counselor.

In obedience to the bent of his mind and his interest in the welfare of his state and country, Mr. Parr has always been very active in political affairs. For a number of years, during the infancy of the party in this country he was a leading Socialist in his locality. But he is now affiliated with the Republican party and is loyal and serviceable to its principles and candidates from the conviction that their supremacy will afford the best guarantee of good government, local, state and national.

Mr. Parr has, however, allowed neither professional claims nor political contentions to employ all his time and faculties. He has a business turn of mind, as well as a professional one, and he has given it scope also. He has bought a fine fruit farm, the home of the late Marcus Daly, three miles from Hamilton, Ravalli county. Mr. Parr intends to move to this farm at an early date, and make it his future home.

In the fraternal life of the community, Mr. Parr has taken an active part as a Woodman of the World and a Modern Woodman of America. In the former of these two fraternities, he holds the rank of past commander of Camp No. 153, Butte, and in both his membership is highly valued because of his enterprise in their behalf and the intelligence with which his efforts are directed. While he seeks no prominence in them, he has an earnest desire to make them as influential for good and as useful as possible, and he works for them effectively with these ends always in view.

On July 1, 1891, he was united in marriage with Miss Olive May Sweet, the daughter of Oliver and Mary E. Sweet. The father was a pioneer in this part of Montana, locating in the Alder Gulch, in 1865. He joined the Vigilantes, and gave them the aid of his best powers in their efforts to suppress lawlessness and rid the region of road agents and other criminals, when the arm of the law was too short and too feeble to deal effectively with them. Mr. Sweet also figured conspicuously in the Indian wars of this section, always holding himself in readiness to obey any call to duty for the safety and well-being of its people. Mr. and Mrs. Parr have one child, their son Chadwick. The father is considered not only one of the leading lawyers of Butte, but one of the best and most progressive citizens of Montana, and is esteemed in accordance with this high rank, which, however, is well deserved and has been fairly won.

JAMES D. KERLEE, now a prominent ranchman of Montana, was born in Franklin county, Missouri, on the tenth day of February, 1855. At the outbreak of the Civil war, Mr. Kerlee moved his family from their town home onto a farm some miles distant, hoping that in this manner he might be able to escape the deprivations of guerilla warfare to which Missouri was a prey. In the district school near this farm, Bert received his early education. After peace was once more restored and the family had returned to town, he was permitted to study for a few months at a time, the schools of Missouri at that date being far from the educational system seen there to-day. As a child, he was like many another boy, interested in engines and trains, the difference being that with him the interest grew instead of waning. As soon as his years would permit, he entered the service of the railroads, becoming an engineer on reaching his majority. It was during his service in this capacity that he first became familiar with the opportunities and advantages of the Treasure state. On the twenty-seventh of May, 1877, he was joined in marriage to Miss Mary Hibber, a life-long friend and neighbor in Franklin county. To her he confided his belief in the northwest and his ambitions to make it their future home. So great was her confidence in his judgment and so perfect the sympathy and understanding between them, that together they started out almost penniless for the new home in the far west. Money they did not have, but perhaps their good spirits, their perfect health and their determination to succeed, each for the sake of the other, was of more lasting value to them. Even at this time, in 1888, they were the parents of four little ones for whose future the move seemed a wise one.

They took up a claim which adjoins the present site of the town of Darby, in the fertile Bitter Root valley. Since the first year, Mr. Kerlee has proved himself a successful farmer and ranchman. He is now one of the best known and most highly respected men of his community. Ten children have been born to them, all of whom have been well educated and established in life's battle and most of whom now live with their own families, within easy reach of the father and mother.

Edward J. Kerlee, the oldest of the sons, is a clerk in the nearby town of Darby, while William assists his father on the ranch. Ella Cora is the wife of John K. Williamson, himself a rancher in the Bitter Root valley. Lilly May, married Warner Laird, a merchant at Darby, who has taken into partnership with him her younger brother, Lewis B. Kerlee. The firm is Laird and Kerlee. Benjamin, the elder brother, is a farmer in the same valley. Bessie and Rosalie are the only two members of the family who have wandered from the state of Montana. The former is now Mrs. Roy P. Monroe, of Weippe, Idaho, and the latter, Mrs. Dick Henderson, of Miller, South Dakota. Floss Kerlee resides with the parents on the home ranch while Emma Grace, the youngest of the family, is married to Dr. Hayward of Darby.

Mr. and Mrs. James D. Kerlee have undergone many hardships and known the real meaning of the word privation. When they first took up the claim that has since become their valuable and well-equipped ranch home, they were eighteen miles from a post office or a trading post. Here, under these difficulties, they raised this family of ten children, all of whom have been spared to them and permitted to grow into useful citizens—a family of ten without the proverbial "black sheep." Under these trying circumstances every one of the ten received a good common school education, some of them pursuing courses of higher learning and eight of the ten still live within a few miles of the paternal home. It has been granted Mr. and Mrs. Kerlee to reap a portion of their harvest here and now, and, with the optimism that helped them over the rough places in the long ago, they appreciate now the extent of that harvest. The growing city of Darby is rapidly approaching their very gates, their ranch is all that could be desired and the voices of their sturdy grandchildren gladden their declining years.

Mrs. Bert Kerlee is the daughter of Nancy Cooper Hibber, who died in her native state of Missouri in 1872, and of William T. Hibber. Mr. Hibber was a Missouri farmer and Civil war veteran. Fighting for the Federal government, he was wounded in the famous battle of Vicksburg and taken prisoner by the Confederates. For three months he lived in their stifling prisons with no food but corn bread, sorghum and mule meat. After being finally exchanged and mustered out, he returned to his Franklin county farm, but his wounds left him a cripple for life. Late in life he moved from Franklin to Mary's county, Missouri, where he passed away in 1905, having lived to the full-allotted age of man. Mayhap the lessons of endurance and good cheer learned from the father, who so bravely carried the mark of his country's service, helped the daughter to face hardships of her early life in the west.

Caleb M. Sawyer

CALEB M. SAWYER. The name of Caleb M. Sawyer, of Anaconda, Montana, is one which is known, at least to lawyers, throughout the whole of the country, for he has been engaged for the past eight years in one of the biggest legal battles that this country has ever witnessed. In this great fight, which he has led in behalf of a community of farmers against a great corporation, he has been actuated solely through humanitarianism and a spirit that cannot endure injustice. Mr. Sawyer has been a resident of the state of Montana for nearly a quarter of a century and during his long residence in the state has given nearly the whole of his time to the practice of his profession, though he could have held various political offices had he so desired. His chief aim in life has been, not to see how much money he could pile up nor how many cases he could win regardless of the justice in the question, but how much he could aid the downtrodden and the poor. He should be known as the poor man's lawyer, for no person suffering under injustice calls on him for aid in vain.

A native of old New Hampshire, Mr. Sawyer was born at East Andover on the 19th of August, 1854. He is a descendant of early New Hampshire settlers, his great-grandparents having settled there in the young days of the colony. His father, Daniel E. Sawyer, was also born at East Andover. He was a well educated man, being a schoolmate of Benjamin Butler, of Civil war fame. In 1856, Daniel Sawyer moved west and settled in Minnesota. He was an ardent and indeed a rabid Republican, and after coming to the west he was elected to a number of minor offices. He was greatly interested and very active in behalf of the public schools, accomplishing a good work along these lines. On the recommendation of Benjamin Butler and of his cousin, U. S. Senator Philetus Sawyer, of Wisconsin, Mr. Sawyer was appointed superintendent of the Yellowstone National Park by President James A. Garfield. He served under President Arthur in this capacity and two years under President Cleveland, or until the United States soldiers were placed in charge of the National Park. In his religious affiliations he was a member of the Episcopal church and he was always a loyal worker in both political and religious fields. His wife was Julia M. Gibbons, who was born in Scotland and was left an orphan at an early age.

Caleb M. Sawyer was only a baby when his father moved to the west, so, to all intents and purposes, he is a western man. He received his collegiate education at the Wesleyan Methodist Seminary at Wasioja, Dodge county, Minnesota. After the completion of his general education he was placed in the office of the Honorable F. M. Wilson at Red Wing, Minnesota, where he spent a number of years in the study of law. He was admitted to the bar of the state of Minnesota in October, 1887, and during the following year removed to Montana. In 1889 he was admitted to the bar in Montana. He immediately began the practice of law in Anaconda, Montana, where he has practiced ever since. He has a flourishing practice though much of his time of late years has been given to work on the case above mentioned. In 1899 he was admitted to the United States district and circuit courts for the Ninth district. Ten years later, in July, 1909, he was admitted to practice in the United States circuit court of Appeals and on the 12th of July, 1909, he was admitted to the United States supreme court.

Like his father, Mr. Sawyer is a staunch Republican, but he has never cared for political preferment, the only office of any kind which he has ever held, being that of city attorney for Anaconda, which post he occupied for three years, from 1900 to 1903.

Mr. Sawyer, ever of progressive ideas, became one of the leaders of the Progressive movement in Montana, and was a delegate to the National Progressive Convention at Chicago, that nominated Col. Theodore Roosevelt for the presidency. At the state convention Mr.

Sawyer received the unanimous vote of 593 delegates for the office of attorney general of Montana. He takes considerable interest in fraternal organizations, being a member of the Masons, the Knights of Pythias and the Fraternal Order of Eagles.

Mr. Sawyer was married on the 21st of February, 1876, to Zell O. Dickey, their union taking place at Pine Island, Minnesota. She was a daughter of Sylvester Dickey, and received her education in preparatory schools in Minnesota and she had so well handled her opportunities that she was able to teach school herself, which she had done very successfully for five years prior to her marriage. In 1866 her father was a member of the house of representatives in Minnesota, and at various times held many minor offices in Goodhue county, Minnesota. Mrs. Sawyer had four brothers who served throughout the Civil war; Jasper, Edgar, Joseph and W. B. Dickey. The latter was a member of the First Minnesota Regiment, and later of the Second Minnesota. He was also state senator from Goodhue county, Minnesota, for a number of terms. Mrs. Sawyer has a nephew who has recently been in the public eye. This nephew, Bruce G. Dickey, was one of the five commissioners appointed by President Taft as financial advisers and aides to W. Morgan Shuster, when the latter was made treasurer general of Persia. He remained with Mr. Shuster until the latter was driven from Persia and in Mr. Shuster's recent book, "The Strangling of Persia," he pays a tribute to the assistance that Mr. Dickey was able to render him. He was inspector of taxation for Persia until 1912, when he returned to this country to take charge of his father's estate. Mr. Dickey, previous to his residence in Persia, had held various posts in the Philippine Islands, under the appointment of different presidents. Mrs. Sawyer's father and all of her brothers were close and loyal adherents of the Republican party.

The two daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Sawyer are Bessie, who was born in October, 1877, and Bertha, whose birth took place on March, 1879. The latter is now the wife of Frank N. Heckman, who is a successful merchant in Spokane, Washington.

As has been mentioned Mr. Sawyer's strongest personal characteristic is pity. He himself often speaks of his mother's tender-heartedness, and it is very likely that he inherits this characteristic from her, for while she could only extend her charity to the feeding of dumb animals or of a stray wanderer, Mr. Sawyer has been fighting for years to save their homes and means of livelihood to hundreds of people. In the month of May, 1904, Robert L. Clinton, an attorney of Butte, Montana, and Mr. Sawyer took upon themselves the task of saving the homes of the farmers of the Deer Lodge Valley Farmers' Association from the fumes of the Washoe smelters, which, pouring out their poisonous breath day after day, have practically destroyed the ranches and farms of the once rich and flourishing Deer Lodge Valley. The first fourteen months of the great fight were given to taking the testimony before the standing master in chancery in Butte, Montana. These two lawyers were matched against an army of the cleverest lawyers in the country, for their opponents were a corporation with untold wealth behind them. The records in this first part of the case amounted to over twenty-five thousand pages. The stenographer who took the testimony for Mr. Sawyer and his partner was paid over twenty-three thousand dollars, sufficient evidence of the enormous amount of evidence to be handled. The arguments of the opposing counsel continued for twenty days. It was then taken before the district court where twenty more days were spent in arguing the case. From this court it went to the United States circuit court of appeals for the Ninth district of the state of Montana. The court was sitting at San Francisco, and here the case was again argued. There were forty-seven days of argument in the suit which was finally brought into the United States supreme court, where it is now pending. The case is technically known as the Fred J. Bliss against the Washoe Copper Company and the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, and is claimed to be the biggest case ever received in the court.

The case has been notorious because of the personal interest taken in it by the president of the United States, by the attorney general, by Secretary Wilson of the agricultural department and by other prominent men. It was really the cause of the defeat of Thomas H. Carter for United States senator from Montana in 1910. This battle has not only been a legal battle but a political one as well, and is destined to become a historical one. Some idea of the immense amount of work that Mr. Sawyer has done in this case may be obtained from the fact that, in his arguments before the standing master in chancery and the United States district court, he averaged nine thousand words an hour.

Mr. Sawyer is a firm believer in the strength of the men of Montana. Being active in politics and an attendant at many of the state conventions of the Republican party, he had an opportunity of meeting and knowing many of the finest men in the state. To one of these friends of his he gives the credit for much of his success, namely, Wilbur F. Sanders. He has said that to him he owed the solution of many a knotty problem in law and his kindly advice helped him across many hard places. He once paid Mr. Sanders the following tribute which reflects the fine character of the speaker himself: "I honored him as one of our greatest men politically, and one whose honesty and integrity were beyond question, and he who received his friendship was endowed with a greater gift than money could buy. I honored and respected him as a statesman and loved him as a citizen."

Mr. Sawyer may not receive any reward in a substantial way for this great work to which he has given the best of his later years, but he will have his reward in the grateful thanks of a helpless people; for, although he should lose his cause, those farmers and ranchers in that gas-poisoned valley will never forget the man who putting aside his own affairs was willing and glad to do what he could to rescue them from ruin and often death, for they had sunk their all in their valley homes.

LOUIS L. CURL. In the vast extent of Montana there are sections that seem particularly well adapted to the growing of sheep and immense fortunes have been made in this industry. By no means, however, has this ever been easily accomplished, for there are few lines of business in which knowledge gained through practical experience, good judgment and untiring vigilance are more demanded. Custer county, Montana, has many prosperous sheep raisers at the present time and a visit to the great sheep ranch of Louis L. Curl, where his five thousand head of sheep pasture and grow, proves that within forty miles of Miles City, this industry may be very profitably conducted. Mr. Curl came to Montana in 1888. He was born in Linn county, Oregon, January 25, 1865, and is a son of Thomas and Josephine (Ray) Curl.

Thomas Curl was born in Missouri, about 1840, and died in Oregon. He was six years old when his parents headed their ox team in the direction of Oregon, and after long weeks of travel, reached Linn county. James Curl is mentioned in the Linn county records as one of the pioneers. Farming and stock raising, with lumbering to some degree, were the industries which claimed the attention of both father and son, and later in life, Thomas Curl became well known as a stockman.* It was in Linn that he married Josephine Ray, who was born in Iowa and still lives, making her home with her daughters in California. Of their four children, three survive, namely: Nettie, who is the wife of R. C. Jessee, living in California; Louis L., of this review; and Eliza, who married William Jessee, also residing in California. In his political relations, Thomas Curl was a Democrat. He was a member of the Baptist church, in which both he and his wife were active in Linn county.

Louis L. Curl remained at home until he was sixteen years of age, assisting his father in the stock business and on the farm, while in the winter months he attended the schools of the home community. In the far west youth develop early, and when he was sixteen, young Curl had enough understanding of cattle to purchase for himself and go into the business, and up to 1888 he continued to raise cattle on the range in Linn and other counties in Oregon. In that year he came to Montana and continued in the cattle business in Fergus county until 1902, when he began to be interested in sheep, removing them to Custer county and securing many acres of valuable land, some less than forty miles north of Miles City. Within the past decade he has proved that his judgment in embarking in this line was not at fault, and, although the handling of five thousand head of sheep requires his constant attention, he is well repaid.

On September 15, 1909, Mr. Curl was married at Seattle, Washington, to Miss Margaret Murphy, who was born at Louisville, Kentucky, and they have one son, Howard Edward. Mr. Curl keeps well informed concerning matters of public moment and is numbered with the live and representative citizens of Custer county. Mr. Curl has long been identified with the Republican party in his political activities, but has withdrawn from the old party and is now in the ranks of the Progressives, being one of the most enthusiastic Bull Moose of the district. His fraternal relations are represented by his affiliation with Miles City Lodge No. 537, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

GEORGE LUNN, painter and decorator, is one of the sons of the Hawkeye state whose citizenship Montana has been fortunate enough to secure. His identification with Montana dates from 1888 and his fortunes in the Treasure state have been of the "fair weather" variety. Mr. Lunn was born in Des Moines, Iowa, February 13, 1864. His father, George Lunn, a native of England, accompanied his parents to the "land of the stars and stripes" in babyhood. They first located in Ohio and after a short residence in the Buckeye state, went to Iowa, which at that time was a territory. In his present business the subject is following 'in the paternal footsteps, for Mr. Lunn, the elder, was a painter. He died while a resident of Des Moines, the date of his summons to the Great Beyond being July 27, 1887. His wife, whose maiden name was Eliza Van Houten, was a native of Ohio and it was in that state that their lives were united. The mother survives, making her home at the present time in Berkeley, California. Their three children are as follows: Jennie, wife of William McKay, of Chicago; George, the immediate subject of this review; and Beatrice, wife of William McConnell, of Berkeley, California. In the subject is a fusion of the English and Dutch, his ancestors originating in those countries.

George Lunn received his earlier education in the public and high schools of Des Moines and subsequently matriculated in Callana College, from which institution of learning he graduated in 1882. When it came time for him to think of becoming an actual factor in the work-a-day world, he began work with his father, and under his guidance learned the painter's and decorator's trade, serving a five years' apprenticeship, after which he followed his trade as a journeyman in Des Moines until 1887, in which year he took his father's business and conducted the same until 1888. In the meantime he had fallen victim to the so-called "western fever" and everywhere hearing good report of the opportunities and advantages presented by Helena, he shipped the stock direct to this city, and has remained here during the ensuing quarter century, being the next to the longest established in his line of business. His success is of that sound description which has contributed in due measure to the general prosperity. His career has ever been such as to warrant the trust and confidence of the business world, for he has conducted all transactions according to the strictest principles of honor. His devotion to the public good is not questioned and arises from a sincere interest in the welfare of his fellow men.

Mr. Lunn is independent in politics, for he believes in supporting the best man and the best measure irrespective of party. Fraternally he belongs to the Modern Brotherhood of America, the Woodmen of the World and the Commercial Club.

On November 10, 1884, Mr. Lunn established a household of his own by his marriage to Miss Mary C. Reed, a native of Indiana. One son has been born to their union, Edgar O. Lunn, whose life record began in Des Moines, October 27, 1885. This young man is associated with his father in business and is an enterprising young citizen. He is married, his wife having been Miss Stella Howard, a resident of Helena.

The elder Mr. Lunn is one of Helena's fine company of self-made men, his rise in life being entirely due to his own efforts. He is of the valiant material which rises above adverse circumstances, and when he lost considerable property in the panic of 1893 he did not lose courage for a moment, but proceeded to make it up. He would probably agree with Booth Tarkington's definition of success, "To accept the worst that fate can deal and to win courage from it and not despair—that is success." He possesses hosts of friends, being of pleasant, genial personality. His residence is maintained at 1104 Eleventh street and his place of business is at 120 East Sixth street.

JAMES A. WALSH. Prominent among the members of the Montana bar is James A. Walsh, of Helena. He was born in Vermont, his parents being Mathew H. and Mary (Lawlor) Walsh, natives of Ireland. They moved to Wisconsin when he was a child, and he was reared on a farm and attended the public schools in winter. He read law in the office of Bushnell, Clark & Watkins, in Lancaster, Wisconsin, and was admitted to the bar in 1882. After his admission he located in the territory of North Dakota and soon gained a high standing as a lawyer. In 1888 he moved to Montana, and ever since has devoted his time exclusively to his law practice.

In November, 1889, Mr. Walsh was married to Miss Margaret A. Doyle, of Waucoma, Iowa. They have four daughters, Florence, Estelle, Margaret and Hellen.

Mr. Walsh is an indefatigable worker and student, and has deservedly gained a high standing as a counselor and advocate, and ranks among the best lawyers of the state. In 1909 he was elected president of the Montana Bar Association, and he is a member of the American Bar Association. He is prominent in legal and political circles, and is a staunch supporter of the Republican party. He has never sought public office, and though often solicited, has steadfastly declined to become a candidate for judicial positions, for which he is eminently qualified. He received many strong recommendations for the position of United States district judge for Montana. Mr. Walsh is a clear and forcible speaker, but does not depend on the arts of oratory. Not all good speeches read well, as their effect often depends on the personality of the speaker. This does not in the least apply to Mr. Walsh. His tribute to Colonel Sanders is a model of directness and simplicity, and well illustrates his power of saying much in a brief compass. Like Colonel Sanders, whom he so much admired, Mr. Walsh is a master of the English language, a fearless and eloquent advocate, and a lawyer who thoroughly understands the principles of law and equity.

REV. A. R. COOPMAN. A life of service for mankind and the extension of the beneficent activities and influences of his church over a new country has given Father Coopman a place of special regard in the state of Montana. He began his work here during the territorial period, when churches of all kinds were few in number and struggling for existence. Four or five different parishes and many communities have enjoyed his presence, and all of them retain the impressions and lasting influences of the constructive leadership of this devoted priest of the Catholic church.

Father Coopman is a native of Belgium, where he was born on the 21st of April, 1863. He was the third in a family of six children, five sons and one daughter, born to Joseph and Theresa (Delbar) Coopman, who were both natives of Flanders. His parents, who died some years ago, were in good circumstances, were well educated and gave their family the advantages of comforts and refinement.

A. R. Coopman at an early age determined to devote his life to the service of the church. He attended private schools and pursued his academic courses at St. Louis College in Menin, near the French border. He prepared for university at Roulers Seminary, where he was graduated with high honors in 1885. In fitting himself for the church he chose one of the pioneer fields within the scope of the spiritual advance, the remote western American states. Entering the American College at Louvain, he was a student there three years, took his orders, and then in August, 1888, left his homeland for the distant scenes of his labors. On the 13th of September following he arrived in Montana, where for nearly a quarter of a century he has conducted his work.

The first year was spent in Helena, at the Episcopal residence, from where he gave his attention to the outlying parishes of the diocese, preaching regularly at Bozeman, Livingston, Great Falls and other places. This was a very busy year, during which he became acquainted with the people and the necessities of the church in this region. The enthusiasm of Father Coopman for the spiritual improvement of his people has not been less than his endeavors for the upbuilding of his church in its material facilities, but his record as a business organizer and builder is easier to write and forms a conspicuous series of achievement. In the early years the diocese was greatly in need of church buildings, parochial residences, cemeteries and other properties, and had not means to secure them. During the first year of his labors the foundations for the first Catholic church at Great Falls were laid. In 1889 he was transferred to Bozeman, where he remained eighteen months, and during that time the house for the priest which had been begun was completed and a parish cemetery obtained, and he also built a church at White Sulphur Springs. After Bozeman he spent six months in Miles City, with Park, Yellowstone, Custer and Dawson counties in his parish, over whose extensive domain he did much pioneer work. At Livingston, his next charge, the foundation of a church had been started, and he collected and paid out ten thousand dollars for the completion of the building, and also built a priest's house. While in that parish he also constructed a church at Red Lodge, and paid a large debt on the church at Billings.

In January, 1899, Father Coopman took charge of St. Peter's church in Anaconda. At that time the church was unfinished and a debt of four thousand dollars burdened the congregation. Under his leadership the building was completed and the debt discharged, and the church was provided with the finest bell in the state. He was pastor of St. Peter's for two and one-half years, when he was transferred to St.

Paul's, and the present rectory was completed in 1902. The following year he erected St. Paul's parochial school. In numbers, working organization and charitable efficiency, this congregation (St. Paul's) has become one of the strongest in Montana. Father Coopman has been identified with Anaconda for thirteen years, and the benefits of his character and work have made a better city and people. His energy as a business administrator needs no further comment. Just as substantial though not capable of statistical statement have been his efforts for the welfare of his people. He is a kindly, beloved pastor, and his broad-mindedness and impartial helpfulness have endeared him to all classes irrespective of creed. In his pastoral service in Montana he has found it necessary to use four languages, and he speaks them all fluently. In 1897-98, after more than ten years' absence, he revisited Europe, and at Rome was granted a special audience with the Pope. In 1909 he made another extended tour, which took him to Rome and the Holy Land and other countries about the Mediterranean. He also visited his old home in Belgium.

Father Coopman is one of the best types of the church's servants. Loyal and devout, an organizer and builder, a comforter to the weak and helpless, he found his work in one of the few remaining fields of America yet practically undeveloped, he accomplished labors the fruits of which will be enjoyed by subsequent generations, and in the era of wonderful developments which mark the past history of Montana his services are worthy of high and lasting commendation.

J. C. ADAMS, superintendent of the Boston and Montana Mines Department, of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, has for nearly twenty-five years been identified with the mining interests of Montana, and since 1900 has been a resident of Butte, where he is numbered among the city's representative citizens.

Mr. Adams is a native of Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands, and was born July 17, 1867. His father, Edward P. Adams, was born and reared in Maine, but when a young man went to the Hawaiian Islands, where he resided for a period of thirty years, during which time he was prominently identified with the business interests of that city, acting for a number of years as the American consul. He subsequently returned to the United States and passed his remaining years in Cambridge, Massachusetts, where his death occurred. He married Miss Caroline Wright, who died in Honolulu.

J. C. Adams passed his boyhood days in Honolulu until about the age of eight years, when he was sent to Castine, Maine, there completing his preparation for college. Entering Harvard university, he pursued a special course as a member of the class of 1887. Mr. Adams went to Portland, Oregon, where he was located for about one year, and then came to Montana in 1888, which has ever since been the scene of his activities. His first employment in this state was at the Hope Mine, at Philipsburg, where he remained two years. Subsequently he was for a period of five years connected with the Bi-Metallic Mine near Philipsburg. In 1901, he entered the employ of the Boston & Montana Company as foreman of the Pennsylvania Mine, and in 1904 was appointed general superintendent of the Boston & Montana Mines, in which capacity he has ever since remained. Mr. Adams is one of the best known and most capable men in the mining world of Butte, where his business experiences have been of a broad and varied character, and his present high position has been earned solely through merit. During the famous underground fight between the Amalgamated and the Heinze Companies, Mr. Adams had charge of the proceedings for his company, in which his skill and ultimate success are a matter of history in Butte.

In political matters he is a stalwart in the ranks of the Republican party, and while no aspirant for political honors he is one of the party's counsellors and advisers in this section of the state. In a fraternal way he is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, while socially he is a member of both the Silver Bow and University Clubs.

At Butte, in March, 1898, Mr. Adams was married to Miss Ethlyn Caldwell, who was born and reared in Michigan, and two children have been born to them: Nina, born in 1899, and Jaquelin, born in 1908. Both Mr. and Mrs. Adams are well known in the best social circles of Butte.

WILLIAM A. ORGAIN. One of the most progressive, enterprising and farseeing business men of Montana, William A. Orgain, president of the W. A. Orgain Company, at Wibaux, and interested in numerous other enterprises of an extensive nature, has been made a successful merchant through careful training. While it is probably true that in legitimate business, aside from all speculation, merchandising is the most profitable, it is also true that in no line is there more necessity for shrewd business sense and positive knowledge of relative values and fluctuating markets.

Mr. Orgain was born in Williamson county, Texas, March 17, 1860, and is a son of John Henry and Margaret (McMordie) Orgain, the former a native of Virginia, who is now living at Temple, Texas, at the age of eighty-six years, and the latter born in Tennessee and passed away when William A. was eighteen months old. After his first wife's death Mr. Orgain married a Mrs. Gavin, and they had four children, of whom three survive. Since 1883 John H. Orgain has lived a retired life, although for many years he was engaged in mercantile pursuits at Salado, Texas.

William A. Orgain commenced his education in the school houses in his native locality, and subsequently attended Salado College. In 1879 he began his career as a cowboy in Texas with his uncle, Robert McMordie, with whom he came on the trail overland from Texas through to the Platte river near old Fort Fetterman, Wyoming. He later returned to Texas, but in the spring of 1880 came over the trail to Cheyenne, Wyoming, and for some two or three years was in the employ of Walker & Johnson, or until they closed out their business. During the following season he was with another outfit, and he then went to the Panhandle country in Texas and worked for Thomas Ward until 1885, in which year, with Jesse Bourland, he bought horses and came overland to South Dakota. During the summer of 1886 they sold their horses in the Dakotas and Minnesota, and Mr. Orgain then became connected with the E 6 ranch, belonging to Clark & Plum, on the Grand river in South Dakota, where he remained for two years. During the summer of 1888 he associated himself with the Hashknife outfit, and in the fall of the same year came overland with cattle to Dawson county, Montana, and delivered the stock to Pierre Wibaux, with whom he continued to work until the fall of 1890. At that time he became associated with Frank Cannon, and purchased the general store of Fountain Brothers at Wibaux, which was conducted under the firm style of Cannon & Orgain until 1896, when Mr. Orgain purchased his partner's interest. The original investment was about $3,000, but from time to time this was enlarged, and in 1904, the W. A. Orgain Company was incorporated, with Mr. Orgain as president; his wife, Mrs. Cetious Orgain, as vice-president; and L. C. Faltermeyer as secretary and treasurer. This firm, which has large, well-appointed quarters in Wibaux, deals in general merchandise, including groceries, hardware, dry goods, boots and shoes, crockery, glassware, sporting goods, wagons and farming machinery of all kinds. In 1902 Mr. Orgain was the organizer of the Dawson County

J. C. Adams

Bank, of which he was president until 1906, and in that year sold his interests to W. H. Freeman. He has been president of the Wibaux Chamber of Commerce since its organization, is a director in the Montana Life Insurance Company, an extensive stockholder in three elevators and the owner of a section of land three and one-half miles from Wibaux, another section six miles from the city and 1,120 acres about twenty miles from the city, having seven hundred acres under cultivation. Fraternally he is connected with Wibaux Lodge, No. 67, I. O. O. F., and in his political views is a staunch Democrat. The valuable lessons a young and thinking generation can glean from such a sterling character as Mr. Orgain presents are briefly these: That natural ability, with a good education, coupled with tact and restless energy, are sure roads to success in business, as well as in the social and political fields. Only a man of the right material could readily doff the cowboy's chaps and take up the merchant's ledger, learn the details of a vast business, and in a few short years place himself at the head of one of the leading enterprises of its kind in the community, beside finding time to look after the interests of his city and conduct his operations so as to be of the most benefit to his community.

On November 23, 1895, Mr. Orgain was united in marriage with Miss Cetious C. Wills, who was born in Kentucky, daughter of Simpson M. and Sallie P. Wills, and to this union there have been born two sons, Arthur Bland and Kellogg M., who are being given good educational advantages and receiving a training that will enable them to succeed their father in business or to take any position in life which they may be called upon to fill.

CHARLES A. TUTTLE. A successful business man and public-spirited citizen, Mr. Charles A. Tuttle has been identified by residence with Anaconda for nearly a quarter of a century. He began his career as a worker for others, and by industry and ability became master of his own circumstances and now for many years has been proprietor of the leading undertaking and livery business in Anaconda.

Mr. Tuttle was born on the 6th of January, 1860, at Newmarket, New Hampshire. His education was in the public schools, ending in an academy at Northwood, New Hampshire. When he was eighteen years old he became a bookkeeper and accountant for a wholesale clothing house of Newmarket. His connection with this firm continued for eight years at the end of which time he determined to seek his fortune in the western country. In June, 1888, having come out to Montana, he became payroll clerk and accountant for the A. C. M. Company at Anaconda. This was his first experience in Montana, and after two years with this establishment, in August, 1890, he started a business of his own as dealer in hardware and house furnishings. In May, 1900, after ten years as a successful merchant in this line, he sold out and then engaged in the undertaking business. In May, 1909, he bought what was known as the Boyd Livery Barn, and since then has combined the two enterprises under his own name. His large patronage is due to the thoroughly modern and excellent equipment and a very progressive manner of doing business.

Mr. Tuttle is a loyal son of his adopted state, and having succeeded himself, believes that here is the best field for others to find prosperity. He takes a keen interest in the welfare and progress of his own community, and has been honored with public responsibilities. For six years he served as chairman of the board of education, and is now closing a six-year term as county commissioner, to which office he was elected in 1906. His politics is Republican. He is the owner of valuable city real estate, both business and residence property. Fraternally he is a Mason, both a Knight Templar and Shriner, was exalted ruler of his lodge of Elks for the year 1909, and is also affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Fraternal Order of Eagles.

Mr. Tuttle was married in the east on June 10, 1885, to Miss Addie A. Mathes. Mrs. Tuttle, who is also a native of Newmarket, New Hampshire, arrived in Montana on the third anniversary of her wedding. They are the parents of one daughter, Marjorie Tuttle.

Mr. Tuttle's father now deceased, was a well-known hotel proprietor of Newmarket, New Hampshire, for many years. The mother, whose maiden name was Elizabeth C. Doe, was also a native of Newmarket and is now deceased. There were six children in the family, and but three are living, Charles A., Mrs. Elizabeth Hardy of Boston, and Sophia, now the wife of J. B. Edwards, of New York City.

CHARLES C. HILL. Well known among the business men of Sheridan, Montana, is Charles C. Hill, senior member of one of the most important industrial concerns in the town. He is prominent not only in the business world but also in political and social circles. He came to Montana unknown, with little capital, but with a firm determination to succeed and plenty of courage back of this determination to carry him onward in his career. His success has been due, therefore, entirely to his own efforts. In making his way through the world he has never forgotten that he owed a duty to society, and whenever he has had an opportunity to serve the public it has always been a willing service. He has held various responsible positions of public trust, and his popularity among the people shows how well he carried out his duties. He, like most of the citizens of the state of Montana, believes in the great future of the state, and is ever eager to assist in her growth and development. In his own words: "Montana is all right and in time will be the big state of the Union—not only in mining, but in agriculture, as well as cattle and sheep raising and fruit growing."

Charles C. Hill was born in Washington county, Ohio, on the 17th of September, 1856. His father was Matthew Hill who was also born in the state of Ohio, and who spent all the days of his life there. As a young man he lived much of the time on the river, engaged in steamboating, but he later turned to farming. He was a man of unusual strength of character, and was deeply respected for his real Christian spirit and the generosity which made his charity known throughout the section wherein he lived. He died in 1879, at the age of fifty-eight, and was buried in Ohio. He married in Ohio, Ann Collville, and she is still living in the section where her married life was spent in Ohio. Charles C. Hill is the eldest of the six children born to his father and mother.

Washington county was the home of Charles C. Hill until he was twenty-eight years of age. In the meantime he had spent his boyhood on his father's farm, where he helped in the daily work from the time he was old enough to handle a hoe. His education had been obtained in the public schools of the county, and he had attended the high school for a short time. Upon leaving school he took up the work which he knew the most about and went to work on a farm, at which occupation he continued until he was about twenty years of age. He then took up engineering, serving an apprenticeship in this profession for four years. On becoming a full-fledged engineer he threw himself heart and soul into his profession, for it suited him exactly, and until he left for Ohio he devoted himself strictly to engineering. He next went to Kansas, and there took up farming again, being thus engaged for four years. In 1888 he determined to go further west, and consequently came to Madison county, Montana, where he has resided ever since. For the first eight years he was engaged in his old profession as a mining engineer. During these years the strength of his character and his fearlessness had come to be widely known, so when a vacancy occurred in the post of deputy sheriff it was not surprising that Mr. Hill should receive the appointment. Two years later the sheriff was shot and killed while attempting to make an arrest, and Mr. Hill was appointed to fill his unexpired term. So faithfully and satisfactorily did he do his duty in this difficult and dangerous position that at the end of this term he was elected sheriff for a term of two years. Feeling that he had served in this capacity long enough, at the end of his term he went out to his ranch which he operated for a number of years, and which he still owns and operates. It was in January, 1912, that he began his connection with the lumber business. At this time he formed a partnership with Frank L. Tolson, the firm name being Hill and Tolson, and established the present business, which, although young, is making rapid strides towards success. The firm carries a full stock of all kinds of lumber and building material, as well as farming implements, wagons, buggies and other kinds of vehicles. During the past six years Mr. Hill has served as a commissioner.

In his religious views he is inclined towards the Methodist Episcopal church, but he is a member of no denomination. His wife also prefers the above denomination. Mr. Hill is thoroughly in sympathy with the principles of fraternalism as they find expression in the various secret societies. He is a member of the Masonic order, and has held various offices in this order, having been grand master three times. He is also a member of the Odd Fellows and has been through all the chairs of this order. The Elks may also claim his membership. Politically he is a Democrat and takes an active and prominent part in politics. He has been county commissioner since 1906 and is at present chairman of this board. He has also been a very useful member of the school board.

Mr. Hill was married in Washington county, Ohio, on the 29th of December, 1878, to Mary Bothwell, who was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Bothwell, of Vinton county, Ohio. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hill, three of whom are boys, while two are girls. The eldest is Walter, who is married and resides in Sheridan. The second, Robert, is married and resides at Virginia City, where he is deputy sheriff. Lena is the wife of Frank Tolson, who is her father's junior partner. Harry is unmarried and is the able manager of his father's large ranch. Flossie married Wilbur Marsh and lives in Sheridan.

JAMES W. WEDUM. As secretary of the firm of Lewis-Wedum Company, the largest wholesale and retail mercantile establishment in Glasgow and one of the leading firms of the northwest, James W. Wedum has won a prominence which justly entitles him to a place on the roll of those men who have materially added to the growth and development of this city. From a small beginning, a branch store of the Campbell & Lewis Wholesale Company, the business has grown apace, and where Mr. Wedum began his business experience in Glasgow as a clerk for the Campbell & Lewis Company, with the reorganization of the firm and its incorporation as the Lewis-Wedum Company, he became a partner in the new firm and its secretary. Fortune has smiled upon the every business venture of Mr. Wedum, and he has been identified with various financial and industrial enterprises affecting the growth and prosperity of Glasgow. His life in the community has been one of the strictest integrity, and his citizenship of a quality that has brought him the highest esteem and trust of his fellow men.

James W. Wedum was born in Norway, near to the city of Lillehammer, on September 2, 1870. He is the son of Anton J. and Bertha J. (Hovren) Wedum, both natives of Norway. Mr. Wedum was for years a prominent merchant near Lillehammer, but has been living a retired life for some time now, and he is succeeded in the business by his son, Theodore A. They were the parents of five children, all of whom are living. Albert J. is engaged in the merchandise business in Dillon, Montana; John A. is similarly engaged in Alexandria, Minnesota; Theodore A., as already mentioned, succeeded his father in the established business at home in Norway; James W. followed the business to which the family has devoted itself, that of merchandising; Carrie married Olaf Soby, who is a farmer at Stady, North Dakota.

The boyhood and youth of James Wedum, up to his sixteenth year, was spent in the excellent schools of the homeland, and when he had reached that age he immigrated to America, leaving home alone and making his way entirely unaided. Arriving in the United States, he made directly for Evansville, Minnesota, and there he attended the public schools of that place for a year, following which he went to Minot, North Dakota, in 1888 and secured work as a clerk in the store of Walders & Doyle. He remained with them four months, when the firm failed, and the business at Minot, as well as the branch store of the firm at Glasgow, Montana, went into the hands of their creditors, the Campbell & Lewis Wholesale Company. Mr. J. M. Lewis came to Glasgow to look after the branch, and he took with him Mr. Wedum, who served the firm in the capacity of a clerk until in the spring of 1899. At that time changes were made in the personnel of the firm and Mr. Lewis, having watched the careful management of the young clerk since his association with him in a business way, saw that it would be the part of wisdom to secure his undivided services and attention of his clerk, and he accordingly was taken into the firm, the new company being known as the Lewis-Wedum Company, with Mr. Wedum as its secretary. Thus from a modest beginning the substantial and prosperous establishment has reached a place of prominence in the business circles of Glasgow and Valley county, and indeed, of the state, and is ever reaching out and widening its scope of operations, until it now employs a force of twenty men, where three were sufficient for its requirements when the firm was organized. When Mr. Lewis organized the First National Bank of Glasgow, Mr. Wedum became a stockholder and is a director of the bank. He is the owner of a considerable amount of city realty and farm lands in the county, and among his Glasgow possessions his own residence is especially worthy of mention, being the finest in the city. Mr. Wedum is a man of homelike and domestic tendencies, and is happier in the quiet enjoyment of his home life than in any other place. His position in Glasgow, either socially or from a business standpoint, is most secure, and he and his family enjoy the highest regard of all who are privileged to know them.

Mr. Wedum is a member of the Masonic fraternity, also of the Odd Fellows, in which order he has held all offices, and has been secretary of the Glasgow lodge since its organization in 1894.

In 1891 Mr. Wedum married Miss Ida M. Hauge of Albert Lea, Minnesota, and four children have been born to them: Arnold, Karl, Bertha and Maurice.

THOMAS A. WALSH. That person who knows his own mind and understands his own ability, who chooses a congenial trade or occupation early in life, thoroughly masters its principles and continues to work at it persistently and intelligently usually succeeds. Most people are able to become really expert in but one line of endeavor, and it is a fortunate circumstance that enables them to commence their lifework in a channel to which they can bring their best endeavors and greatest enthusiasm without wasting valuable years in discovering their true bent. A well known man of Butte whose entire business and industrial career attests the truth of these general statements is Mr. Thomas A. Walsh, secretary and treasurer of the Montana Iron Works, with which during the past fourteen years he has served successively as foreman, general manager and secretary and treasurer.

Mr. Walsh is a native of Peoria, Illinois, in which city he was born, July 26, 1861, spent his early boyhood, was educated and learned his trade. His parents, John and Catherine (Halligan) Walsh, came to this country from their native Ireland when a boy and girl, and both the Walsh and the Halligan families were early settlers in Peoria. John Walsh was a man well known up and down that section of the country for many years, he having been a boat owner who ran his steamboats with their cargoes on the waters of the Illinois and lower Mississippi rivers, and he continued to maintain his residence in Peoria up to the time of his death, in 1901. Thomas A. was fourth in line of a family of nine children.

When sixteen years old, having finished his studies at the parochial school in Peoria, he was apprenticed to learn the boiler-making trade in the Central Boiler Works of his native city. Upon completing his four-year apprenticeship the young man went to Chicago and worked at his trade in that great metropolis for about two years. The opportunity then presented itself to go to the northwest territory of Canada, and he spent thirteen months in that section of country in the employ of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Following this he returned to his home at Peoria, and having by the exercise of thrift and industry succeeded in saving sufficient to finance the deal, in partnership with his uncle, Michael Halligan, he purchased the Central Boiler Works, where a few years previous he had been but an apprentice boy.

A year later, however, Mr. Walsh disposed of his interest in the works and went south as far as Texas, working at his trade in a number of the larger cities of that part of the country. Later he turned his steps toward the northwest, and in March, 1888, established his residence in Butte and has been a prominent citizen of this progressive city continuously since that date. Shortly after his arrival here he formed a partnership with Mr. Thomas McGrade, and the firm installed the Vulcan Iron Works plant and continued to do a growing business until 1908. The business depression which swept the country about that time affected the operations of the plant, however, and it was found advisable to dissolve the partnership, Mr. Walsh retiring.

Having established a reputation as a thorough business man and one with expert experience and ability in all lines of his trade, Mr. Walsh found no difficulty in making a satisfactory connection and was immediately importuned to accept a position as foreman of the boiler shop of the Montana Iron Works. The Montana Iron Works is one of the most extensive operators in its line in this part of the country, employing an average of forty skilled workmen in its various departments, and filling contracts for a large number of well satisfied customers in all portions of the northwest. Mr. Walsh during the fourteen years that he has been connected with the works has amply proven his ability to cope with all emergencies and has been a potential factor in increasing the demands upon and output of the factory.

While he has at all times devoted the greater part of his time and energy strictly to business, he yet finds time to take an active interest in social, religious and civic affairs. In politics he is a Democrat and in 1894-96 proved himself to be an efficient public official in the capacity of alderman from his ward. He is a devout member of the Roman Catholic church and contributes liberally to its charities and benevolences.

Personally he enjoys a wide popularity and is highly esteemed for his many fine qualities as a man and a citizen throughout the community in which he has lived so long.

On May 5, 1897, at Deer Lodge, Montana, Mr. Walsh was united in marriage with Miss Barbara Vilsmeier, who was born in Minnesota, the daughter of John Vilsmeier. Mr. and Mrs. Walsh occupy a comfortable and attractive home at 745 South Main street.

WALTER WILLIAM WATKINS. The present efficient city treasurer of Billings, Montana, Walter William Watkins, in whom the citizens of that municipality have expressed their confidence by constant re-election to his responsible office, has had an active and varied career. Born in the south, before he had attained his majority he turned his face toward the west, and for a number of years traveled extensively in various capacities, finally locating in the city of Billings, where for the past five years he has filled his present position, his able administration of affairs winning the confidence and admiration of his fellow citizens. Mr. Watkins was born on a farm near Lexington, Kentucky, July 27, 1868, and is a son of Edwin George and Sarah (Wagner) Watkins.

Edwin George Watkins was born in Scotland, in October, 1832, and was a youth when brought to this country by his father, George Watkins. The latter first settled on a plantation near Lexington, but subsequently engaged in the hotel business in that city, and later removed to Canton, Missouri, where he built the Canton Hotel and was its proprietor during the remainder of his life. Edwin George Watkins spent his boyhood days under the parental roof and received his schooling in Kentucky and Missouri, being given a collegiate education. During the greater part of his life he was engaged in school teaching, and for twenty or twenty-five years was well known as an educator. His wife was born at Nashville, Tennessee, in 1850, and died in 1888, and since her death he has lived practically retired, his home now being with his daughter, Mrs. Benjamin Allensworth, of Wichita, Kansas. In political matters he is a Democrat, and he and his family have always been connected with the Congregational church. Five children were born to Edwin G. and Sarah Watkins, namely: Walter William; John B., who is living at Kahoka, Clark county, Missouri; Minnie, the wife of Benjamin Allensworth, of Wichita, Kansas; Nannie, who married a Mr. Hicklin; and Lena.

After completing the curriculum of the public schools of Canton, Missouri, Walter W. Watkins attended the Gem City Commercial College, Quincy, Illinois, and in February, 1888, removed to Helena, Montana. Subsequently he travelled throughout the west, going to California, Mexico, Colorado and Wyoming. In Colorado he represented the McCormick Harvester Company at both Greeley and Denver, and on going to Wyoming purchased land under the Cory act and spent two years in ranching. Coming at this time to Montana, he worked for the Diamond W. Ranch and later for Lehfelt Brothers, and in 1898 accepted a position with the Babcock Hardware Company, remaining in the employ of that concern for five years. At that time Mr. Watkins joined the Billings police force, and after a short time became a member of the fire department, with which he was connected at the time of his first election, in April, 1907, to the office of city treasurer. The sound, capable administration which followed his election made him the choice of his party in 1909, and he again received the election in 1911. As a public official Mr. Watkins has ever displayed a keen interest in the welfare of his adopted city, and the manner in which he is discharging the duties of his high office testifies to his ability and integrity. His politics are those of the Democratic party, but organization lines have never been considered in his friendship and he is popular with both parties. He is a member of Billings Lodge, No. 394, B. P. O. E., being state treasurer of the order; of Fraternal Order of Eagles; of Billings Camp, No. 6269, M. W. A.; and Yellowstone Hive, K. O. T. M.

On February 17, 1898, Mr. Watkins was married to Miss Florence Emma Goodyear, who was born at St. Charles, Illinois, daughter of Frederick P. Goodyear. Mrs. Watkins' father, who died in 1906, at the age of fifty-nine years, was a machinist by trade and spent the last thirty-five years of his life in St. Charles, where his widow now resides. They had three children: George, who is foreman of a file factory at Cleveland, Ohio; Mrs. Watkins; and Frederick P., Jr. Mr. and Mrs. Watkins have two children, Roy E. and Walter G., who are attending school.

JOHN LAWLER. Montana offers so many examples of self-made men who have won prosperity and honor through their own industry and strength of character that it is hard to select from the great number those who most truly typify the Montana spirit, but we are safe in including among these John Lawler, of Anaconda. Not only possessing the necessary requisites for success in a new country, courage and a capacity for hard work, but having the keen eye and clear brain that is able to recognize opportunity when it presents itself, he has risen from humble beginnings to one of the prominent and well known business men of this hustling Montana city. He has held a number of positions of public service, and these have been given to him through recognition of his ability and public spiritedness. In every position which he has held he has entered upon the work with the same zest which he brought to his personal affairs and his work has been very satisfactory to the public.

John Lawler is a native of far famed County Clare, Ireland, his father being John Lawler, who spent his life as a farmer in this, his native county. His mother was Johanna Odonnell, who is yet living on the old farm in County Clare. His father died in 1902. John Lawler is the eldest of four children, the others being: Michael Lawler, who is connected with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company at Anaconda; Thomas Lawler, who died in Boston, Massachusetts, in 1908, and James Lawler, who is a farmer in County Clare.

The date of John Lawler's birth was the 7th of May, 1865. He grew up on his father's farm, receiving his education at the hand of the schoolmasters of his native county. Of an ambitious and adventurous spirit, at the age of seventeen he carried out his long cherished plan of seeking his fortune in the land of promise and so embarked for the United States. On his arrival in this country he went to New Britain, Connecticut, where he found employment as a machine hand in one of the big factories. Here he remained for several years, ever watching for a chance to better himself, and saving his wages that he might improve his conditions if a chance offered. He was thus enabled to learn the trade of stationary engineer, and having mastered this he followed his new profession for three years at New Britain. In 1888 he determined that the far west offered more opportunities to a man of his education and character than the east and so he came to Anaconda, Montana. Proof of his ability and the high character of his work is to be found in the fact that he secured employment in the Anaconda Copper Mining Company as an engineer and was placed after a time in charge of their largest engine. This position involved a responsibility that would never have been entrusted to a man who was not only a master of his trade, but one who could always be trusted and therefore speaks well for the stability of Mr. Lawler's character even at this early date. He remained in this position for ten years, watching continually for any opening by which he might be enabled to get a start for himself.

At last seeing his opportunity to establish himself as an undertaker, he learned the embalming business and ventured into the undertaking business in a modest way. From this small beginning his business has grown until today it is the leading one in its line in Anaconda. On January 1, 1912, Norris Climer became a partner, the firm name being Lawler & Climer.

Mr. Lawler, by his industry and honesty has made friends in the various classes of people with whom he has come in contact and the people of his city have shown their appreciation of his good qualities by electing him to the office of alderman. He served in this position for one term, and in 1908 was again placed in a public position by being elected city and county coroner as the nominee of the Democratic party. He is now (1912) the present incumbent of this office and during all of this time he has given earnest and loyal service to the people. Learning the value of money through years of having to go without it, he has learned to appraise an investment at its true worth and has consequently been fortunate in various financial ventures. He is the owner of valuable agricultural and mineral lands and has considerable money invested in city realty. The Deer Lodge County Fair has come in for a large share of his time and as a director of this he has been instrumental in its success every year since its inauguration. Mr. Lawler is also chairman of the board of police commissioners.

The principles of fraternalism have always made a strong appeal to Mr. Lawler as his membership in numerous organizations will testify. He is a member and prominent worker in the Knights of Columbus, and belongs to the Catholic Order of Foresters. He is also a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, of the Eagles and of the Fraternal Brotherhood. In the fraternal order of the Moose he holds the office of past dictator.

The wife of Mr. Lawler, Annie Flynn, whom he married in Anaconda on the 3rd of July, 1899, is also a native of Ireland. They have four children, Lorene, Frank, Florence and Lorn. All of the family are devoted members and attendants of the Roman Catholic church.

Montana is proud to have such citizens as John Lawler, who have won their successes through the merit of honest service rendered and not through pull or through an unusual cleverness in getting something for nothing. A young man just starting out in life would do well to look at John Lawler and see that success can be won by keeping one eye on possible opportunities and the other on one's work. Mr. Lawler never neglected his work for one instant, but he somehow knew when a choice bit of land was about to be placed on the market and he was always ready with his offer.

* MILES FINLEN. The statement that "Death loves a shining mark, a signal blow," is truer than it is old, and seldom in this part of the country has it had a more suggestive and impressive illustration than when the shaft of the "insatiable archer" reached the heart of the late Miles Finlen of Butte, a pioneer mining man of prominence, owner of the Finlen Hotel, public official and citizen of Butte beloved by every rank and class of the people at the time of his death, which occurred in 1911, on the day devoted to reverence to the patron saint of his native land.

Mr. Finlen was born in County Wexford, Ireland, on February 14, 1847, and died in Butte, Montana, on March 17, 1911. The city of his birth is pleasantly located on the River Slaney, and has considerable river and some foreign commerce, especially in dairy products. The influence on the subsequent career of Mr. Finlen exercised by his native place and its commercial activity is difficult to estimate, as he was brought from it to Canada by his parents when he was but four years old. In his new home he lived to the age of seventeen years, when he left and went to Buffalo, New York, and a short time afterward to Erie, Pennsylvania. Then, after a time, he sought a new home in a far distant region, crossing the continent to California and locating at Grass Valley in that state.

It was at Grass Valley that Mr. Finlen got a good insight into the mining business, and in 1867, when he was twenty years old, he went from that city to Virginia City, Nevada, then at the height of its glory as a mining camp and rich producer of the precious metals. It is probable, therefore, that the bustling and intensive activity of American life, as he saw it, was the inspiration of his enterprise in business. But his genial and companionable disposition, his responsive heart and open hand, to every claim of humanity and his easy assimilation of every mood of the plain people of this country, which is always the expression of the great throbbing soul of mankind, were inheritances from his race, and among the best expressions of them this part of the country has seen.

The last home of Mr. Finlen's parents, Thomas and Elizabeth (Lacy) Finlen, was at Bay City, Michigan, where the mother died in March, 1899, at the age of eighty-four years, and the father on August 10, 1909, at the age of ninety-six. They were natives, also, of Wexford, Ireland, but residents of this country from 1868. In all the different places in which they made their home among the American people they were highly esteemed as sterling and sturdy citizens. Mr. Finlen's grandmother on the father's side was Mary (Dunn) Finlen, a notable woman who lived to an advanced age and made her mark in enduring phrase on the people around her.

While living in Virginia City, Nevada, Mr. Finley formed an intimate acquaintance with the late Marcus Daly, which soon ripened into an enduring friendship that lasted and grew in intensity until the masterly mining king, one of Montana's great gifts to American citizenship and American industrial development and progress, paid nature's last debt. In that city he also became known to William Skyrme and other men since prominent in the larger and upper circles of the mining industry of the world. He engaged in mining with them, and also became a very popular citizen of the community, serving two terms as street commissioner and rising to great prominence and influence in the public affairs of the place.

In 1888, just before the territory of Montana was allowed by the federal government to throw off the youthful dress of immaturity and assume the full habiliments and dignity of statehood, Mr. Finlen took up his residence in Butte, and for fourteen years was one of the large mine owners in the district. He operated the Buffalo mine until 1892, then the Ramsdel Parrot for four years and later the Minnie Healy. These properties were all held by him under lease and bond and became famous under his development, usually while in his control, having a working force of five or six hundred men. In 1900 he disposed of his mining interest in Butte, having in 1895 purchased the McDermitt Hotel which has since been known as the Finlen and which he conducted for one year before his death. It is now conducted by his son. For several years Mr. Finlen owned a fine stud of race horses, to the purchase and development of which he gave much time and attention. They all came from the famous Marcus Daly stock farm. For several years he made his home in New York and had a stable at Gravesend. After locating at Butte Mr. Finlen soon became an influential force in the affairs of this city, and in the first session of the state legislature was made sergeant-at-arms of the house of representatives. He took a prominent part in the fight for the location of the state capital, favoring Anaconda because of his warm friendship for Marcus Daly, the champion of that city in the contest, and showed himself a warrior worthy of any opponent's steel. When the final test came he was a member of the legislature from the county which gave the deciding vote in the long, agitating and state-wide struggle.

Mr. Finlen was largely successful in his mining projects, prospered in all his other lines of business, managed all his affairs with judgment and accumulated a considerable estate. He invested in Butte real property on a rising market, and at the time of his death owned the Finlen Hotel and other houses and lots of value in the city. He was recognized as one of the men of large substance in a worldly way in the city, and was universally esteemed as one of Butte's most progressive, public spirited, enterprising and useful citizens.

When the hour of his demise approached the people of the city of all classes showed the high appreciation in which they held him. His final illness lasted many months, and he knew throughout its continuance that its end meant his death. But the courage and sturdy qualities of elevated manhood that had been prominent in his whole career sustained him and became conspicuous. To his devoted wife, who watched constantly at his bedside day and night, he was ever tender and considerate, easing her sorrow with cheering words, and to the friends who called to see him in great numbers he talked with the utmost strength and encouragement. His brother, Patrick Finlen, died several days before he did, and as his death was expected every hour, the body of the brother was withheld from burial in order that both might be laid to rest together. After the death of Miles the bodies were laid in state, side by side, in the Finlen Hotel, and hundreds of sorrowing friends of both men came to view them and pay their last respects to the departed.

The funeral services took place at St. Patrick's Catholic church, where solemn high mass was solemnized over the remains of the brothers. The pall bearers, honorary and active, were selected from the intimate friends of the brothers who had known them for many years, and the lodge of Knights of Columbus and the Butte Lodge of Elks, to both of which Miles Finlen had belonged, attended with almost their full membership. The brothers were buried in St. James Cemetery, Bay City, Michigan.

Mr. Finlen was married in Virginia City, Nevada, on June 30, 1872, to Miss Ellen Turner, the daughter of John and Margaret (O'Sullivan) Turner, natives of County Cork, Ireland. Mrs. Finlen's grandparents were John and Ellen (Roche) Turner, and her great-grandmother was Mary Luddy, a matron who has an honorable place in local Irish history. Mr. and Mrs. Finlen had two children, but one of whom is living, their son, James Finlen, who was born in Virginia City, Nevada, on April 14, 1873. He married Miss Mary Ivers, of Salt Lake City, Utah, the daughter of James Ivers, of that city. One child has been born of the union, James Ivers Finlen, who is now attending school in Butte.

The other child, in the Finlen household was a daughter named Elizabeth, who was born in Virginia City, Nevada, on June 23, 1875, and died there on September 19, 1878. Miles Finlen was reared as a Catholic and was always devotedly attached to his church and zealous and effective in its service. The congregation to which he belonged never had, during his connection with it, an undertaking in which he did not take an earnest, practical and serviceable interest, equal if not superior to that of any other member of the parish. In fact, he never did anything by less than his whole force, and he has passed into history in Butte as one of the city's best, most enterprising and most useful citizens.

HENRY L. MEILI. As the first under sheriff of Hill county Mr. Meili has an official distinction which will always be associated with his name in the historic records of this county. Previous to the division of old Chouteau county, he was also actively identified with public affairs, has held various offices and places of honor, and has long been known as one of the prosperous and capable business men of this section of the state.

Henry L. Meili was born at Stillwater, Minnesota, on November 29, 1866, but during his childhood the family moved to St. Paul, where he was reared. After his education in the common and high schools of that city, he began his practical career in the offices of the Great Northern Railway at St. Paul. He was a railroad man for a number of years, and his duties in that line first brought him into Montana. In the general offices at St. Paul he received recognition and advancement as a young man of capable and faithful performance, and in 1888, at the age of twenty-two, was promoted to chief clerk at Great Falls, Montana. That was his headquarters in this state up to 1894, in which year he was transferred to Havre and continued in the service of the Great Northern at this point for a brief period.

A popular citizen and able business man, he had not resided in Havre long when he was elected to the office of justice of the peace and police magistrate, and appointed one of the first United States commissioners, the duties of which positions he discharged for a number of years. During that time he established a real estate and insurance office, and that has since been his regular line of business in this city. He is one of the most reliable and successful real estate men in this part of Montana, and has transacted many of the large and valuable deals, his business being confined chiefly to the high-class land transactions. For some years Mr. Meili has also been known as one of the successful ranchers and stockmen of this vicinity. His ranch is located about five miles from Havre, and its activities afford him both a highly profitable and practical business and a means of diversion, so that he spends all his spare time in superintending its operation. His ranch is considered one of the finest properties of the kind in Hill county.

Mr. Meili was deputy assessor of Chouteau county, and when the county was divided and Hill county created he was the first under sheriff, the duties of which office he performed in addition to looking after his many varied interests in the city and vicinity. In politics Mr. Meili is a Democrat. His fraternal affiliations connect him with the order of Elks, the Knights of Pythias, the Fraternal Order of Eagles, of which he is state president, and the Sons of Hermann. Hunting and fishing are sports of which he is very fond. With a large circle of staunch friends in the state and the diverse business and official interests already enumerated, the career of Mr. Meili has been exceedingly busy and prosperous both for the welfare of himself and for his community.

Mr. Meili was the youngest of three children born to Jacob and Barbara L. (Spoerry) Meili, both of whom were natives of Switzerland. His father came to America during his young manhood, and from the East where he spent a brief residence continued on to the Pacific coast, where he became engaged in the gold mining activities of the early fifties. He was more than ordinarily successful as one of the argonauts of those times in California, and while there laid the basis of a substantial prosperity. He afterwards settled at Stillwater, from which place he moved to St. Paul in 1871, and finally returned to California to spend his declining years and died there. He was born September 2, 1821, and his death occurred September 11, 1898. His wife, who was born in Switzerland in 1834, came to America during her childhood with her parents, who located at Stillwater, Minnesota, among the early settlers of that state; and there she was reared and met and married Jacob Meili in that city. She died in California in 1904, and is buried in that state. Of their three children one is deceased, and the brother of the Havre business man and public official is Reinhold Meili, a resident of St. Paul.

GUSTAVE J. STROMME, a member of the board of county commissioners of Silver Bow county, was born on January 29, 1868, in Norway, and was educated in his native land, where attendance at school for a certain number of years is compulsory on all children. This stimulus to school work was not, however, necessary in his case, for he was always studious and progressive, and eager to make the most for himself out of all his advantages. His father, Just Stromme, was also a native of Norway, as was each of his ancestors on both sides of the house for many generations. He was a farmer and died on the homestead in Norway in July, 1908, at the age of seventy-six years. The mother of the ten children born in the family, of whom Gustave was the fourth in order of birth, was Miss Carrie Eide before her marriage. She was also a Norwegian by nativity, and passed the whole of her life in her native land, dying there in August, 1909. The parents were faithful to the limit of their ability to their large family, giving all of their children the best educational advantages they could afford, and supplementing their mental training by good instruction and high examples in morals at the family hearthstone throughout their long and useful lives.

Gustave J. Stromme passed his early years on the farm, assisting in its labors between the terms of school and after leaving school until he reached the age of twenty. In April, 1888, he came to the United States, and after his arrival in this country, came direct to Butte, where he has ever since resided. He followed various occupations here, working principally in the smelters, until 1905, when he was appointed deputy county treasurer under B. E. Calkins who was then county treasurer. He performed the duties of his office with such intelligence, uprightness and close attention to business that he was marked by the people who witnessed his fidelity for higher official honors, and in the autumn of 1906, was elected county auditor of Silver Bow county for a term of two years, which he served out in full.

Official tenure did not spoil him, as it does so many men. As soon as he retired from the office of county auditor he returned to his former work, and to this he has adhered steadily and profitably throughout the subsequent years. But his public services were not yet ended. In the fall of 1910 he was elected a member of the board of county commissioners, and was inducted into the office in January, 1911. He is still filling this highly important office to the general satisfaction of the people of the county, and adding to his reputation as a capable, conscientious and progressive official, straightforward in all his dealings and zealously energetic in promoting the best interests of the county.

In political faith and activity Mr. Stromme is a Republican, and from the beginning of his citizenship in this country has been active and effective in the service of the party to which he belongs, taking a deep and helpful interest in all local, state and national campaigns. Fraternally he belongs to the Masonic order, holding his membership in it in Mount Moriah Lodge, and to the Woodmen of the World, in which he is enrolled in Butte Camp, No. 153. He is also supreme president of the Scandinavian Brotherhood in Montana, and is well and favorably known in that organization in this section of the country. Also a member of the Butte Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Stromme was married in Butte, on September 7, 1899, to Miss Jennie Swalde, a native of Moorhead,

Patrick Wall

Minnesota, and the daughter of Ole and Annie (Haddland) Swalde. Mr. and Mrs. Swalde were pioneer residents of Moorhead, where Mr. Swalde died a number of years ago and where Mrs. Swalde resides. Mr. and Mrs. Stromme have one child, Marvel Olivia, who was born in Butte on December 8, 1902.

PATRICK WALL, one of the best known mining and real estate men of Montana, and one whose interests are varied and extensive, has been a resident of the Treasure state for nearly twenty-five years. He was born at Hancock, Michigan, March 17, 1870, a son of Martin and Winnifred (Gleason) Wall, both of whom were natives of Ireland. Coming to America, they located at Hancock, Michigan, where the father was employed in the mines, and where his death occurred when he was about forty-eight years of age. His wife died in young womanhood, being but twenty-six years old when she passed away, leaving him with three small sons. Two of that number yet survive.

In the convent school Patrick Wall remained a student until he was twelve years old, at which early age he began work in the copper mines in the section of the state in which he was born and raised. Although but a boy in years, he was large for his age and powerfully built, and readily became a competent hand. After a few years he went to the Gogebic Range country, and was there employed in the iron mines, becoming captain of the Iron Belt mine when he was but eighteen years old.

In August, 1888, he came to Butte, Montana, and at once secured work in the mines. His first employment of this kind in Montana was in the Wake Up Jim mine at shaft sinking. Mr. Wall was employed in the mines of the Butte district until 1895, when he was made superintendent of the Ground Squirrel mine, then the individual property of Marcus Daly. In about 1897 he went to Philipsburg, Montana, to take charge of the Trout Mine, a position that he filled acceptably until he resigned to join the stampede to the Klondyke country in 1897. He entered the Klondyke country by way of St. Michaels, and was there during the great scarcity of food supplies, enduring all the hardships and privations incident to a life in a new and remote mining camp. He engaged in placer mining with great success, as his previous experience in the mining sections of the state enabled him to secure results where the inexperienced would labor under a disadvantage.

Mr. Wall's Klondyke experience, while eventful, was also highly profitable, and upon his return to Butte he at once branched out in business for himself, becoming interested in mining properties in the southeastern section of Butte, that venture being the foundation of his subsequent success. For a time he was in charge of the Grant and Hartford mine at Garnet, Montana, but the properties in which he had become interested in Butte had become promising, and his attention was now given to their development. He had originally leased a property known as the Dutton shaft, and later purchased it, adding other properties, making improvements and developments and finally combining them, forming the East Butte Mining Company, capitalized at $3,000,000. He remained at the head of this company until 1910, when he disposed of the property to its present owners. At that time Mr. Wall had numerous other mining, real estate and industrial interests in Butte and other fields, and had become interested in the real estate firm of the C. S. Jackman Company, which was succeeded by the present firm of Wall & Jackson, one of the representative real estate concerns of the city today. This firm developed the Grand Avenue addition, one of the most substantial additions to Butte's residential sections in recent years. In this project the firm built more than three hundred houses. Mr. Wall has been probably the most extensive individual owner of automatic telephone stock in Montana, his interests in these projects here including large holdings in the Butte, Helena, Great Falls, Bozeman, Livingston, Billings and Spokane systems. He was for some time a director of the Inter-State Telephone Company, and also of the Silver Bow National Bank of Butte. He has large and varied interests, whose management and care receive his personal attention.

In politics, while he has always supported the principles of the Democratic party, Mr. Wall's interest is only that of a business man and a citizen, and ceases with the regular casting of his vote. He is a member of the Silver Bow Club. The career of Mr. Wall has been a highly successful one, in which he has had only his natural ability, judgment and enterprise to assist him. He came to Butte as a young man of eighteen years, a total stranger in the western country, without friends or influence, and at middle age has achieved a success that entitles him to a position among the substantial business men of his adopted city and state.

HENRY CLAY SMITH. While there are many men of prominence who have never become identified with that oldest of fraternities, the Freemasons, it may be set down as a fact that this order selects for its official members only those who possess qualities of the highest citizenship and types of true manliness. Hence to have attained to such an exalted office as eminent commander, Knights Templar, means more than high rank, the reasonable presumption being that one so honored by the fraternity is deserving of the confidence of his fellow citizens generally. Among the substantial business men of Miles City, Montana, Henry Clay Smith, jeweler and watchmaker, occupies a foremost place and in the Masonic connection has served responsible positions for many years. Mr. Smith was born in Monroe county, Wisconsin, March 16, 1872, and is a son of Carl L. and Caroline (Passard) Smith.

Carl L. Smith was born in Pennsylvania, in 1830, and died in Wisconsin in 1893, in the same year as his wife. Her birth took place in Germany and her death in Wisconsin, at the age of fifty-eight years. Of their family of nine children there are two survivors, Henry Clay and a sister, Gussie M., who is the wife of H. W. Zick, residing at Aberdeen, South Dakota. In 1870 Carl L. Smith moved to Wisconsin and was engaged in farming in Monroe county, on his homestead, until the close of his life. He was a Republican in politics but never sought office. With his wife he attended and gave liberal support to the Lutheran church.

Henry Clay Smith attended the country schools in Monroe county and the Eau Claire high school. In the early part of 1888 he went to Aberdeen, South Dakota, and spent six months working as a farm hand, in the fall of that year coming to Miles City, Montana. It was 1890 before he was prepared to begin learning a trade for which he had always had an inclination, and served an apprenticeship under a jeweler and watchmaker for three years. In January, 1894, he went to Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where, he entered an optical college and was graduated in the class of 1895. He then returned to Miles City and went into business for himself and has greatly prospered. He has been one of the active and interested men of this city, ever ready to promote public spirited movements when definitely proved beneficial for all concerned, and in the same spirit has accepted public office, serving one term in 1907 as alderman from the First ward and in 1911 being elected mayor. His administration has been exceedingly satisfactory along every line. His political identification is, with the Republican party. He has recently erected an office and store building.

On June 1, 1899, Mr. Smith was married to Miss

Katherine Wilson, who was born in Cooper county, Missouri, and is a daughter of Harvey Wilson, and they have four children: Marjorie A., Henry Clay, Jr., Marshall H. and Cuthbert P.

Mr. Smith's initiation into Masonry dates back to early manhood and there are few members of the fraternity in Montana who are better known in its various branches. He is a member of Yellowstone Lodge, No. 2, A. F. & A. M., of which he became master in 1899 and is serving in his fourth term in this position. He belongs to Miles City Chapter, No. 14, in which he is serving in his seventh term as secretary, having served two terms as high priest; and is past eminent commander of Miles City Commandery, No. 11, Knights Templar, and is serving in his fifth term as recorder. He is also grand king of the Grand Chapter of Montana and is grand senior warden of the Grand Commandery of Montana and, additionally, belongs to Algeria Temple, Mystic Shrine, at Helena.

DESMOND J. O'NEIL. Montana, symbolizing the west, is a region of young men, of healthy optimism, of unlimited energy. It breeds such young men as Desmond J. O'Neil who, combining the broad viewpoint which is their western birthright, with an eastern training and education, stand ready to develop to their full capacity the many possibilities of the west.

Mr. O'Neil is a true son of Montana. He was born there and has always lived there except when he was away at school. He was born July 15, 1888, in Glendive, and although still hardly more than a youth and just two years out of college, has already proved his ability in the eyes of the citizens of Roundup. He is now county attorney, and if any of the prophecies which his friends make for him can be trusted at all, will graduate from that into many more important offices.

Mr. O'Neil's father, Edmund O'Neil, was born in Ireland and came to the United States as a boy. He first made his home in Wisconsin where his marriage to Katherine Hagan took place. With the building of the Northern Pacific Railroad he came to Montana, settling in Glendive, where he died September 19, 1912. He was a locomotive engineer for many years. They had two other children besides Desmond, John M. and Edward F., who are both married and live in Glendive.

Desmond O'Neil went through the public schools of Glendive, and graduated from the high school of that place. In 1907 he graduated from the Gonzaga College of Spokane, receiving an A. B. degree. He then went to the Georgetown University of Washington, D. C., for his law work, and remained there until 1910 when he received his degree. He commenced practice at Glendive, but when six months later he was appointed county attorney of the new Musselshell county he moved to Roundup. Mr. O'Neil has never been an idler. As a boy in Glendive he earned money by working as a weigher in the wool house, and later helped his father on the ranch until he went away to school. While at the university in Washington he ran an elevator in the capitol.

Mr. O'Neil attends the Catholic church and is one of the Knights of Columbus. Also as a member of the Phi Alpha Delta he is an enthusiastic fraternity man. He is a member of the Pioneer Club and is manager of Roundup's baseball team which is now in its second season. He is a Republican and takes an active interest in politics. Like most men who have lived a great part of their life in the outdoors, he is fond of hunting and fishing, and likes to ride or drive a spirited horse. His favorite sport is baseball. He never misses anything that comes to Roundup in the line of entertainment whether dramatic or musical, and would go many miles to hear a lecture or public speech. Like most of his fellow citizens, O'Neil declares that Montana offers more opportunities for a young man than any other state in the northwest.

JESSE S. WATHEY. As superintendent of the Butte Electric Railway, Jesse S. Wathey has for nearly a score of years been actively identified with one of the most practical and beneficial enterprises of this part of Silver Bow county, the road of which he has charge having been an important factor in the upbuilding of the city and the enlargement of its business operations. Although cautious and conservative, he possesses the energy, judgment and keen business sagacity that enables him to master the details connected with his position, and wins for him the respect and esteem of all with whom he is associated. With his employes he maintains a lively sympathy, showing an unmistakable regard for their feelings and rights, his kindness towards them being highly appreciated. He was born November 9, 1852, in Augusta, Carroll county, Ohio, the place in which the birth of his father, Henry Wathey, occurred November 23, 1832. His paternal grandfather, John Wathey, immigrated from England to America in early manhood, becoming a pioneer settler of Carroll county, Ohio, where he married, and subsequently spent his remaining years.

Henry Wathey, while reared on a farm, was for many years engaged in the oil business, being a pioneer in the Pennsylvania oil fields at Titusville and later at Bradford. The last twenty years of his life were spent as a merchant at Alliance, Ohio, where he died in 1905. He married Mary Jane Manfull, who was born in Augusta, Ohio, in 1830, and died in 1903. Her father, Stephen Manfull, a native of England, immigrated to this country from England when young, locating in Carroll county, Ohio, in pioneer days.

The eldest of a family of six children, Jesse S. Wathey was educated in the rural schools of his native county. Starting in life for himself, he spent two years in Alliance, Ohio, being employed in a lead manufacturing plant. Going from there to the oil fields of Pennsylvania, he remained there for sometime, being at first an employe, and later being engaged in the oil business on his own responsibility. Migrating to Montana in 1888, he took up his residence in Butte on June 6th of that year, and during the ensuing four years was stationary engineer for the City Water Company. On January 1, 1893, Mr. Wathey accepted his present position with the Butte Electric Railway Company, and as superintendent of the road has been very successful, managing the portion of the company's affairs in his charge ably and acceptably to all concerned.

Mr. Wathey married May 30, 1877, in Augusta, Ohio, Jessie Westfall, who was born in Carroll county, Ohio, a daughter of Josiah Westfall, and into their pleasant household five children have been born, namely: Charles, deceased; Fred; Ralph; Mary, wife of E. J. Nash, of Polson, Montana; and Manfull. Politically Mr. Wathey is non-partisan. Fraternally he is a prominent member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons, belonging also to the chapter and commandery, and being a member of the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine.

WILLIAM C. BARDON. From his early childhood, William Bardon heard stories of the golden western state of Montana, where his father had gone as a young man and succeeded in the search for gold, and he formed a childhood resolution to go to that fascinating country himself, when he should grow up. Richard Bardon was born in Kentucky on July 9, 1846. He grew up in St. Louis county, Missouri, as his parents settled in that section when he was but a child. He was educated in the schools of St. Louis, as his father was a well to do farmer of the county. When he grew up, he worked on the farm, and in the spring of 1865, started for Montana. This expedition was driven back by the Indians, but a little later, Mr. Bardon made the trip with Captain La Barge, reaching the goal of his desire after many difficulties. They came by way of Fort Benton, and the Mokwer route, and Mr. Bardon, with Reuben Rader was one of the first to discover gold in what is now Radersburg. By the fall of 1866 he had accumulated quite a fortune, and he returned to his home and people in company with the Reverend Father De Smet. His marriage to Miss Jane Majors was celebrated immediately upon his return, at Florissant, in St. Louis county. The Majors family had come to Missouri in the early days of the last century, and Miss Jane was not only a Missourian herself, but the daughter of a native of the county, and the granddaughter as well. Her maternal grandmother, Mrs. Hytze, attained the age of one hundred and four years.

William Bardon was the eldest of the five children of Richard and Jane Majors Bardon. He was born on June 2, 1870 in St. Louis. He attended the public schools, and also Jones' Commercial College in that city until the age of fifteen. It was then that his father died and as the eldest son, he was obliged to give up school to attend to the affairs of the farm. For four years, he devoted himself to this planning all the while to go west—to Montana—as soon as opportunity should present itself. This occurred in the year of 1888, in the spring of the year. A neighbor, a Mr. Patterson, returned from Montana and shipped to his Montana ranch, some household goods and stock. He offered Mr. Bardon the privilege of going out with the car, and promised him work on the ranch. The boy hastened to accept the proposition, took charge of the car and its contents, and on April 18, 1888, arrived in Townsend, Montana. The ensuing year was spent on the ranch of Marks and Patterson, but as Mr. Bardon was ambitious and could see nothing ahead in that life, he decided to try his fortune elsewhere. He went to Helena and found employment with C. A. Blackburn, an old trail blazer, then engaged in the ice trade. Mr. Bardon remained with him for a year, and then secured a position with Michael Reinig, as a delivery boy.

This step was the true beginning of Mr. Bardon's career. In four years he had advanced from delivery boy to confidential clerk and general manager of Mr. Reinig's store. With his youthful desire of change still unsatisfied, Mr. Bardon resigned his position in Helena and accepted a similar one with Green Brothers at Fort Benton. For four years he had charge of their establishment, and then returned to Helena, where he was again associated with Mr. Reinig as his general manager. This relationship continued until 1904, when the business was incorporated, and Mr. Bardon became vice-president and general manager of the company, the position which he has held ever since. Michael Reinig's store was established in 1865, and began its existence as a very small concern indeed. Today it is one of the principal distributing agencies of groceries and provisions in the state. No small part of its trade is its mail orders for its patrons reside all over the state. Many of them were early settlers of Helena, who have removed to other localities, but who prefer to procure their supplies from this store. A force of fourteen persons is required to handle the trade, and the average business of a year amounts to $150,000.00.

Mr. Bardon has a ranch on Nevada creek, six hundred acres in extent, and also large mining interests at Carbon, Montana, in addition to his mercantile business. He is one of the men who give time, thought and energy to promoting the commercial prestige of Helena. He belongs to the Commercial Club, and to the Retail Merchants' Association, of which he is a director. He is also secretary and director of the Merchants' Livery Company of Helena. His fraternal associations include the Elks, the Modern Woodmen, the Woodmen of the World, and the Knights of Columbus. He is a member of the Roman Catholic church, as are the other members of his family. Mr. Bardon is not active in politics, though in national issues, he supports the Democratic party.

Mrs. Bardon is Anna, the daughter of Michael Reinig, a pioneer merchant of Helena, and for years the employer of Mr. Bardon, his son-in-law. He died in Helena on September 20, 1909, about three months after the birth of his grandson, Richard Michael Bardon, born at Helena, June 29, 1909. The union of Miss Reinig and Mr. Bardon was solemnized September 11, 1907. Mr. Bardon's mother is still living on the old homestead in Missouri, her family home for generations. Her eldest son, however, is a confirmed Montanian. The west has been good to him, but his success is not of the sort which depends upon locality for it is due to close application to the matter in hand, and the habit of rendering at all times the very best service of which he is capable.

HENRY G. KLENZE. Butte, Montana, while a city of diversified industries and interests, as must be the case in any community that has gained so large a population and is situated in a country of varied resources, is nevertheless a mining center primarily, and to this particular feature of development of the surrounding territory owes more of its prestige than to any other single influence. It was those who came into this part of the country in the earlier years, and who prospected the region with the greatest care and intelligence that have won and are still winning the largest financial rewards from mining development. A present highly influential factor in the development and upbuilding of this part of the state who was among the first to select mining claims in this vicinity and who is now an extensive mining operator, with headquarters in Butte, is Mr. Henry G. Klenze, who maintains offices at 49 East Broadway. A mere enumeration of the various mining and important financial concerns with which Mr. Klenze is connected as an official or a large stockholder would occupy considerable space, but among the more important of these may be mentioned the DeLome Gold Mine Company, of which he is manager, the Combination Keating Mining Company, the Fairplay Mining Company, the Butte Standard Copper Mining Company, and the Western Stock Exchange Company, he holding the office of president in the last four named concerns. Mr. Klenze is without doubt one of the most competent judges of the value of mines and mining properties in the west, and throughout the quarter of a century that he has dealt in this class of properties has closed some of the most valuable deals that have been negotiated in the richest mining sections of Montana and the northwest.

Henry G. Klenze is a native of Davenport, Iowa, in which city he was born September 16, 1864. He is of German-American parentage. His father, Charles F. Klenze, was born in Germany and came to America with an older brother when a young man, locating in Iowa, where he spent the greater part of his subsequent life engaged in agricultural pursuits. It was there that he met Miss Henrietta Ficke, who was a native of Iowa, and of German parentage, and whom he married. She died in Iowa in 1872, when the son Henry was a lad of eight years. The father still survives and is now a resident of the city of Chicago.

Mr. Klenze enjoys good educational advantages and after completing his studies in the public schools at Davenport, entered the State Agricultural College at Ames, Iowa, and for two years specialized there in the study of engineering. He was an apt scholar, industrious and quick to learn, and completed his school work when in his eighteenth year. The first two years after having completed his education he spent in the government employ as an assistant engineer with an engineering party that was engaged in taking soundings in the Mississippi river. It is interesting to note that these two years covered the only period of time which Mr. Klenze ever spent in the employ of others.

Resigning his government position in order to go west and take advantage of the great opportunities in that section of the country, he next located at Bismarck, North Dakota, for a season, and while living there formed the acquaintance of Mr. R. F. Barry, a local photographer, and he quickly decided to learn photography of him. This he did, and some time later the two friends decided to go out together on an exploring trip up the Missouri river and into the then unsettled or thinly settled country to the west. Two years were consumed in the trip, which took them as far north as Fort Swinbourne and Fort Benton. The results of their explorations and incidental prospecting were very satisfactory, however, for they succeeded in locating and securing patents to some mining properties which later were developed and proved to be some of the richest in the whole state. These mines were located in the Sweet Grass Mountain, Bear Paw Mountains and Little Rockies. Among the largest producing mines with which Mr. Klenze has been connected as owner might also be mentioned those located in Niehart, including the Big 7 mine, Florence and Fairplay. Enormous dividends were received from these and other mines. One of his most valuable holdings at the present time is the property located at Rodersburg, and joining the Keating and Black Friday mines. He also has other rich properties in the Virginia City district.

While Mr. Klenze now lives in a beautiful residence, with all the comforts and conveniences that wealth can supply, he looks back upon his early prospecting days with the keenest pleasure. The privations and hardships necessarily endured when far from the nearest point of civilization and with no convenient means of transportation had no power to daunt the splendid courage of the young man, and his early enjoyment of life in the mountains was to him one of the greatest pleasures his life has held.

The marriage of Mr. Klenze occurred at Minneapolis, Minnesota, October 8, 1890, when he married Mrs. J. W. MacLane, a widow, and who by her former marriage is the mother of Mary MacLane, the well known Montana authoress, whose home is made with Mr. and Mrs. Klenze. Both Mr. Klenze and his wife are members of the Christian Science church, and contribute liberally to the support of that religious institution. Mr. Klenze belongs to the Silver Bow Club, and is well known in leading lodge life, holding membership in the Woodmen of the World, Foresters order, National Union, and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. This part of the northwest owes much to the energy and enterprise of Mr. Klenze, who has been at all times so active in the development of its latent resources, and his high standing in the industrial, financial, social and religious circles of the city is but one of the evidences of a just recognition of his worth and power as a man and a citizen of the best and rarest type.

IULLUS G. DENNY. A native son of the west who has attained to secure status as one of the representative members of the bar of Montana is Iullus Greenleaf Denny, who is engaged in the practice of his profession in the city of Butte and who is one of the leading and influential members of the bar of the thriving metropolis of the state. He has been prominent in connection with political and general civic affairs in Montana, and prior to establishing his residence in Butte had served as prosecuting attorney of Missoula county. Progressive and public-spirited, he has identified himself loyally with measures and enterprises tending to advance the material and civic welfare of his home state, and his unqualified popularity shows that he has fully measured up to the decisive metewand of public approbation.

Mr. Denny was born at Bethel, Polk county, Oregon, on the 19th of February, 1859, and this date in itself signified that his parents were numbered among the pioneers of that now opulent commonwealth of the Union. He is a son of Aaron and Almira (King) Denny, whose marriage was solemnized in the state of Indiana, on the 10th of April, 1850, and who soon afterward set forth on the long and hazardous journey across the plains to the Pacific coast. The trip was made with ox teams and they endured the full tension of perils and vicissitudes which attended such pioneer immigration. Upon their arrival in Oregon they entered claim to a half-section of government land in Multnomah county, near the site of the present city of Portland, which was then a mere hamlet in the wilderness. Later they removed to Polk county and established their home near Bethel, where they continued to reside until 1877, when they came to Benton county, in the same state, where the father became prominently identified with lumbering operations, in connection with which he not only built and put in operation a saw mill but also built several schooners, which he utilized in his lumbering enterprises. Aaron Denny finally returned to his former homestead in Polk county and there he continued to reside until his death, which occurred in 1901. He was a man of sterling character and marked business ability, and was one who aided materially in the development and progress of the state of which he was an honored pioneer. His wife was summoned to eternal rest on the 13th of July, 1892, in her sixty-fourth year, and her memory is revered by all who came within the sphere of her gentle and gracious influence. She bore with fortitude the hardships of pioneer life, was her husband's true companion and helpmeet and was a devoted and self-abnegating mother. While the family were making the journey across the plains to the new home she stood guard, with a Kentucky rifle, to avert attack by the Indians while her husband was securing much needed sleep. She was a woman of noble and heroic mould and her name merits enduring place on the roll of the brave and gentle pioneer women who did well their part in connection with the upbuilding of one of the great commonwealths of the federal Union. She was born in Indiana, in 1828, and was a daughter of John King, a native of Tennessee and a pioneer of the old Hoosier State. One of her brother, John B. King, became one of the prominent members of the bar of the state of Missouri and was the author of several valuable treatises on federal law. Aaron and Almira (King) Denny became the parents of seven children, all sons, and six of the number were reared to manhood. Iullus G. Denny of this review was the fifth in order of birth and is one of five now living.

Iullus G. Denny was reared to the sturdy discipline of the pioneer farm and his early educational advantages were those afforded in the public schools in the village of Bethel, Oregon. In 1877 he applied for a cadetship in the United States Military Academy, at West Point, and in the competitive examination he secured the appointment, but unforeseen circumstances prevented his acceptance of the coveted position. In the following year he was matriculated in the University of Oregon, where he remained a student for one year. He then devoted a year to the reading of law in the offices of the firm of Daly & Buttler at Dallas, Oregon, and after gaining excellent preliminary discipline under such effective preceptorship he entered the law department of Willamette University, at Salem, Oregon, in which he was graduated with the highest honors of his class, that of 1888, and from which he received his well-earned degree of Bachelor of Laws. On the 12th of September of the same year he was admitted to the bar of his native state, and in preparing to initiate the active work of his chosen profession he decided to establish his residence in Montana. He remained for a time at Grantsdale, Ravalli county, this state, and in the latter part of 1888 he established his home in Missoula, the judicial center of the county of that name. There he entered vigorously upon the practice of his profession, in which his novitiate was of brief duration, as he soon effectually proved his powers and gained reputation as a strong and versatile trial lawyer and well fortified counselor. He gained a substantial and lucrative practice in Missoula county and his professional services eventually found requisition in important legal work outside of that county. In the year following his location in Missoula he was made the Democratic nominee for prosecuting attorney of the county, and his defeat was compassed by two hundred votes, owing to normal political exigencies. The successful Republican candidate was Frederick C. Webster. At the next election Mr. Denny was again made the candidate of his party for the same office, and the strong hold he had in the meanwhile gained upon popular confidence and esteem was significantly shown by his being elected prosecuting attorney by a majority of six hundred votes. He proved a most careful and efficient public prosecutor and his administration in this office has passed upon record as one of the most admirable in the history of Missoula county.

Soon after establishing his home in Missoula Mr. Denny became a member of the law firm of Stephens, Matts & Denny, in which his associates were Judge William J. Stephens and Hon. Elmer Matts. He remained a member of this strong and representative law firm for several years, during which he won marked success and prestige and was retained in nearly every criminal case of importance in the county, —usually by the defense until he was elected prosecuting attorney, after which his services were of course enlisted in the prosecution. He has a high reputation as a criminal lawyer and has been identified with many of the important cases of the criminal code in the state which has been the stage of his professional endeavors from the start to the present time. In 1893 Mr. Denny formed a professional alliance with Joseph M. Dixon, under the title of Denny & Dixon, and this effective association continued until his removal from Missoula to Butte. He has been established in the practice of his profession in the Montana metropolis since 1888, and his reputation in his chosen vocation is statewide. He has been concerned in much of the important litigation in the state and federal courts of Montana and has been specially prominent as a criminal lawyer, as has already been stated. He has been one of the leaders in the councils of the Democratic party in this state and has rendered yeoman service in the various political campaigns, in which connection he is known as a most effective stump speaker and also as an enthusiastic and successful worker in the manœuvring of political forces. He has several times been a candidate before the convention for the nomination of his party for representative of the state in congress. Mr. Denny has made judicious investments in Montana real estate, including city property in Butte, and he is also interested in mining operations of important order. He is fully alive to the manifold resources and advantages of the state of his adoption and is one of Montana's most loyal and progressive citizens.

On the 12th of February, 1892, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Denny to Miss Beatrice T. Reynolds, who was born in the state of Iowa and who was a daughter of John Reynolds, a pioneer of Montana. Mrs. Denny was summoned to the life eternal on the 6th of January, 1906, secure in the affectionate regard of all who knew her, and she is survived by two children,—Robert M., who was born November 20, 1892, attended the public schools of Missoula and Butte; and Thomas R., who was born July 12, 1894, and who is a student in the University of Montana, at Missoula.

JOHN C. FREEMAN has gained distinctive precedence as a citizen and business man at Butte, where he has maintained his home and business headquarters since 1892. He is financial secretary of a number of different fraternal organizations, has money invested in various business projects at Butte and has extensive mining interests in the close vicinity of this city. Mr. Freeman has ever manifested a deep and sincere interest in community affairs and his loyalty and public spirit in all matters affecting progress and improvement are of the most insistent order.

A native of Illinois, John C. Freeman was born at Sidney, Champaign county, on the 24th of March, 1865. He is a son of William Freeman, who was born in Fayette county, Ohio, in November, 1831, and who was summoned to the life eternal at Butte, December 20, 1906. During the strenuous period of the Civil war William Freeman was engaged in railroad work and after the close of hostilities was justice of the peace at Sidney, Illinois, for a number of terms. He came to Montana, settling in Anaconda, in 1890, and for the ensuing eight years was engaged in the general merchandise business in that place. He came to Butte in 1898 and from that time until 1904 was engaged in the retail bakery and grocery business with his son, John C. For two years prior to his demise he lived in virtual retirement. William Freeman married Hannah Clark in 1859 and they became the parents of three children, of whom John C. was the third in line of birth. Mrs. Freeman was born and reared in Ohio and she passed to the life eternal in 1865, at which time John C. of this review was an infant of but a few weeks of age.

John C. Freeman received a good common-school education and at the age of eighteen years he became a school teacher. He was engaged in the pedagogic profession for two years and at the expiration of that time decided to try his fortunes in the west. In the early spring of 1886 he went to Greely county, Kansas, where he pre-empted a tract of one hundred and sixty acres of land. In the following spring he homesteaded another quarter section of land and by May, 1888, had paid for both tracts. On the latter date he came to Montana, locating in Anaconda, where he was identified with an uncle in the dairy business for the ensuing two years, at the expiration of which he entered the employ of the Carroll Lumber Company, remaining with that concern until January, 1892. After resigning his position with the Carroll Lumber Company of Anaconda, Mr. Freeman came to Butte, where for a time he was with the Western Iron Works. Subsequently he became a clerk in Edward Condon's grocery store in south Butte and in 1896 began to work in Gunderson Brothers' general store at Meadville, Montana. In 1897 Mr. Freeman rented the Johnson Hotel, which he conducted with fair success for one year, at the end of which he purchased a general grocery and bakery store, located at 701 Utah avenue, Butte. He disposed of the latter business in 1902 and then became district deputy for the Modern Woodmen of America. He retained the latter position until January 1, 1905. He was made financial secretary for the Modern Woodmen of America at organization of South Butte Camp in 1899, for the Fraternal Union of America in 1898, the Modern Maccabees in 1903, the Fraternal Brotherhood in 1905, and the Royal Court in 1906. He continued as secretary of different ones of above organizations until 1910 and at the present time, in 1912, is financial secretary of the Modern Woodmen of America, the Modern Maccabees and the Fraternal Brotherhood. He has been trustee for the Royal Order of Moose and financial secretary for the Ancient Order United Workmen from 1892 to 1908, of the select Knights and Ladies from 1896 to 1903, of the Order of Pendo from 1896 to 1907 and of Chosen Friends from 1892 to 1896.

Mr. Freeman is financially interested in the Butte Typewriter Exchange and he was the organizer of the Butte Krisp Company, of which he is part owner, in 1911. He is part owner of the Santa Anita mine, located near Radersburg, Montana; holds stock in the Gold Bar Mining Company, of Granite county; and is secretary of the Valley View Mining Company of Madison county. In politics he is an uncompromising Republican and he has been a delegate to a number of important Republican conventions. He has been a notary public for the past nine years.

In January, 1897, Mr. Freeman married Miss Esther Kerr, who was born in Canada in April, 1864, and who was a daughter of Thomas and Sarah (Armstrong) Kerr. Mrs. Freeman was summoned to the life eternal December 31, 1899, and is survived by twins,—Willie C. and Mabel B., whose birth occurred October 9, 1898. The Freeman home is at 415 South Idaho street, Butte.

FRANK A. RUDOLPH. The business career of Frank A. Rudolph, of Great Falls, is a notable example of the truth of the assertion that industry, integrity and progressive ideas, if directed along the proper channels, eventually bring success. Starting in business with almost no capital, by his energy, enterprise and good management he has built up one of the largest business institutions of its kind in the northwest, and from comparative oblivion has raised himself to a position of prosperity in the business world and influence in the public field. Mr. Rudolph was born near Pittsburgh, Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, August 9, 1877, and is a son of August Robert and Minnie (Schultz) Rudolph.

August R. Rudolph was born in Germany in 1838, and shortly after his marriage came to the United States and located in Pennsylvania, where he became a prominent miller. In 1887 he came to Montana, but did not care for conditions as he found them here, and soon returned to Pittsburgh, where for a number of years he was prominent in public affairs. He is now living retired. His wife, also a native of Germany, was born in 1842, and their marriage was solemnized February 7, 1862. On February 7, 1912, they celebrated their golden wedding anniversary at Pittsburgh, all the members of the family being present and many messages of good will and kind remembrances being received. They have had eleven children, namely: John R., Frank A., Charles, Robert, William, Emil, Mrs. Minnie Wayhagen, Mrs. Annie Steinhagen, Mrs. Rose Bocks, Mrs. Bertha Chattle and Miss Tillie.

Frank A. Rudolph secured his early education in the schools of Pittsburgh. Coming to Fort Benton in 1887, he finished the public school course there. He was then sent back east to attend Duff's College, Pittsburgh, where he was graduated in 1885, and in 1888 returned to Montana after working at various occupations in the east. In this state he secured a position with the Boston & Montana Smelter, near Great Falls, but after working ten years there decided to invest his capital in a business of his own and accordingly embarked in the ice business, purchasing a wagon and making the deliveries himself. This humble start was the nucleus from which has grown the Peoples Ice Company, and the small shed which was originally used as a storage house for the ice harvest has given way to three large modern ice houses on Broadwater Bay. Lately Mr. Rudolph has installed an endless chain ice loading machine, with a capacity of seventy-five cars per day, which cost in the neighborhood of $20,000. His three storage plants have a capacity of 35,000 tons of ice for summer consumption, six double teams are used in delivering the product and a fine office building and stables are located in Great Falls. To have accomplished so much in such a short space of time, to have risen from the humble position of driver to the office of president of a large corporation, to have brought a great undertaking to a successful conclusion, marks Mr. Rudolph as one of the most able business men of his adopted city, but while doing this he has found time to engage in other enterprises, among which may be mentioned the Tenderfoot Mining Company, in which he is a heavy stockholder. A stalwart Republican in politics, in 1910 his popularity was evidenced by the large majority by which he was elected to the office of councilman of the Fifth ward. In fraternal matters he is a master Mason and belongs also to the Eagles, and in social, business and public life has made and retained numerous friendships. His religious faith is that of the Lutheran church.

On October 14, 1904, Mr. Rudolph was united in marriage with Miss Caroline Frances Falesik, and two children have been born to this union: Frank Alvin, born October 14, 1909; and Irene Olive, born October 6, 1907.

TONY ANDERSON, permanently established in Sand Coulee as a dealer in men's furnishings and clothing, is one of the well-known men of his community. For eighteen years before he opened up his present store he was engaged in mining in the Sand Coulee district and he thus has acquired an acquaintance that has been of inestimable value to him in his business. His life has been one of varied experience, his actual labors commencing when he left school as a lad of fourteen and began to follow the sea. He is the son of Owen and Bertha (Nickson) Anderson, both natives of Norway, and in Mandel, Norway, Tony Anderson was born on March 20, 1860. The father was born in Norway and died on May 7, 1894, at the age of sixty-seven. He was a saw mill and lumber merchant and carried on that business until his death. Four children were born of their union,—three daughters and one son, Tony, who was the second born. He attended the schools in Mandel until he reached the age of fourteen when he left school and went to sea. He led a sea-faring life for twelve years, and visited many ports in his experience. His work was that of a sail maker and he was an expert in that line. In the spring of 1885 Mr. Anderson gave up the life of a sailor and came to America. He located in Michigan first, and made his way to the iron mines of Ironwood in the Bessemer ore district. He remained there until 1888 when he removed to Sand Coulee, Montana. Again he became connected with mining and for a matter of eighteen years was employed in the coal mines of that district. In October, 1909, Mr. Anderson saw a suitable opening for a men's clothing and furnishing establishment in Sand Coulee, and having sufficient capital to become established in business, he opened up the store which he has since conducted with a most pleasing degree of success. His trade is well established and of a wide and varied character. In addition to the business which he conducts, Mr. Anderson is the owner of the store building which he occupies and of other valuable property in Sand Coulee.

In a fraternal way, Mr. Anderson is associated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and has been treasurer of the local lodge for the past eight years. He is also a member of the Scandanavian Brotherhood of Great Falls. Religiously, he is affiliated with the Lutheran church, in which he was reared in the homeland.

On March 19, 1889, Mr. Anderson was married to Miss Marie Wanvack, a daughter of Andrew Wan-vack, and she died on the 27th of December, 1906, leaving two children. Olga died when six months of age and the surviving daughter, Bertha Regina, who was born on October 19, 1890, still shares the home of her father and looks after the affairs of his household since the death of the wife and mother.

The success which Mr. Anderson has achieved in his life thus far is one of which he may well be proud. Going out into the world dependent entirely upon his own resourcefulness at the early age of fourteen years, he has seen life from all view points, and has seen experiences which perhaps fall to the lot of few. His first employment was as cook's boy on shipboard, and for his services he received the sum of $6.00 a month and his board. The hard life he led in that capacity was insufficient to daunt the hardy young Norseman, as is evidenced by the fact that he continued to follow the sea for twelve years in various service, and his present circumstances are the result of his own efforts, brought about by a combination of hard work, ambition and integrity of the highest order.

HERMAN NALBACH. Many of the most prosperous and popular citizens of Montana are of foreign birth and training, prominent among the number being Herman Nalbach, city treasurer of Great Falls. He was born, May 9, 1851, in the Rhine province, Germany, where he was bred and educated. His father, Christian Nalbach, who was engaged in steamboating during his active career, spent his entire sixty-four years of earthly life in the Fatherland, dying there in 1860. He married Marie Le Bunday, who was born in Germany, of French ancestry, and there spent her life, passing away in 1862, at the comparatively early age of forty years.

The fourth child in a family of six children, Herman Nalbach was educated in his native land, and at the age of fourteen began an apprenticeship of four years at the tailor's trade. He was subsequently employed as a journeyman tailor in his home town until 1871, when he immigrated to America, locating in New York City, where he followed his trade for three years. Going then to Coxsackie, New York, Mr. Nalbach was there engaged in the tailoring business on his own account from 1874 until 1888, being quite successful. Selling out his interests then in that locality, Mr. Nalbach came directly to Great Falls, Montana, arriving in this city in October, 1888. Immediately opening a tailoring establishment, he built up an extensive and lucrative patronage, and carried on a very successful business until 1903, when he was elected city treasurer of Great Falls, a position in which he served five consecutive terms, and which he is now filling ably and faithfully, being one of the most worthy and trusted officials of the municipality. He is an expert accountant, and in the management of his work has established a system of bookkeeping that has since been adopted by every city in the state.

A staunch Democrat in politics, Mr. Nalbach is an active and influential worker in national, state and local affairs. Fraternally Mr. Nalbach is a member, and treasurer, of Euclid Lodge, No. 58, Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons, of Great Falls; is a charter member, and present high priest, of Great Falls Chapter, No. 9, Royal Arch Masons; and is a charter member of Lodge No. 1, Sons of Hermann, which was organized in 1895. The family attends the Episcopalian church, and he is the treasurer of the Church of Incarnation.

Mr. Nalbach married, at Hudson, New York, May 9, 1876, Anna Margaret Bodenstein, and to them four children have been born, namely: Hugo L., born September 12, 1877, in Coxsackie, New York, is now cashier for the Continental Oil Company, in Butte, Montana; Irena L., born at Coxsackie, New York, August 5, 1879, is now a teacher in the public schools of Great Falls; Hubert B., born in Coxsackie, died January 21, 1903, aged 21; and Margaret Elizabeth, born at Great Falls, Montana, February 6, 1890. Mr. and Mrs. Nalbach are congenial and hospitable people, and their pleasant home is at 1127 Sixth avenue, North.

BENJAMIN D. WHITTEN. The advent of the automobile opened up vast possibilities to the enterprising and progressive men of every section of the country, and Montana was not slow in donating its full quota to those who cast their fortunes with the new industry. Every part of the state can now boast of its large connections in this line, and in Great Falls is to be found the Northwestern Automobile and Engineering Company, the founder and president of which, Benjamin D. Whitten, is one of his city's most representative men. Mr. Whitten was born at Ottawa, Illinois, May 6, 1860, and is a son of Melzar and Martha (Cone) Whitten. His father was a native of Massachusetts who came west to Hudson, Wisconsin, about 1868, and was there engaged in the practice of dentistry until his retirement, while his mother, a native of Illinois, passed away in 1889, Benjamin D. being the only child born to their union.

Benjamin D. Whitten secured his education in the public and high schools of Hudson, Wisconsin, attending the latter until he was seventeen years of age. At that time he was apprenticed to the machinist trade in the shops of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, but followed that trade only a short time, he next giving his attention to civil engineering in the service of the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba (now Great Northern) Railroad. After spending one year in surveying through North Dakota and Western Minnesota, Mr. Whitten located at Fargo, North Dakota, and opened a machine shop, which he conducted until the spring of 1887. On March 18, 1888, he removed to Great Falls and for some time followed his trade, and during 1889-90 was chief engineer of the Great Falls Water Works and Electric Light Company. He was subsequently connected with the Street Railway Company until 1893, in the civil engineering department, and chief engineer and head of the steam power plant. On leaving the street railway company, Mr. Whitten engaged in civil engineering and land surveying in and around Cascade county, chiefly in the line of irrigation, and from 1902 to 1908, inclusive, was county surveyor of Cascade county. In 1909 he established the Whitten Automobile Company, and sixty days thereafter it was incorporated as the Northwestern Automobile and Engineering Company, with Mr. Whitten as president, W. F. Kester, vice-president, and J. W. Speer, secretary. The business of the company is limited to the sale and repair of automobiles, and is the sole agent for the Franklin car and Kelly motor truck. Under the keen, shrewd and capable business management of Mr. Whitten the company has enlarged its scope, and has grown steadily from the start. The plant, situated at No. 311 First avenue, South, displays models of the latest makes of various cars, and is fully equipped to do all kinds of repair work. The firm has gained a wide reputation for integrity in its dealings and the standing of its president of business circles has tended to establish the business firmly in the confidence of the community.

Mr. Whitten is unmarried and maintains bachelor apartments in the Murphy block. In political matters he is a Republican, but his private interests have demanded the greater part of his attention and he has not found time to enter the public arena, although he takes a keen and active interest in matters pertaining to the welfare of his community.

ANDREW THISTED. Nearly a quarter of a century ago, Andrew Thisted came to Great Falls, Montana, with a very small cash capital and a very large supply of determination, persistence and inherent, though untried, business ability. He had at that time been in this country only two years, hardly a sufficient period in which to gain a knowledge of language, customs, values and business ideals, but with courage that was born of a desire to establish himself in independent circumstances in the wonderful new West, he embarked in a business venture that has become one of the largest of its kind in this part of the state, and as the years have passed has invaded new fields, winning success through indomitable energy and extraordinary business capacity, until today he stands in the forefront of those who have improved their opportunities and grown with their community. Mr. Thisted is a native of Norway, a country that has given Montana some of its best citizens, and was born June 20, 1864, a son of Nels and Helen (Kalberg) Thisted. His father, a Dane by birth, was sheriff at Laurdal, Norway, an office which carried a life appointment from the king, and in which he was serving at the time of his death in 1874. His widow survived him until January, 1908, and died in her native Norway, having been the mother of nine children, Andrew being next to the youngest.

After completing the high school course in his native country, at the age of nineteen years Andrew Thisted was given his introduction to the mercantile business as a clerk in a general merchandise store in the city of Christiana, Norway, where he remained for about three years. On coming to America, in 1886, he first settled in the city of Chicago, and in that metropolis secured employment in the dry goods store of a Mr. Erickson, with whom he continued two years. The month of July, 1888, saw his advent in Great Falls, where he became a clerk at the Cash Bazaar, then one of the leading stores of the city, following clerical work until August, 1890, when he entered business on his own account. A partnership was formed with T. W. Brosnan, under the firm name of Thisted & Brosnan, and location was made at No. 213 First avenue, South, the business being known as the Hub Clothing Store. Later, larger quarters being needed to handle the rapidly-growing business, the store was moved to No. 305 Central avenue, and after five years removal was made to the Conrad Burke building, at the southwest corner of Fourth and Central streets. Since 1907, in which Mr. Brosnan died, Mr. Thisted has continued the business alone, this being the largest retail clothing establishment in Great Falls, from seven to ten salesmen being required to handle the large volume of trade, which averages approximately $75,000 per year. Mr. Thisted has found that he needed other outlets for his business energy and as a consequence has invested his brains and means in various enterprises of an extensive nature. He is interested in a large stock ranch in Cascade county, comprising 6,000 acres, with great bands of cattle; is president of the Lincoln Land & Livestock Company, with headquarters in Great Falls, and is president of the Famous Clothing Company, of Spokane, Washington. He also owns considerable real estate, including his modern residence at No. 811 Second avenue, South. He is president of the Merchants' Association, a member of the Electric Club, and also is connected with the Scandinavian Brotherhood, the Modern Woodmen of America, and the lodge, chapter and commandery of Masonry, being treasurer of Cascade Lodge No. 34. Politically a Republican, he has taken a great deal of interest in public matters, and from 1901 until 1910 acted as a member of the school board in Great Falls.

Mr. Thisted was married in this city, September 20, 1894, to Miss Augusta Anderson, and five children have been born to them: Norman N., born in January, 1896; Violet, born February 5, 1897; Walter, born in May, 1899; Helen, born in 1900; and Karl, October 13, 1906, all in Great Falls.

A. M. STEVENS. The development of the Northwest on the high plane that has been the rule, and in every department of its natural resources, is due primarily to the superior character and ability of the men who first settled here and thus became the builders of the foundation upon which the present growth and progress depend. It took men with great courage and insight with confidence born of knowledge to foster the new enterprises and to urge the cultivation of untried crops on virgin lands, and that such men were here to do these things is cause for congratulation on the part of all people who now live and prosper in this great country. A well-known pioneer in this development work in this section of the state is Mr. A. M. Stevens, a descendant of a sturdy old New England family, and at present engaged in the real estate and mining business on an extensive scale, in Missoula.

Mr. Stevens was born at Honesdale, Pennsylvania, the son of William and Olive (Bidwell) Stevens. His mother was a native of Massachusetts, while his father was born at Stevens Manor, St. Ives, Cornwall, England, a member of a distinguished English family, who came to the United States when a child and at the time of the Civil war enlisted in a Pennsylvania regiment of the Union army. Later he was transferred to Company B, First New York Cavalry, which served under Sheridan in the Shenandoah valley, and it was while there that he contracted the disease that ultimately caused his death in 1866.

A. M. Stevens when a boy attended the public schools of Pennsylvania, and upon reaching the age of maturity first engaged in business drilling for oil at Bradford, Pennsylvania. In the spring of 1888 he removed with his family to Montana. It was his original intention to locate at Victor and had bought his ticket for that point, but arriving at Missoula he found the railroad not completed to Victor and he accordingly decided to remain here. Previous to coming here, in 1882, he was married to Myrta Wright, a native of Rochester, Minnesota. They have three children, Marguerite O., E. Lucile and Lyman W. Mrs. Stevens is one of the most popular women in Missoula and is especially well known as a member of and worker in the Rebecca lodge, of which she was an early president, and she has also been a delegate to the grand lodge and is an influential member of the home board of the order. Mr. Stevens is likewise a leader in lodge circles among the principal orders with which he is affiliated being the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks.

Upon his arrival in Missoula in 1888 Mr. Stevens first secured employment as a machinist with the Northern Pacific Railway Company continuing in the position for two years. He then became interested in the fruit commission business and with his usual enthusiasm urged the production of horticultural products by growers in this part of the state, becoming one of the pioneer factors in the promotion of the development of this important industry. It was almost entirely due to his efforts and influence that the Northern Pacific Railway Company was induced to furnish fruit trains and in many other ways he was successful in aiding the industry to become established on a profitable basis. Mr. Stevens continued to conduct his commission and mercantile business until 1905 when he disposed of it and turned his attention to real estate and mining brokerage transactions. It was while thus engaged that he secured some valuable mining property and in 1909 he organized the Windfall Placer Mining Company at Windfall Gulch, incorporating the concern during the same year. For twenty-five years he has been a close student of geology and mineralogy.

Mr. Stevens' interest in public affairs has always been particularly conspicuous and effective. Politically he is a staunch advocate of Republican principles. His career as an official extends over several years and embraces occupation of some of the most honorable offices in the gift of the people of this community. He was an alderman from the Second ward in 1894, was public administrator in 1896, while in 1901 and 1902 he filled the mayor's chair with great honor and credit to himself and satisfaction to the public. At one time during his absence from the city his friends sought to thrust further honor upon him and nominated him for the legislature, but this office Mr. Stevens declined to become a candidate for, although he appreciated highly the confidence in him which the action of his friends showed. Personally Mr. Stevens is broad minded and progressive, independent in thought and action, and possesses a character of high morality and unquestioned integrity.

CABOT T. THOMAS. One of the most progressive farmers of the Yellowstone Valley, whose excellent property of thirty thousand acres is situated thirty miles from Billings, in Lake Basin, is Cabot T. Thomas, a man whose activities have always been so directed as to develop to the greatest extent the resources of his community. Born in Nova Scotia, June 25, 1867, Mr. Thomas is a son of John V. and Sytira (Trevoy) Thomas. His grandfather Thomas, a native of Wales, immigrated to Nova Scotia at an early date and followed ship-building and farming.

John V. Thomas was born on St. Mary's Bay, Nova Scotia, in 1838, and as a youth learned the trade of ship-building with his father. He constructed his first vessel when he was only twenty-one years of age and became one of the best known men in his line of business in his native locality, but in after years he sold out his interests and engaged in the lumber business, which he followed in connection with farming during the remainder of his life, his death occurring in 1910. Although he attended school for only eighteen months, John V. Thomas became a well educated man through much personal observation and study. He was fully informed on all matters of general interest, and had enough knowledge of the law to settle various disputes which arose between his neighbors. He was progressive in all things, was the organizer of the first agricultural society in his locality, of which he was the president for the first eleven years of its existence, and at the time of his death had the contract for the building of a railroad into the town of Bear River, Nova Scotia. In political matters he was a Tory, and was recognized as a leader of his party in his district. His wife, who was also a native of St. Mary's Bay, died when Cabot T. Thomas was a mere lad, having been the mother of seven children, of whom six are still living.

Cabot T. Thomas spent his boyhood days under the parental roof and received his education in the schools of Nova Scotia, but when he had reached the age of sixteen years decided it was time for him to start making his own way in the world and accordingly went to County Cumberland, Nova Scotia, where he spent three years in the lumber business. Subsequently he spent some time in traveling to various Canadian points, including Vancouver, British Columbia, and Port Townsend, seeking a place to locate where he could feel that his abilities were given the widest scope. While going up the sound on the steamer "Edith," he became acquainted with Cyrus Walker, the owner of a mill at Port Gamble, and instead of traveling to Seattle, Washington, as he had intended, Mr. Thomas left the steamer at Port Gamble and during the winter of 1887 and 1888 was employed in Mr. Walker's mill.

During the following spring Mr. Thomas came to Montana, landing first at Big Timber, from whence he took the stage down to Melville, and then went on to the American Forks, and secured employment with Lamont, Redding & McVeigh, the well known sheep merchants, with whom he continued during the summer of 1888. In the spring of 1889 Mr. Thomas engaged in the sheep business with his brother, Alfred L. Thomas, but after two years the firm was dissolved, although both brothers continued to carry on the same line of endeavor. This business claimed Mr. Thomas's activities until 1908, when he disposed of his interests therein and in 1909 was one of the organizers of the Montana Fruit and Irrigation Company. In the work of this concern, Mr. Thomas was the first to introduce the steam-plow in this locality, and the success which he attained in plowing the three thousand acre tract of the company caused many agriculturists here to adopt the invention. The company has planted six hundred of the three thousand acres in apple trees and the rest is in various kinds of grains. When the company has completed its plans there will be three thousand acres all planted in apples. The water needed for this great orchard is pumped by a three hundred horse-power pump, and the work that has to be done requires a large force of men even now. When the trees begin to bear a small army will be required to pick the fruit. The company has spent $240,000 up to the present time, and more money will be invested in this great project. The apples planted are of four varieties: Wealthy, McIntosh, Gayno and Jonathan. In the spring of 1910 he began plowing the C. M. Bair 1,000 acre tract with a forty-five horse-power steam engine and a twelve gang plow, and during 1911 had a crop of twenty-five thousand bushels of oats from this land, which is now in a fine state of cultivation and thoroughly irrigated. This property is a model of neatness and gives every evidence of intelligent and systematic management. Mr. Thomas' talents as a business man have made him a prominent figure in the business world, and have given him a solid standing as a substantial citizen, which his continuous transactions, since 1889, without the slightest infringement of his word or of his integrity fully entitle him to. Politically he is a Republican, but he has preferred to leave public life to others and to give his whole attention to his business. Fraternally he is a member of Ashlar Lodge, No. 29, Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons and is popular with his brother Masons.

In November, 1891, Mr. Thomas was married to Miss Ada F. Martin, in Billings, she being the daughter of Robert J. Martin, and a native of California. Four children have been born to this union: Eva Mae, John C., Lester and Ethel.

HON. FRED S. HOUGLAND. The life of Fred S. Hougland, mayor of Thompson Falls, presenting as it does a worthy example to the rising generation, has been one of hard work from his early boyhood, and the high dignity to which he has attained is evidence in itself that the qualities of industry, integrity and perseverance afford the means of distinction under a system of government in which the places of honor are open to all who may be found worthy of them. Mr. Hougland was born August 6, 1867, in Johnson county, Kansas, and is a son of David P. and Sarah J. (Farmer) Hougland.

David P. Hougland was born in the state of Ohio, and came west in 1857, settling first in Missouri. He was residing in that state at the time of the outbreak of the Civil war, and, casting his sympathies with the north, entered the Union army as a private. He continued to serve with his regiment until the close of the struggle, fighting gallantly and faithfully in a number of the bloodiest engagements of the war, and when his service was completed returned to Kansas to become as good a citizen as he had been a soldier. It is stated that he was the only man in Cass county, Missouri, to cast a vote for Abraham Lincoln, and throughout his life he has been an ardent supporter of Republican principles. Shortly after the war had closed he removed to Johnson county, Kansas, where he engaged in farming, and still resides on the old Kansas homestead. His wife, to whom he was married in Missouri, died in 1878, when about thirty-six years of age, and was buried in Kansas. With the exception of Fred S., who was the oldest son and third child in order of birth, the seven children reside in the Sunflower state.

Fred S. Hougland was given good educational advantages, attending the public and high schools of Olathe, Kansas, and on completing his studies began to work on his father's farm. His first real money was earned as a lad, when, with a boyhood companion, he contracted to cut hedges, the youthful business man clearing $250 on the deal. Part of his share Mr. Hougland used to pay his way to Montana, and since attaining his majority he has resided in and about Thompson Falls. For the first few years he followed prospecting and mining, but, while he has made many trips and short stays in neighboring states, has always returned to Thompson Falls and has maintained his residence here continuously. In 1899 he entered the ranching and meat business, with which he has been connected to the present time, and all his ventures have proved eminently successful. He has not been backward in expressing his opinion of the state of his adoption. The Clarks Fork valley, according to Mr. Hougland, has no superior, taking it from any point of view—climate, mineral wealth, timber, fruit, agricultural possibilities or opportunities in general—and it may be supposed that he is competent to judge, as he has been engaged in ranching for ten years near the city, on a ranch on which are located a refrigerator and ice plant, and also possesses some valuable mining properties.

Politically, Mr. Hougland is an independent Republican and takes an active interest in public matters. He was a member of the school board for three years, and since 1910 has been serving the people of Thompson Falls as mayor, giving a clean, progressive and business-like administration that stamps him as a man of excellent executive ability. In his official capacity and as a member of the Thompson Falls Development League he has done all in his power to advance the interests of this section, and the city has had no more popular citizen in the mayoralty chair. In his religious faith he is a Methodist, while in fraternal circles he is a prominent Mason and a member of the Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias. When the cares and responsibilities of his business and office can be placed aside, Mayor Hougland finds relaxation in various kinds of sport, and as a former baseball player appreciates the fine points of the national game.

In February, 1903, Mr. Hougland was married at Spokane, Washington, to Miss Elda Preston, daughter of Eugene and Celia Preston, an old and well-connected family of Thompson Falls, and four children have been born to this union: Pauline Marie, Sarah Fredericka, David Preston and Elda, bright pupils in the public schools.

FREDERICK CHARLES WEBSTER. The subject of this sketch is a native of the old town of Litchfield, Connecticut. He is descended from John Webster, one of the early governors of Connecticut Colony. He was prepared for college at the Litchfield Academy, was graduated from Yale, and then studied law at Litchfield in the office of Hon. Edward W. Seymour. After his admission to the bar of Connecticut, he started west and finally settled at Missoula in 1888. He practiced law in partnership with Judge Frank H. Woody until the latter was elected to the bench. He was twice elected county attorney of Missoula county; twice mayor of the city of Missoula, and upon the retirement of Judge Woody he succeeded him as judge of the fourth judicial district. After twelve years' service he declined a re-nomination and resumed the practice of law at Missoula.

He was married in 1889 to Anna C. Bye, and has three children living, Fred B., Charles Norman and Anna I. Webster.

HENRY ALTENBRAND. It is to the activities of men of foresight and ability that the state of Montana owes its present greatness as much as to its mineral wealth. Not more than several decades ago, the state was considered valuable only for its mines, and agriculture was the least of its industries. Irrigation, however, has changed conditions to a remarkable extent, and now great tracts of land once considered worthless are yielding abundant crops under the skilled hands of the Montana's new workers, the farmers. One of the men who has borne a prominent part in building up this industry, and who has proven himself possessed of much organizing and executive ability is Henry Altenbrand, president of the Manhattan Malting Company, of Manhattan, Montana, and the first to recognize the worth of land in this section for barley growing purposes. Mr. Henry Altenbrand was born in East New York (now the city of Brooklyn), November 26, 1843, and is the son of Lewis and Katherine (Lange) Altenbrand.

Lewis Altenbrand was born in Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, and came to the United States in 1830. After residing in New York City and working at his trade as tailor, he took up the vocation of hotel proprietor, built the fifth house in East New York, what is now Brooklyn, and served as township trustee for about fifteen years. He subsequently became interested in the state militia and organized the first German military company in New York City, known as the Jefferson Grenadiers, of which he was made captain. He died at the age of seventy-four, was one of the leading citizens of his section, and vice president of the East New York Savings Bank. He was married in New York to Katherine Lange, who was born in Saxony, Germany, and they had a family of eight children of whom Henry was the fifth in order of birth.

Henry Altenbrand attended the schools of East New York until he was fourteen years of age, at which time he became a student at Lepolt Academy, New York City. Subsequently he attended the Brooklyn Polytechnic College for one year, and then became associated with his father in the hotel business. At the time of the outbreak of the Civil war, notwithstanding that he was under age, he enlisted with the Fifth Regiment, New York Infantry, of which his brother-in-law, Joseph Hillenbrand, was lieutenant-colonel, but was taken out of the service by his mother, although his oldest brother, Lewis, who was twenty-four years of age, served throughout the conflict with the same organization.

Henry Altenbrand subsequently became a salesman for a produce commission house, the Virgil & Hilleyet Company, with which he was connected three years. Later he engaged in the same line of business with his brother, Lewis Altenbrand, and the firm of Altenbrand Brothers continued to do a successful business from 1865 until 1868, in which later year Henry purchased his brother's interests. Barley and malt were added to the produce of the firm, and in 1871 Henry Altenbrand organized the New York & Brooklyn Malting Company, having built one of the largest plants in New York and Brooklyn. Associated with him were George Ehret, Jacob Ruppert, Otto Huber, William Horrmann, Beadleston & Woerz, Gustav A. Muller, President of Bergner & Engel Brewing Company of Philadelphia, Christian Heurich of Washington, D. C., all of them the largest brewers in the east, and William Foster of Kress Brewing Company. The firm was a success from the start, continuing so until it sold its interest to the American Malting Company.

Previous to 1888 the greater part of the barley used for malting in the United States was grown in Canada, the duty on imported barley being only ten cents per bushel, and the Canadian grain being superior to that raised in any of the states of the Union, then engaged in its cultivation. As a consequence of this condition of affairs the quantity of barley raised in this country was steadily diminishing.

In that year, Henry Altenbrand, president New York & Brooklyn Malting Company, and for over twenty years connected with the malting business, was almost solely instrumental in having the duty on barley imported into this country raised to thirty cents per bushel, and at the same time he procured from Germany two thousand bushels of the famous German Saale barley, which was regarded the best malting barley known. This seed was distributed among the following states: Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois, New York and Montana. In the latter state it was sowed on irrigated lands in the Gallatin valley. At the end of the season samples of barley grown in these different states were carefully collected and compared with the original seed in the hope of finding a section of the country especially adapted to the production of this cereal. With the single exception of Montana, each sample showed deterioration, both in quality and appearance. The crop grown by irrigation in the Gallatin valley, however, showed a wonderful improvement on the original seed. It was fuller, heavier, and brighter in color. This discovery naturally imparted a marked impetus to the raising of barley by irrigation in that locality, and the success achieved the first year has continued and increased each succeeding year until the Gallatin valley in Montana stands pre-eminent as a barley producing district wherever malting is carried on, not only in the United States, but throughout the world.

Henry Altenbrand thereupon organized the West Gallatin Irrigation Company in 1889, and had associated with him such prominent business men as Thomas Oakes, president of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, Charles L. Colby, president of Wisconsin Central Milwaukee Railroad, Thomas F. Soaks of New York, Gardner Colby, Jacob Ruppert, John G. Gillig, George Kinkle, Jr., William Forster, John F. Plumer, with Henry Altenbrand as president and Gardner Colby, secretary and treasurer.

In 1890 Henry Altenbrand organized the Manhattan Malting Company with a number of large eastern brewers, among them Jacob Ruppert, John G. Gillig, George Kinkle, William Horrmann, all of New York, and Gustavus A. Muller, president Bergner & Engel Brewing Company, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Christian Heurich, of Washington, D. C.; F. W. Cook, Evansville, Indiana; and Beadleston & Woerz, of New York.

During the first year of the existence of the canal the company had misfortune, the dam giving way, and causing great damage. Again July 1, 1892, the canal broke its bounds, and flooded the lowlands, causing damage to the extent of twenty thousand dollars, which sum was advanced by Henry Altenbrand and Charles L. Colby and Gardner Colby. The canal is at present one hundred and six miles long, and is an excellent piece of engineering.

The Gallatin Valley Saale barley created a great demand for it throughout the world, and on its first appearance in Europe it created such a sensation that in 1893 the Imperial German government sent Professor Delbruck, chief commission of the department of agriculture, accompanied by his staff, to make a personal investigation of the grain growing sections of the United States. Among other localities visited was the Gallatin valley, where, with the assistance of Mr. George Kinkle, Jr., the manager of the Manhattan Malting Company and the West Gallatin Irrigation Company's works, he made an extensive investigation of the valley. His report, which was published by the German government, is as follows:

"Under the guidance of Mr. George Kinkle, Jr., a native of Brooklyn, who has entire charge of the famous irrigation works, connected with the Gallatin river, to whom we had letters of introduction, we spent two days in studying the cultivation of barley. The Gallatin river flows here through an arid, elevated plateau, otherwise destitute of water and bounded on all sides by lofty mountain ranges. The soil can only be cultivated with the aid of artificial irrigation. The river, diverted from its bed is caused to flow through countless channels, so that many thousand acres of land are rendered tillable. This entire valley is devoted to barley raising, partly under farmers, mostly Dutchmen, to whom with the accompanying irrigation privileges has been sold at a moderate price, and partly by the West Gallatin Irrigation Company, Manhattan, Montana, who own thirty thousand acres. The barley is either sold as grain or converted on the spot into brewing malt by the Manhattan Malting Company.

"Barley that is damaged by rain is unknown here, for there is no rain, withered or dried up barley is equally unknown, for the Gallatin river furnishes water in abundance. A country and a system of cultivation, ideal for barley growing—in fact, here I have seen the finest barley grown in the United States. For the most part Saale barley is used for seed and grown with admirable results, bright in color, large in size, fine as to husk, equal to the very best of European barley, and conspicuously superior among the barleys of North America. Whereas, with the exception of California, even in Canada, four and six rowed barleys are exclusively raised, here the two rowed Chevalier has become fully acclimated.

"Early in 1891 a colony of ten families of Hollanders settled on the lands owned by the West Gallatin Irrigation Company. This colony has steadily increased until today there are over one hundred and fifty families in that neighborhood whose principal occupation is the raising of barley."

Henry Altenbrand has interested himself in the enterprises of various character. He has always been exceptionally fond of shooting, and in 1873 visited Lake Hopatcong, New Jersey, and built himself a shooting lodge, and in 1884 he erected the first cottage, there having been nothing there previously but a charcoal plant. In company with James Breslin, one of the noted hotel men of New Jersey, and president of the United States Hotel Men's Association, Henry Altenbrand organized a hotel and land company, and in 1885, with Robert Dunlap, the famous New York hatter, he erected the Breslin Hotel, which today is one of the leading summer resorts of New Jersey, having a shore line of eight miles, and a number of beautiful cottages on the lake. As a man who has spent a number of years in advancing Montana's interests, Henry Altenbrand is deserving a place in any history of its prominent citizens. Although he has been kept very much occupied by his business interests, he has found time to enjoy fraternal work, and since 1864 has been a member of Trinity Lodge, No. 12, F. & A. M.

On September 24, 1867, Henry Altenbrand was united in marriage with Miss Louisa Schneider, who was the daughter of John Schneider, one of the oldest brewers in Brooklyn, was born in Brooklyn, New York, of German parentage, and seven children were born to this union, of whom four are now living: Louisa A. Gray, Lillian A. Randall, Gertrude, and Henry Altenbrand, Jr., who is treasurer and manager of Manhattan Malting Co., having married and taken up his permanent residence at Manhattan, Montana.

OLIVER P. JACKSON, one of the proprietors of the Missoula Iron Works, born in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Mr. Jackson is the son of Thomas Jefferson and Caroline (Brodgen) Jackson, both natives of Pennsylvania, and there both passed their lives. The father, who was a glassworker in his life work, died in 1868 at the age of fifty-one, and his widow survived him until 1898, having reached the age of eighty-two. They are resting side by side in the old Pennsylvania cemetery in the town where they lived so many years. Three children were born to this couple, of which number Oliver P. Jackson was the second born, and he is the only one of the three now living.

As boy and youth Mr. Jackson attended the public schools of Pittsburgh. He earned his first money selling papers in the streets of that city after school hours, beginning when he was ten years old. When he was seventeen years old he began a four year apprenticeship at the pattern maker's trade, his weekly wage for the first year being $5.00. After completing his apprenticeship he continued working at his trade in Pittsburgh until he came west when he was about thirty years old. Before settling in Montana, Mr. Jackson did a considerable traveling through several of the eastern and western states, working at his trade whenever he stopped for any length of time, and when he finally reached Montana, he decided that he had found the place where he might remain in contentment. He has been a resident of the state since 1888, and with the exception of a short period which he passed in the Bitter Root country where he was in the mining and ranching business, he has spent all the intervening years in Missoula. The first few years of his residence here he was engaged in general contracting, house moving being his specialty. In 1890, with H. D. Fisher as a partner, he established the Missoula Iron Works, but in a short time Mr. Fisher retired, since which time Mr. Jackson has been the sole proprietor of the business. Although the beginning was a small one, the growth was constant and rapid, and in 1907 it became necessary to have other and larger quarters to meet the demands of the rapidly extending business, and he accordingly erected his present magnificent plant, which consists of three large brick buildings. One is used as a machine shop, another as a pattern and blacksmith shop, while the third is used as a foundry. All three are equipped with modern machinery and every department is conducted in the most approved method. The firm does an extensive business in western Montana and eastern and northern Idaho, and is ever gaining prestige within the circles affected by this industry. The Missoula Iron Works, which gives employment to a goodly number of skilled workmen and is known as one of the large industrial enterprises of the city, is now a stock company. O. P. Jackson being the secretary and treasurer; C. Moxley, president; and George Hepworth, vice president.

Mr. Jackson is an adherent to principles of Republicanism, but takes no unduly active part in the politics of his city and county. At one time he served on the Missoula board of aldermen, where his services to the city were of a nature consistent with the high character of the man. Mr. Jackson does not affiliate with any church in particular, but attends all of them with more or less regularity, and finds good in all denominations. He is a man of stirring energy and ambition, and these qualities, combined with his courage and fixity of purpose and his sterling worth as a man, have been the predominant factors in the large and worthy success he has been and still is the possessor of.

Mr. Jackson has been twice married. He maintains a home at the corner of Cowper and Sherwood streets, while his business address is at the corner of Alder and Bitter Root tracks.

DONALD B. CURRIE. Noteworthy among the public officials of Missoula county is Donald B. Currie, of Missoula, who is rendering able and efficient service as county assessor, a position for which he is amply qualified. He was born, March 24, 1865, in Ontario, Canada, which was likewise the place of birth of his father, Duncan Currie, and the adopted home of his Grandfather Currie, who immigrated to Canada from the highlands of Scotland when a young man.

A life-long resident of Canada, Duncan Currie was a prominent contractor, and built a number of lighthouses for the Dominion government. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Falconer, was born on Prince Edward Island.

Educated in the Canadian public schools, and at a business college in Chatham, Michigan, Mr. Currie began his business career as a merchant in Canada, remaining there until 1888. His health becoming somewhat impaired, he came in that year to Montana, locating at Helena, where he sought outdoor employment, and at the building of the Helena smelter worked in the mechanical department. Coming from there to Missoula in 1892, Mr. Currie was for eleven years in the employ of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, for seven years of the time being cashier. Going then to Taft, he was timekeeper at the tunnel for a year, after which he was for several months connected with the Missoula Herald, one of the leading newspapers of Missoula county. In 1909 he was elected county assessor and on November 5, 1912, he was re-elected to the office of assessor of Missoula county by 900 plurality. He has since devoted his attention to the duties devolving upon him in a highly satisfactory manner, being a modest, painstaking, efficient and obliging official.

Mr. Currie married in March, 1895, Agnes Kirk, who was born in Mason City, Iowa. She passed to the higher life July 1, 1905, leaving four children, namely: James, Mamie, Rosalie and Genevieve. Fraternally Mr. Currie belongs to the Knights of Columbus, and to the Order of Foresters.

HARRY M. SMALL was born in Adams county, Pennsylvania, on June the 10th, 1869. The families of his parents on both sides were Pennsylvanians, his mother and father having been married in that state. Of their union were born three sons, of whom Harry M. was the youngest.

When he was only one year of age his father died very suddenly, leaving the mother, Agnes Adams Small, to battle for herself and her three small boys as best she might. Although she made a brave fight, it was necessary for her sons to quit school as soon as they had reached an age where their earning capacity could assist their mother in the struggle for existence. When he was seven years of age the family moved to Canada, remaining there until 1888. He left Canada for the west, coming directly to Missoula, Montana. Almost immediately, he entered the employ of the Northern Pacific Railway, serving as a station employee. Possessing natural quickness of intellect and a rare fund of that unusual quality, "common sense," he at once discovered that for a young man in any capacity, education is his chief asset. Hitherto, it had seemed to be a prize meant only for the well-to-do and entirely out of his reach, but he now determined to win it for himself. By diligent application during the evening hours and private instruction under Professor Reit of the Garden City Commercial College, he gained in a few months knowledge, the acquirement of which in the schools would have taken him years. Nor did he ever count the hours spent in study anything but gain.

For ten years he remained with the Northern Pacific Railway Company, then accepted a position in the grocery firm of Walker & Albee. He remained with these gentlemen until they withdrew from that line of business and then spent two years with their successors, Hatheway & Buford. While still connected with this latter firm, he was elected city treasurer in 1904. At the close of his first term, he was re-elected, serving the city in that capacity for a period of four years, when his fellow citizens, realizing his worth and ability, chose him for their police magistrate.

This position he occupies at the present time and is filling in a manner satisfactory even to those who do not share his political views, Mr. Small himself being a stalwart Democrat.

Before coming to Missoula he married Miss Elizabeth McCluskey. After nineteen years of married life, she passed away. In 1909, he was united in marriage to Bridget Barnum, also a native of Canada. Mr. and Mrs. Small still reside in Missoula. He is the father of eight children, most of whom are still at home and all of whom are receiving an education that will fit them for their work in life. It will probably never be necessary for any of them to undergo the sacrifices and hardships that made up the early life of their father. Yet through these very hardships there emerged a man strong of character and big of soul, a man whose personal life is clean and his official position stainless.

Mr. Small is a member of the Fraternal Order of Eagles and the Knights of Columbus. He has been a resident of Missoula for twenty-three years and each year has gained in the confidence and respect of her people.

EDWARD CREIGHTON LARGEY, one of the best known of the younger business men of Butte, Montana, was born in that city, at the southwest corner of West Broadway and Washington streets, on April 14, 1888—a son of Patrick A. and Lulu (Sellers) Largey. A more extended sketch of Patrick A. Largey will be found elsewhere in this work, so that further details in connection with the parentage of the subject are not necessary at this point. An interesting circumstance in regard to the house in which Edward C. Largey was born is that in it was the first telegraph, telephone, bicycle and automobile to be used in Butte.

Edward Creighton Largey obtained his early education in the schools of Butte, and after a due course of preparation, he attended All Hallows College in Salt Lake City. After leaving that institution of learning he received private instruction at the De La Salle Institute in the city of New York. He then entered the University of Michigan for a course of higher study. After leaving the university Mr. Largey returned to Butte to participate in the management of his father's estate.

Mr. Largey is now secretary of the board of managers of the estate and has large private interests in business and financial circles. He is a large stockholder in the State Savings Bank of Butte and is president of the Butte Ice Company. Ever since attaining his majority he has taken a prominent part in political affairs, and is one of the staunch members of the Democratic party. When but little more than of legal age, he was elected from Silver Bow county as a member of the eleventh legislative assembly of the state of Montana, being the youngest member that ever sat in that body. A fine testimonial to Mr. Largey at this election was the fact that he polled next to the highest number of votes of any candidate. While serving as a member of the legislature, Mr. Largey was chairman of the committee on banks and banking. In the national campaign of 1912, Mr. Largey was treasurer of the finance committee of Montana for the Democratic national committee, and in that same year was again elected to the state legislature.

Fraternally, Mr. Largey is a member of the Chi Psi fraternity of the University of Michigan, and of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He is likewise a member of the Silver Bow Club and the University Club of Butte. His religious faith is that of the Roman Catholic church.

On July 22, 1907, Mr. Largey was united in marriage with Miss Ursula March Hancock, of Chicago. They have an adopted child, Lelia Lulu, born September 30, 1911.

Mr. Largey is one of the most enterprising and public spirited men known to the city of Butte, and has always taken a hearty interest in any movement inaugurated in the city with a view to the ultimate betterment or advancement of material conditions, or of the social and moral advancement of the community, his support being marked by the most unfailing generosity in a financial way at all times.

J. G. AMBROSE. The remarkable development of the west and the growth of so many towns and cities throughout this section of the country during the past few years has afforded opportunity for the profitable employment of all classes of skilled labor, and especially for the prosecution of those lines of business that have directly to do with building and construction work. Among the most successful men in the contracting field in Missoula today is Mr. J. G. Ambrose, whose superior workmanship may be found on many of the best buildings that have been erected in this city the past several years.

Mr. Ambrose came originally from Ohio, and was born in Pickaway county, that state, in September, 1853, the son of L. D. and Nancy (Leib) Ambrose. His father was a minister in the United Brethren church and moved with his family to Illinois in 1855. In 1873 he again changed his residence and became a citizen of Missouri, in which state he finally died. Mr. Ambrose had good educational advantages in his early life and took a finishing course at Avalon College, a denominational school, located at Avalon, Missouri. Upon the final completion of his studies he immediately learned the carpenter trade and worked at that employment for two years in Illinois. He later went to Missouri and in 1878, while a resident of that state, married Hattie Kapp, who was born in Pennsylvania, the daughter of Martin and Jane Kapp. Mr. and Mrs. Ambrose became the parents of five children, namely, Jessie, Lynn D., Ethel, Keath and Aileen.

Three years after his marriage Mr. Ambrose removed with his family to Kansas and for the next five years lived upon a ranch which he had purchased for a home. Some of the seasons proved to be very unproductive, however, and crop failures made it necessary for him to work between seasons at his trade. At the end of five years, he disposed of the ranch and went to Missouri again, the immediate reason for his going at that time being the occasion of his parents' golden wedding anniversary.

It was in 1888 that Mr. Ambrose first came to Montana and located at Butte. For eight years thereafter he worked in that city as a contractor and builder in which business he had fine success. Having accumulated some property there in 1896 he decided again to engage in ranching and accordingly traded the Butte property for a tract of land two miles north of Missoula. He lived on the place for a number of years, but ranch life did not prove permanently satisfying, and in 1905 he sold the place and removed his home to Missoula, while he also returned to active business in his old line as contractor and builder, and has ever since successfully operated in that department of industry. He is himself a skilled builder and hires only the most proficient assistants with the inevitable result that his contracts are filled honestly and with the best of satisfaction to those for whom he erects structures.

Mr. Ambrose is a public-spirited citizen who takes an active part in promoting the best interests of the community in various important features. He represented the Third ward in the city council until the new form of government became operative, and also he takes a special interest in educational matters and is now serving his second term as a member of the city school board. As a religious worker also he is well known, being an influential member of the Methodist church of which he is a trustee. Mr. Ambrose is in fact a man of broad sympathies and well-rounded interests and stands at all times ready to lend the weight of his influence to whatever enterprise is suggested that tends to develop and upbuild this city and section in the highest degree and along the most desirable lines. His personality is exceedingly agreeable, his honesty and integrity of the most unimpeachable character, and he is a man whom any community might well feel proud to name among its leading citizens.

WARNER LAIRD.—The father of Warner Laird, Thomas W. Laird, was born in Ohio, in 1844. He came with his parents to Missouri during his boyhood, and at the outbreak of the late War of the Rebellion enlisted in Company K, of the Kansas Volunteers. This company saw little service outside of eastern Missouri, spending most of the time in a vain effort to stamp out guerrilla warfare. They were mustered out late in 'sixty-four at which time Mr. Laird went to Atchison, Kansas, where he farmed until the gold excitement called him to the territory of Dakota, where he began mining and prospecting in the Black Hills. Meeting with little or no success in the mines, he left Dakota for Montana in the spring of 1888. Here he first took up a quarter of a section of land near Livingston, going later to the Bitter Root valley, where he located an excellent claim and began his life as a rancher and stock raiser. For twenty years he cultivated this property and increased his stock. In 1910 he sold the ranch at an excellent figure and purchased another at Sand Point, Idaho. Although now a man of independent means, he gives to the new property the same careful attention that he gave to the old, assuming, as before, the active management. Although now almost seventy years of age, he works with the same industry as of old, with apparently no thought of retirement. His wife, Hulda Jones Laird, of Aurora, Missouri, is still his active comrade. They are the parents of seven children, five of whom are still living. Elton, the oldest of the three girls, is Mrs. M. P. Bright of Hamilton, Montana. Anna, the second daughter, married W. T. Edwards of the same city, while Mary, the youngest, is the wife of George Hamilton, whose ranch near Sand Point adjoins that of her parents. John and Effie Laird passed away before reaching their maturity. Of the two sons who are now living, Custer is a ranchman near White Pine, Montana, while Warner is a member of one of the leading mercantile houses of Darby, the firm being that of Laird & Kerlee.

Young Mr. Laird was born on the eleventh day of December, 1879, at Minnesela, Dakota, where his parents had gone after the discovery of gold in the Black Hills. Here he began his schooling, having reached the age of nine years before his parents moved to Livingston, Montana. After a little more than a school year in Livingston they left for the Bitter Root valley, where Warner attended the district schools until his fifteenth year, when he was sent to a business college at Hamilton. Here he received an excellent business training. After completing this course he devoted his attention to scientific farming until his majority and then took up for himself a homestead on East Fork. Until 1907 his efforts were directed to ranching and stock-raising.

After proving up on his claim, Mr. Laird had won for his wife Miss Lily Kerlee, the daughter of a neighboring ranchman. Miss Kerlee was a Missourian by birth. They were married at Hamilton, Montana, in the autumn of 1901. In 1907 Mr. Laird, together with Bert Kerlee, his wife's brother, bought out a confectioner at Darby and carried on a profitable business until fire destroyed the building. They rebuilt on a larger scale and extended the scope of the business until they owned one of the largest and most complete department stores of that section, having about seven hundred feet of floor space and employing many assistants. In 1912 Mr. Laird sold his interest in the business to his partner.

Mr. and Mrs. Laird are earnest workers in the Baptist church. Five daughters have been born of their union: Margery, Mildred, Montana, Myrtle and Marie. The two oldest are now attending the schools of Darby.

HON. JONATHAN E. WEBB, the beginning of whose identification with Montana life dates back a quarter of a century, is one of the pioneer business men of Choteau, and is one of the most successful as well. Various lines of endeavor have occupied his attention since his advent to Montana but he is now well established in the real estate, fire insurance and bonding business at Choteau. He has served as a representative in the Montana state legislature one term and has filled the office of treasurer of Teton county two terms, and at all times has been known as one of the progressive and public-spirited men of northwestern Montana.

Born at Staceyville, Iowa, on August 15, 1864, he is a son of Stephen M. Webb, a native of New York who transferred his residence to Iowa in the early '60s and took up a homestead near Staceyville. After proving up on his land Stephen M. Webb removed to Dover, Bureau county, Illinois, where he continued to reside until his death in April, 1904, at the age of seventy-four years. He was a wagon maker by trade and it was under his tuition that his son Jonathan acquired a thorough knowledge of the trade of wagon maker and wheelwright. During the great struggle of 1861-65 he served as a private in Company H, Fourth Iowa Cavalry. The paternal grandfather of Jonathan E. Webb had followed a similar occupation, that of a woodworker and manufacturer of furniture. Margaret McFarland, the mother of our subject, was born in Ohio and accompanied her parents from that state to Mower county, Minnesota, where as a girl she met and married her husband Stephen M. Webb. Her father was a farmer and a pioneer settler in Minnesota. She survived her husband but a few years, "passing away in Dover, Illinois, in October, 1911, when seventy-one years of age. Of the eleven children born to this union eight are now living (1912) and Jonathan E. is the second in order of birth. Two of his sisters are located at Choteau, Mrs. H. A. Prescott and Miss Lucina Webb, the latter of whom resides with her brother.

Mr. Webb was educated in the district schools and in the academy at Dover, Illinois, to the age of twenty-one. In the meantime he had learned the trade of wagon maker and wheelwright from his father and after his student days he also taught school for a short time in Bureau county. In 1888 he came to Montana and secured employment as clerk and timekeeper for the Sand Coulee Coal Company at Sand Coulee, remaining with them until May 1, 1890, when he came to Choteau. There he purchased a small building from P. N. Knowles, a former blacksmith, and opened up the first wagon making business in Teton county, following it for three years. He was also the first to engage in the lumber business there, but the panic of 1893 wrought havoc with his finances and obliged him to follow clerical work for a time thereafter.

In 1902 he was elected as a Republican to represent Teton county in the state legislature and served one term. Following that he served two terms as treasurer of Teton county, beginning that official service in 1905. He had begun to establish his present interests before concluding his duties as treasurer and has since given his attention to the real estate, fire insurance and bonding business and has been very successful. He also owns and is farming 320 acres of land in Teton county. Mr. Webb began to make his way in life at the age of ten and all that he has accomplished is the result of his own business discernment and determined perseverance.

In politics he is aligned with the Republican party and has always been an active worker in its interests. He is a member and past master of Choteau Lodge No. 44, Free and Accepted Masons, and his religious creed is that of the Congregational church. Mr. Webb is unmarried.

JOHN W. SHIELDS. On investigating the cause of success and failure it has been found that the former is largely due to the improvement of opportunity, the latter to the neglect of it. Fortunate environments encompass nearly every man at some stage of his career and the strong man and the successful one is he who realizes that the proper moment has come, that the present and not the future holds his opportunity. The man who makes use of the now and not the to be is the one who passes on the highway of life others who started out ahead of him and reaches the goal of prosperity in advance of them. It is this quality in John W. Shields that has made him a leader in the business world at Conrad, Montana, where he is engaged in the work of engineer and surveyor and where he is the owner of considerable city property. He is likewise the owner of a fine ranch of one thousand acres in Teton county.

John W. Shields was born in Scotland, April 19, 1856, and he is a son of David and Margaret (Waldie) Shields, both of whom were born in Scotland, the former in 1827 and the latter in 1828. The father came to America in 1881 and was a resident of the province of Manitoba, Canada, for a short time, but not feeling at home in this country he returned to his native heath, where he spent the remainder of his days on his old farm, his demise having occurred in 1898, at the age of sixty-nine years. His cherished and devoted wife still survives him and although she has now reached the venerable age of eighty-five years she is active and well and makes a trip to Chicago to visit her children every two years. Ten children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Shields and of the number the subject of this review was the second in order of birth.

To the public schools of Scotland, John W. Shields is indebted for his preliminary educational training, which discipline was later supplemented by a course of study in the John Newland Academy, in which institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1870, as civil engineer. After leaving school he secured a position in the mercantile concern of an uncle in Scotland and he was a clerk until 1873, when he immigrated to America. He first located on Long Island and remained in the vicinity of New York City until 1877, at which time he entered the employ of the Canadian Mounted Police, serving as police at McCloud, Saskatchewan, for the ensuing three years. During that period he arrested an Indian, known as Swift Runner, who had murdered his entire family—wife, five children and mother-in-law, all of whom he ate, being a cannibal. At the time of the execution of Swift Runner the weather was fifty degrees below zero and Mr. Shields assisted in the hanging.

After resigning from the mounted police service, Mr. Shields received patent No. 1, covering a land grant of 160 acres, from the Canadian government on script at Edmonton. This was in 1886 and for the two following years he was engaged in agricultural pursuits in the far north. He then disposed of his farm and came to Montana, locating in Great Falls, where he resided for five years and where he devoted his attention to civil engineering and surveying. Subsequently he removed to Choteau, Teton county, Montana, and there followed the work of his profession and was county surveyor from 1896 until 1908, when he came to Conrad, where he has since maintained his home and where he figures prominently as a citizen and business man of influence. Here he controls a large practice as civil engineer and surveyor and he is the popular and efficient incumbent of the offices of United States commissioner, justice of the peace and police magistrate. He was a poor boy when he started out in life and he is now the owner of eight hundred acres of valuable land in Teton county, two hundred acres of this plot being under cultivation. In politics Mr. Shields is an uncompromising supporter of the Republican party and in a fraternal way he is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World at Choteau, having passed through all the official chairs of both these organizations.

Mr. Shields has been twice married. At Edmonton, Canada, in 1884, he wed Miss Eliza Maver, a native of Canada. She died at Great Falls in 1899, and is survived by two children, Jessie F. and Davie W. In 1899, occurred the marriage of Mr. Shields to Theresa Chisholm, a native of Onalaska, Wisconsin. There have been no children born to this marriage.

ANDREW DUNSIRE. The sons of Scotia, whose suggestive motto, Nemo me impune lacessit, emblazons every Scottish battle-torn banner, are to be found the wide world over, occupying, many of them, exalted positions in every sphere of life, in literature, arts and sciences, no less than in the several professions, and pre-eminently in business activities. In the latter class prominent place must be given to Andrew Dunsire, president of the Imperial Dry Goods Company, of Kalispell, Montana, and a man who has been an important factor in the advancement of his community's best interests. Andrew Dunsire was born in Fifeshire, Scotland, June 24, 1865, and is a son of Thomas and Catherine (Anderson) Dunsire, natives of that country. Thomas Dunsire, deceased, followed the occupation of colporteur for many years. His wife died at Buckhaven, Scotland, in 1899, in the same house in which she was born.

The early education of Andrew Dunsire was obtained in the public school at Cross Roads, located near his birthplace, and by the time he was thirteen years of age he had graduated from the eighth grade. Even at that early age he displayed an enterprising and industrious spirit, at once entering upon an apprenticeship in the dry goods trade, and after four years spent therein became a salaried salesman in Glasgow, where he remained from 1883 to 1888. During the latter year he became convinced that there was a better future for him in the United States, and accordingly came to this country, at once making his way to Montana and settling in Flathead county on May 23rd, this section since having been his home. In the summer of 1890 he was purser on the steamer Crescent, on Flathead lake, and during the summer of 1892 occupied the same position on the steamer State of Idaho, on Kootenai river, running between Bonner's Ferry and Kaslo, British Columbia. From 1892 to 1897 he was employed as a clerk and salesman, first in the store of Mr. Gale, and later with James Conohn, of Kalispell. In the fall of 1897 he was elected assessor for Flathead county, and was re-elected in 1899 and again in 1902, serving three terms. The fall of 1909 saw the establishment of the Imperial Dry Goods Company, which has since developed into the largest business enterprise of its kind in the city, and one of the most substantial in the state. It was incorporated during the same year. Mr. Dunsire's business associates in this enterprise are C. A. Hummer, who is vice-president and E. J. VanDuzer, secretary and treasurer.

Politically a Democrat, Mr. Dunsire is one of the wheel-horses of his party in his section, and exerts a potent and far-reaching influence. While he has not been an office seeker, while he was an incumbent of public positions he displayed marked executive ability. His fraternal connection is with the Masons, the Elks, the Modern Woodmen and the Royal Highlanders. His public spirit has been displayed most conspicuously as a member and secretary of the Kalispell Volunteer Fire Department. Mr. Dunsire was married at Missoula, Montana, May 27, 1892, to Miss Isabella A. Ritchie, also a native of Scotland, born in Elgin, September 21, 1863. Both are widely known and have numerous warm friends in Kalispell's social circles.

GEORGE R. OECHSLI. The interesting subject of this brief review is a self made man in the best sense of the phrase, and whatever is creditable in his career is due to his own native ability, industry, frugality and wise management. His success in business, his accumulations in the way of worldly wealth, his steady progress from nothing in the line of financial capital to his present extensive and valuable possessions, and his rise from obscurity to an enviable position in the regard and esteem of the whole people of his community have been all wrought out by his own efforts, and his success in winning his triumphs is the result, not so much of his quickness in seeing and seizing opportunities for advancement as of his power and readiness in making them for himself, and then using them for all they are worth.

Mr. Oechsli is a native of Sedalia, Pettis county, Missouri, where he was born on February 3, 1866. His parents, Rudolph and Mary (Mitchell) Oechsli, were born in Switzerland, and died at Windsor, Henry county, Missouri, the former in 1903 at the age of sixty-eight years, and the latter six months later at the age of sixty-six. The father was a farmer at the time of his death, but for a number of years he was engaged in the manufacture of carriages at Sedalia and Clinton, Missouri. He came to the United States with his father and the rest of the family at the age of sixteen. The family located in Ohio, and he remained there until his marriage, then moved to Missouri. At the beginning of the Civil war he enlisted in the Union army, and during the continuance of the struggle was an officer in charge of the government shops at Sedalia, serving to the closing of the war. The mother was brought to this country by her parents when she was but four years old. Her family also located in Ohio, and there she lived with her parents until her marriage to Mr. Oechsli, which took place in 1858. They had five sons and two daughters. The daughters died in infancy, one of them at the age of three years, and the other at a younger age. The sons are all living and are: John H., who is a resident of Butte and his occupation is mining; Frank, whose home is at Windsor, Missouri, a grocer; George R., who is the immediate subject of this writing; Harry E., who resides at Spokane, Washington, where he is a leading business man and very wealthy. He is president of the Spokane Mercantile & Poultry Company and manager of the Western Lead & Paint Company; and Charles, who is a ranchman of Jefferson county in this state, and one of the leading citizens of his locality.

George R. Oechsli obtained his education in the schools of Sedalia, Clinton, and Windsor, Missouri, which he attended until he reached the age of seventeen. After leaving school he was apprenticed to his uncle, John Oechsli, to learn the business of manufacturing carriages, at which he worked five years. In February, 1888, he came to Montana and took up his residence in Butte. During the first seven years of his life here he was shipping clerk for the Montana Iron Works.

At the end of the period mentioned he resigned his position as shipping clerk for that establishment and opened a furniture store on a very small scale. He had very little capital, but he had enterprise, business ability and determination. He persevered in his undertaking through difficulties and trials, and now the George Oechsli Furniture Store, as his establishment is called, is the biggest of its kind west of Chicago. It is located at 42 West Broadway, carries an enormous stock, employs ten men and handles all kinds of new and second hand furniture. The store does an annual business amounting to many thousand dollars, and has a trade as active and exacting as any mercantile emporium in this part of the country. The trade is a very profitable one, but it is not Mr. Oechsli's only source of gain. He owns in addition mining properties and considerable city real estate, all marketable and yielding good returns for the money invested in them, and also steadily increasing in worth. He also owns considerable stock in the Western Lead Paint Company, Spokane.

Mr. Oechsli takes no part in political contentions, but usually votes for the candidates of the Republican party. Fraternally he is a member of the Order of Elks, the Modern Woodmen of America, the Order of Moose, and the Eagles and Puritans, in the Order of Moose being one of the trustees of the lodge to which he belongs. He is also a member of the Merchants' Association of Butte, in the proceedings of which he takes an earnest interest and an active part, and is a man of prominence and influence.

On January 21, 1893, Mr. Oechsli was married in Kansas City, Missouri, to Miss Josie Seaker, a daughter of Ernest and Louise Seaker, both natives of Michigan. Seven children have been born of their union: Clarence, Howard, Florence, George, Maude, Angela and Josephine, all natives of Butte, except Angela, who came into being in Los Angeles, California. The family residence is at 637 Dakota street, and is noted for its genuine hospitality and social enjoyment. The members of the family are all deeply interested in the welfare of their community and zealous in helping to promote it by every means at their command. They are all highly esteemed for their progressiveness, real worth and useful citizenship, and number their friends in Butte and elsewhere by the host. They are worthy in full measure of the regard and good will bestowed upon them.

LEW SWITZER. A citizen of unusual prominence and influence at Kalispell, Montana, Lew Switzer is here engaged in the furniture business, his concern being known as the Lew Switzer Furniture Store, one of the largest establishments of its kind in this section of the state. Mr. Switzer is a self-made man. Diligent and ever alert for his chance of advancement, he has progressed steadily until he is recognized today as one of the foremost business men of this city. Here he is held in high esteem by his fellow men, who honor him for his native ability and for his fair and straightforward career.

Lew Switzer was born in Grant county, Indiana, in December, 1862, and he is a son of David and Esther (Perrill) Switzer, the former of whom died in 1877, at the age of forty-nine years, and the latter of whom is living at Jonesboro, Indiana. The father was born in Virginia, where he was reared to young manhood and whence he immigrated to Indiana as a young man, settling in Grant county, where he was engaged in agricultural operations for the greater part of his active career.

The only child of his parents, Mr. Switzer, of this notice, passed his boyhood and youth on the old homestead farm, in the work and management of which he early began to assist his father. He attended the neighboring district school until he had reached his thirteenth year, when he entered upon an apprenticeship to learn the trade of printer. He was printer's "devil" for six months and at the end of that time returned to school. In 1878 he entered a country store to learn the hardware business and three years later he went to Logansport, Indiana, there working in a hardware store for the ensuing four years. In August, 1888, Capt. T. P. Fuller, at that time mayor of Helena, Montana, sent for him to work in his hardware store in the capital city of this state. He remained in the employ of Captain Fuller for eighteen months and in December, 1889, he accepted a position with the Missoula Mercantile Company at Missoula, remaining in that place until March, 1891, when he was transferred to DeMersville to take charge of the hardware department in this branch store of the above concern. In the fall of 1892 he was ordered to remove the goods at DeMersville to Missoula but prevailed upon the company to establish a store at Kalispell. This was the beginning of the Missoula Mercantile Company's store at Kalispell, and for which Mr. Switzer acted as buyer for the hardware department until 1907. In the latter year he decided to launch out into the business world on his own account and then established the Lew Switzer Furniture Store, which was originally a small concern but which has now developed into one of the largest business houses in Kalispell. A tremendous business is controlled and Mr. Switzer has a force of six men in his employ. Mr. Switzer attributes much of his success as a business man to the admirable training he received under Captain Fuller, of Helena, and his experience as buyer for the Missoula Mercantile Company of Kalispell, whose splendid business initiative was infused into their employees.

Mrs. Switzer conducts what is known as the Priscilla Gift Shop—a department in the furniture store, where are found all kinds of fancy work.

Although not an active participant in public affairs, Mr. Switzer is unusually loyal and public-spirited in connection with all matters affecting the good of the general welfare and in a political way he is an uncompromising supporter of the principles and policies promulgated by the Republican party. In a fraternal way he is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Modern Woodmen of America, the Yeomen and the Royal Neighbors.

In February, 1897, occurred the marriage of Mr. Switzer to Mrs. Blanch Boos, at Spokane, Washington. While not formally connected with any religious organization Mr. Switzer gives his support to and attends the Episcopal church, of which his wife is a devout communicant. Mr. and Mrs. Switzer have no children.

ERNEST W. KING. It is a subject of interesting comment, when considering the forceful and successful men of Montana, that a large number of them have come to the state from Wisconsin, often being of New England ancestry but born and reared near the Great Lakes. Ernest W. King, civil engineer, mine promoter and owner, financier and statesman, whose home has been at Bozeman, Montana, since 1903, was born at Neillsville, Clark county, Wisconsin, and is a son of John F. and Rosella (Wight) King.

John F. King was born at Taunton, Massachusetts. In 1859 he moved to Clark county, Wisconsin, an early settler in that locality, and spent the remainder of his life in that state. Mainly a farmer he also was in the contracting and logging business and became a man of local importance, serving for several years as a justice of the peace, member of the school board and in other township offices. He identified himself with the Republican party and was a staunch upholder of its principles and a loyal supporter of the administration during the Civil war. He was one of the early members of the Odd Fellows in Clark county. His marriage was with Rosella Wight, who was born in New York and still survives, being in her seventy-fourth year. Of their family of six children, two sons and four daughters, Ernest W. was the first born.

Ernest W. King attended school at Neillsville, Wisconsin more or less regularly until he was sixteen years of age, when he took charge of the operation of a stationary engine in a flour mill, saw mill and stave mill in Clark county, his aptness in the line of machinery displaying itself thus early. Farming did not appeal to him and after his mill experience he became a fireman on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad and then entered the Union Iron Works at Minneapolis, Minnesota, where he learned the machinist trade and also was a student in the civil engineering department of the Minnesota State University.

Mr. King then embarked in business at Anoka, Minnesota, where he opened a machine shop and remained until 1888, when he went to Great Falls, Montana, where he assisted in installing the machinery for the American Smelting and Refining Company and in the spring of 1890 designed and put in the city water works of Great Falls, and in the following year was elected city engineer. He re-surveyed the city and designed the sewer system. At a later time he was appointed a park commissioner, with Senator Gibson and served for some eight or nine years, designing the first of the city parks. Through his enterprise, knowledge and public spirit, Great Falls was set on the road to prosperity.

In 1890 Mr. King grub-staked some parties who succeeded in locating valuable silver and lead properties and in 1897 The Gilt Edge Mining Company was organized with Mr. King as its president. In 1898 he designed and built a two hundred-ton mill cyanide plant on these properties and in 1899 organized the Barnes & King Mining Company and becoming president also of this organization. His business interests continued to expand. He became interested in the Kendall Mining Company, in Fergus county, Montana, and in 1901 acquired an active interest in the Alder Gulch Mining Company, in Chouteau county, Montana, designing and building a sixty thousand dollar mill and operating it until 1903, when he came to Bozeman.

Mr. King now entered the financial field as a banker, on October 4, 1904, assisting in the organization of the National Bank of Gallatin Valley and becoming its vice-president; also assisted in the founding of the Butte Commercial Bank which later became the Silver Bow National Bank, and continues a stockholder in both these banks. He is a stockholder also in the First National Bank of Lewistown, Montana; in the Manhattan State Bank at Manhattan, Montana, and in the Hilger State Bank. He is president of the Montana Town Site Company, in this connection having interests in many counties in Montana. In the fall of 1907 he became engaged in gold and silver mining at Rawhide, Nevada, and is otherwise concerned there, owning an interest in the Rawhide Coalition Mining Company and being president of the Rawhide Queen Mining Company. Both of the above companies have been merged into the Nevada New Mines Company, of which Mr. King is president.

In no state more certainly than in Montana is public recognition given to men who, in the management of their own affairs have demonstrated their business acumen, and in 1906, on the Republican ticket, Mr. King was elected a member of the Montana house of representatives, his fellow citizens rightly judging that the upbuilding of Fergus county might be entrusted to one whose years of experience and many notable accomplishments fitted him well for public service. He served honorably and in 1908 was returned to the legislature, from Gallatin county, and at that session was made speaker of the house, and during this time much important legislation was considered and settled.

On September 18, 1885, Mr. King was married to Miss Eleanor J. Coleman, who was born at Anoka, Minnesota, and is a daughter of G. D. Coleman. Four children have been born to them, three daughters and one son, namely: Ruby, who is the wife of J. G. Hogan; Gladys, who is the wife of Benjamin B. Law; and Dana C. and Phoebe.

In his profession, Mr. King is widely known and is past president of the Montana Society of Mining Engineers, and is a member of the American Institute of Mining Engineers. Fraternally he belongs to Lewistown Lodge, No. 37, A. F. & A. M.; and Bozeman Lodge, No. 463, B. P. O. E. Personally, Mr. King is a quiet, thoughtful, reflecting man, a thorough master of every detail of his profession yet has always found time to keep in touch with other interests and activities and he may justly be numbered with the men who have really accomplished something notable in their day and generation.

HARRISON P. BURLINGHAM. As proprietor of the Burlingham Lumber Company in Libby, Montana, Harrison P. Burlingham holds distinctive prestige as a business man of prominence and influence. He has been a valued resident of Libby since 1895 and in addition to his lumber interests he is the owner of a finely improved ranch of one hundred and sixty acres at Gateway, Montana.

A native of the fine old Buckeye State of the Union, Harrison P. Burlingham was born in Ashtabula county, Ohio, the date of his nativity being the 23d of September, 1854. He is a son of Curtis Burlingham, a native of New Hampshire, where he was reared and educated and whence he removed to Ohio in the early '40s. Curtis Burlingham was a farmer by occupation and he died in 1892, at the age of sixty-eight years. He was a soldier in the Union army during the entire period of the Civil war and as such was a member of the Twenty-fifth Ohio Sharpshooters. At the close of the war he received his honorable discharge and was mustered out of the army. The period of warfare had been so hard on his system that he had a severe breakdown just after the close of hostilities and suffered as an invalid during the rest of his life. His wife, whose maiden name was Sarah Platt, was born in Vermont. She died in 1870, at the early age of thirty-five years. Mr. and Mrs. Burlingham became the parents of four children, of whom the subject of this review was the first born.

To the country schools of Ashtabula county, Ohio, Harrison P. Burlingham is indebted for his preliminary educational training. He left school at the age of sixteen years and from that time until he had reached his legal majority he was associated with his father in the work and management of the old homestead farm. In 1874 he removed to Minnesota and settled near Stillwater, where he worked on a farm with his father. From there he moved to North Dakota and in 1888 he came to Montana, locating in the city of Great Falls, where he was engineer for the silver smelter for one year, at the end of which he secured a position with the Great Falls Lumber Company, of whose mills he had charge for six months. His next position was at Monarch as manager for the Holter Lumber Company and thence he removed to Kalispell and worked at placer mining on Wolf creek. In the beginning he was very successful in his mining projects but he sank every cent of gain back into other mining enterprises and later was not quite so successful. He came to Libby in 1896 and here immediately entered into the lumber business on his own account, and is one of the pioneer sawmill men now living in Lincoln county. He controls a large and lucrative lumber business and ships lumber all over the country. He has a fine farm, comprising 160 acres, in the vicinity of Gateway, Montana, and the same is in a high state of cultivation.

In Pennsylvania, in 1874, Mr. Burlingham was united in marriage to Miss Mary Fuller, who was born and reared in Pennsylvania and who is a daughter of Andrew Fuller. Eight children have been born to this union, as follows—Ray, Fred, Ralph, Andrew, Mason, Nora, Goldie and Harry.

In politics Mr. Burlingham maintains an independent attitude, preferring to give his support to men and measures meeting with the approval of his judgment rather than to vote along strictly partisan lines. He is a member of the Libby Chamber of Commerce and in a fraternal way is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Red Men.

WILLIAM HENRY HARRISON. In the state where the self made man is the rule rather than the exception, the prominent place which William H. Harrison, of Great Falls, Montana, holds in the ranks of those who have won success through their own efforts, argues well for his ability. He began to earn his own living as a mere boy, and he has worked at one thing and another in practically every section of the great west. As a merchant he has been unusually successful, and in the political world his name is well known. He has the full confidence of the citizens of his community as was proved by his election to the state legislature and in his present position as city clerk he has ample opportunity to prove his ability and integrity.

William Henry Harrison was born in Placer county, California, on the 25th of December, 1859. His father was Peter Harrison, a native of Canada, who was engaged in the manufacture of wagons, in Placer county, California, at the little town of Auburn. He was one of the first manufacturers in this section and became in time a prominent man in his line of work. He later left California, and after living for a time in Nevada and Utah, came to Montana in 1888. He settled in Great Falls and became interested in the mining business, remaining here until his death which occurred in April, 1902 when he was seventy-three years old. Politically Peter Harrison held to the creed of the Republican party and was always active in its interests. He was a member of the Masons, affiliating with the Great Falls chapter. Peter Harrison married in 1858 to Frances B. McComb, who was born in Ireland. She came to this country with her brothers and sisters, and the little band made their way across the continent and settled at Auburn, California, in the early fifties. Here she met and married Mr. Harrison, and she spent many years as his faithful companion, enduring the hardships and sharing the sacrifices that had to be made with him. She is yet living, making her home with her son in Great Falls. She is now seventy-two years of age, having been born on the 14th of March, 1840.

William Henry Harrison was the eldest of the four children born to his parents, and so early realized that there was such a thing as responsibility. He was educated in the public schools of Nevada and in the Santa Clara College, in California, which is a Jesuit institution. His family had removed to Nevada in 1867, while he was only a little chap. Here his father continued to manufacture wagons, and when young Henry was through with his school work there were always plenty of odd jobs he could do for his father, so his life did not contain many idle hours. He attended Santa Clara College until 1875, and then returned to Nevada where he took up mining. He followed this until 1882, part of his time being spent in Utah. Abandoning mining he now turned to merchandising, and going into partnership with his father, established a store at Silver Reef, Utah. For six years he was actively engaged in this business, and in the fall of 1888 he came to Montana.

On his arrival in the state which was to be his home for the years that have since passed, he determined to settle in the city or town as it then was, of Great Falls. He only remained here a short time before going to Stanford, Fergus county, Montana, where he again entered the mercantile business. In the fall of 1890 he removed his business to Neihart, Montana, and went into partnership with Allen Piers. The firm which was known as Piers & Harrison, soon had a flourishing business a large part of which was due to the energy and business ability of Mr. Harrison. Until the fall of 1895, therefore he worked to build up this general merchandise business, and then having a favorable opportunity, he sold the business and came to Great Falls. Here in partnership with Joseph Wagner, he purchased the Milwaukee hotel, which he conducted until 1897. Having a strong desire to return to the mercantile business he then sold the hotel and returning to Neihart, formed a partnership with C. H. Burchard. The firm name was the Neihart Mercantile Company, and until 1910, did a thriving business in Neihart, for Mr. Harrison had already built up a reputation there and the people were glad to have him in business there again. The firm also had a branch house in Great Falls, known as the Burchard & Harrison Company. In 1910, however, Mr. Harrison disposed of all of his mercantile interests in order to have all of his time free for his other interests. Since that time he has given his attention largely to the public offices which he has held, although he still has mining interests in Neihart and owns considerable property in the Belt Mountains.

Nicholas H. Buttelmann

John G. Buttelmann

Mr. Harrison has always been a Republican, and has taken an active part in the various campaigns for the past twenty-five years. In 1903 he was elected to the state legislature and served Cascade county as their representative for one term. He was elected county assessor in 1906 and served in this capacity for four years, having been elected for a second term in 1908. During Mayor Speer's administration he was appointed city clerk. This appointment took place in May, 1911, and is the position which he now fills. During the twelfth assembly in 1911, he acted as journal clerk of the senate. In these various political offices, he has shown himself a man to be depended upon. He is accurate, a rare quality in these days when speed is the all essential thing. In the many positions of responsibility which he has held he has never failed in the trust that the people who placed him in office, reposed in him. In the fraternal world he is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Elks.

Mr. Harrison married Miss Sarah Creighton Hamilton, on the 5th of December, 1811, at Silver Reef, Utah. She was the daughter of Samuel Hamilton and Margaret J. Hamilton, and she was born in the state of Utah. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Harrison. The three eldest, Frank, Alexander and William Peter were all born in Silver Reef, Utah, and the youngest, Alice Montana is the only one who can claim Montana as the state of her birth. She was born in Great Falls. The family residence is at 626 Third avenue North, and it is a gathering place for the many friends of the family, for the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Harrison is well known.

ROBERT E. STONE. Among the successful business men of Great Falls whose prominence in the commercial world is due strictly to their own energy and ability, none is more deserving of mention in this work than Robert E. Stone, president of the Star Clothing Company. Mr. Stone was reared to agricultural pursuits, but when still a youth, nearly a quarter of a century ago, came to Great Falls to devote his energies to the development of a business career, and since that time his rise has been constant and steadfast. He was born in Macon county, Missouri, May 25, 1861, a son of Joseph and Malinda (Boriss) Stone, his paternal ancestors being of Scotch-Irish nativity, while his maternal forefathers have resided in Kentucky for generations. Joseph Stone was born in Kentucky, from whence he removed to Macon county, Missouri, where he was a pioneer millwright. Subsequently he engaged in farming, to which he devoted his entire energies until his death in 1890, when he had reached the age of eighty-eight years. His wife, also a native of Kentucky, accompanied her parents to Missouri when a child, and there her death occurred in 1891, when she was eighty-seven years of age, she and her husband having been the parents of ten children, of whom Robert was the youngest.

Robert E. Stone attended the district schools in the vicinity of his father's farm, this being supplemented by a course in St. James Military Academy, Macon, which he left at the age of eighteen years. On September 26, 1888, he left home and came to Great Falls with a brother-in-law, J. M. Gaunt, and secured his first position with G. H. Goodrich, who later changed his business style to the Goodrich Lumber Company of Great Falls, the youth beginning as a salesman and working his way up in eight years to a directorship in the firm, in which he also owned considerable stock. On resigning his position with the lumber company, he entered the building business at Belt, Montana, where he erected a number of structures and was successful financially, and his next location was at Stockett. For the two years that followed he was engaged in the general merchandise business with E. R. Cingan, the firm being known as the E. R. Cingan Merchandise Company, and after this was dissolved he was identified with the same line on his own account for two years. Later he sold this business to Hawthorne & Sproat, but subsequently entered a co-partnership with that firm, which continued for six years. After the death of Mr. Hawthorne, Mr. Stone sold his interest in the business and returned to Great Falls, where he purchased a one-third interest in the Star Clothing Company, which had been originally established in 1907 by Louis & Andrew Roalswick. After a short period Mr. Stone bought out his partners, and subsequently the firm was incorporated with Mr. Stone as president, Joseph W. Freeman, vice-president, John Lannahan, treasurer, and Annie McGowan, secretary. This is now one of the leading clothing and gents' furnishing goods stores in Great Falls, and attracts a large trade to its establishment at No. 226 First avenue, South. Much of the success of this venture must be accredited to Mr. Stone, whose able management has served to develop this from a poorly managed, run down venture that was steadily losing money, into a flourishing business catering to the best trade in the city. Mr. Stone has done much to display his confidence in the future of his adopted city, readily giving his aid and influence to all progressive movements and so conducting his own business affairs that they may benefit Great Falls. He is an active member of the Merchants' Association, and has been prominent in fraternal work as a member of the Elks, the Eagles and the Odd Fellows, in which he is noble grand and chief patriarch. His family is well known throughout the city, and his residence, at No. 911 Second avenue, South, is a center of social refinement.

On January 18, 1888, Mr. Stone was married at Macon, Missouri, to Miss Laura L. Gaunt, daughter of Richard A. Gaunt, a native of Missouri, and they have had three children: Albert Homer, born in Macon, Missouri, and now a well-known traveling salesman of Great Falls; Helen, born at Great Falls and now living at home; and Harry, born at Stockett, Montana, and now attending school.

NICHOLAS H. AND JOHN G. BUTTELMANN. Probably there is no more beautiful spot in Dawson county than that section of the country known as Bad Route, which no doubt received its name many years ago, before irrigation and modern methods improved it to such a degree that as a farming and ranching locality it has few, if any, superiors in eastern Montana. The visitor, approaching from a distance and noting for the first time the cluster of substantial, well-arranged buildings, believes himself to be drawing near to a little village nestling in the valley, surrounded by ridges on either side. Closer observation, however, discovers the hillsides dotted with great herds of sleek, well-fed cattle, sheep and horses, all wearing the brand "52", the waving fields of grain, the long line of neatly-stacked hay and the modern appliances for the carrying on of a successful Western ranch, and the stranger surmises, and correctly, that he is approaching the property of the Buttelmann brothers, Nicholas and John G., whose activities have made their "52" brand famous all over the country.

These brothers are sons of a fine old German couple, John and Meta Buttelmann, natives of the Fatherland, where the father, an honored citizen of his community, died in 1879, while the mother still survives him at an advanced age. They were the parents of four children: Nicholas; John G.; William a rancher at Three Forks, Montana; and Anna, who lives with her aged mother at the old home in Germany.

Nicholas H. Buttelmann was born in Germany, May 15, 1867, and as a lad of fifteen years came to the United States and spent one year in New York, then turning his face to the west and coming to Three Forks, at the head of the Missouri river. During the following year John G. Buttelmann, who was born in Germany, December 2, 1868, immigrated to the United States and in 1885 joined his brother. They secured employment with an uncle, the owner of the famous "Diamond G" brand, with whom they continued until 1889. Having learned every detail of the cattle business, they knew the necessity of securing a location in which water was to be found, as they had found that water was necessary to the growing of hay for their cattle, and after some deliberation settled on Bad Route Creek, where they began operations in an unpretentious way. This small and humble start, however, was but the nucleus of a business that has grown to be one of the largest of its kind in eastern Montana, and the brothers are now the owners of 10,000 acres, the ranch being six miles long and four wide. Many difficulties have been met and overcome, especially in the building of drains and ditches for irrigation, but 3,000 acres of their land are now in a high state of cultivation, and large and bountiful crops of corn, hay and oats are raised annually, 200 acres being given over to oats in 1912. In the center of this veritable oasis the brothers have erected a modern residence, substantial barns and appropriate sheds and outbuildings for the housing of their cattle, implements and grain, and these latter are surrounded by long rows of stacked hay and grain. The Buttelmann brothers are recognized as shrewd, progressive business men, and with the ability to carry any undertaking to a successful conclusion. The general air of prosperity which pervades their ranch speaks eloquently of capable management, and the latest machinery testifies just as forcibly to their belief in the use of modern ideas and methods. Congenial in working together, they have also made many friends in this locality, and no men stand higher in public esteem.

Nicholas H. Buttelmann was married in 1897 to Mary Conrad, who was born in Switzerland and came to the United States with her parents, John and Regina Conrad, who settled in Dakota. Mr. and Mrs. Buttelmann have a handsome residence in Glendive and other real estate holdings. He is a member of Glendive blue lodge of the Masonic fraternity and in political matters is a Republican, while his wife is a consistent member of the Catholic church and well known in religious and social circles.

John G. Buttelmann was married in 1894 to Grace Redfield, and they have had two children: Mary and Agnes. Mr. and Mrs. Buttelmann are members of the Lutheran church. Like his brother, Mr. Buttelmann is a Republican in political matters, but neither has cared to enter the public arena as a candidate for office.

CHARLES HAYDEN EGGLESTON. As a member of that influential class of men, who according to their characters and creeds may be the best liked or the worst hated of men—in other words, the editors of our daily newspapers—Charles Hayden Eggleston has long since made the force of his personality felt through the state of Montana. As a managing editor of one of the most important newspapers in the state he occupies a responsible and easily abused position. No one as well as an editor himself knows the power and influence of the printed word, and no power is more wrongfully used in the country today. In some instances we come across men who refuse to lower their high calling by placing themselves at the beck and call of every petty local politician who desires to use the newspaper to exploit himself, and the public is not long in discovering that such is the case and in showing their appreciation. This is one of the principal causes of the large circulation of the Anaconda Standard, for Mr. Eggleston is a man of the above type.

It is but another link in the great chain of inherited characteristics, this high-mindedness, for Mr. Eggleston is a son of pure English ancestors, men and women of strong characters, education and refinement of tastes. His father was Charles Schendoah Eggleston, who was born at Oneida, New York, on the 12th of March, 1824. He was professor of ancient and modern languages in Falley Seminary, at Fulton, New York. Giving up his educational work, he later entered the mercantile business at the same place. Until about 1890 he was a member of the Republican party, but at this time the Prohibition party was being organized and he threw himself with intense enthusiasm into the work of the new party. He was ever afterward a loyal member of this party and was its candidate for various city, county and state offices. In his religious faith he was a member and active worker in the Methodist Episcopal church. The wife of Charles S. Eggleston was Frances Helen Paddock, who was born in Wolcott, New York, likewise of English ancestry.

Charles Hayden Eggleston was born on the 16th of February, 1858, at Fulton, New York. He and his sister, Frances, now Mrs. A. B. Blodgett, of Syracuse, New York, are now the only living members of his family. Mr. Eggleston received the usual secondary school education and was then sent to Syracuse University, from which he was graduated in 1878 with the degree of A. B. He had made a good record in the university and was able to secure a position on the Syracuse Standard as a reporter. It was not long before he proved to his superiors that he not only knew how to write news but that he knew how to handle it as well. He was consequently offered the position of city editor of the paper which is now the Syracuse Post-Standard, which he did not hesitate about accepting. He remained in this work until 1889, when the opportunity to come west as associate editor of the Anaconda Standard arose. He arrived in Anaconda that year, and has been on the editorial staff of the above mentioned paper ever since.

Politically Mr. Eggleston is a member of the Democratic party, and has rendered the party yeoman service in many campaigns. Through his position on the inside, as it were, he has been in a position to judge fairly, and knowing the honesty and sincerity of his beliefs, the people have trusted this judgment far more than is usual. On the Democratic ticket he was elected state senator from Deerlodge county in 1894 and his service was so satisfactory to those who elected him that he was sent back in 1898 for another term. Mr. Eggleston is not a believer in mixing politics and newspaper work, so he has since accepted no more offices.

In religious matters, Mr. Eggleston is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and in the fraternal world, he owes allegiance to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks.

On the 22nd of December, 1884, Mr. Eggleston was married to Jessie Virginia Coleman, the ceremony taking place in Syracuse, New York. Mrs. Eggleston was educated in the public schools of Seneca Falls, New York. The only child of Mr. and Mrs. Eggleston, Charles Little Eggleston, was born in Syracuse, New York, April 22, 1890. He has received a thorough education and has attended the state university of Montana. He is now artist for the Anaconda Standard.

Not only is Mr. Eggleston known for his brilliant and searching editorials, but also for various publications of which he is the author. Among these may be mentioned, "When Bryan Came to Butte," published in 1897, and a "History of Anaconda," which was published in 1908. The Anaconda Standard is one of the authoritative voices of public opinion in Montana, and of the many thousands who daily read the editorial columns not one but feels the force and sincerity, as well as the cleverness of Mr. Eggleston's remarks. It is worth any sacrifice he may have made to have the reputation for fairness and the influence for good that Mr. Eggleston possesses. With such men to lead them toward progress it is no wonder that the people of Montana have made such tremendous strides within the past decade or so.

FREDERICK H. RAY. The registrar of state lands is a citizen of Helena who is known throughout the state. His office would in some measure account for this, and also the fact that the Democratic party claims him as one of its most able exponents, but Mr. Ray's claim upon the interest of the citizens of this commonwealth is not based only upon these circumstances, but upon his efforts to secure an irrigation code for the state. The subject of reclamation is one which is of vital interest to hundreds and thousands of people, and legislation upon it, is a matter to which few are indifferent. Mr. Ray has had exceptional opportunities for studying conditions in Montana, and the enactment of the law relating to road legislation and creating the office of state engineer was in part the outcome of his investigation. So too with the Carey land act board; and it will thus readily be understood that Mr. Ray is one whose interest in Montana is not alone that which a man feels in the advancement of his own individual prosperity alone, but one which concerns that of a multitude of the dwellers in this vast division of our country.

Mr. Ray is of New England birth and ancestry. His father was born in Vermont, and his mother, Julia Griffen, at Waterbury, Connecticut. Her family had come to America in 1692, when the Salem colony were being troubled with imaginary witches; but as they settled on Cape Cod, they escaped that disturbance. They fought in the Colonial wars with the French and the Indians, and later in the struggle for independence. Julia Griffen was born in 1837 and died in 1859, two years after the birth of her son, Frederick H. Ray, who entered upon this life on August 3, 1857. The father, George H. Ray, remarried in 1860, and Amy Reynolds Ray, the step-mother, brought up the little boy with all the care and love of an own mother. This was the more needed, as the father enlisted in the Civil war, entering the 14th Vermont and serving two years. He was present at the battle of Gettysburg, and in some other engagements. Ill health forced him to leave the service, and so he was mustered out at the close of the two years. But the injury to his constitution was permanent, and in 1865 the illness contracted during his service in the army brought about his death, at the age of thirty-six. He was by trade a carpenter and mechanic, and he also conducted a large marble mill at Rutland.

The early death of George Ray made it necessary for his son to undertake the burden of self-support at an early age. He attended the primary schools in Rutland, where he was born and at thirteen began to make his own way. This did not mean that he ceased to pursue his education, for he managed to combine work and study, and continued his schooling in the elementary schools of Whitehall, New York and Petroleum Centre, Pennsylvania. His next step was to work his way through business college, and with that equipment he entered the Albany Medical College and paid his expenses there. In 1882, Mr. Ray graduated from the school, but he never made use of his medical education though he became a post-graduate student in the University of Pennsylvania. In 1883 he removed to St. Louis, and there took up commercial work in the establishment of Curtis & Company, first as bookkeeper and then in the responsible office of credit man. Mr. Ray filled the latter position for six years, and then gave it up because he wished to go further west. Coming to Helena in the spring of 1889, he became secretary for the Parchen Drug Company, and was associated with that firm for ten years. In 1901 Governor Toole selected Mr. Ray to fill the office of assistant state examiner, in the discharge of whose duties he was occupied until 1908, when he was advanced to the position of chief examiner. The following year marked his appointment to the office which he now fills, that of register of state lands. In the Democratic party, Mr. Ray has been not only a worker, but the originator of numerous measures. In 1896 he was ardent in his advocacy of bimetallism and he throws himself heart and soul into whatever cause he espouses.

Mrs. Ray is a native of St. Louis. Previous to her marriage, she was Miss Nellie Duffer of that city. Her father, Captain Duffer, was known to all the older residents of the city, as he had been for many years a steamboat captain and was prominent in the commercial and political life of the city. The marriage of Mr. Ray and Miss Duffer took place in St. Louis, on November 28, 1888. No children have resulted from this union. Mr. and Mrs. Ray reside at 31 South Rodney street, a place much frequented by their many friends. They are members of the Unitarian church.

JOHN WILLIAM JAMES, a well-known and successful attorney of Anaconda, Montana, is a native of Sturgeon Bay, Wisconsin, born May 12, 1868, son of John W. and Mary Ellen (Carmody) James. The father in early life was engaged in farming in Massachusetts and New Hampshire, later a merchant in Illinois and the later years of his life were spent in lumbering in Wisconsin. His wife, the mother of John W. James of Anaconda, died when the son was an infant, and his father moved to Neodesha, Kansas, and died there when John William was four and a half years old. His father had remarried, and the boy was reared by his stepmother. She later married again and is the widow of Henry Doron. She gave to him the same loving care as if he had been her own child, and today he is gladly returning that interest, for this lady, who was formerly Miss Sarah J. Kinney, is now living at the home of Mr. James in Anaconda, aged eighty-one.

At his boyhood home in Neodesha he attended the public schools and graduated in 1886. He began to earn his living at railroad work in the station of the St. Louis and San Francisco railroad at his home town, remaining there until 1889, when he came to Anaconda to accept a clerical position in the office of the Montana Union Railroad, later becoming chief clerk and remaining there until the great A. R. U. strike in 1894. Taking his savings from his wages he went to the University of Wisconsin and took up the study of law.

Mr. James came to Anaconda on July 10, 1896, and began to practice his profession. He was the first Republican county attorney ever elected in Deer Lodge county after the division of the county into its present confines. He was appointed United States commissioner by Judge Knowles and later by Judge Hunt, serving twelve years in that important capacity. He is a firm believer in Republican principles and is active locally in the affairs of the party. He is a director of the Anaconda National Bank is an enthusiastic and consistent booster for Montana and for Anaconda in particular.

On January 23, 1897, Mr. James was married to Miss Almyra M. Little of Birmingham, Iowa. They have five children, Lois Harriet, Ruth, John William, David Ralph and Mary Martha.

JOSEPH J. APPEL, an enterprising business man of Philipsburg, has lived in Montana and the northwest for varying periods during the last twenty-five years, and consequently his opinion as to this region has much interest and value. "I have traveled," says he, "and have done business in every state in the Union, and in my opinion Montana beats them all. The people, the climate, the opportunities and conditions that are found here can not be equaled, and personally I favor Montana above all." His individual career is one more proof of the resourcefulness of the Treasure state.

Mr. Appel was born in the city of Rochester, New York, November 8, 1863, and finished his education there in the Catholic school. When he was about twenty-four years old he came west and spent about three years in various towns of Washington, engaged in the meat business, for which he had been prepared by experience in a wholesale meat firm of the east. From 1889 to 1894 he was a resident of Philipsburg, where he conducted the same business. He was then absent in the east at his old home about a year, returning to this locality for another year, after which he went on the road as traveling representative for the great business involved in the distribution and sale of meat products. During the next few years he traveled in every state, and few men in commercial life have seen more of the country than he has. Since 1908 he has been engaged in the retail meat business in Granite county of this state, first having a shop at Drummond, but since 1910 again entering business at Philipsburg.

Mr. Appel has various interests in the business and civic affairs of his home city. He controls the McDonald Opera House and is proprietor of the Appel theatre and picture show, and to a large degree directs and furnishes the means of recreation to the people of the city. An ardent lover of baseball, he is now the manager of the Philipsburg Baseball Club. He took the responsible part in the organization of the Boulder Mining & Development Company, of which he is secretary and treasurer and owns a large share of the stock. The company owns seven fine claims, and will soon begin shipping ore.

Mr. Appel has had a busy career. His first wages were earned in a men's furnishing store at Rochester, two dollars and a half per week, and he gave this salary to his mother. This was when he was about fourteen years old, and he afterwards learned the machinist's trade. Finally he embarked in the wholesale meat business, and thus found the line of work which afforded him his business career. He affiliates with the Improved Order of Red Men and the related Order of Pocahontas, in which he has held office, and also with the Elks lodge. He is an honorary member of the American Woman's League. Independent in politics, he occasionally takes an active part in some local campaign. Sports of all kinds find in him a devotee, including hunting and fishing. He sometimes puts on the gloves for a friendly boxing bout. His diversions also include riding or driving, and the pleasures of music and the stage.

Mr. Appel was married in Louisville, Kentucky, July 5, 1901, to Mrs. Alice B. Weber, of that city. They are the parents of three children: Ruby and Fred J. are in school, and Margaret is the baby. Mr. Appel's parents were Joseph A. and Mary (Zimmerman) Appel. His father, who was born in Germany and came to America when a young man, settled at Rochester and spent the rest of his life there, being engaged in the meat business and the buying and selling of horses and cattle. His death occurred in 1891, when about sixty years of age, and he is buried at Rochester. He was married in Rochester, and his widow still resides there.

Mr. Appel's motto is: "Look right, do right, and if it goes wrong let it go; you can't stop it, but never quit, the whole world hates a quitter."

GEORGE N. FULLER was born in Nelson, Portage county, Ohio, on July 4, 1869. After completing his secondary education he entered Hiram College, famous as the institution from which President Garfield graduated and of which he was afterwards president, as well as for its excellence as a school of moral and intellectual training. Mr. Fuller did not finish his course at Hiram uninterruptedly, as he came to Montana in 1889 and worked for the Northern Pacific Railway as a surveyor. He worked on the survey of the branch from Logan to Butte, and, after a year and a half with the railroad, went back to Hiram to finish his course. He was nineteen when he came to Montana, and twenty-two when he left college. As the region appealed to him, Mr. Fuller came back and settled at Bozeman. Here he and his brother, C. C. Fuller, engaged in the wholesale fruit and produce business for two years, but they were caught in the panic of 1893 and obliged to sell out their stock and retire from business. For one year after this Mr. Fuller worked as a grocer's clerk and then he entered the railway mail service. He began as substitute, and it was then that he moved from Bozeman to Jamestown, North Dakota. This was his home for five years and it was here that he was married in the last year of his stay in that city. His bride was Miss Claudia Tinker, who was born in Nelson, Ohio. The marriage of Miss Tinker and Mr. Fuller occurred in August, 1899, and a few months later Mr. Fuller received a transfer in the mail service, and the young couple moved to Butte, Montana. After three years they moved to Helena, and in April, 1910, Mr. Fuller was appointed chief clerk of the railway mail service.

There were seven sons in the family to which George N. Fuller belongs. Two are dead and the others have devoted themselves to lives of service in the missionary field. William J. Fuller is a business man at Oberlin, Ohio. Marcus B. Fuller has been for years in India. Gerald M. Fuller has given himself to the home mission work. Columbus C. Fuller, his father's namesake, is a missionary in Africa. The father of these men was C. C. Fuller, a prosperous farmer of Ohio. He married Mary A. Bierce, a woman of rare qualities, a wife and mother. She died in the spring of 1885, and in the fall of 1899 Mr. Fuller was laid at her side in Nelson, Ohio.

George N. Fuller and his family are affiliated with the Congregational church. Two sons, Robert, born in 1902, and Edward, born 1907, complete the family circle.

DANIEL E. WHITE is the owner and direct manager of the Helena Trading Company, of Helena, Montana, located at Nos. 1335-37 Helena avenue. Here in the heart of the business district, he conducts a flourishing retail house carrying a vast assortment of general merchandise and employing a number of assistants to aid him in handling the trade.

Mr. White was born in Mohawk, Herkimer county, New York, on the eighteenth day of October in the year 1852. He was educated in the public schools of Auburn and Syracuse, York state, being compelled to discontinue his schooling at the early age of fourteen that he might begin to become self-supporting. His first position was that of an errand boy in Syracuse. In this grocery store he worked for some two years, receiving the munificent salary of one dollar and fifty cents a week. He left Syracuse for Williamsport, Pennsylvania, where he secured work in a sash and door factory. After another two years he returned to Syracuse to act as carpenter's apprentice. He was now eighteen years of age. In his twentieth year he found employment in the Porter Manufacturing Company. This work seemed to be more to his liking, as he remained with the company for almost nine years before deciding to try his fortune in the west. In 1889 he migrated to Helena to ply his trade of carpentering, there being a great demand in the city for builders in all lines. In 1893-94 he engaged in pattern making at the Marysville Foundry and Machine Shop, and in 1895 established in Helena a small confectionery and cigar business. The beginning was small, but it was this modest start that has led to the present large mercantile concern that Mr. White now conducts. In 1903 he established the Helena Trading Company. The house brings in a large income and Mr. White himself occupies a prominent place in the mercantile life of the capital city.

While still a young man in York state, Mr. White found the woman of his heart in the person of Miss Josephine Bishop, of Syracuse. She became Mrs. Daniel White on the fourteenth day of February, 1876, thus bringing a life valentine of which he has never ceased to be proud. As they have never had any children, Mrs. White has found leisure to become quite active in the life of her western home. They are both fond, too, of their library and a quiet home life.

Mr. White has shown much interest, from time to time, in the state of local politics, even serving his city in the capacity of alderman from 1900 until 1902. He is a prominent member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons and also of the Knights of Pythias, and Woodmen of the World.

His father, Elijah White, was, like the son, a native of New York. Prior to the outbreak of the Civil war he was making good among the young farmers. After the call to arms he enlisted as an artilleryman, but was spared to serve his country for only six short months. While in camp at Newberne, North Carolina, he contracted yellow fever dying a few days later. This was in the second year of the war, 1862. He left a widow, Martha L. Sennett White, and two children—Frank E., of whom we have written, and a daughter, Mattie, who passed away in her nineteenth year.

LOUIS JOHNSON, foremost among the best known business men of Helena and prominent as a contractor and builder of some note, has achieved success as the result of his dominant will to advance in his chosen work, and his determination to do the best work possible at all times. His work is of that character which stands out, strong and true, as a monument to the sturdy traits of its builder, and when he is no longer putting forth his effort in new structures, his work of past years will still stand erect and upright.

Louis Johnson was born in Nain, Wermland, Sweden, on November 3, 1863. He is the son of John Abrahamson, born in Sweden in 1832, and Stina Jonas, also of Sweden, born in 1831. The father died in 1876 at the age of forty-four years, while the mother lived to reach the age of seventy-four, passing away on December 4, in 1905. They were the parents of seven children, Louis being the fourth in order of birth. As a small boy he was sent to the common schools of his native town and thus continued until he reached the age of fourteen years, and after that he did whatever his hands could find to do in the way of manual labor. He came to America in June, 1887, when he was twenty-four years of age. He first settled in North Dakota, doing farm work for several years. In 1889 he came to Montana and settled in Helena, where he was variously engaged up to 1891, when he began contracting in a small way, excavating for buildings, etc., and continuing in this manner until 1894, when he secured his first big contract, which called for the grading of a road from Broadwater to Fort Harrison for Lewis and Clark county. From that time on his success as a contractor was assured and his reputation established. Since that time he has performed similar work for the city, county and state to the amount of many thousands of dollars. He has paved some of the principal streets of the city and done a vast deal of sidewalk construction for the city. He has handled a large amount of work for the city, county and the federal government, and is today regarded as the foremost contractor of Lewis and Clark county. He is also owner of considerable real estate and large renting properties.

Mr. Johnson is a Republican, and while he ordinarily takes no active part in political matters, he has on several occasions been the delegate of the party to city conventions. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, No. 1 Lodge of Helena, Montana.

Mr. Johnson was married on August 3, 1906, to Miss Mary Dahlgren, of Swedish parentage, and four children have been born to them. They are Lillian Adena, born in Pasadena, California; Pearl Montana, and Louis Leonard, the two last named having been born in Helena, and Florence Marie.

JOHN AUGUSTUS HENSHAW was born in Cairo, Illinois, on November 18, 1869. His parents died when he was five years of age, and at the earliest possible time he began to earn his own living. When he was twelve he began life in earnest by entering upon an apprenticeship in a cooking and baking establishment. He received a stipend of four dollars a week while learning his trade, and at the age of sixteen had practically learned the trade. When he finished his training he began traveling about, much in the fashion of the German lad who has learned his occupation and enters upon his "wander years" as a journeyman workman. During this period Mr. Henshaw worked in a great number of the larger centers in Illinois and Wisconsin, as well as Minnesota and some others of the states along the Mississippi. Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul were among the cities in which he was employed, and in all of them he held the position of chef in hotels and restaurants of the very highest class. In the fall of 1889 Mr. Henshaw left St. Paul and came to Butte, where he has since lived and been in business until his retirement a few years ago. For five years after his arrival he worked for wages and in 1894 went into an establishment of his own. The firm name was the Davie-Henshaw Company, and the place had previously been Davie & Holmes. The new company did a lively business for three years, and then ill health made it necessary for Mr. Henshaw to retire. He withdrew from the firm and went away for his health, remaining for one year. When he returned he opened a place of his own, the famed Whatley Cafe, which he conducted for twelve years. The superior cuisine of this restaurant added to its excellent service and soon spread its reputation in the city and Mr. Henshaw did a record business. There were two entrances to the cafe, one at the front and the other in the rear. At meal times patrons would stand in line at both doors of the building, waiting their turn to get in and be served. The crowd was handled with consummate adroitness and perfect system so that every one was served in a satisfactory manner. At the end of twelve years the proprietor was enabled to retire, much to the regret of the customers.

Mr. Henshaw is an advocate of the policies of the Republican party, but he is in no sense a politician. He votes from the standpoint of an American citizen promoting the measures which seem to him best adapted to advance the welfare of the country, and is otherwise indifferent as to which party controls affairs. Devoted to America in general, he is especially loyal to Montana and any movement to further her progress and to add to her prosperity is sure to find staunch support in Mr. Henshaw. Perhaps because he is a self-made man is one reason why he so appreciates the opportunities which Butte offers to those with initiative and industry. His acquaintance with the country is extensive, and it is his opinion that Montana, as a whole, and Butte in particular, are the most favorable places in the United States for new enterprises and investments, and as a place of residence he declares that he prefers Butte to any spot on the globe.

Mr. Henshaw is now living a retired life, but like most men who have accomplished things and who have excelled in what they undertook he finds that inactivity bores him. He has the habit of working and he is not able to get over it so he has about decided that when he has rested a year or so he will again go into business. The cafe which he ran so successfully for twelve years is no longer in existence, but it was known throughout the west while in operation and it is remembered by hundreds with lively regret for its vanished viands.

In the matter of amusement Mr. Henshaw has a catholic taste. He is a great reader along a variety of lines and the theatre is an unfailing source of pleasure to him. His diversions are by no means confined to the indoor variety, for there is no sort of outdoor sport which he does not enjoy, though his favorites are baseball and football. He will go far to see a game of either of these sports. None of the rest of his family have come to the west but have remained in Illinois and the adjacent states. This Mr. Henshaw regards as a lack of taste, but he is sufficiently enthusiastic regarding the advantages of Montana to make up for all the rest. It is to such men as he that the state owes her rapid advance in recent years, for their industry is of the sort that not merely enriches them but promotes the development of the community.

HENRY G. PICKETT. The subject of the ensuing review is one of the successful citizens of Helena and is also a prominent clubman. Henry G. Pickett, who carries on an extensive business in real estate, insurance, loans and rentals, has resided in the west since young manhood and has been identified with Helena since the year 1889.

Mr. Pickett is one of the sons of the Badger state who have given to this part of Montana a particularly excellent brand of citizenship. His birth occurred at Granville, Wisconsin, October 29, 1860. His father, Henry S. Pickett, a native of Connecticut, was born July 14, 1816, and died August 6, 1892, at Fort Atkinson, Wisconsin. He was by occupation a contractor and carpenter. The mother, whose maiden name was Clara M. Porter, was a native of Vermont, the date of her nativity being July 3, 1823. This admirable lady, now crowned with years and veneration, survives and resides at Helena in the household of her son, the subject. Henry G. was the only child born to the union of these people.

Mr. Pickett received his education in the schools of Fort Atkinson, Wisconsin, graduating from the high school in 1878. When his school days were finished he learned telegraphy and was engaged as a telegrapher by a trio of railroads, namely: The Great Northern, the Northern Pacific and the Chicago & Northwestern. He continued in this line of activity until 1883, or for three years after following the celebrated advice of Horace Greeley, "Go west, young man, and grow up with the country." He came to Montana while in the service of the western railroads, and, as previously mentioned, his arrival in Helena was in 1889. His first position here was with the firm of Witherbee, Naples & Company, engaged in the real estate, insurance and accounting business, and he was thus occupied for a number of years in the capacity of an employee. He also became interested in mining, and filled the position of chief clerk in the bureau of agriculture under Captain Mills.

In 1903 Mr. Pickett became associated with John M. Glass and they purchased the established business of the Piatt & Heath Company, and deal in real estate, insurance, loans and rentals, and today theirs is one of the leading real estate firms in the city, its offices being located at 29 West Sixth avenue. It is incorporated with the following officers: Mr. Glass, president; W. B. McClatchey, vice-president; and Mr. Pickett, secretary and treasurer. Mr. Pickett is everywhere regarded as one of Helena's representative citizens, ever loyal to her institutions and her welfare, and contributing by his own success to that of the city, his fine patriotism being a matter of "deeds, not words."

Mr. Pickett is Republican in his political convictions, but has never been lured by its honors and emoluments to office seeking, his value lying in staunch private citizenship. He is connected with an unusually large number of fraternal and social organizations. In the first place he is one of the most enthusiastic of Masons, belonging to all the bodies of the ancient and august order and having attained to the thirtieth degree. He is entitled to wear the white-plumed helmet of the Knight Templar and, having social proclivities, he has "traveled east" with the Shriners. He now holds offices in several Masonic bodies. Other fraternal affiliations are with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Woodmen of the World, the Highlanders, the Modern Brotherhood and the Women of Woodcraft. He belongs to the Montana Club and is president of the Commercial Club of Helena. In the matter of religious conviction he is a Unitarian, belonging to the church and taking an active part in its good enterprises, as well as being one of the church trustees. He belongs to the state board of education, which is most appropriate, for no one more fully recognizes the value to a community of the best educational opportunities possible or has labored more strenuously to secure the same.

On October 27, 1888, Mr. Pickett established an independent household by marriage, his chosen lady being Miss Annie Glass, daughter of William Glass and a native of Michigan. Their union was celebrated at Cooperstown, North Dakota, and it has been blessed with three children. Natie Theo., born in Cooperstown, North Dakota, is the wife of D. R. Sloan and resides at Big Timber, Montana. Kenneth W., born at Cooperstown, and Ruth, whose life record began in Helena, are still members of the parental household, which is located at 805 East Sixth avenue and which is one of the most attractive and hospitable of Helena's many delightful homes.

Mr. Pickett on both paternal and maternal sides is of English extraction. He is a man of strong convictions, fearless in defense of what he believes to be right and his name has long been a synonym for honorable business dealing. This, combined with native kindness and genial manners, serves to make him one of the most popular, as well as one of the most successful and enterprising of Helena's citizens.

WILLIAM D. RUMSEY. Butte, Montana, forms a particularly prolific field for the high class mining engineer and surveyor, and among those who are engaged in that honorable and lucrative department of effort at this point William D. Rumsey has a prominent place. Mr. Rumsey, who is a native of Buffalo, New York, was born March 24, 1856, and being left an orphan when a small child was taken into the home of an uncle, with whom he resided during his boyhood years. When eight years old his uncle went to LaCrosse, Wisconsin, taking the lad with him. He had made a start in school at Buffalo and continued to acquire an education in the public schools of LaCrosse upon his arrival in that city.

Later he entered the Shattuck Military school at Faribault, Minnesota, and prepared for college. He selected as his alma mater the Nebraska College at Nebraska city, at that time one of the leading institutions of learning in the west, and took a complete scientific course there, graduating with high honors. Having finished his education Mr. Rumsey started out on his active business career and had many experiences in various capacities before he finally settled down to the prosecution of his professional work as a mining engineer and surveyor and in which he has achieved so much success.

Leaving college he went directly to LaCrosse, his home city, and connected himself with a wholesale hardware firm, starting to learn the business at the bottom of the ladder and climbing up with rapidity until he had attained the best position the firm had to offer and for a number of years acted as their traveling representative. All told, Mr. Rumsey was eight years in the employ of this firm, but at two different periods. During that time he spent one year in Texas, in the year 1876, when he undertook to deliver dispatches for the engineering corps on the Texas Pacific Railroad, before the track was built from Dallas west.

Not desiring to continue permanently at that occupation Mr. Rumsey resigned his position on the road and turned his attention to telephone construction work, and secured an appointment as assistant to the superintendent of the company's state construction work, with headquarters at Madison. Having heard of the splendid opportunities afforded young men in the Treasure state, he thought he might like to locate here, but before doing so decided to make a trip of investigation and accordingly went to Helena and looked over the field from that point. He was not quite ready to settle there permanently, however, and after a few months went back to Minneapolis and took a position with the Coolidge Fuel & Supply Company, as purchasing agent in the timber department for that firm's contract with the Soo Railroad. His territory in this work extended along the line of construction from Menominee river to Sault Ste. Marie.

The lure of the west was in Mr. Rumsey's veins since his short sojourn at Helena, so in 1889 he decided to locate in Montana and went to the capital city, and remained there four years. In 1893 he arrived in Butte, opened up offices here and has ever since been one of the most prominent residents of this thriving city. Mr. Rumsey is a man of highly developed public spirit and the state of Montana owes much to his energy and enterprise. It was he who took upon himself the task of securing data for a correct map of the state of Montana, for publication by the Rand & McNally Company, and to him also belongs the honor and distinction of having made the first maps of Lewis & Clark, Gallatin, Meagher and other counties of the state. He also most generously supplied the necessary funds for publishing the book entitled Pictorial Helena, which proved such an artistic and effective advertisement feature for that city. He is untiring in his zeal to forward any movement which will redound to the credit of Montana or any of its cities or towns, and is a citizen of whom the state may justly feel proud.

While a believer in the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party, he takes no active part in political affairs. He performs his duties as a citizen independently and intelligently and is a potent factor in all good works of interest to the community in which he resides. He was reared in colleges of the Episcopal church and contributes liberally to its benevolences. His favorite sport is hunting, and he is a lover of high class entertainments, such as the best theatrical performances and music of the best quality. His acquaintance throughout the state is extensive and he is held in the highest respect and esteem by all with whom he comes in contact.

WILLIAM N. LINTZ was born March 23, 1869, at Constantine, Michigan. He attended the public and high schools until he was eighteen years of age, but helped his father on the farm until he was twenty. When he came to Montana in 1889 his first employment was for Clark Brothers in Leeton county, now Chouteau county, on their sheep ranch. He remained one season, and then went to Mr. George Miller's dairy ranch in the same county. He was there one season and then settled on the north fork of Sun river as a ranchman for himself. He began on a very small scale, was fairly successful, continued for seven years and then sold out and came to Augusta, Montana. Here he began an implement and machinery business, which he continued for two years, and then sold out and became manager for the Augusta Mercantile Company, remaining there nearly two years. He then went to Conrad, Montana, as manager for the H. E. Brockman Mercantile Store, remaining nearly two years. At the end of this time he went to Great Falls, Montana, as chief clerk for the Bee Hive Mercantile Company, and was with that company nearly two years. Removing then to Big Hall Basin, he took charge of the J. P. Lossel & Company dry goods store and was engaged there for eighteen months. In the spring of 1908 he came to Deer Lodge and opened a gentlemen's furnishing, clothing and shoe store on Main street. He has been very successful and his store is modern and up-to-date.

Mr. Lintz is in politics a Progressive. He was secretary of the Democratic Central Committee of Lewis and Clark county. Fraternally he belongs to the W. O. W., in which he has held all chairs, and to the M. W. of A. and the L. O. O. M., being treasurer of the last. He is also a member of the Masonic fraternity. He is secretary of the Business Men's Association and trustee of the State Merchants' Association. He is owner of city realty.

Mr. Lintz has no one to thank for his successful life and he even earned the money for the cost of his education. He is progressive in every sense of the word, and is highly respected and prosperous.

He married Miss Mary E. Doty, of Constantine, Michigan, his birthplace, September 26, 1896. They have four children, Ray D., who is in the public schools, Garnet A., Helen and Louise.

The father of the subject of this sketch, George Lintz, is a native of Germany and is a farmer of Constantine, Michigan. His mother was Miss Rebecca Martin, who was a native of Indiana. There were six children in the parents' household: Ledah, now Mrs. Harry Young, of Constantine, Michigan; Charles E., a farmer of Constantine; Lillie, now Mrs. William Hoffman, of Craig, Montana; John P., a mechanic of Detroit, Michigan; George M., a farmer of Constantine.

Mr. Lintz deserves the success he has gained by ability, energy, industry and integrity. There is no man who stands higher and represents more than he in the Business Men's Association.

ALFRED WHITWORTH. Since 1889 Alfred Whitworth has been engaged in the drug business in the city of Deer Lodge, Montana, and the years have told the tale of an eminently successful career, due to innate talent as a pharmacist and to unusual enterprise and initiative as a business man. Mr. Whitworth has ever manifested a deep and sincere interest in community affairs and he has ever been on the alert and enthusiastically in sympathy with all movements projected for the good of the general welfare.

Alfred Whitworth was born in Lancashire, England, March 16, 1865, and he is a son of Jeffrey and Sarah (Boyd) Whitworth, both of whom were born in England in 1839. The father came to America with his family in 1866, and settled in Salt Lake City, Utah. His wife, who still survives him, yet resides there. Mr. and Mrs. Jeffrey Whitworth became the parents of three children.—Frank E. is a prominent druggist in Salt Lake City; Violet is a popular and successful teacher in the public schools of Salt Lake City; and Alfred is the immediate subject of this review.

An infant of but one year of age at the time of his arrival in the United States, Alfred Whitworth was reared to maturity in Salt Lake City. He received his educational training in St. Marks Episcopal School, the only institution of learning in that place in those early days outside of Mormon schools. The first work he performed for wages, was as office boy in the office of Philip T. Van Zile, then prosecuting attorney for Utah territory. At the age of thirteen years he took up the study of pharmacy, and he resided in Salt Lake City as a drug clerk until 1885, when he went to Hailey, Idaho, where he was employed as a druggist for the ensuing two years, at the expiration of which he came to Montana, locating in Deer Lodge, here working as a drug clerk for the next eighteen months. On July 1, 1889, he decided to launch forth in the drug business on his own account and on that date opened a store which now ranks as one of the oldest of its kind in Deer Lodge. His business has increased steadily in the scope of its operations and the drug store is as finely equipped in every particular as any that can be found in many of the large eastern cities.

In politics Mr. Whitworth is a staunch supporter of Republican principles. He served for six years as a member of the State Board of Pharmacy, under appointments of ex-Governor Richards and ex-Governor Toole. His strict application to business and up-to-date methods, as coupled with a gentlemanly and genial disposition, are the prime reasons for the splendid success achieved by Mr. Whitworth. In fraternal circles he is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World and with the time-honored Masonic order, having been master of Deer Lodge, No. 14, of the latter organization in 1892 and 1908, high priest of Valley chapter No. 4, Royal Arch Masons, for five years; and potentate of Algeria Temple (Helena), Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, in 1906. In religious matters the family are devout communicants of the Protestant Episcopal church, in the different departments of whose work they have ever been most zealous factors.

On June 30, 1897, at Deer Lodge, Mr. Whitworth was united in marriage to Miss May E. Wollfolk, a daughter of Rev. L. Wollfolk, a pioneer preacher of the Baptist faith in Helena, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Whitworth have two children, Dorothy and Walton Marshall, who are attending school in Deer Lodge. Mr. Whitworth's chief pleasure is in automobiling with his wife and family. The attractive family home is located at No. 702 Milwaukee avenue, and is a center of refinement and generous hospitality.

JOSEPH S. BILYEU. There are numerous instances in the history of Montana where men whose educational advantages have been extremely limited, rise above their associates through sheer native ability and strong will. A man who has attained much more than local reputation in the cattle business is Joseph S. Bilyeu, of Wibaux, who, handicapped in youth by lack of schooling, identified himself with stock raising, and through persistent industry won for himself a place among the leading ranchers of Dawson county. Mr. Bilyeu was born in Christian county, Illinois, February 27, 1863, and is a son of Sampson and Sarah (Workman) Bilyeu, natives of that county. Sampson Bilyeu died in 1866 when twenty-eight years of age, while his widow survived him until 1887 and passed away in her fortieth year. They had two sons, Joseph S. and Jackson, the latter of whom died when twenty-eight years old.

Joseph S. Bilyeu was only three years old when his father died and was taken at that time to Kansas by his mother. He attended school only a very short time, as it was necessary that he go to work to earn his own living at an early age, and when he was only fourteen he became a cowboy. For some time he worked in Kansas, the Indian territory and Texas, and in 1880 came up the trail to Ogallala, Nebraska, which at that time was a large shipping point. In the spring of 1883 he went overland to Oregon, with the outfit of E. S. Newman, who had purchased 25,000 head of cattle, and after assisting to brand these animals followed the trail over the mountains to the Powder river, in Custer county, Montana, with the Newman outfit, the journey taking about four months. During the summer and fall of 1885 he drove cattle through to Medora, Billings county, North Dakota, to the slaughter house of Marcus DeMorse, making three trips in all, and in January, 1886, engaged with Sanborn & Loud as foreman, continuing with this concern until the fall of 1888. At that time he went down the trail to Utah for Joseph Scott, owner of the H-S outfit, and there rounded up a band of cattle which he drove overland to Powder river, and in the spring of 1889 came to Wibaux. He subsequently went down the trail for H. S. Boin to receive 3,000 head of Texas cattle, driving them overland to Dawson and Custer counties, and in the spring of 1890 became manager of the O-X outfit of Towers & Gudgel, who had about 35,000 head of cattle. Mr. Bilyeu continued to hold this position until the firm of Towers & Gudgel ceased operations in 1899, when he purchased a band of cattle and embarked in the business on his own account. He has continued to engage in the business to the present time and has had at different times as high as 3,000 head. Through energy, ability and close application, Mr. Bilyeu has achieved success, and he may take a pardonable pride in the fact that whatever he has attained has come as a result of his own efforts. Although his schooling was limited, close observation and study have made him a well informed man, able to converse intelligently on all the leading topics of the day, and with a broad general knowledge. In political matters he is a Democrat, but public life has never appealed to him, and his cattle interests have received his entire attention.

On December 23, 1894, Mr. Bilyeu was married to Miss Lucy Wills, daughter of Simpson Murry and Sallie P. (Warrener) Wills, natives of Clark and Bath counties, Kentucky, respectively. Mr. Wills is known as one of the leading owners and breeders of standard-bred horses and cattle in eastern Montana and as one of the leading citizens of Wibaux. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Bilyeu, one of whom died in infancy, the others being Marie and Beatrice.

LOUIS ARNOLD. For a score of years Mr. Arnold's name has been a well known one among the retail shoe dealers of Helena, as he has conducted one of the principal stores in that line of the retail business since 1889. It was in that year that he came to this country from Giessen, the State University city of Hesse Darmstadt, Germany. He was not twenty-five at the time, as he was born on May 2, 1865, but he was prepared for the matter he undertook. After attending the public school in his native town he was apprenticed to a manufacturer of boots and shoes, and although when he came to Helena he could not speak the English language, he did know shoes and shoe-leather, from the tan-yard to the ash heap. So it came about that he made a success of his store, and had it not been for the depression of 1893 he would probably have experienced nothing but prosperity in his business career. Some unfortunate investments involved him in financial difficulties in that time when hard times were general and he was obliged to close his store for a time. However, he was a man who could lose money without losing nerve, for he realized that he had lost nothing of the powers by which money is made, and he set himself to work at once to retrieve his loss. Almost immediately he started up again, and from that time his prosperity has been uninterrupted. He carries an excellent stock, and his store is one of the city's very best.

Yours Truly
Levi Davis

John Arnold, the father of Louis, was a farmer who passed his life in the land of Germany, where he was born in 1821. He ended his earthly pilgrimage in 1884, and his devoted wife, Mary Hellering Arnold, mourned him for six years before she joined him in the other world, at the age of seventy-two. Louis was the youngest of the family, which consisted of one daughter, Susan, and three sons, John, Henry and Louis.

Mr. Arnold believes in the preservation of the ideals and the customs of the Fatherland, realizing that a man will be all the more loyal to the land of his adoption if he treasures his heritage from that of his birth. He belongs to the Sons of Hermann and to the Germania Verein, of which he is treasurer. The Woodmen of the World is the only lodge with which he is affiliated. He is an attendant of the Lutheran church, and a member of that denomination. In political views he holds with the Socialists. This party has derived the most of its doctrine from the great German leaders, and it has been a potent influence in German statecraft. We are indebted to the Socialists for some of our best ideas on child labor, and the care for the dependent, and old age, and while it seems doubtful if their doctrines would be practicable in toto, their leaven is valuable, and they number in their ranks some of our best citizens. Mr. Arnold is unmarried, and he is not greatly devoted to society. His favorite diversion is hunting, or perhaps fishing, which is a sport for a philosophic individual.

LEVI DAVIS. The abstract and title business is one of vast importance, affecting as it does the ownership of lands, and no stable settlement of any section could be brought about without its assistance. A well-known business man along this line in Montana is Levi Davis, who has the honor of having put out the first set of abstracts in Montana and is the principal owner of the Montana Abstract and Title Insurance Company, which he established at Butte in 1900 and still conducts. Mr. Davis was born in Henry county, Indiana, November 29, 1841, and is a son of Nezhiah and Tamar (Brown) Davis.

Nezhiah Davis was born in Grayson county, Virginia, and his wife, in Ohio, the families on both sides dating back to Quaker ancestors who came to America with William Penn. Nezhiah Davis was a miller by trade and followed that occupation after moving to Indiana, but after settling in Iowa, in 1857, engaged in farming until his death, in 1863, when aged fifty-six years. His widow survived until 1894.

Levi Davis attended school in Indiana and later in Iowa and in the class of 1863 was graduated from the Iowa State University. Afterward he taught school for four years and in the meanwhile applied himself to the study of law, in 1871 being admitted to the bar. For the next eight years he practiced law at Sac City, Iowa, and retired from practice in order to accept the position of cashier in the Sac County Bank, where he continued until 1887. Being threatened with a breakdown in health, he resigned his bank office and went to California and there engaged in out-door work on a fruit farm for one year, which method completely restored him. In November, 1889, Mr. Davis came to Montana, locating at Deer Lodge, where he went into the abstract business and remained until 1896, when he removed to Anaconda and from there, in 1900, to Butte, where he is numbered with the representative business men and the reliable citizens.

Since coming to Montana Mr. Davis has taken no active part in politics and has never sought office here. In Iowa he was quite active in public affairs and served as county superintendent of schools in Marshall county, and in Sac county was county clerk and county recorder, chairman of the board of school directors and for more than ten years was treasurer of Sac City. He cast his maiden vote for Abraham Lincoln for president and in national affairs has been a Republican ever since, preserving his party fealty during the threatened party disruption on the silver issue, although in Montana that was an unpopular stand to take at that time.

In 1865 Mr. Davis was united in marriage with Miss Helen V. Criss, who was born in Illinois and died in 1897, in Montana. She is survived by three children, namely: Nettie, who is the wife of J. W. Smurr; Arthur E., who is a graduate of the Montana School of Mines, is now a ranchman but until recently was in business with his father; and Jesse E., who is in the fire insurance business at Seattle, Washington. Mr. Davis was married (second) to Miss Martha K. Hance, who was born in Ohio. They attend the Christian Science church. Although Mr. Davis has reached his seventieth year, he is hale, hearty and vigorous, the type of man who exemplifies in his person and in his preservation of every faculty the value of temperance and wholesome living, to which he attributes his health and consequent happiness.

HERMAN A. TOWLE is senior member of the well-known jewelry concern of Towle, Winterhalter & Hanafin, which is located in Butte, and which was incorporated under the laws of the state of Montana in 1908. The jewelry establishment conducted by this company is one of the finest of its kind in the entire northwest and controls an enormous trade. Mr. Towle holds prestige as one of the prominent and influential citizens of Butte, where he is esteemed by all with whom he has come in contact and where his sterling integrity of character has won him the entire confidence of his business associates.

A native of the fine old Hoosier state of the Union, Herman A. Towle was born at Mishawaka, St. Joseph county, Indiana, the date of his birth being the 24th of October, 1861. He is a son of Samuel Sargent and Charlotte Simons (Leroy) Towle, both of whom are now deceased. The father was born in Lockport, New York, in 1809, and in 1835 removed from the Empire state to Mishawaka, Indiana, where he devoted a number of years to the tanning business. During the latter years of his life he was a prominent and prosperous farmer and he was called to eternal rest in 1875, at the age of sixty-five years. The mother passed away in 1888.

Herman A. Towle was a lad of but fourteen years of age at the time of his father's demise and thus early was bereft of paternal love and guidance. His preliminary educational training consisted of such advantages as were afforded in the public schools of Mishawaka and in Falls City, Nebraska, where an elder brother then resided. As a youth Mr. Towle entered upon an apprenticeship at the jeweler's trade and after thoroughly familiarizing himself with that line of enterprise was a journeyman jewelry in Chicago and other places. In May, 1889, he came to Butte, where he entered the employ of Hight & Fairfield, remaining with that concern for the ensuing four years. In 1894 he purchased the interest of Mr. Cameron, a member of the firm of Cameron & Winterhalter. In 1908 the business of the above concern was incorporated with a capital stock of $80,000. At that time J. L. Hanafin was admitted to membership in the company and the business is now conducted under the title of Towle, Winterhalter & Hanafin. The official corps of the company is as follows: L. Winterhalter, president; H. A. Towle, vice-president; and J. L. Hanafin, secretary and treasurer.

Mr. Towle has had a most successful career in Butte, where he has gained many friends and won the confidence and patronage of the public. He is connected with one of the finest and most up-to-date jewelry houses in the west. He is a business man in the broadest sense of the word. He does not take part in local politics but exercises his franchise in favor of the Republican party. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and he is also a valued and appreciative member of the National Union.

At Niles, Michigan, in 1894, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Towle to Miss Emily Kelsey, a native of Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Towle have four children, whose names are here entered in respective order of birth.—Mildred, Charlotte, Elise and John H.

W. P. BAKER. A man of pronounced ability, energy and enterprise, W. P. Baker is intimately identified with the agricultural development of Ravalli county, owning a valuable and well-managed ranch, and as one of the leading attorneys of Hamilton is widely and favorably known in legal circles. A native of Missouri, his birth occurred at Lancaster, Schuyler county, May 12, 1864. His father, the late Moses Baker, was born and bred in Kentucky, and was there fitted for a professional career. Migrating to Missouri in early manhood, he taught school a number of years in Schuyler county, but later bought land in that county and was there engaged in general farming until his death in 1898. He was much interested in local affairs, and for three terms served as treasurer of Schuyler county. He married Miss Frances Henson, of Kentucky, and she died on the home farm in Schuyler county, Missouri. Of the six children born of their union, four are living, namely: Anna, widow of J. P. Peyton, of Missoula, Montana; James L., who for many years has served as postmaster in Lancaster, Missouri; Ida M., wife of H. B. Wayland, of Hamilton, Montana, and W. P., the special subject of this brief biographical review.

Brought up in Missouri, W. P. Baker attended the rural schools of Schuyler county and the public schools of Lancaster, until he was eighteen years of age, laying a substantial foundation for his future education while young. He subsequently assisted his father in the care of the homestead for six years, during which he spent all of his leisure in reading law, acquiring a good knowledge of legal affairs, and was there admitted to the bar. Coming then to Montana, just before it donned the garb of statehood, Mr. Baker purchased a tract of land in the Bitter Root valley, near Grantsdale, and but three miles from Hamilton. Continuing his agricultural labors, he has now one of the best improved and most attractive and valuable ranches in Ravalli county, the superintendence of which he still retains. He has also acquired title to city property of value, and is financially interested in the mining resources of Montana. In 1898, Mr. Baker opened a law office in Hamilton, and in addition to his other work is actively engaged in the practice of his profession, having built up a substantial practice in the city and surrounding country.

Evinced a warm and intelligent interest in local affairs, in 1898, Mr. Baker was elected county attorney on the Silver-Republican ticket, and was reelected to the office three successive times. Fraternally, he is a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons, Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, and of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In former days, Mr. Baker took great pleasure in hunting deer and other large game, but of recent years his business affairs have demanded so much of his attention that he has found no leisure to devote to his favorite pastime.

At Hamilton, Montana, November 26, 1901, Mr. Baker married Carrie M. Miller, who was born in Baltimore, Maryland, and they have one child, Eulalia E. Baker.

FRANK E. WILEMAN, clerk and recorder of Granite county, is entitled to a place in the front ranks of the young men of Philipsburg who have done well with their lives thus far. Mr. Wileman was born in Auro-raville, Wisconsin, on March 11, 1873. He is the son of Joseph C. and Frances (Gill) Wileman. The father was born in Belleville, Ontario, Canada, coming to the United States as a young man. He served in the Union army during the Civil war and took an active part in six battles, in one of which he was wounded. He settled in Wisconsin for a number of years and then went to Leadville, Colorado. He conducted the first boarding house at the Little Pittsburg mine and was there during the great mining excitement. He has since traversed many states and followed various occupations, including ranching and hotel business. He is now living in Philipsburg. His young wife died in Wisconsin in 1873, at the early age of twenty-two years, and is there buried. Three children were born to them, Frank E. being the second born and the eldest son.

His mother died when he was an infant, and Frank Wileman was taken in charge by friends of the family when he was four years old. The family removed to Ripon, Wisconsin, taking the motherless child with them, and there he grew up as one of their own, attending school and helping with the farm work after hours and between school seasons. When he was sixteen years of age he came to Philipsburg, and since that time he has been a continuous resident of this city. The first work of any importance that Mr. Wileman did was when he was seventeen years old, at which time he put in the water works at Granite. He took the contract and performed the work, carrying it out successfully, and the plant stands there today in testimony of the ability which the young man showed. For several years he worked in the mines in and about Philipsburg, and in 1901 was appointed deputy sheriff for a four-year term. Following the conclusion of that term he returned to his mining ventures, and for six years was thus occupied, three years being passed in Alaska. In 1908 Mr. Wileman was elected county clerk and recorder, and he is now serving his second term in that office, where he has performed his duties with a high degree of efficiency and in a manner which has inspired confidence and esteem in the minds of the public.

Mr. Wileman is a Republican and takes an active and intelligent part in the political affairs of his district. He is a Mason and an Odd Fellow, and has been through all the chairs of the latter named order. He and his wife are attendants of the Methodist Episcopal church, but not members.

On June 20, 1903, Mr. Wileman was united in marriage with Miss Jennie Johnson, daughter of Erick and Marie Johnson, natives of Sweden. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Wileman, a daughter named Frances Elois, who is attending the schools of Philipsburg.

DAVID C. MAXWELL. During a long career spent as a railroad man, David C. Maxwell has become widely and favorably known to the people of Dawson county, Montana, and more particularly to those of his home city, Glendive, where he has a residence at No. 623 Kendrick avenue. For the last ten years he has had a passenger run between Glendive and Billings, and so favorably has he impressed the people of this section with his abilities that he has on numerous occasions been elected to fill positions of public trust and importance, and is also well known in fraternal circles. Mr. Maxwell was born at Tomah, Monroe county, Wisconsin, April 9, 1862, and is a son of Christopher and Anna (Nowlan) Maxwell.

Christopher Maxwell was a native of Guelph, Ontario, and was about eight years of age when he accompanied his parents to Baraboo, Wisconsin. There he at once secured employment in a general store, his duties being so confining that he did not leave the establishment, even having his sleeping quarters there. Subsequently he worked in the lumber camps, winters, and in driving logs on the Wisconsin river, in summers, later drifted into the contracting business and farming, and was finally employed in the construction of the bridges of the West Wisconsin Railroad, now the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railroad, a branch of the Chicago & Northwestern system. Although he had not been given many opportunities in his youth, Mr. Maxwell was a man of great industry and enterprise and success came to him through his own efforts. He was self-educated, and, not content with a mere literary training, studied law and was admitted to the Wisconsin state bar, practicing before it until his health failed. He was an active member of the Knights of Pythias, and a staunch Republican in politics. He married Mrs. Anna (Nowlan) Whalen, who had one son by her former marriage, James B. Whalen, living in Leadville, Colorado. To them were born three children: David C.; Theresa, who was the wife of Charles Weiss and died at the age of thirty years; and Christopher J., who lives at Tomah, Wisconsin.

William H. H. H. H.

David C. Maxwell spent his boyhood days under the parental roof, and attended school until he was sixteen years of age. At that time he decided to take up railroading as a career, and secured employment as a brakeman with the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul. Later he was made freight conductor, and in 1889 moved to Forsyth, Montana, and entered the service of the Northern Pacific Railroad in the same capacity, but in 1900 was promoted to passenger conductor, acting in that position to the present time. Always a staunch Republican, in November, 1906, Mr. Maxwell made the race for the position of state representative from Dawson county, was elected, and in 1908 was returned to that office in view of the excellent record he had made as a member of that body. He is a member of the Order of Railroad Conductors, and has served as a member of the general committee since 1901. In 1886, in LaCrosse, Wisconsin, he was made a member of the Knights of Pythias, and he also belongs to Hiram Lodge No. 52, A. F. & A. M., at Forsyth, Montana.

On June 15, 1882, Mr. Maxwell was married to Miss Minnie Maxwell, who was born at LaCrescent, Houston county, Minnesota, daughter of Abraham W. and Sarah Ann (Switzer) Maxwell. Mr. Maxwell was born in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, and died February 15, 1908, when he had attained the advanced age of ninety-one years, while his wife, who passed away March 14, 1912, at the age of eighty-eight years, was a native of St. Louis, Missouri. Of their eight children, three are living: William, of Esterville, Iowa; Harriet, the wife of Fred Billings, of LaCrosse, Wisconsin; and Mrs. Maxwell. As a young man, Abraham W. Maxwell enlisted at Galena, Illinois, in an Illinois volunteer regiment, serving four years during the Civil war and under General Sibley, later participating in the Indian warfare in Minnesota. At one time he helped to capture twenty-eight Indians, who were hanged at Mankato, Minnesota, in 1868, and subsequently went to Colorado for some length of time. Returning east as far as Dubuque, Iowa, he remained there for some time, but later removed to Houston county, Minnesota, where he was engaged in the stone quarry business. His next move was to LaCrosse, Wisconsin, but after spending some time in the hotel business there returned to Iowa and settled in Esterville, where his death occurred. He was an active and popular comrade of the Grand Army of the Republic, and in his political views was a staunch Republican.

Mr. and Mrs. David C. Maxwell have had six children, as follows: Harold; Alice; Lloyd, a graduate of Glendive high school, who had been appointed to attend the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis a short time before his death, passed away at the age of nineteen years; and Anna, Rae and Leslie.

ALBERT MAY. The career of Albert May has been so closely identified with the business and public history of the city of Stevensville, that a record of one would touch and be identical with that of the other at numerous points. He is identified with the ranching industry as half-owner of about two thousand acres of land in the Bitter Root valley, holds prestige in business circles as president of the Stevensville Mercantile Company, one of the largest concerns of its kind in this part of the state, and as mayor when the city was first organized rendered valuable service during two administrations. Mr. May is a man whose abilities have found expression in various fields and whose progressive energy has made him a leader in his numerous ventures, and throughout the period of his business activities he has ever maintained a reputation for strict integrity, probity and reliability that has held in the highest degree the confidence of his associates and the public at large.

Albert May was born April 14, 1853, in Clinton, Ontario, Canada, a son of William H. and Sarah Anna (Davis) May, the former a native of London, England, born in 1832. William H. May followed the peaceful occupation of tilling the soil throughout his life, and died at Clinton, Ontario, in 1887, his widow, a native of Worcestershire, England, surviving until 1897. They were the parents of eleven children, as follows: W. H. and George, of Stevensville; Charles, of San Dimas, California; Lewis, a stockman and rancher of Ravalli county; Allen, who is engaged in farming in Michigan; Frank and John, who are deceased; Lucy, who married William Langslow, of Duluth, Minnesota; Fanny, who married Harry Goodrich, of Edmonton, Canada; Albert, and a child who died in infancy.

Albert May received a country school education, and remained with his parents until 1889, in which year he came to Montana, and first located in Billings, in and around which city he worked at ranching and other occupations for one year. At that time he came to the Bitter Root valley with his brother, George May, who furnished the capital necessary to establish them in the sheep raising business on the open range, and this they followed in connection with horse raising until 1900. From time to time they added to their holdings, and at present have about three thousand acres of the finest land to be found in the valley. In 1900 they were the prime movers in the organization of the Stevensville Mercantile Company, capitalized at $100,000, of which they became the heaviest stockholders, while Albert has since acted in the capacity of president of the concern, and under his shrewd, alert and progressive methods, the business has grown to great proportions. All movements of a beneficial nature find in him a hearty co-worker and supporter, and he has a strong and unwavering faith in the future of Stevensville, where he has invested heavily in real estate and owns a modern home. He is a director in the First State Bank of that city, and has associated himself with various other enterprises. In politics a staunch Republican, he served as Stevensville's first mayor and so ably did he discharge the duties of that office that he was elected for a second term. For seventeen years he has acted as Sunday school superintendent in the Methodist church, and he and his family are widely known in church work as well as in social circles.

Mr. May married Miss Phoebe Howson, who died in 1906, at Stevensville, and one daughter was born to this union; Phoebe Alberta, now the wife of the Rev. Edward L. Mills, a well-known divine of Helena.

TIMOTHY O'LEARY was what Mr. Kipling would call a "first class fighting man." He fought his way through school, he fought for the Fenian cause, he fought for the cause of liberty in Cuba, and he rendered good service to Uncle Sam as a soldier. Now since his death he is mourned, not only as a good

Mr. O'Leary was an Irishman, born near Cork, on December 15, 1844. His elementary education was secured in the public schools and he then attended Christian Brothers College until he was seventeen years of age, when he came to the United States.

Immediately upon his arrival in this country he joined the United States Army, becoming a member of the Fifteenth United States Infantry, in which command he served three years during the war between the state. He was at the battles of Stone River, Chickamauga, Kennesaw Mountain, Atlanta and Jonesboro. He was slightly wounded at the battle of Jonesboro, but he kept right on fighting.

At the conclusion of his service for Uncle Sam, Mr. O'Leary became actively identified with the Fenian cause as major and military organizer. He held the rank of major at the battle of Ridgeway, Canada, in 1866. Later he was adjutant-general of the Fenian army, and established military organizations in many parts of the United States. Through his instrumentality nearly fifty thousand men were organized and put in readiness for battle. At the Ridgeway conflict a force of six hundred Fenians was opposed by sixteen hundred of the enemy, but the Fenians were victorious. Hostilities were stopped however, by the intervention of the United States government. Major O'Leary and thirteen other officers who engaged in that battle were arrested and taken by the United States steamer Michigan, to Buffalo, New York, put in jail and afterwards placed under bonds of two thousand dollars each. They were represented by Grover Cleveland, who secured their release on bail. All were taken to Canadagua, New York, where they were arraigned in the United States court, and eventually their cases were nolle prossed.

Mr. O'Leary, thus returned to the paths of peace, began the study of law in 1868, but shortly afterwards went to Cuba and joined in the war for liberty on the island. In the conflict between the Cubans and the Spanish government, Mr. O'Leary soon arose to a position of importance. He was appointed chief of ordnance, and commanded an expedition on the steamer "Katherine Whiting," loaded with arms and ammunition. Three schooners were sent from New York City to Gardner's bay under his direction and there waited for the steamer "Whiting" to appear. This vessel, however, was seized by the United States revenue cutter "Bayard." Mr. O'Leary became suspicious at the delay and returned to New London, Connecticut, where he found the vessel had been seized. He returned to Gardner's bay where he had other steamers unloaded and sent back to New York. He became suspicious of his secretary, and on investigating found the man was really a Spanish spy. Mr. O'Leary promptly gave the fellow a first class whipping, but the result of the whole affair was the abandonment of the Cuban expedition.

The Fenian cause again engaged his attention and his energies, but he continued to read law between fights. In 1870 he again headed a Fenian expedition into Canada, but this expedition like the others, came into conflict with the United States government and Mr. O'Leary "went into retirement" for a while.

Mr. O'Leary went west, locating in Minnesota, and entered the employ of the Northern Pacific railroad, then building its first section west of Duluth. He became a section hand and for a time remained very quiet. Three months of this seclusion satisfied him that the skies were clear, and he entered upon the practice of the law. He was admitted to the bar in 1870, and practiced fifteen years in Minnesota, first in the city of Hastings, then at Henderson. He was appointed United States post-office inspector by Grover Cleveland and held that position until 1888, when Mr. Wannamaker was appointed postmaster general. For an unexplained reason Mr. O'Leary was dismissed by wire, no cause being assigned.

The very next day the Philadelphia Press in a leading article stated that a mistake had been made, as Mr. O'Leary's services had been excellent. He did not, however, return to the service. In 1889 he came to Montana and settled at Anaconda. He almost immediately became active in public affairs, and stumped the state for the Democrats on many occasions. He served three terms as city attorney for Anaconda.

Mr. O'Leary was a member of the Knights of Columbus, and prominent in the affairs of the Grand Army of the Republic. In the early part of his residence in Montana he was especially fond of hunting and indulged this liking on every convenient occasion. He had many trophies of his skill as a hunter of big game and was a fine shot.

Mr. O'Leary was married to Miss Kate Ahern, a native of Brooklyn, New York. She is the daughter of Michael and is still living in Anaconda. The one son of Mr. and Mrs. O'Leary, Arthur O'Leary, seems to have inherited his father's love for the military. He is a captain of the United States marines. Arthur O'Leary enlisted at the outbreak of the Spanish war as a bugler in a local militia company. He was promoted to second lieutenant before seeing service. Later he became first lieutenant and then captain of the United States marines. The Montana regiment in which Captain O'Leary served, and the captain's company especially, was employed by Major Bell in many dangerous scouting expeditions, and Captain O'Leary's company became known as the "suicide squad" because of the daring of its members.

Timothy O'Leary was recognized as one of the leading lawyers of Deer Lodge county. He was held in very high regard and had many friends and admirers, and in spite of his advancing years he declared that he was still ready to do battle in any good cause; therefore when the end came on the 13th of May, 1912, he met it bravely, for he had "fought the good fight."

HOWARD D. SMART. To be the cashier of a large and prosperous financial institution, and to be capable of assisting in directing its policy and managing its complex interests in these modern days, demands more than ordinary talents, and those who occupy positions of this character in a community may justly be termed prominent citizens. Thus, attention is called to Howard D. Smart, cashier of the First State Bank of Stevensville, and a man of many business qualifications, who has served very acceptably in public office. Like many of Montana's most successful citizens, Mr. Smart is a native of Canada, having been born in New Brunswick, March 8, 1859, a son of James and Mary Jane (Carson) Smart. His father, a native of Scotland, came to America with his parents at the age of thirteen years, settling in New Brunswick, where he became an extensive farmer and stock raiser and owned a large property at the time of his death in 1902. His wife was a native of New Brunswick, and they had a family of four children, as follows: Howard D.; Fred, residing at Vancouver, British Columbia; Jennie, wife of Douglas Duplisea, of St. Stephen, New Brunswick; and Laura G., who lives at Chico, California.

Howard D. Smart secured a public and high school education in the schools of New Brunswick, and at the age of twenty years went to Minneapolis, Minnesota, to become bookkeeper for the Washburn Milling Company, with which he was connected for nine years. In May, 1889, he came to Montana, settling at Riverside, near Hamilton, where he held a position as bookkeeper and salesman, and resigned his office to accept the county assessorship of Ravalli county. He subsequently became county clerk, and at the expiration of his term of office returned to the lumbering business. In 1903 he began as bookkeeper and salesman for the A. M. C. Company, with which firm he was connected until 1907, and in that year, with George Harper, engaged in the lumber and sawmill business in the Bitter Root valley. Two years later he sold his interests therein and accepted the position of cashier which had been tendered him by the officials of the newly organized First State Bank of Stevens-ville, with which he has since been connected, and in which he is also a stockholder. The personnel of this institution's executive board is a guaranty of its solidity and substantiality, and it now does a representative business with most of the large firms and important individuals in the Bitter Root country. A genial, courteous and thoroughly capable official, Mr. Smart is very popular with the bank's depositors, and is held in the highest esteem by his business associates. He firmly believes in the future of Stevensville, has identified himself with other earnest and hard-working citizens in forwarding movements of a beneficial nature, and has a modern residence situated in the residence district of the city. Politically a Republican, he has been active in the interests of his party, and is regarded as one of the dependable wheel-horses of the organization in his section. He is a member of the Woodmen of the World, in which he takes quite an interest, and when he can absent himself from his arduous duties, delights in going on a hunting and fishing expedition. Mr. Smart is a consistent member and trustee of the Presbyterian church, to which his wife also belongs, and both are well and favorably known in religious circles.

On January 9, 1901, Mr. Smart was married to Miss Grace Anderson, of New Brunswick, and they have had two children: Harold D. and Marian F.

DON. CALDER is an old and prominent resident of Butte, where he has maintained his home and business headquarters since 1889. He holds prestige as being the second oldest merchant tailor in Butte or Montana and has occupied his present place of business for the past eighteen years. Mr. Calder was born in the parish of Creisch, Sutherlandshire, Scotland, the date of his nativity being the 26th of December, 1867. He is a son of Alexander and Catherine (Murray) Calder, the former of whom is deceased. The father passed his entire life in the land of hills and heather and he was a farmer by occupation. The paternal grandfather of the subject of this review was Don. Calder, a soldier in the English army and a participant in the War of 1812, he having been present at the British surrender at New Orleans, on January 8, 1815.

To the public schools of his native place Don. Calder is indebted for his rudimentary educational training. As a young man he entered upon an apprenticeship at the tailor's trade and after he had reached his legal majority he immigrated to America, coming to this country in 1888. After a short sojourn in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, he came to Butte, where he at once engaged in business for himself and where he has achieved a most remarkable success as a merchant tailor.⁶ He is decidedly progressive and turns out his work in accordance with the very latest eastern styles. While Mr. Calder does not take an active part in public affairs, he is ever on the alert to do all in his power to advance progress and improvement and in politics he gives his support to the Democratic party. He is affiliated with the Scottish Rite branch of Masonry, and has attained to the Knight Templar degree, and is also a valued and appreciative member of the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He is connected with the St. Andrew's Society and is president of the Butte branch of that prominent organization.

At his native parish in Scotland, in the year 1897, Mr. Calder was united in marriage to Miss Jane Chisholm, likewise a native of Sutherlandshire, Scotland, whence she returned to America in 1897 with her husband.

JOHN BENTON LEGGAT. The ancient and honorable order of Free and Accepted Masons appeals with great power to the judgment and imagination of millions of men in all parts of the world, and enlists their ardent devotion and their loyal service in its behalf. But nowhere has it a more zealous, enthusiastic and genuine adherent and devotee than the city of Butte presents in the person of John Benton Leggat, who is known all over this country in Masonic circles as one of its highest types of members and best representatives. The true spirit of Freemasonry pervades his life and governs all his actions toward his fellow men, and in the fraternity itself his usefulness long ago passed ordinary bounds and began to spread over all the interests and branches of the fraternity in every part of the country.

Mr. Leggat is a native of St. Louis, Missouri, where his life began on April 1, 1869. His father, Alexander J. Leggat, was born in Scotland and brought to the United States by his parents when he was but two years old. The family located in Albany, New York state, where Alexander grew to manhood and obtained a common school education. His family then located in Grand Haven, Michigan, where Alexander became quite prominent in business enterprises. At the beginning of the Civil war he enlisted for the salvation of the Union in a Michigan regiment, with which he served to the conclusion of hostilities.

After the war he located in St. Louis, where he founded the house of Leggat, Hudson, & Company, manufacturers of plug and smoking tobacco. The business of the firm was started in 1866 under the name given, but the style of the firm afterward became Leggat, Hudson & Butler, and later Leggat & Butler. Mr. Leggat sold his interests in this business in 1883, and became the president of the St. Louis Shovel Company, which position he filled until his death in February, 1886, at the age of fifty-two years. His remains were interred in the family burial lot in Bellefontaine cemetery, one of the most beautiful and highly improved "cities of the dead" to be found on the North American continent.

The mother, whose maiden name was Ruth Frances Benton, is still living in St. Louis. She was born in Mendon, Adams county, Illinois, the daughter of Abram and Sarah (Chittenden) Benton. Mr. Benton was a prominent and influential merchant and land owner in that city and county, and her marriage with Mr. Leggat took place there in 1866. Five children were born of their union, three sons and two daughters. John Benton Leggat was the second child and first boy in the family.

Mr. Leggat obtained his academic education in the public schools in St. Louis, completing it with a three-years' course of special theoretical and practical work in the Manual Training school, a branch of Washington University, from which he was graduated in 1886. He then matriculated in the department of mining engineering of Washington University, and pursued its course of study with diligence until June, 1889, when he came to Butte to do certain work in connection with the mining industry and to look up the mining interests of his father's estate. In the following October he returned to St. Louis to finish his course in mining engineering, which he did during the term of that winter and spring, and in 1890 he was graduated from the university with the degree of Mining Engineer. On receiving his diploma he came again to Butte, and there he has resided ever since, busily occupied in the practice of his profession. His work in this field has been mainly operating in connection with properties of his own or under his personal supervision. But he has also done considerable professional work for large corporations in Montana and Nevada.

Mr. Leggat is neither parsimonious nor prodigal in the management of his affairs, but is both judiciously careful and judiciously liberal, having been industrious and frugal from his boyhood. The first money he ever earned he received when he was a boy twelve years old, and he got it for work in connection with the operation of a threshing outfit on his grandfather's farm in Illinois, for which he was paid at the rate of fifty cents a day. He worked during his school vacations both in his father's tobacco factory and in the shovel works, as it was his father's intention for the son to learn and carry on the business in his more mature years.

On November 6, 1901, Mr. Leggat was joined in wedlock with Miss Hebe M. Ashby, of Helena, Montana, where the marriage took place. Mrs. Leggat is a native Montana girl, daughter of Shirley C. and Emma (Campbell) Ashby, residents of Helena, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of Missouri. One child has been born in the Leggat household, a daughter named Hebe Frances, whose life began on August 14, 1902, and who is attending school, dividing her time between a public school in Helena and the Mary Institute in St. Louis, Missouri, at the latter of which she is pursuing a classical course.

In political faith and activity Mr. Leggat is a Democrat, and in behalf of his party he takes an earnest interest and a zealous part in public affairs. In church relations he is a Presbyterian, and in fraternal life an enthusiastic and prominent Freemason, as has been stated. In fact, if he has in life any object of special devotion outside of his family it is this great fraternity. He has ascended its mystic ladder to the very top in the York rite, and to the next to the last round in the Scottish rite, being a Knight Templar in the former and a thirty-second degree Mason in the latter. He has also taken the side or ornamental degrees in his progress, being a member of a Council of Royal and Select Masters, a Knight of the Red Cross of Constantine and a Noble of the Mystic Shrine. In the branch of the fraternity last named he holds his active membership in Algeria Temple, Helena, and has honorary membership in Bagdad Temple, Butte. When he was made a Noble of the Mystic Shrine Algeria Temple in Helena was the only one in the state of Montana. He was potentate of this temple in 1905, and for the past twelve years has been one of its representatives in the Imperial Council of North America. His honorary membership in Bagdad Temple came to him in a way that was highly complimentary and pleasing. It was conferred at the official constitution of said Temple in 1911, when Mr. Leggat assisted the Imperial Potentate of North America as Imperial Marshal; and for his assistance and advice in the organization of this new temple presented him with an official certificate of his membership. This valued document was engraved on a heavy copper plate inclosed in a solid electrolytic copper frame, the copper for both being mined in Butte and the frame being manufactured in that city. Mr. Leggat cherishes this testimonial of the regard of his fellow Nobles as one of his most appreciated possessions, as it is signal proof of the high esteem in which he is held in Shrine circles. But all who know of the facts in the case agree that the testimonial was wisely and worthily bestowed.

Mr. Leggat has held exalted offices in all the branches of Masonry to which he belongs. He was made a master Mason in 1896. In 1906 and 1907 he was grand high priest of the Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons and grand commander of the Grand Commandery of Knights Templar of the state of Montana, holding both offices at once, a very unusual occurrence in Masonic history. He is at this time (1912) representative in Montana of the Grand Commandery of Knights Templar of Pennsylvania, the largest Templar jurisdiction in the United States. During the last three years, he has also been personal representative for the state of Nevada of the grand master of the Grand Encampment of Knights Templar of the United States.

From his youth Mr. Leggat has been enthusiastic over fraternal societies. He organized the first Greek letter fraternity at Washington University in St. Louis when he was a student in that institution—the Gamma Chapter of the Phi-Delta-Theta organization, which has chapters in colleges and universities all over the country. He is a member of Butte Lodge of Elks No.

240, and has belonged to the Silver Bow Club for twenty years or more. In addition, he is a non-resident member of the Montana club in Helena and the St. Louis club in St. Louis, Missouri. He is devoted to tennis, and was at one time its state champion. He also takes a great interest in baseball and football, and during his college days was a good player of said game.

Warmly interested in the welfare of his fellow men, and the organizations among them which are potential in promoting it, it is inevitable that Mr. Leggat should be earnest and enterprising in his support of all undertakings involving the progress and improvement of his home city and county. Nothing of value in this behalf goes without his active and judicious aid, and his counsel in reference to such matters always has weight, for it is based on intelligence and good judgment. His worth, high character, public spirit and genuine devotion to the public weal are well known wherever he is, and everywhere he is highly esteemed as a man whose life is above reproach and whose citizenship is excellent and highly representative of the people among whom it is exercised.

CHARLES E. CONRAD. Many lives have entered into the foundation of the state of Montana, and none of them is more worthy to be considered in a history of pioneer personality than the late Charles E. Conrad of Kalispell. Those who have come and enjoyed the splendid prosperity of the later era, however important their own contribution, have all owed a great debt to the pioneers who first tested the capabilities of soil and climate, who faced the hardships of existence, when only the strong and brave could remain, and who laid the foundations of a goodly civilization and permanent prosperity. It was the life accomplishment of the late Mr. Conrad to gain a foremost place in the general business enterprise of the northwest. He was one of the settlers here when the Indians and military posts and trapping establishments were by far the most important features of the industry and commerce of the country. He had his training in this pioneer school, and from the crudities of that early period he gradually, with the expansion of the country, grew in his own character and capabilities, until he held a commanding place among the big men of Montana. His death, which occurred November 27, 1902, marks the passing of one of the best known men of Montana, and one whose contributions to the development of the state had a more than ordinary value.

Charles E. Conrad was the younger brother of Hon. William G. Conrad of Helena, and was throughout his career in Montana closely associated in business with this well known citizen of this state. On other pages of this work will be found the history of William G. Conrad and for many of the details concerning the business enterprise of the brothers, the reader is referred to that place in this work.

Charles E. Conrad was a native of Virginia, born in Warren county, May 20, 1850, a son of James W. and Maria S. (Ashby) Conrad. The family is of old colonial stock, and the Conrads were originally from Germany, from which country the first ancestor came to America, and located on the Atlantic slope among the original colonies.

It was in a typical Virginian home of about the Civil war time that the late Charles E. Conrad was reared and spent his boyhood. It was part of the atmosphere of the home that the children should be taught all the practical virtues of life, honesty, integrity and uprightness in word and deed, and together with these home advantages the children were also afforded the best obtainable facilities for book education. Mr. Conrad, therefore, attended school up to the time he was sixteen years of age, and at that date left home and began his career in the state of New York, where he served for eighteen months as a clerk in a general store. That was a period in the history of American states when the ambitious had no need to confine themselves to the monotonous life of the east, provided their courage and spirit of enterprise was sufficient to conduct them into the great and almost unexplored world of the west. It was under the guidance of this westward lure and spirit of adventure that Charles and his brother William, in 1868, started for the west.

From Cincinnati they journeyed down into the Ohio river to St. Louis, and from that point followed up the great Missouri by steamboat and overland trail to Fort Benton, one of the uppermost of the northwestern military posts and a distance of more than four thousand miles from the starting point of these brothers. Fort Benton then occupied a peculiarly important place in the commercial as well as the military activities of the northwest. This strategic position is more clearly explained in the historic chapters of this work, and need only be alluded to at this point. Here was located the principal commercial establishment and out-fitting concerns, which directed or were interested in the great trading commerce which then extended not only throughout Montana, but across the Canadian border into the domain of the Hudson Bay Company. Probably chief among these great mercantile establishments at that time was I. G. Baker & Brother. With this trading establishment, the Conrad brothers became identified as clerks, and continued in that capacity until they bought the interest of the junior partner some four years later. Then for four years the business was continued under the name of I. G. Baker & Company, and at that time the Conrad brothers became sole proprietors. In the article concerning the career of William G. Conrad is sketched the growth of this remarkable enterprise, and its ramifications throughout the region of the northwest. The brothers gradually extended their operations and engaged in banking, cattle raising, merchandising, manufacturing, lands and agriculturals, and in almost every activity which has dominated this country since pioneer times. In Canada the business included trading posts and extensive mercantile operations over all the territory then comprised under the dominion of the Hudson's Bay Company and the Royal Military Posts, which were here and there scattered throughout the region now included within the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Mr. Conrad, through these large business operations, acquired all of the results which are popularly included under the terms success and prosperity. Since the facts of his business career are so intimately connected with industries and enterprises which receive attention on other pages of this work, and which will be found sketched under the name of William G. Conrad, it is unnecessary to continue the interests of Mr. Conrad's life further in that connection. He possessed the character and capacity for large undertakings, and along with this quality, he also had the faculty of leadership among men. In private life he was notable for his ability to command friendship, as in business affairs for his capacity in performing large undertakings. His genial personality made him the favorite of a great host of associates, including practically every man of prominence in the northwest from the late sixties until the time of his death. It was inevitable from the fact of his pioneer experience that he should be democratic, and was also accessible alike to rich and poor. His generosity was in many ways typical of the familiar estimate usually placed upon western plainmen. Having a large record of practical accomplishments, he was still always modest, and utterly without pretense, having none of that quality which causes men to assume to be better and greater than they are. As a citizen he performed his duty everywhere and at every time as he understood his duty, and in accordance with his principles of civic conduct.

In private life he was equally true to his convictions, and to his sense of loyalty to his fellow-men. He was never prominent in public life from an official standpoint, though always an active Democrat, and often taking an influential part in promoting party success. He had the distinction, however, of serving as a member of the convention which formed the first constitution of Montana. In that capacity he gained a place properly merited of being among the founders and creators of the present state of Montana. Fraternally he was a Mason, and held his lodge membership at Kalispell.

Mr. Conrad was married on January 4, 1881, to Miss Alicia D. Stanford. Mrs. Conrad, who survives, was a native of Halifax, Nova Scotia, and a daughter of James Stanford. The three children of the late Mr. Conrad and wife were Charles D., Catherine and Alicia.

CHARLES R. LUSHER has had an unusually eventful career during his lifetime thus far, having resided in various states of the Union in the middle west, south and far west. He arrived at Conrad, Montana, in 1911, and is now the owner of one of the largest and finest department stores in the city. He is a man of splendid initiative and remarkable energy and his success in life is on a parity with his well directed efforts.

A native of the fine old Hoosier state, Charles R. Lusher was born at Laporte, Indiana, March 9, 1870, and he is a son of John and Cynthia (Garland) Lusher, the former of whom was born in Switzerland and the latter in the state of Ohio. The father was reared to maturity in his native land and came to America in the early '50s, settling in Indiana, where he was a pioneer among the Indians and where he began business as a merchant. For the past ten years he has lived virtually retired from active participation in business affairs and he is now a resident of Chicago, where he is passing the closing years of his life. His cherished and devoted wife was called to eternal rest in 1888.

The youngest in order of birth in a family of five children, Mr. Lusher, of this notice, was educated in the public schools of Indiana and he was graduated in the high school at Elkhart at the age of seventeen years. His first employment was with the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railroad Company as fireman, which position he held for four and a half years, at the expiration of which he was made engineer on the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad. He was engineer for two and a half years and his run was from Denison, Texas, to Galveston, Texas. In 1896 he decided to go west and in that year settled at Colfax, Washington, where he was clerk in a general merchandise store for a number of years. He subsequently secured a position as clerk in a store at Wardner, Idaho. His capital when he struck Washington consisted of a Canadian half dollar, his clothes were practically worn out, and he had no friends—in short, he was a stranger in a strange land. With the passage of time, however, he managed to save his earnings and on his arrival in Conrad, Montana, April 1, 1911, he was able to purchase the mercantile business of J. J. Van Bergen, who had established a store here in 1909. Lusher's Cash Store is now one of the best establishments of its kind in Conrad and a very satisfactory business is controlled. Everything is kept in stock—groceries, hardware, harness, dry goods and furniture. Although Mr. Lusher does not figure actively in local politics, preferring to give his undivided time and attention to his constantly increasing business, he is an unswerving Republican in affairs of national import. In matters affecting the welfare of Conrad he maintains an independent attitude. He is a valued and appreciative member of the State

Merchants' Association and in religious matters is a Christian Scientist.

November 5, 1898, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Lusher to Miss Bessie Woodward, the ceremony having been performed at Colfax, Washington. Mrs. Lusher is a daughter of Edward Woodward, of Jacksonville, Alabama. Mr. and Mrs. Lusher have no children.

EDWARD NEWTON BRANDEGEE. To be numbered among Montana's most distinguished citizens is Edward Newton Brandegee, president of the Montana Clinton Copper Company, the Linus Mining Company, the Wilson Placer Company and vice-president of the Pope-Atchison Hardware Company. He is a man of well deserved prominence, not only in mining and real estate business but in public and political life. An expert botanist, he has made large contributions to botanical work in the state in the line of furthering fruit culture and in extinguishing such pests and diseases as menace its fullest prosperity. He has served as the state inspector-at-large of the fruit pest, and in the years 1902 and 1903, was president of the State Board of Horticulture. He is one of Montana's Yale men and comes of an unusually fine race, whose characteristics have been transmitted to him in definite degree.

Mr. Brandegee was born in Berlin, Connecticut, March 28, 1865. His father, Elisha Brandegee, born in 1814, died in 1884, his summons to the "Undiscovered Country" coming while a resident in Berlin. He was a physician of unusual attainments and engaged in practice in that place for half a century. He married Florence Stith, daughter of Major Townshend Stith, related to the noted British family, the Townshends, John and Charles Townshend having been members of the British Cabinet.

Mrs. Brandegee was born in Italy, her father being consul to Tunis at the time of her birth. Major Stith and his father were both prominent in national affairs. The subject's mother, who passed a part of her youth in Petersburg, Virginia, died at the age of eighty years in Berlin, Connecticut. Edward Newton Brandegee was the youngest in a family of twelve children, and although the last guns of the Civil war echoed about his cradle, two elder brothers saw service in the supreme struggle between the north and south. There were Townshend and Charles Brandegee.

Mr. Brandegee, immediate subject of this review, received his first draughts at "the Pierian Spring" in the schools of New Britain, Connecticut, and completed his education in Yale University, graduating from that famous institution with the class of 1886. His first industry after leaving college was to engage in real estate business in Kansas City, Missouri, where he remained for one year. He subsequently removed to Denver, Colorado, and after residing there for a short period, he came on to Helena, which was to be the scene of his very successful career. His arrival in the city was on April 5, 1889, and he has ever since resided here, taking an enlightened and effective part in the many-sided life of the thriving community. He has been chiefly concerned in mining and real estate and his more important offices and associations have been alluded to in a preceding paragraph.

Politically Mr. Brandegee is a Democrat and is an active worker in party ranks, his word having great weight in party council. He enjoys general confidence and esteem, and is always and everywhere the high-minded, dignified and truth-loving gentleman. With him "duty" is far more than a mere rhetorical expression, and in all emergencies he fully answers its most exacting demands. In 1908 he was a candidate for mayor and he has also been presented by his party as a candidate for county commissioner, and although the political situation was such that he was not elected, it is nevertheless generally recognized that he is eminently well qualified for any high position.

Mr. Brandegee was married in 1899, the young woman to become his wife being Miss Harriet Pope, daughter of Francis and Hannah Pope, natives of Montana and of the finest pioneer stock. Their union was celebrated in this city. They share their charming household with two children: Florence Stith Brandegee and Harriet Pope Brandegee. Their residence is situated at 327 North Rodney street, while Mr. Brandegee's offices are located in those of the Union Bank & Trust Company.

Mr. Brandegee's paternal ancestors came to America from England at an early date and served in the colonial and early American wars. The maternal ancestors were also of English stock, arriving on our shores prior to the Revolution, in which they gave service in the Continental line. The family has produced an unusual number of patriots and men of staunch citizenship.

CHARLES W. LANE. A man who has, throughout his career led a well-rounded life doing his part as citizen and soldier, as well as in private business and social affairs maintaining positions of influence and honor, is Mr. Charles W. Lane, of Butte, well known in this section of the northwest through his connection with numerous activities that naturally tend to keep one in the public eye. Through his own efforts Mr. Lane has achieved success in whatever line of endeavor he has elected to exert himself, and also been put forward by his friends at various times to run for elective office in the state, and in the resultant contests proved himself to be one of those rare individuals who can make victory of defeat, and come through a political campaign with more friends than when he entered the contest. Being a Republican in politics and this city strongly Democratic in voting strength, Mr. Lane, although not desiring to make a run for office, and accepting nominations only upon the earnest solicitation and insistence of his friends, has yet been a participant in some of the closest contests the city has ever seen. In one case, when running upon the Republican ticket for legislature and knowing that a victory against the Democrats was practically an impossibility, he yet came within the very small margin of sixteen votes of winning the race.

Mr. Lane was well fitted for the battle of life by birth, education and training, and is a fine example of the truth of the oft-repeated declaration that "blood tells." He was born in Newcastle, Pennsylvania, April 1, 1850, and is the only surviving member of the family, his only sister, Helen, having died when sixteen years old, and both his parents being deceased. His father was a Methodist minister, Rev. Ebenezer B. Lane, a native of New York state, his birth occurring near Silver Creek in 1818, while he died at West Middlesex, Pennsylvania, in 1865. His mother, in maidenhood Adeline R. Ray, was born in 1821 at Meadville, Pennsylvania, in which city she also died in 1905, having attained the advanced age of eighty-four years.

Reverend Lane was a man of superior education and unusual literary talent and took great pride in the education of his children, himself acting as their instructor when they were very small. As a result of this effective training the son, Charles, who was very precocious and loved study, at the age of five years could not only read fluently, but was as advanced in other branches of study, in this respect being equal to the average child of ten years.

Charles W. Lane received his first training in public schools at Jamestown, New York, but completed his high school work at Meadville, graduating from that institution when only fifteen years old. He next entered the Allegheny College, but was obliged to abandon his course in the Junior year on account of the death of his father, by which he became the sole support of his widowed mother. Mr. Lane had during his school days earned a part of his expenses and was always of an industrious character. When a young boy he learned the trade of carriage painting, and worked at that occupation in spare time while attending school and college. The first year in college he earned twenty-five cents daily working before and after school sessions, and the second year he earned twice that amount.

Upon leaving college, Mr. Lane first secured a good position in the auditing department of the Atlantic & Great Western Railway, beginning with a salary of seventy-five dollars per month. He proved to be an exceedingly competent employee and during the eleven years that he served this railroad company and its successors in Pennsylvania, Ohio and New York City, was steadily advanced to more responsible positions and when he finally resigned, had climbed far up the ladder of competent railway management. During all these years Mr. Lane supported his mother and gave her every comfort that could be desired. On November 20, 1878, at Meadville, Pennsylvania, he was married to Miss Marian E. Douglas, daughter of Hon. Joshua A. Douglas, one of the most prominent men in that section of the state, who then occupied a place on the Supreme Court bench from Crawford county. Of this union two children were born, Ralph Douglas, now a resident of New York, and Elsie Britton, a daughter.

During his college days Mr. Lane was in the employ of Wright Brothers, proprietors of the McHenry House, Meadville, Pennsylvania. He left the employ of the auditing department of the Erie Railway in New York, and for three years was proprietor of the McHenry House and a popular summer resort hotel at Lake Kenka, called Grove Spring Hotel. In June, 1889, Mr. Lane resigned that connection, however, and went west locating in Butte. Some three weeks after his arrival there he secured the position of deputy assessor under Assessor M. L. Holland, of Silver Bow county, and retained the office for two years.

Following this, Mr. Lane accepted a position as cashier for the M. J. Connell Lumber Company, and continued to discharge the duties of the place until the outbreak of the Spanish-American war, when he patriotically responded to the call for volunteers and was made a regimental quartermaster sergeant, his company being one of those sent to the Philippine Islands. He remained in service there throughout the war, participating in all engagements on the islands with the First Montana Regiment. He was a gallant soldier and a competent officer and when mustered out was a lieutenant of Company A of Great Falls, Montana volunteers.

Upon his return from the Philippines Mr. Lane again resumed commercial life and purchased a half interest in the blacksmith establishment of H. Heideman, and for some time the business was conducted in partnership by these gentlemen under the firm name of Heideman & Lane. At the end of ten months Mr. Heideman withdrew from the business, disposing of his interest to Alec Johnson, and subsequently the firm became Chas. W. Lane & Company. This partnership continued until 1907, when Mr. Lane purchased Mr. Johnson's interest in the enterprise and he has ever since continued to conduct the establishment as its sole executive head and owner.

The shops are located at Nos. 126-130 South Arizona street and are one of the best equipped in the city. A large trade is served and the volume of work turned out necessitates the employment of a large corps of the best blacksmiths that can be secured. The quality of work done cannot be improved upon and the high reputation of the establishment brings to the shops a constantly increasing flow of profitable business.

In the sporting world, also, Mr. Lane is a conspicuous figure and has been for many years. He is reputed to be one of the best known and most enthusiastic base ball fans in the state, and at one time Mr. Lane refused an assignment in the National League. He, it was, who organized the first base ball team in Butte and was identified with the state league. His fame as a sportsman and his intelligent interest in that field is further attested through his connection with sporting journalism, for several years having been correspondent of the St. Louis Sporting News, and since 1874 dramatic correspondent for the Dramatic Mirror, of New York. Mr. Lane is a clever and versatile writer and is thoroughly informed on the subjects in which he specializes.

The second marriage of Mr. Lane occurred at Pocatello, Idaho, where he was wedded to Miss Mary Ella Leith, daughter of Charles Leith and a native of Montana. The Leith family came to this state in an early day, making the trip across the plains with an ox team, and was among the first white people to locate near Helena. Mr. Leith was a miner and prospector. Mr. and Mrs. Lane are members of the leading social circles of Butte and maintain a beautiful residence at No. 1108 W. Galena street. Fraternally, Mr. Lane is affiliated with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, as a charter member and one of its two first promoters, and at its organization he was also a charter member of the Ora Plato Club, which has been disbanded.

Besides the property which he owns here, Mr. Lane has in his possession the family homestead in Pennsylvania, which is now in part occupied gratuitously by the old family nurse. Personally, he is a man of high ideals and unimpeachable integrity, liberal and progressive in his ideas and methods, and has a wide acquaintance among the best and most intelligent classes of people, and by all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance is held in the highest respect and esteem. He is a citizen of which any state might well feel proud.

S. ROBERT FAIR. One of the representative business men and citizens of Butte, is a native of St. John, New Brunswick, Canada, his natal day being November 26, 1857. His parents were Robert and Rebecca (Leahy) Fair, the former a native of Ireland and was the first resident of Fairville, St. John county, the town being named for him, and died there in 1904. He was engaged in general merchandising during the greater part of his business life. The mother was born in Ireland and came to Lancaster county, St. John, N. B., when single. There she died in 1901 after a life full of usefulness to her family and community in which she lived.

S. Robert Fair was one of six children born to his parents, being the third in order of birth and the only one residing in Butte.

He began his education in the provincial schools of St. John, and completed it, as far as he was able to go, at the Fredericton University, being sixteen years of age when he left that institution. When a young man, he went to Boston, Massachusetts, and began the study of pharmacy in theory and practice in the drug store of Messrs. Kelly & Berkley, of that city. After a short time in Boston he went to New York City, and thence came to Butte, Montana, in 1889.

For more than twenty-three years, Mr. Fair has been identified with the growth and development of the Treasure state, manifesting a keen interest in any movement or project that would work for the advancement of its interests. Mr. Fair's interests are varied and extensive.

As a chemist, for which his early education fitted him, he is well known, and his connection with the mining interests of the state, as well as in other lines of industry, he has always been on the side of progress. In this connection it may be stated as an interesting fact, that he opened and discovered the Mayflower mine, and sold it to Senator Clark for $150,000. For a number of years he has been connected with retail drug trade of Butte, and as the owner of the Fair Drug and Assay Supply Company, at No. 115 East Park street, he occupies a position among the representative business men of the city.

Mr. Fair has been successful in business, at the same time retaining the respect and esteem of his fellow citizens, among whom his honesty of purpose and business integrity are never questioned. Modest and unassuming in manner, he represents a high type of citizenship such as any community would welcome.

In politics Mr. Fair is a Democrat, but takes no active part in political matters. He has a large acquaintance among the public men of both parties and gives his support to such issues, as in his judgement, are for the best interests of his town and state.

Mr. Fair was married in St. Johns, New Brunswick, to Miss Caroline Lingley, who was born and reared in that city, a daughter of George R. Lingley. To this union have been born three children: Nellie, now the wife of A. C. McDaniel, a rising young attorney of Butte; Katherine and George. The family home at No. 221 North Excelsior street is a center of refined social enjoyment and hospitality attesting the high social standing of its members.

PERRY HOWLAND MANCHESTER, one of the well-known and highly esteemed citizens of Butte, which city has been his home for nearly a quarter-century, was born in Battle Creek, Michigan, on November 6, 1843, and is a descendant in both lines of families which have long been settled in this country. Elias Manchester, his great-grandfather, was a soldier of the Revolution, enlisting in Colonel Van Shack's First New York regiment. Caleb Manchester, son of Elias and grandfather of Perry H., was a resident of the state of New York, of Scipioville, Cayuga county, and there his son, Elias C., was born. The latter removed to Michigan at an early period of his life, taking up his residence in 1836, in Battle Creek, Calhoun county, of which he thus became a pioneer and in which he spent the remainder of his life. He had married, in her native state of New York, Miss Amy Ann Howland, daughter of Perry Howland, who lived, at Ledyard, Cayuga county, that state, and a descendant of the noted Howland family of southeastern Massachusetts, and whose ancestry, traced to the Mayflower, contained members of such great prominence in the history of New Bedford, Massachusetts. Amy Howland Manchester also held the distinction of being a birthright member of the Society of Friends.

To Elias Manchester and his wife, in their Michigan home, ten children were born, of whom seven are yet living, and among whom five sons went forth to give yeoman service in the Civil war. Stephen, the first to enlist, entered the service in April, 1861, in Company C, Second Michigan Infantry, for three months' service. Because of illness after the Peninsular campaign, he was honorably discharged in the fall of 1862. He subsequently re-enlisted for three years in the same regiment and company. He died at Harbor Springs, Michigan, in 1910. After the enlistment of Perry H., who was the second of the brothers to enter the army, Caleb next joined the service in the Eleventh Michigan Cavalry, enlisting for three years. He is now a resident of Augusta, Michigan. Charles E. and Elias H. together enlisted in February, 1865, in the First Michigan Cavalry, and Stephen reenlisted for the third time, with these two brothers. At present Charles E. resides in Battle Creek, Michigan, and Elias H. in Kansas City, Missouri.

Perry H. Manchester was eighteen years of age when he laid aside his text books to enlist in Company C, Twentieth Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and was mustered into service on July 29, 1862, at Battle Creek, Michigan. He went into camp at Jackson, Michigan, and on September 5th accompanied his regiment to Washington, D. C., where they were assigned to the Ninth Army Corps, under General Burnside. They then marched to Alexandria, Virginia, and again back to Washington, their absence having caused them to miss by one day the battle of Antietam. They then took part in the battle of Fredericksburg; in February, 1863, they went to Newport News; one month later they moved northward to Baltimore; and finally they marched to Kentucky, where they engaged with Morgan's raiders in the battle at Horseshoe Plains, in May, 1863. Mr. Manchester was with the Army of the Cumberland while it was making its gallant record, was present at the fall of Vicksburg, from there went to Jackson, Mississippi, and back to Crab Orchard, Kentucky, where sickness incapacitated him for active duty, his regiment preceding him to Knoxville, Tennessee, and leaving him in hospital. In the spring of 1864, having joined his regiment at Annapolis, Maryland, he participated in the memorable Peninsular campaign, seeing active service in the battles of The Wilderness and Spottsylvania. He was wounded on May 24, at North Anna river. The injury was not at first regarded as a serious one, but it proved to be such, confining him in a Washington hospital for some time. He was finally removed by his father to Harper Hospital in Detroit, Michigan, where he remained from September, 1864, until the close of the war, and he was on crutches when he received his discharge.

As soon as he had gathered sufficient strength, Mr. Manchester entered the Eastman Business College in Chicago, where he was graduated in March, 1866, receiving the highest honors in a class of twenty-four. He secured a position as bookkeeper in Battle Creek, his native city, where he pursued his vocation until 1871, when he removed to Nebraska, took up a homestead in Clay county and followed agriculture until 1880, when he returned to Battle Creek. He changed his location to Oshkosh, Wisconsin, in 1881, and engaged in the lumbering pursuits of that place during the winter, after which he resumed bookkeeping in Battle Creek; there he continued that occupation until February, 1884, when he was chosen secretary and manager of a cooperative store at that place. After one year he conducted merchandise operations for himself until June, 1889. At that time he came to Montana, his first location in this state being in the vicinity of Bozeman. In October he came to Butte, where he assumed the position of bookkeeper for the Nelson Story & Company flour and feed business. In August, 1890, he was made manager of this business and continued in the executive incumbency until August 1, 1900, at which time Mr. Story disposed of the concern. Mr. Manchester was employed by the new firm until January 19, 1901. In the March following he became manager of the Trull Transfer business in Butte—now known as the Montana Transfer Company. He thereafter combined the responsibilities of manager and bookkeeper for the company with those of timekeeper and bookkeeper for the Nipper mine until February, 1902. In the fall of that year he engaged as a merchandise broker on his own account, continuing for one year, at the end of which time he became connected in the capacity of cashier, with the Story Flour and Feed Company. In the spring of 1905, for considerations of health, he resigned this position and spent the following year in California. In May, 1906, he again engaged in the merchandise brokerage business, which he has since continued.

In politics Mr. Manchester is an unwavering adherent of the Republican party and his first ballot was cast for Abraham Lincoln on his second term. He has held a succession of civic and political positions. While residing in Nebraska he was elected to the office of justice of the peace. In April, 1901, he was made an alderman from the Seventh ward of Butte, in which capacity he served for two years. In 1906 he was elected a member of the tenth legislature of Montana, his term of service as a representative being two years. Mr. Manchester is very prominent and widely known in G. A. R. circles, being a member of Lincoln Post, Number 2, in which he has held all offices and is now filling that of adjutant. In 1897 and 1898 he was assistant adjutant general for the Department of Montana under Col. Peter R. Dolman; in 1900 he became department commander for Montana and served one year, which made him a member of the Soldiers' Home Board during that time; from

J. P. Broadbent

November of 1910 to May, 1911, he held the same position and also that of quartermaster general under the department commander, Robert G. Huston. Fraternally Perry Manchester is a member of Mt. Moriah Lodge, No. 24, of the order of Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons and has served for several years as its treasurer. He has furthermore for a number of years been a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, of which organization he is a past master and in which he held for a number of years the office of receiver. He was also affiliated with the Royal Templars of Temperance during the existence of that order in the city of Battle Creek.

On November 6, 1867, in Battle Creek, Michigan, Mr. Manchester was married to Miss Amity Piper, who was born in Ontario county, New York, on January 18, 1845, and who, like her husband, comes of old New England ancestry. Her paternal grandfather was a Revolutionary soldier while her maternal grandfather, Silas Phelps, enlisted also in the Continental army, entering in 1775 at Lynn, Massachusetts, for a term of service closing in 1783. During the years of her marriage to Mr. Manchester the family has been completed by the birth of two sons and one daughter, all of whom have grown to maturity and have founded homes of their own. Theodore E., who was born September 20, 1868, was a member of Company G, of the First Montana Volunteers during the Spanish-American war; during the service he was wounded at Manila on February 23, 1899. He is now connected with the Puget Sound naval station at Bremerton, Washington. Theodore Manchester married Miss Dorothea Clare and they have one son named Elias Thomas. The second son of Perry Manchester and his wife is Edward P. who was born January 3, 1871; who married Miss Cornelia Enderley; and whose present home is at Escondido California where he conducts a fruit farm. Orra E. Manchester who was born on July 11, 1876, became Mrs. Charles H. Little and resides with her family in Butte. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Little are as follows: Helen A., born April 21, 1899; Grace O., born July 29, 1904, and died in August, 1905; Eugene E., born February 26, 1908; and Marjorie H., born October 20, 1909.

Mrs. Manchester is a member of the Women's Relief Corps, in which she has been quite active, serving in all the chairs and also as department president, the latter in 1896 and 1897. She and her daughter, Mrs. Little, are members of Ruth Chapter, Order of the Eastern Star. Both are also members of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Since June, 1890, Mr. Manchester's residence has been at 927 south Arizona street, Butte.

NICHOLAS J. TRAUFLER, whose entire active career during his residence in Montana, whither he came in the year 1889, has been devoted to the great mining industry, has for two terms been the unusually efficient incumbent of the office of sheriff of Virginia City, which place has represented his home since 1893. Mr. Traufler was born in the city of Dubuque, Iowa, the date of his nativity being the 20th of December, 1864. His father, Nicholas J. Traufler, was born in the great Empire of Germany, whence he immigrated to the United States at the age of eighteen years. In 1841 Nicholas J. Traufler settled in Iowa, where he entered a tract of government land and where he was engaged in farming operations until his demise, in 1911, at the venerable age of eighty-seven years. His wife, whose maiden name was Margaret Betz, was born in Germany and she met and married Mr. Traufler in Iowa. She passed to eternal rest in 1910, aged eighty-four years. Mr. and Mrs. Traufler became the parents of six children, of whom the subject of this biography was the second child and oldest son.

As an infant Nicholas J. Traufler, Jr., was brought by his parents to Independence, Iowa, where he was reared to the age of seven years, at which time the family home was established in Bremer county, that state. He passed his boyhood and youth on the old homestead farm, in the work and management of which he early began to assist his father, and his rudimentary educational training consisted of such advantages as were afforded in the district schools of Bremer county. In 1889, at the age of twenty-five years, he came to Montana and settled in the city of Butte, where he followed mining for one year, at the expiration of which he went to Granite City, there engaging in the mining industry for eighteen months. He then returned to Butte and in 1893 came to Madison county, locating near Sheridan, where his home has since been maintained and where his attention has been devoted to mining operations and to politics.

In politics Mr. Traufler accords an uncompromising support to the principles and policies for which the Democratic party stands sponsor. In 1908 he was honored by his fellow citizens with election to the office of sheriff of Madison county and he was re-elected to that position two years later, being incumbent thereof at the present time, in 1912. As a city official he is conscientious and public-spirited and does all in his power to carry out the wishes of his constituents. He is fond of hunting and fishing as recreation and is known as a great baseball fan. He is the owner of a fine automobile and makes many extensive tours of the country in his car. In lauding his home state, he says: "You can't beat Montana—I'll put it up against the world. I have seen the whole United States and I like Montana best of all." Mr. Traufler is a valued and appreciative member of the time-honored Masonic order and he is likewise affiliated with the Fraternal Order of Eagles. He is a man of broad mind and generous impulses, at no time turning down an opportunity to assist those who have been less fortunate in a worldly way than himself. He is a worthy, substantial citizen and one of whom Virginia City has every reason to be proud. Mr. Traufler is unmarried.

J. PETER MONDLOCH. One of the leading contractors and builders in Butte is Mr. J. Peter Mondloch, a native of Belgium, Ozaukee county, Wisconsin, where he was born on January 12, 1852. He obtained a good district school education in his native county, and then learned the carpenter trade in the shop of Michael Shubert at Hancock, Michigan, where he passed three years, and after mastering his trade in all its details he remained at Hancock, in the copper regions of Michigan, to work at the trade on his own account. He remained at Hancock twenty-two years, then came to Butte in 1889. After he arrived in that city he did job work for a time for contractors, and then again set up for himself.

He has prospered from the beginning, and being a workman of skill and artistic taste, he has sought nothing but the best work in his line. Undertaking large contracts for the erection of fine residences and office buildings, and giving special attention to interior finish, he has so impressed the people who have had the benefit of his services that he is generally regarded as one of the finest and most skillful carpenters and wood worker in the city.

His father, John Mondloch, was born and reared in Luxemburg, Germany, and came to the United States in his young manhood. He located at Belgium, Wisconsin, where he became well known and rose to local prominence. When he arrived in the state, that part in which he took up his residence was yet a howling wilderness, and he helped to redeem it from the wild, smooth its rough face into some semblance of civilization and lay the foundations of its civil, educational and religious institutions. In business he was a shoe merchant until his death, which occurred in Hancock, Michigan, in 1895, when he was sixty-four years of age. The mother's maiden name was Anna Traufler. She, also, was a native of Luxemburg, and came to this country with her parents when she was a young girl. She was married to Mr. Mondloch in Belgium, Wisconsin, and they became the parents of four children, two sons and two daughters, three of whom are living: J. Peter, the immediate subject of this brief review; Susan, who is now the wife of John Weber and resides in Hancock, Michigan; and Caroline, who also has her home at Hancock.

Mr. Mondloch was married in Hancock, Michigan, in 1883, to Miss Kathrine Cook. Nine children have been born of the union, one dying in infancy and the others being: Anna, whose life began in Hancock; Mary, who came into being at Jericho, Wisconsin; and Edward, Leona, Lorin, Reta, Estelle and Dorothy, all of whom were born in Butte, Montana. Reta died in 1903, at the age of six years. Lorin, Estelle and Dorothy are students in the high school in Butte.

Mr. Mondloch takes part in the fraternal life of his community as a member of the Yeomen of America, and is also a charter member of Carpenters' Association in Butte. In politics he is independent, bestowing his suffrage on the candidates he deems best fitted for the offices to be filled and most likely to look first to the welfare of the city, county and state, and without regard to partisan considerations. In church connection he is a devout Catholic, with a cordial interest in his religious organization and effective and unflagging zeal in its service. He is a man of integrity, not only in business affairs, but in relation to all the affairs of life.

JOHN Z. CLEM, who is most successfully engaged in the real estate, insurance and abstracting business in Virginia City, Montana, was born in Washington county, Maryland, November 30, 1862, and he is a son of Luke and Susan (Barkman) Clem, the former of whom was born in Virginia and the latter in Maryland. Luke Clem was reared to maturity in the Old Dominion state and as a young man went to Maryland, where was solemnized his marriage and whence he and his family removed to Doniphan county, Kansas, about the year 1876. He served in the Union army until after the battle of Antietam and participated in many important engagements marking the progress of that great conflict, until his honorable discharge, in 1863, as the result of a disease contracted that affected his right knee. During the greater part of his active career he was engaged in agricultural operations in Doniphan county, Kansas, and there his demise occurred in October 1905, at the age of seventy-six years. His cherished and devoted wife passed to the life eternal in February, 1895, aged sixty-three years. They became the parents of nine children, of whom John Z. was the fourth in order of birth.

In 1876, at the age of fourteen years, John Z. Clem accompanied his parents from Washington county, Maryland, to Kansas, where he completed his preliminary educational training in the district schools of Doniphan county. Subsequently he attended and was graduated from the commercial department of the Campbell Normal University, at Holton, Kansas, and thereafter he taught school in various cities in Kansas for the ensuing eight years, at the expiration of which, in 1889, he came to Montana, settling in Melrose, where he taught for the next three years. In 1892 he located in Sheridan and there conducted a hotel and engaged in mining operations until 1901, when he was appointed deputy county clerk. At this time he established his residence at Virginia City, the county seat of Madison county, and in 1902 he was elected county clerk, in which office he served with the utmost efficiency for three successive terms. After retiring from the office of county clerk, in 1909, he opened offices in Virginia City and established his present real estate, insurance and abstracting business. With the passage of time he has succeeded in building up a large and lucrative trade and he has met with unlimited success in his different lines of enterprise.

Mr. Clem was married, in Butte, Montana, December 24, 1891, to Miss Rose A. Darby, who was born in Alder Gulch, near Virginia City, and who is a daughter of Patrick and Catherine Darby, prominent residents of Virginia City. Mr. and Mrs. Clem are the parents of two boys, namely, Byron L. and John G., both of whom are attending school. In their religious faith the Clem family are Lutherans and Mrs. Clem is an active worker in behalf of all that affects the good of her church.

Fraternally Mr. Clem is affiliated with the time-honored Masonic order and has been master of the blue lodge at both Sheridan and Virginia City. He is a valued and appreciative member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and of the Fraternal Order of Eagles. Mrs. Clem is connected with the Order of the Eastern Star, in which she is past worthy matron. In politics Mr. Clem is a stalwart supporter of the principles and policies promulgated by the Republican party, in the local councils of which he has long been an active worker. He is chairman of the Republican central committee of Madison county and is likewise a member of the state central committee. In public life his service has been limited to the office of county clerk but his friends predict high political honors for him in the future. When celebrations are held in Virginia City he has been called upon to act as marshal. He is fond of baseball and athletic sports in general and makes regular trips into the mountains for hunting and fishing. He says: "Montana has a great future along agricultural lines and so far as mineral wealth is concerned we have just scratched the surface. The future development in all channels will be astonishing." Mr. Clem is recognized as a citizen of sterling integrity of character and high business principles. His life has been exemplary in all respects and he is honored and esteemed by all with whom he has come in contact.

E. FRANK CROSBY. A busy helpful useful boyhood, under a practical and hard working father, served to develop many a youth into reliable and independent manhood, and this discipline seldom failed to produce men of physical strength and sane and sober ideas concerning the responsibilities of life, if, as in the case of E. Frank Crosby, one of the leading citizens and prominent sheep men of Custer county, Montana, the father was wise, judicious and fatherly. E. Frank Crosby was born in Adams county, Wisconsin, September 1, 1852, and is a son of Edward and Fidelia (Bailey) Crosby, and a grandson of Joshua and Nancy (Johnson) Crosby. The Crosbys came to America at an early day, three brothers, Simon, Solomon and Joshua Crosby, being the pioneers, and they were born either in Ireland or Scotland.

Edward Crosby was born in the state of New York, in 1820. He was a young man when he started out to seek his fortune in the great West that then was partially an untraveled wilderness, and about 1830 stopped in the little border settlement in the Illinois swamp that has developed into one of the great centers of the world, the magnificent city of Chicago. Then the Indian trader's store was the most conspicuous building and it required remarkable foresight to see, in the marshy lands surrounding it any promise of future development. Mr. Crosby pushed farther west and after reaching Jefferson county, Wisconsin, decided to stop there, clearing up a virgin tract of land and placing it under cultivation and also engaging in lumbering. He married Fidelia Bailey, the daughter of another settler, who had come from Pennsylvania, and afterward moved to Adams county. There he repeated his former activities, clearing up wild land and lumbering and then disposed of this property and moved to Dunn county, where for the third time he cleared land and put it into favorable condition for successful farming. In 1880 Edward Crosby removed to Brookings county, South Dakota, where he entered a homestead and also a timber claim, and there the remaining five years of his life were spent. He was the second son in a large family born to his parents, five sons and two daughters surviving to marry and rear families of their own. His father, Joshua Crosby, was born in New York and possibly was a grandson of one of the original settlers. His mother, Nancy Johnson, was born in England. To Edward and Fidelia Crosby eleven children were born, eight of whom reached maturity and seven of these survive, namely: E. Frank; Edward, who lives in Wisconsin; Susan, who is the wife of Jacob Giles, living in Minnesota; Darwin, who is a resident of Michigan; Nellie, who is the wife of William Hoffman, living in Dakota; George, whose home is at Ekalaka, Montana; and Belle, who is the wife of August Schiebe, a farmer in Wisconsin.

E. Frank Crosby had but indifferent school advantages, as his father required assistance in his enterprises, but the youth attended during the winter sessions whenever possible and laid a good foundation. He grew up strong and robust else he could never have endured the hard work incident to lumbering in the Wisconsin forests year after year. For seven summers he was on the log drive and became so expert in the dangerous business of riding logs on the great rafts annually sent down the river that his name became known from one end of the stream to the other. Much to his surprise, in 1876 he was invited to attend the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia and enter the log-driving contest arranged as an educational feature, but did not accept. He was just twenty-one years of age when he entered a homestead for himself, in Dunn county, Wisconsin, which he held until 1878, when he sold and located a tree claim and also a homestead in Brookings county, South Dakota, and in 1889 was interested also in the mercantile business in Hamilton county, Dakota, after which he came to Custer county, Montana. He selected a beautiful site on Powder river, forty miles southeast of Miles City, where he and family have an ideal summer home. Like other successful men in Montana, he has been interested extensively in horses, cattle and sheep, the latter being his main industry at present. When he first went into the horse business he drove them overland by way of the Black Hills over the government trail of 500 miles and also bought cattle and drove his herds over the trail and continued in this business for about five years. Afterward he engaged in the cattle business on the range, later gradually adding sheep and the prosperity which has attended him in all these industries and undertakings justifies his friends in numbering him with Custer county's progressive and solid men.

On November 17, 1873, Mr. Crosby was married to Miss Martha J. Davis, who was born in Wisconsin, and is a daughter of Elias H. and Mary Ann (Alexander) Davis. The father of Mrs. Crosby was born in Michigan and afterward was one of the pioneers in Adams county, Wisconsin, where he engaged in farming and hotel keeping, later moving to Dunn county and in 1878 moved to Brookings county, South Dakota. There he lost his wife, whose native country was Ireland, and after that affliction he came to Miles City, Montana, and made his home with Mr. and Mrs. Crosby until his death, which occurred in 1906. Of his four children Mrs. Crosby was the second born.

Mr. and Mrs. Crosby have had eight children born to them, namely: Emmett, who married Clara Williams; Harvey, who married Lizzie Doonan; Libbie, who is the wife of L. D. Brown, residing at Concord, New Hampshire; Sylvia, who is the wife of Lee Newell, of Custer county, Montana; Montie, who married Flora Yates, is a resident of Custer county; William, who lives in Rosebud county, Montana; and Bessie and Carsie, who live at home. Mr. Crosby is a Knight Templar Mason, having membership in Yellowstone Lodge, No. 26, A. F. & A. M.; Miles City Chapter, No. 14; and Miles Commandery No. 11, and Mrs. Crosby and Miss Bessie are members of Custer Chapter, No. 25, O. E. S. In politics Mr. Crosby is an independent Republican. The first public office he ever held was that of township assessor in Otter Creek township, Dunn county, Wisconsin. He afterward was deputy sheriff in Hamilton county, Dakota. In 1900 was elected assessor of Custer county, Montana, and was reelected in 1902 and in this campaign ran far ahead of his ticket, leading even President Roosevelt in the county. In 1904 he was again reelected to the same office.

CONSTANT RIMBOUD. Among Butte's industries there is probably none other whose product ranks with the very highest class in the country as does that of the steam cleaning and dye plants conducted by Constant Rimboud. He has at different times for twenty-five years been a resident of Butte, coming to the city first in 1889. His connection with his present line of business began in his native country of France about a third of a century ago, and during the intervening years he has not only kept fully abreast of the progress and improvement therein, but has himself introduced a number of innovations that have materially contributed to the present highly developed state of this industry.

As previously mentioned, Mr. Rimboud is a native of France, having been born at Savoie, near the Switzerland line, on the 15th of September, 1859, a son of Francois and Helen (Rimboud) Rimboud, both of whom are now deceased. The parents were both born in France, where they passed their lives, the father dying in 1879, and the mother surviving until 1899. Francois Rimboud followed the business of a farmer for a number of years. Concerning his family, but two are living at the present time, namely: Edward, who is a prominent farmer and hotel keeper in France, and Constant, the immediate subject of this review.

Constant Rimboud was reared to manhood under the invigorating influence of the old homestead farm in France and attended the neighboring schools until he had reached the age of twelve years. At that time he went to work as a farm hand and continued as such for the ensuing eight years. When about the age of twenty he went to Paris and there began to learn the trade of a dyer. He remained there about two years, during which he improved his time in the way of learning the business which has proven the foundation of his subsequent success.

Believing that the United States afforded a better opportunity for one of his limited means, he concluded to try his fortunes in that country. He came to America in 1885, and at once proceeded to Eureka, Nevada, where he was employed at various occupations for the next three years. Leaving there, he went to Sacramento, California, and from that city went to Tacoma, Washington, and in 1889 came to Butte. Three years later he removed to Helena, Montana, and there establishing the Parisian Dye Works, which he conducted with admirable success for the next six years. Eventually disposing of his interests in Helena, he returned to Butte in 1898, and from this place went to Anaconda. In 1900 he disposed of his business in that city and again became a resident of Butte, where he has since remained and now controls the most extensive business in his line in this section of the country.

On the 12th of September, 1902, Mr. Rimboud was married in Butte to Mme. Maria Paumie, the widow of C. Paumie, who for many years was prominently identified with the business interests of Butte, and with his wife, now Mrs. Rimboud, established the Parisian Dye Works in that city. The superior knowledge of the business, combined with the excellent qualifications of both Mr. and Mrs. Rimboud form a combination that has placed their interests among the most substantial in Butte. This comprises not only the original plant of the Parisian Dye Works, at 60 West Galena street, in the Paumie block, but a branch house at 23

East Quartz street. Mr. and Mrs. Rimboud have no children, but Mrs. Rimboud, by her former marriage, has a son and a daughter, the latter, Yvonne Paumie, being connected with the Parisian Dye Works. The son, Camille, is now head of the Regal Cleaning & Dying Company, of Salt Lake City.

In politics Mr. Rimboud is not allied with any particular organization, voting for the best men and measures regardless of any political affiliation. In religious matters both he and his wife are devout members of the Roman Catholic church, in the various departments of whose work they are most zealous factors.

HENRY G. RICKERTS, agent of the Diamond Coal and Coke Company at Butte, is a native of Pomeroy, Meigs county, Ohio, where his life began on April 20, 1870. His parents, John L. and Lucy (Hauser) Rickerts, were born in Germany and came to the United States at early ages with their parents. They were married in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and later removed to Pomeroy, Ohio, the father dying in that city in 1889, at the age of sixty-five years. The mother died at Helena, Montana, in 1901, aged seventy-five. The father first lived in Philadelphia after his arrival in this country, but some years after leaving school moved to the Ohio city named, in which he conducted a flourishing bakery until his death.

Henry G. Rickerts graduated from the Pomeroy high school in 1888, and almost immediately afterward secured the office of assistant postmaster in his home city. His tenure of this office lasted only eight months, as he was called to it to fill an unexpired term. When he gave it up he was compelled by the death of his father to seek another engagement at once. He then secured a position as clerk and salesman in a Pomeroy clothing store, which he filled for a period of five months.

By the end of that time the persuasive voice of the great west, which he had heard with attention for some years, became irresistible, and he yielded to it, coming to Montana and locating at Elkhorn in Jefferson county in 1889. There he worked for a brother-in-law, who had a general store, three years, making a good impression on the people and winning such general public confidence and esteem that he became a favorite with them for the office of district clerk of Jefferson county. He was prevailed on to accept the nomination for this office on the Democratic ticket and was elected to it. The term was four years in extent and at the end of it he was reelected for another, but he filled out only about half of this one.

In 1898 he was offered the nomination for the office of clerk of the supreme court, and agreed to take it. After his nomination he resigned the old office to make the race for the new one, and in this he was successful also. He filled the office to the end of the term of six years, then, in 1905, was made temporary custodian of the law library. He worked on the Helena Record until December of that year, and in the meantime was also actively employed by the Amalgamated Copper Company. After leaving his position with the Helena paper he devoted his time exclusively to the service of the Amalgamated Copper Company until 1907, when he came to Butte to take the management of the Diamond Coal and Coke Company, a subsidiary of the Amalgamated Copper Company, and this position he has been filling ever since.

On September 2, 1903, Mr. Rickerts was married in Helena, this state, to Miss Louise Schleider, of that city. They have one child, Helen Louise.

Mr. Rickerts takes an active part in the social and fraternal life of his community. He belongs to Silver Bow Lodge in the Order of Elks, the Silver Bow Club of Butte, and the Lambs Club of Helena. He is a Knight Templar Mason and a member of the Temple of the Mystic Shrine in Helena.

AMOS M. FLUENT. Born and reared to the age of twelve years in one of the populous and progressive counties of the great Empire state, then passing thirteen additional years in Iowa, one of the imposing agricultural states of the Middle West, and afterward mingling with human life as it is seen in all its picturesque and voluminous variety in North Dakota and Montana, Amos E. Fluent, secretary of the Miners' and Smelters' Union of Butte, has had a much more comprehensive and many-sided observation of American manhood, its industries and its products, than comes within the range of most men's experience.

Mr. Fluent was born in Bath, Steuben county, New York, on March 13, 1857, and remained there until 1869, attending a public school from the time when he was old enough to start until the family left that part of the country. He is a son of Amos B. and Matilda Emerson (Butler) Fluent, natives, also, of the state of New York, the former born in 1814. They were married in their native state, and engaged in farming there until the loud-sounding voice of the mighty west called them to its fruitful fields with the promise of better returns for their labor. In 1869 they moved their family to Floyd county, Iowa, and located on a farm near Charles City, the county seat.

They found that part of the great Hawkeye State still wild and largely unpeopled at the time, and easily took rank among its most valued pioneers. For the father was a man of force and intelligence, well informed as to public affairs, and able to render the infant township and county in which he took up his residence valuable services in connection with the establishment and further development of their civil, educational and religious institutions. He died on his Iowa farm in 1879 at the age of sixty-six years. The mother survived him seven years, passing away in 1886 at the age of sixty-nine.

Their son, Amos M. Fluent, continued his schooling in the district and more advanced schools of his new location, and after due preparation entered the University of Iowa, from the academic department of which he was graduated in 1873. He then matriculated in the law department of that institution, and in 1876 received the degree of LL. B. from that department. He did not, however, enter at once upon his professional career, but passed six years as a teacher in the public schools of the state. But the time devoted to this pursuit was not lost. His occupation provided for his immediate wants and enabled him to lay his plans with deliberation and accuracy for his future work, and also gave him extensive and definite knowledge of himself and human nature in general.

When he was ready to begin the practice of his profession he moved to Grand Forks, North Dakota, and there devoted himself to legal work for two years. At the end of that period he changed his residence to Devil's Lake in the same territory, where he remained five years. In 1889 he sought and found a larger field of opportunity by moving to Butte, Montana, and there he has ever since resided and extended his professional work. His first engagement in Butte was in the service of William A. Clark, and on November 1, 1907, he was elected secretary of the Millmen and Smelters' Union, a position which he still occupies and in which he has gained a wide reputation.

Mr. Fluent was married in Nashua, Iowa, on May 26, 1881, to Miss Maggie Critchfield, a daughter of Rev. Asa Critchfield, the well-known clergyman of that place. Four children have been born of this union: Floyd C., whose life began at Devil's Lake, North Dakota, on December 24, 1886, and who is now a student in the law department of the University of Michigan; Harvey, also born at Devil's Lake, on January 28, 1889; Lucinda, a native of Butte, Montana, born on August 18, 1892; and Russel, also born in that city on January 18, 1896, and who is now a student in its high school and making a fine record in his classes.

C. S. Loud

Mr. Fluent is a leading member of the Butte Camp of the Woodmen of the World. He also belongs to the great organization known as the Western Federation of Miners, and, as has been stated, is secretary of the Butte Union of Miners and Smelters. He is a Republican in political faith and allegiance and a Presbyterian in church connection. He is universally regarded as a man of the strictest integrity, and is very popular in Butte, Silver Bow county and throughout the northwest, especially with the adherents of organized labor of all crafts.

HON. CHARLES H. LOUD. One of the most prominent citizens of Miles City, a man for many years a leading member of the bench and bar, and one who has been called to fill numerous positions of public trust and great importance, Charles H. Loud, ex-judge of the Seventh judicial district, has won the respect and confidence of the people to a marked degree, and in bearing testimony to his real worth, the biographer is but voicing the sentiments of the entire community. Judge Loud was born at Weymouth, Norfolk county, Massachusetts, November 20, 1858, and is a son of Cyrus and Betsey (Loud) Loud, also natives of the state. The family is widely known in the New England states, and during colonial days furnished a number of soldiers for the Continental army during the War of the Revolution. Cyrus Loud was a manufacturer of boots and shoes at Weymouth, Massachusetts, and there his death occurred in 1897. He and his wife, who survives him, had two children: George B. and Charles H.

It was the intention of Mr. Loud's parents that he receive the advantages of a collegiate training, and with that end in view was prepared in the public schools for Harvard. Circumstances, however, were such that he did not enter that famous institution, but began to prepare for the practice of law in the office of Judge E. C. Bumpus, at Weymouth, with whom he studied nine months. He then identified himself with civil engineering work in the office of the city surveyor of Boston, where he remained three years, gaining an excellent practical and technical knowledge. At the expiration of that period he became an employe in the engineering department of the New York & New England Railroad, with which he remained one year, and in 1880 entered the employ of the Northern Pacific Railroad as leveler in an engineering corps operating in the construction of the new line. For three years he was identified with construction work on this road, and was assistant engineer on the Park branch from Livingston to Cinnabar. Returning then to the east, in company with capitalists he organized the Hereford Cattle Company, and on coming back to Montana acted as manager for this firm in the cattle business on Pumpkin creek, a tributary of Tongue river. In 1886 they met with severe losses, and Mr. Loud eventually withdrew from the company. In 1889 he located in Miles City, resumed the reading of law, was admitted to the bar in 1891, and engaged in active practice. He was a member of the constitutional convention of 1889 which framed the organic laws under which Montana was admitted to the Union, and in 1890 and 1891 represented Custer county in the lower house of the state legislature, so that he has been intimately connected with the framing of both the constitutional and statutory laws of Montana. He later served two terms as county attorney, and in 1896 he was elected to the bench of the Seventh judicial district, comprising the counties of Yellowstone, Custer and Dawson. He was unanimously re-elected to this office in 1900, having been nominated on both the Republican and Democratic tickets, and served with dignity and ability in the position until January 1, 1909. The Republican party and its principles and candidates have always received his stanch and unqualified support, and for many years he has been known as one of the leaders of the organization in his community. At present he is acting as a member of the high school board, and is also president of the Carnegie Public Library. He has been prominent in Masonry for a number of years, and now belongs to Yellowstone Lodge, No. 26, A. F. & A. M.; Miles City Chapter, No. 14, R. A. M., Miles City Commandery, No. 11, K. T., of which he is past eminent commander; and Algeria Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., Helena. In addition he is a charter member of Miles City Lodge, No. 537, B. P. O. E. During the regime of Governor Richards, Judge Loud served as a member of his military staff. Although his duties as a public official have demanded the greater part of his attention, Judge Loud has also found time to interest himself in business matters. He has been vice-president of the State National Bank of Miles City, a member of the firm of Lakin, Westfall & Company, engaged in a general mercantile business at Miles City, and senior member of the firm of Loud & Hitzfeldt, in the cattle business in Custer county.

On December 21, 1886, Judge Loud was married to Miss Georgiana W. Burrell, who was born in the state of Massachusetts, daughter of Joseph W. Burrell, and they have two daughters: Katherine and Margaret A.

FREDERICK M. MJELDE, treasurer of Park county, Montana, who both as public official and prominent citizen has rendered signal service to his city and county, occupies a foremost position among the men who are striving to advance the interests of this part of the State. He was born in Dane county, Wisconsin, August 15, 1896, and is a son of Knud J. and Marie M. (Halverson) Mjelde. His father was born in Bergen, Norway, June 17, 1833, and came to the United States in 1861, landing in New York City. During the same year he made his way west to Dane county, Wisconsin, where in 1862 he enlisted in Company B, Fifteenth Regiment, Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, for three years or during the war, but on account of disability received an honorable discharge and returned to Dane county. In his native country he had learned the trade of shoemaker, and this he followed at Black Earth, Wisconsin, until 1886, in the winter of which year he came to Montana, but during the following spring returned to Wisconsin, and until 1901 was engaged in business at Black Earth. He then removed to Chicago, Illinois, where his death occurred February 10, 1912. He was a faithful member of the Norwegian Lutheran church, a stanch Democrat in politics, and a valued comrade of the Grand Army of the Republic. In Madison, Wisconsin, he was married to Marie M. Halverson, who was born at Eidsvold, Norway, and to them there were born nine children, of whom eight are living: Benjamin; Herbert J.; Matilda, the wife of Frank S. Weary; Frederick M.; Hannah J., wife of Dr. H. L. Foster; John N.; Nora; and Volberg.

Frederick M. Mjelde was educated in the public schools of Black Earth, Wisconsin, and Luther College at Decorah, Iowa. He earned his first money digging potatoes at twenty-five cents per day, but in 1889 began his life work by teaching school in Melville, Park county, Montana. Two years later he began to clerk, and for a period of years was employed in various capacities and localities, but in 1902 came to Livingston and became clerk in the office of the division superintendent of the Northern Pacific Railroad, where he was employed for eight years, or until his election, in November, 1910, to the office of treasurer of Park county and was re-elected county treasurer in 1912. In 1908 Mr. Mjelde was elected alderman from the second ward of Livingston, and succeeded himself in that office in 1910. He is a Democrat in politics, and is known as one of the active and influential party workers in this part of Park county. Fraternally he belongs to Livingston Lodge No. 17, I. O.

O. F., Lodge No. 539, Loyal Order of Moose; Yellowstone Lodge No. 10, K. of P., and Zephyr Camp No. 151, W. O. W. He has proven himself a faithful, efficient and conscientious official and is known as a citizen who is at all times ready to support any measure which has for its object the betterment of Livingston or any of its interests. His home is situated at No. 331 South Seventh street.

Mr. Mjelde was married September 26, 1893, to Miss Jocasta E. Hunter, who was born in Muskegon, Michigan, daughter of Dr. Edgar J. and Eva M. (Davis) Hunter, and the eldest of their three children. Dr. Hunter came to Livingston in 1887 as an employe of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and here died in August, 1888. His widow subsequently graduated from the Kirksville (Missouri) College of Osteopathy, and is now successfully engaged in practice in Livingston. She has taken a great deal of interest in educational work, and has served as superintendent of schools of Park county for two terms. Mr. and Mrs. Mjelde have two children: Edgar F. and Evalyn M.

CHARLES SUMNER PASSMORE. The biography of Charles S. Passmore is a narrative which is of peculiar interest to the general reader, both for his ancestry and for the achievements of his varied and successful career. His has been as diversified a life history as could well be found, even in this country of surprising accomplishments. He was born in Cecil county, Maryland, on July 11, 1858, the son of Ellis Persey and Mary E. (Lincoln) Passmore, natives of Chester county, Pennsylvania, and of the good old Quaker stock, whose children have a birthright in the old William Penn church. This is a heritage which Mr. Passmore jealously maintained for many years.

Ellis Passmore was a prosperous dairy farmer in Maryland for years, but after the death of his wife at Rising Sun, in the year 1889, he went from Maryland back to his native state and retiring from business, remaining at Nottingham until his death. The Passmores trace their ancestry back to a Norman who went to England with William the Conqueror, and settled in Berkshire. In 1717, the family came to America, and here as in France and England, they were people of influence. The mother's family, too, has been one to bear an active part in the history of America. Mrs. Passmore's maternal grandmother is an aunt of honorable Hugh McVeagh, U. S. Attorney General under President Garfield. In the present generation, one of Mr. Passmore's brothers, Lincoln K. Passmore, is the vice president of the Union League Club of Philadelphia, and also vice president of the Pennsylvania Mutual Life Insurance Company of Philadelphia.

Charles Passmore was reared on his father's farm and educated by private instructors and in the public schools. There is a Friends Academy in Rising Sun, and he also attended this institution. Upon finishing the course there he decided to go to the Millersville, Pennsylvania Normal School, and he earned the money for this by teaching in the public schools. In the year 1880, he began his mercantile experience in a wholesale cracker house of Philadelphia. He soon left this position for a better one with the marine exchange.

The next work in which Mr. Passmore was engaged was that of supervising the extensive improvements at what is now Lake Coma, New Jersey, a summer resort, but then only a rugged and desolate locality. In 1883, Mr. Passmore found himself in Fargo, North Dakota, and from here he went to the new town of Page. His capital amounted to less than a hundred dollars, but he became associated with a schoolmate, W. L. Brown, and at once bought lots and put up some buildings. Later they conducted a general merchandise business with great success for four years. It was during his stay here that he met Miss Susie M. Came, who afterward became his wife. She was born near Portland, Maine, and her parents, Joseph and Nancy (Blair) Came were of Scottish descent. She and Mr. Passmore were married on December 8, 1886, and shortly afterwards, Mr. Passmore disposed of his interests in Page, and bought an interest in a hardware and roofing business at Salem, Ohio. The hundred dollars with which he had begun at Page had grown to $4,500.

Mr. Passmore remained two and a half years in Ohio, but this venture was not as successful as his other enterprises had always been and he concluded to go west again. He came to Butte in September, 1889, with ten dollars in cash, and borrowed one hundred to make his first payment on an interest in the S. V. Kemper Real Estate firm. This was then Kemper & Jeffries, and seven months later, Mr. Passmore bought out Mr. Jeffries. The time was favorable and Mr. Passmore had the foresight and the good judgment to enable him to make the most of his opportunity. A large portion of the city had just been destroyed by fire, and in the rebuilding, Mr. Passmore did a large and profitable business. Since then, he has been alone in his work except for occasional periods when he has taken a partner for a short time.

Real estate does not occupy all of Mr. Passmore's time. He is extensively engaged in building, and it was he who inaugurated the plan of building on the installment plan in Butte. He is the general agent of the American Bonding Company and of the Aetna Life Insurance Company, Liability Department, and New Jersey Plate Glass Insurance Company. He also conducts a fire insurance agency, and has charge of the business of the Title Guaranty Company of New York, and is general agent of Preferred Accident Company of New York. Mr. Passmore's agency is the oldest fire insurance agency in Butte and the largest general agency in the state. For many years in connection with the business he has conducted an architectural department. One of the most valuable of Mr. Passmore's real estate holdings in the city is the Maryland block, on West Quartz street, erected in 1898. He also owns a fine ranch of three thousand acres in Mussellshell valley.

Mr. Passmore is nonpartisan in political convictions. He is a member of the Masonic order, and has attained not a little distinction in the Royal Arcanum, in which he has served as Deputy Supreme Regent of the state. He has served as Grand Chief Templar of the state of the Independent Order of Good Templars, for three years. The Presbyterian church of Butte has in the Passmore family some of its most liberal and active members. Four children have been born of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Passmore, Blair S., who died at the age of nineteen years, while a student at Swarthmore College; Paul B.; Linnie E.; and Abigail. Mr. Passmore is a worthy representative of a worthy race, and he bids fair to leave behind him, those who shall continue to add honor to the name which has so long and so honorable a history.

WILLIAM L. JOHNSON, president of the Cascade Laundry Company of Great Falls, Montana, was born in Porter county, Indiana, near Chicago, on August 14, 1872. He is the son of Adolph Johnson, of Swedish birth, who came to America as a young man and settled in Indiana, where he became well and favorably known as a farmer of importance. He was killed in an accident in Minneapolis in 1884 when he was but forty-nine years old. The mother, who was also a native of Sweden, died in Minneapolis in May, 1906, when she was seventy-seven years of age. Of the six children born to them, William L. of this review was the youngest.

Reared in Minneapolis, whither the family had moved in his youth, William L. Johnson attended the schools of that city and in 1889, when he was nineteen years of age, he first visited Montana, coming to Great Falls and becoming interested in the laundry business. He began as a delivery boy, and giving his best attention to the work, was soon promoted to a position carrying with it more importance. He was promoted from time to time, until finally he became a member of the firm, and he is at present president of the Cascade Laundry Company, having been elected to that office in 1909. He is recognized as a power in the concern. The company is incorporated under the laws of the state, and is one of the most prosperous business houses in Great Falls today.

Mr. Johnson is a member of the Knights of Pythias, and is affiliated with the Congregational church, of which his family are also members. He is a Republican with regard to political sentiment, although he has never taken undue activity in the affairs of the party in his county. He is well known to a large circle of friends in which he is regarded most highly, and his standing in the business community is a most enviable one.

Mr. Johnson was married in September, 1898, to Miss Ann Rothwider of Great Falls. Six children have come to them. They are: Evelyn, born in 1899; William Irwin, born in 1902; Blain, born in 1904; Leland, born in 1908; Donald and Dorothy, twins, were born in 1911. The three eldest are in attendance at the schools of Great Falls.

JAMES R. BROWN, experienced engineer and for a number of years manager and part owner in the Carbon Coal Mines Company, while not a native product of the state of Montana, was practically reared in the state. He was born in Lawrence county, Missouri, on the first of May, 1880, and with his parents came to Montana, settling near Great Falls, when he was nine years of age. He is the son of William T. and Lydia (Roberts) Brown, the father a native of Virginia, and the mother of Virginia. They were married in Lawrence county, Missouri, and there lived until their removal to Montana in 1889. They first located at Great Falls, but later settled in Sand Coulee, where the father engaged in coal mining, and where the family home is still maintained.

Of the five children born to William and Lydia Brown, James of this review was the first born. He attended the schools of Great Falls after the family settled there and later of Sand Coulee, concluding his studies when he had reached the age of fifteen years. He first went to work in the mines after leaving school, and continued thus for about four years, when he became interested in the study of engineering and began to devote his attention to it. For the past twelve years Mr. Brown has been following engineering with most excellent success, and in recent years he formed a partnership with George Wilson and John Hackett, organizing the Carbon Coal Company, with Mr. Brown as manager of the concern. The company is in a prosperous and healthy condition, and the daily output of the mines is from one hundred and fifty to three hundred tons, employing an average force of forty-five miners. In busy seasons, however, the force is increased to sixty men. The work is conducted along the most improved and safe methods, and the engineering skill of the manager is brought into especial significance in the affairs of the company.

On August 15, 1900, Mr. Brown was united in marriage with Miss Georgina Allen, daughter of William Allen, of Iowa. Three children have been born of their union: William, born in September, 1902; George, born in 1904 and Kathleen, born in 1909.

Beyond his membership in the Knights of Pythias, Mr. Brown has no fraternal affiliations, and takes no undue interest in the political affairs of his community. He shares in the usual responsibilities of a good citizen of his town, fulfilling all the duties of life in the quiet and unostentatious manner characteristic of the man.

CHARLES F. BAKER. Long and successful experience in business has placed Mr. Baker among the leading merchants of Montana, with which state he has been identified for more than twenty years. As president of the Chester Trading Company he is an influential citizen of one of the thriving new towns in the northwestern part of the state.

Charles F. Baker was born at Goshen, Indiana, August 3, 1859, and his early education was obtained in the Catholic schools. His parents were John and Katrine (Ahinger) Baker. The father, a native of Germany, when a young man came to America about 1845 and was one of the early settlers in northwestern Indiana. Farming was his occupation, and he was a prosperous citizen of one of the leading counties of the state. During the Civil war he enlisted in the Union army, was wounded in action, and at the close of the war received an honorable discharge. His death occurred in 1907 at the advanced age of eighty-nine. The mother, also a native of Germany, died in Indiana in 1906, aged eighty-seven.

Charles F., who was the second of four children, has been engaged in the practical affairs of merchandising and other business from the time he left school in Indiana. For two years he was in the drug business, then for two or three years with a hat, cap and fur store, then for seven years in the clothing trade at Wauseon, Ohio, had a similar business at Bryan, Ohio, three years; and was for a year and a half in the general merchandise business at Pioneer, in the same state. In 1889, the year of Montana's admission to the Union, Mr. Baker came to this state and entered the employ of Ben Harris of Helena. In 1892, moving to Great Falls, he began working for Nate Wertheim, with whom he remained for sixteen years. In 1908 Mr. Baker purchased of Bourne & Hamilton a general store at Chester, and by his business capacity and energy has developed this into the large and well known Chester Trading Company, of which he is president. He managed his store all by himself at the start, but now employs five men to assist in attending to the trade. Alexander Wright and John Laird were both business partners in this concern.

Mr. Baker was married in Wauseon, Ohio, in 1885, to Miss Jennie L. Sherwood, and they are the parents of three children, namely: Walter, who was born at Bryan, Ohio, in 1888; Charles H., born at Pioneer, Ohio, in 1890, and now a resident of Great Falls; and Helen S., born at Helena in 1892.

As a citizen Mr. Baker has been known for his public spirit, and Montana has no more loyal citizen than this Chester merchant. He is Republican in politics, and served as postmaster for Chester in 1909. He is a blue lodge Mason, and his wife is a member of the Congregational church. Hunting and fishing are his outdoor forms of recreation, which he indulges when he can find time from a very busy life.

MALCOLM GILLIS. Although of Scotch parentage and Canadian nativity, Malcolm Gillis, postmaster of Butte since 1907, is none the less a loyal and patriotic American citizen, and is as earnestly and devotedly interested in and attached to the institutions and principles of government of the land of his adoption as he ever could have been to those of either the land of his nativity or that of his ancestry. True, he has lived in this country from his boyhood, but in many similar cases the feelings of the parents and their love of their home country have some effect in overbearing the entire devotion of their offspring toward the land of their own residence.

Mr. Gillis was born in Morris, Canada, on April 30, 1862. He received his early education in the district schools of Michigan and was graduated from the high school of that state, to which state his parents moved while he was yet very young, at the age of eighteen. A short time afterward he went to work for the Quincy Mining Company, with which he remained four years. In 1889 he secured employment in the service of the Calumet and Hecla Mining Company, in Calumet, Michigan, where he served two years in the machine shop, preparatory to going into the pumping station or power house for the forementioned company. He remained there until 1889 when he came to Montana, first locating at Anaconda, where he resided for a short time and then, in December, 1889, came to Butte, which city has since been his home. Here he entered the employ of the Butte and Boston Mining Company where he remained fifteen years, when he entered the employ of the Boston and Montana Mining Company. He then decided to go into business for himself, and after carefully looking over the field of opportunity selected the hay, grain and coal trade as his line. He started in business in Butte, taking as a partner in the venture F. A. Crase. They began operations on a small scale, with only two delivery teams and a total capital of about $2,000. Their business increased so rapidly from the start and at the end of eighteen months, upon the death of the late Hon. George W. Irvin, postmaster at Butte, Mr. Gillis was tendered the office of postmaster by his old friend, President Roosevelt. He therefore sold his interest in the business establishment, to his partner, for $7,500. In 1911 he was re-appointed by President Taft. One of the strong recommendations he had for his first appointment was a close personal friendship with Mr. Roosevelt which he enjoyed, and another was his intimate acquaintance with the late Colonel Wilbur F. Sanders and a number of other notable persons of national reputation. He stands very high in Montana, and has been a progressive and popular postmaster.

His parents, Neil and Jessie (Campbell) Gillis, were natives of Scotland, but were married in the island of Cape Breton, province of Nova Scotia, Canada. The father came to the island in 1852, and there followed farming until he moved to Lake Linden, Michigan. Some years later the family came to Butte, where the father died in December, 1905, and where the mother is still living in great vigor and activity at the age of eighty-five years, and is one of the most revered elderly matrons of the city.

Mr. Gillis was married at Lake Linden, Houghton county, Michigan, in 1891, to Miss Bertha Schlichting, a native of that city and the daughter of Herman and Margaretha (Oseau) Schlichting, who were born in Germany, in the town of Osenberg. Mr. and Mrs. Gillis have two children: their son, Herman Donald, who was born in Butte in 1892, and is now a student at the State Agricultural College; and their daughter Clara Lucile, born in Butte, in 1894, and who is a graduate of the Butte high school.

Mr. Gillis is a thirty-second degree Freemason in the York and Scottish rites, and an active member of Bagdad Temple, Mystic Shrine. He is also an Odd Fellow, and has passed all the chairs in his Lodge in the order. In addition he belongs to the Butte Lodge of Elks, and has served as its Exalted Ruler, and is a member of the Engineers' Association, in which he has held all the prominent offices. Socially he is active in membership in the Silver Bow Club.

In politics he is a pronounced Republican, and has been three times chairman of the county central committee of his party in Silver Bow county. He is an active member of the Butte Chamber of Commerce, and is secretary of the Good Roads Congress of Montana, and in religious connection is a Presbyterian. He is fond of all outdoor sports and amusements, and for one year was president and owner of the Butte baseball team, which he sold in 1909.

In all the changes and exactions of his subsequent life this gentleman who is always true to his convictions and the claims of association, has never lost his interest in the miners of the country, or allowed it to become passive. He has always taken an active part in promoting their welfare, and in the hard fight they had several years ago with the American Federation of Labor, he took a conspicuous position in favor of the workmen, risking his reputation and future prospects by his activity in their behalf, but rendering them highly valuable service. At the call of what he conceives to be his duty he never shirks or hesitates, but goes straightforward to the end to which the call leads him, whatever the personal consequences to himself.

It is largely because of his sterling integrity and straightforwardness, his courage and his lofty manhood that he is so highly esteemed all over the state of Montana. But his genial manner, obliging and courteous disposition, broad public spirit and progressive enterprise are also elements of magnitude in the case, and all combined have brought the people of the state to regard him as one of its best and most useful citizens, and made him one of its most popular and influential men.

WILLIAM E. NIPPERT. The life and experiences of William E. Nippert, clerk of the district court at Thompson Falls, Montana, presents an interesting study of the biographer. A member of an old and distinguished American family which for generations has numbered among its representatives eminent men in the various professions, he is himself a native of Switzerland, and during his life has traveled extensively in foreign countries and in various parts of the United States. He has been at times farmer, hunter, educator and politician, and in every relation of life has shown himself thoroughly capable of winning success and of being independent of outside aid. Mr. Nippert's father, the Rev. Lewis Nippert, a native of Paris, Kentucky, in early life moved to Cincinnati, Ohio, where he was married to Adelaide Linderman. He was a noted educational and religious worker, and was sent as a foreign missionary by the Methodist church, spending more than thirty years of his life in Europe, where he was one of the first to establish that faith in various sections. He was for some years president of the Methodist College at Frankfort-on-the-Main, and while there, in 1869, his wife died at the age of thirty-two years. In 1890 Mr. Nippert returned to Cincinnati with his children, and there his death occurred August 17, 1894, when he was sixty-nine years of age. He was the founder of the Methodist hospital system in the United States, was of an extremely charitable nature, and really dedicated his entire life to his church and his fellow men. He and his wife had eight children, William E. being the fourth in order of birth.

William E. Nippert was born in Switzerland, May 7, 1861, and his early education was secured under private tutors in that country. He accompanied his father to Frankfort-on-the-Main, Germany, where he attended the preparatory schools, and subsequently traveled in Italy, Holland and other European countries, and in Africa, and during this time learned to speak English, German and French fluently. When he was fifteen years old he was brought to the United States, and when he had resided in Cincinnati for one year was told by his father that if he could make his own way in the world for one year he would present him with a farm. Although he had already experienced far more adventures than fall to the ordinary youth, those that followed in the various occupations in which he was engaged in western Kansas were decidedly unique, and on more than one occasion, while "roughing and toughing it," he sat down to partake of a meal of his own preparation. Having fulfilled the terms of the agreement, young Nippert returned to his father's home and was presented with a farm of 240 acres in Iowa, where he at once settled down to try his skill as an agriculturist, and also experimented in horse speculation, but after one year decided he had not yet found the field for displaying his abilities to the best advantage, and subsequently entered the Northwestern Normal School at Lamars, Iowa. On completing his three years of study in that institution, Mr. Nippert came to Montana, and in 1889 settled in Helena, where he became a teacher in the Helena Business College. Subsequently he was an educator in the Episcopal school of St. Peter's for a short period, and then came to Thompson Falls and for seven years acted in the capacity of principal of schools. Later he started in speculating in mining properties, and for some years was secretary of the Kentucky-Montana Mining Company for three years, but eventually interested himself in politics, which has received his entire attention ever since. An ardent and active Republican, Mr. Nippert when still a young man served as recorder of the probate court in Cincinnati, his brother being judge of the court at that time. In Montana he has served as clerk of the school district, as a member of the city council of Thompson Falls, as deputy sheriff, and as a representative of the Federal government in the judicial department, and is now acting as chief probation officer of Sanders county. For a time he acted as deputy clerk and recorder, and was then elected to the position of clerk of the district court, an office which he still retains. In fraternal matters Mr. Nippert is connected with Masonry and Oddfellowship, holding various offices in the latter, and is demonstrating his public spirit as a committee member of the Thompson Falls Development League.

Hunting and fishing have always been attractive to Mr. Nippert, and he has followed the former sport to the Canadian line, while as an angler he holds prestige as one of a party that in about five hours from the old limits of Indian territory clear through caught 540 trout just three miles from Thompson Falls. It is only natural that an accomplished linguist like Mr. Nippert should be a great reader and student. It may not be inappropriate to close this all too brief sketch of a man whose life has been spent in real accomplishment, to give his opinion of his adopted state. "After traveling all over Europe and the east, and making thorough observations," Mr. Nippert states, "Montana suits me, personally, best of all. I like its mountains and its valleys, its fine waters and its beautiful climate, its conditions and opportunities that are offered to young men, and last but not least the free, open-hearted democracy of its people."

IRWIN R. BLAISDELL. No vocation occupies a more prominent position among the learned professions than that of the lawyer. A man who is well versed in the laws of his state is always a recognized power. As a class such men are largely depended upon to conserve the best interests of the people, and without them and their practical judgment the work done by the business man and the mechanic, as well as the efforts of the statesman, would be incomplete. The professional lawyer is not the creature of circumstance, as the profession is open to talent, and no definite prestige or success can be attained save by indomitable energy, perseverance, patience and strong mentality. At the same time the lawyer is well fitted to occupy positions of trust in the public field, as his legal training, his ability to concentrate his purpose and his wide knowledge of men fit him to discharge his duties faithfully and well, and so it is that men of this profession are so often chosen to represent the people. One of the leading members of the bar of western Montana is Irwin R. Blaisdell, of Plains, who has occupied various positions of public trust and has shown himself to be an able attorney and conscientious official. Mr. Blaisdell was born July 22, 1872, in Champaign county, Illinois. His father, Judson S. Blaisdell, a native of Indiana, removed to Illinois as a young man, and after a number of years of residence in the Prairie state migrated to Texas, where he is now engaged in the grain business, although during his younger years he followed farming. He was married in Illinois to Miss Caroline Rockwell, who died in 1874, at the age of thirty years, and is buried in Champaign, Illinois. Three children were born to this union, of whom Irwin R. is the youngest, one sister, Mrs. Laura F. Williams, residing in Idaho, while another, Alma L., formerly a school teacher in Great Falls and Plains, married Rollin P. Skinner and now resides in Alabama.

The early education of Irwin R. Blaisdell was secured in the public schools of Champaign, and he later took a course in the academy at Paxton, Illinois, subsequently took a special course at Morris, became a student in the University of Illinois, at Champaign, and completed his studies in the Iowa College of Law, Des Moines. An industrious and enterprising lad, he earned his first money when only twelve years of age, hoeing broom corn in Illinois at a salary of fifty cents per day, and after this followed farming to some extent and also identified himself with the grain business, until he decided to give his entire attention to the practice of law. When he was seventeen years of age he removed to Nebraska, where he worked on his uncle's farm for about a year, then becoming associated in the grain business with his father at Des Moines for a like period, and during the two years that followed carried on grain buying at Panora and Adel, Iowa. In 1893 he returned to Des Moines, where he remained for six years, during four years of which time he was employed as a collector for a transfer company, and in 1896, while in the employ of this firm, entered the Iowa College of Law. He eventually resigned his position to give his entire time to his studies and in 1898 was graduated from college, and during the same year was admitted to the bar. He first formed a partnership with C. E. Hunn, under the firm name of Hunn & Blaisdell, but after one year removed to North Dakota. Not being satisfied, he remained in that state only one year and then came to Montana, and for a short time resided in Butte, Granite and Philipsburg. In 1905, came to Plains where he has since built up a large and representative practice and taken a foremost position among the members of his profession.

Mr. Blaisdell takes an independent stand in political matters. While not an office seeker he believes it every good citizen's duty to accept the responsibilities of positions of public trust, and has served as city clerk, city attorney, alderman and chairman of the Plains school board and holds the latter position at this time. He is a valued member of the Plains Valley Commercial Club and an enthusiast on the subject of his adopted community, both as to climate and the opportunities offered young men of enterprise and energy. Baseball, driving and kindred sports find favor in his eyes, and he also greatly enjoys music, both instrumental and vocal. He possesses a large and valuable professional library and is a great student along the lines of economics, sociology and political sciences. He is widely and favorably known among his professional confreres and is recognized for his ability as a lawyer and for the fidelity with which he adheres to the interests of his clients in the courts.

On September 25, 1901, Mr. Blaisdell was married near Twin Bridges, Montana, to Miss Helen Page, daughter of James M. and Mary Page, of Twin Bridges, old pioneers of this section, the ceremony occurring in the little log house in which Mrs. Blaisdell was born. Two interesting children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Blaisdell: Mary Caroline, a bright student in the public schools; and James P., the baby, at home.

ELMER E. HERSHEY. When Peter Hershey was nineteen years of age, his parents, with their family moved from New York state to Ohio where Mr. Hershey continued his practice of medicine. His father and his father's father before him had devoted their entire lives to the medical profession and it did not occur to him to consult the tastes of his young son before beginning his professional studies. Like most men of his generation, he believed that the choice of career for the son was a matter for the cool judgment and mature years of the father to pass upon. To him there was but one choice for a Hershey. Peter, therefore, was sent to medical college at once, upon their arrival in Ohio. Perhaps he inherited his tastes from his mother's family, but be that as it may, the medical profession never appealed to him. He longed for the open country and the outdoor life. As soon as he was free to do for himself he forsook his enforced profession and procured a small farm. He married Elizabeth Bruner, an Ohio girl with tastes similar to his own and together they enjoyed the unhampered life of the country. To them, in April, 1862, was born a son, Elmer E. Hershey. The birth of the son in this memorable April probably accounts for Peter Hershey's feeling that the duty to his family came before the duty to his state.

His father and his wife's father had both been soldiers in the War of 1812. The soldier blood in him must have often cried out that he too go to the front yet he remained at the side of the young mother and the infant son. When the war was at an end, Elmer was sent to the public schools of Ada, Ohio, and later to the Ohio Normal School. From this institution, in 1884, he received a degree of civil engineering and three years later the degree of M. S. was conferred upon him. Perhaps, once again, the son was influenced by the taste of the father for Elmer Hershey has never put to a practical test, his civil engineering. After graduating in Ohio, he taught for two years in that state and then went to Montana, teaching for several years in the Bitter Root valley at Stevensville and Skalkaho.

While still teaching he began the practice of law in the justice court. Often, too, he helped other attorneys in the preparation of their cases for the district court. He had, at last, found the profession for which his taste and ability called him. If, as it has been said, an attorney's liking for the law may be measured by his success, Mr. Hershey must be indeed devoted to his profession. During the years of his irregular practice—he was not formally admitted to the bar until 1891—he was most successful. It has been told concerning him, that when, without any special training, he tried his first forty-one cases, there were forty-one verdicts in his favor. He, however, adds that after being admitted to the bar, he lost the next forty-two. There is nothing more uncertain than the uncertainties of the law.

In 1889, Mr. Hershey entered the office of Judge Bickford at Missoula. His legal work was slightly interrupted in 1895 and '96 during which time he served a term in the Montana legislature. He remained, however, in the office of Judge Bickford until '98 when the judge left Missoula for Butte. At this time he entered the land office as register which position he held for four years. Since the expiration of this term he has practiced law without interruption. His practice, at present, is not of a general nature as he is legal representative of the A. C. M. Company which leaves him little time for outside clients.

While still a struggling young attorney in Judge Bickford's office Mr. Hershey was married to Miss Belle Catlin, a daughter of Major J. B. Catlin and a native of the beautiful Bitter Root valley. Of the union two daughters were born, Elizabeth, the oldest came in the spring of '96 while Alice was born on Nov. 22, 1901. Both daughters are attending the Missoula schools.

Mr. and Mrs. Hershey are active members of the Christian church. For more than eleven years he has been one of the leading elders of the church. Since the increase of his professional business, he has found little time for political activity. He is prominent but not active in his Masonic lodge circles and has never cared to unite with other secret orders.

A prominent corporation, attorney, a leader in his church and a Republican high in the party councils, leaves him little time for other interests aside from his home and family.

WILLIAM M. BLACKFORD. Illinois was the birthplace of William Blackford, and also of his father, James M. Blackford, who spent his entire life in White county, where he owned and operated a farm. Born in 1835, he lived only to the age of fifty-one, when he was laid to rest in the county where he had begun the course of his mortal life. His wife was English by birth, but met Mr. Blackford in Illinois where they were married and where their ten children were born. Cicely Spencer Blackford survived her husband nearly a quarter of a century, dying on March 3, 1911, at the age of seventy-three, when she was laid beside her husband.

William was the eldest of the Blackford children and was born on October 22, 1860. He grew up on the White county farm which his father had spent his life upon and received the wholesome training which farm life imposes on the oldest son of a large family. He became a wage earner at the age of fourteen hiring out to a neighboring farmer for fifty cents a day. Mr. Blackford attended school in Grayville and after he had graduated from the high school, he went to the National Normal University of Lebanon, Ohio, and there took his degree of B. S. In 1887, Mr. Blackford left Illinois and went to Oregon, as principal of the grammar department of the public schools of the town of Jacksonville. He remained here only a year, before seeking a wider sphere of activity. In Oakland, California, he began the study of law in the office of Davis & Hill, both of whom were distinguished members of the California bar. He did not finish his preparation with this firm, however, but in 1889, came to Butte where he continued his studies and was admitted to the bar. Ever since that time Mr. Blackford has practiced in this state, and the professional reputation which he has attained is one which any attorney might well envy. Throughout this section of the state his work is known and he is at once familiar with all the technicalities of the law and the rulings of the courts, and a most skilful and adroit debater. In 1890, he left Butte to become clerk of the Montana Code Commission at Helena, and while at the capital was associated with the former chief justice Wade. In February of 1894, he came to Lewistown and since then has practiced in this city. He gives his undivided attention to his law business, not even being tempted by what is usually so alluring a game to lawyers—politics. Mr. Blackford is a thorough-going Democrat in convictions, but he is no politician, and certainly in his case, the results of this concentration upon the one matter in hand demonstrate the wisdom of his course, for few attorneys of the state enjoy a larger or a more lucrative practice.

Although Mr. Blackford refuses to engage in avocations, he does not put a ban upon recreations, and there are few diversions in which he does not participate with enjoyment, whether out of doors or within. Perhaps reading is his dearest pleasure, and certainly his fine library is one to beguile a person of literary taste into manufacturing leisure to browse in it. In the Masonic order, he is not only a member of the blue lodge, but also of the Shrine, which is sometimes called the good-fellowship branch of the order. He was at one time master of the Lewistown lodge, No. 37, and after finishing a period of six years as a trustee, has recently been elected to the same position for a five-year term. He is also a member of the

J. H. Rice

Judith Club, and so it is unnecessary to say that he is enthusiastic on the resources of Montana, particularly the Judith country.

On December 4, 1895, occurred the marriage of William M. Blackford to Anna M. Otten, daughter of Herman and Elsie Otten of Fergus county. Six children have resulted from this union, all born in Lewistown. Herman Otten Blackford is now attending St. John's Military Academy at Delafield, Wisconsin. Cecily Elise Blackford has graduated from the grammar school of Lewistown and is now attending high school. Anna Margaret, Ethel Eleanor and William Melville are all in the grades, while Helen Dorcas, the baby, has not yet begun her formal educational training. Mr. and Mrs. Black affiliate with the Presbyterian church, in which, as wherever they are known, they are numbered with the generous workers and the cordially social, whose popularity is wide and firmly founded.

Mr. Blackford is not the only member of his family to become expert in the law, as one of his brothers has won almost equal distinction in the northern part of this state. He has been in Libby since 1899 and is well known throughout the Kootenai region.

JAMES M. INGRAM. About two and one-half miles from Belfry, Carbon county, on Clark's Fork river, is situated the handsomely improved ranch of James M. Ingram, who during the past fifteen years has carried on farming and cattle raising in this section, although he at present makes his home in Red Lodge, the county seat of Carbon county, Mr. Ingram being the incumbent of the office of under sheriff. He was born in North English, Iowa county, Iowa, February 23, 1870, and is a son of Thomas and Roxie (Powell) Ingram. His father, who was born in Indiana in 1845, received his education in the schools of Iowa, whence he had removed with his parents as a youth, and subsequently engaged in farming and stock raising and in buying and shipping cattle and horses to the Chicago market. In 1904 he retired from active business operations and at this time makes his home at Ridgeway, Iowa. He is a Democrat in politics and a consistent church member. Mrs. Ingram, a native of Illinois, passed away in 1906, having been the mother of four sons: Frank, James M., Roy and Menzo.

James M. Ingram secured his education in the public schools of Marengo, Iowa, which he attended about nine months in the year, the other three months being devoted to work on his father's farm, where he obtained valuable experience in the vocations of farming and cattle raising. At the age of nineteen years he left home and went to Nebraska, where he spent two or three months visiting his uncle, and then moved on to Fort Collins, Colorado, where he was employed for about four months as a cowboy for Jud Bristol. During the fall of 1889 he arrived in Butte, Montana, and subsequently he went to Whitehall, where he was employed as a cowboy during the summer and winter of 1890. The next three months were spent as a cowboy on the Yellowstone river, near Livingston, after which he went to Yellowstone National Park, where he had charge of the conservatory department of the United States Department of the Interior, a position which he held for two years. Returning to Iowa on a visit to his old home, he was there married, and for about three years was in the stock business in partnership with his father, but in the spring of 1896 returned to Montana, and engaged in ranching in Madison county for one year. At that time he took up government land in Carbon county, two and one-half miles from Belfry, on Clark's Fork river, where he still carries on ranching and buying and selling cattle. Since his appointment, in December, 1910, to the office of under sheriff of Carbon county, Mr. Ingram has made his home in Red Lodge, where he has a fine modern residence. He is a Democrat in his political views, and his fraternal connections are with West Lodge No. 40, A. F. & A. M., and Bear Tooth Lodge No. 534, B. P. O. E. Mr. Ingram is a skillful farmer, and applies to his business the intelligence acquired by reading and observation, being up to date in every way. As a public official he is conscientious in the discharge of his duties, and holds the full confidence of the citizens of Carbon county.

On May 17, 1893, Mr. Ingram was married to Miss Marie Stemler, who was born in Iowa City, Iowa, daughter of Christian and Marie Stemler, and their interesting family consists of three children: Helen Marie, Laura Roxie and Floyd Mason.

ALONZO F. RICE. It would be difficult to reach anything like an accurate estimate of just how many of the successful business men of Butte today owe their success in life to the early training they obtained in the Butte Business College, at the hands of Alonzo F. Rice, proprietor of that institution since 1889. In the years of his successful handling of the affairs of the college Mr. Rice has perhaps done more for the young people of Butte in a material way than any other known medium, and the splendid attainments of the college as to growth amply attest the splendid esteem in which it is held by the people of Butte and that section of the state.

Alonzo F. Rice was born in Holden, Missouri, on July 30, 1867, and is the son of Franklin J. and Mary A. (Sanders) Rice, both of Nashville, Tennessee. Franklin J. Rice was a prominent farmer and a veteran of the Civil war, and died when Alonzo F. was about ten years of age. In his youth Mr. Rice attended the public schools of Holden, and after his graduation therefrom he took a course in the State Normal School followed by a thorough business course at Central Business College at Warrensburg, Missouri, and another at Sedalia, Missouri. His education completed, he came to Montana and secured employment with the Hecla Mining Company of Glendale, Montana, and in conjunction with his regular duties, Mr. Rice conducted a night school for the benefit of the illiterate miners. After one year thus engaged, he came to Butte and opened the school which has resulted in the present expansive institution of business training. He began in 1889 in a small and humble manner. His means were limited and the demand was not great for such a school. At first he was the only teacher, and all he taught was the elementary rudiments of business training, but with the passing of time and the recognition of the demands of the times on the part of the people, he was able to enlarge the school in many ways, both as to space and with reference to the number of subjects taught. At present the school conducts a number of departments, among them being the English course, the Commercial course, the Shorthand course, the Combined course, comprising all the subjects included in the Shorthand and Commercial courses, separately; a private department, in which absolutely individual and private instruction is given to those who wish to take up elementary subjects, and also advanced instruction; and the Normal and College Preparatory course. Thus it will be seen that the Butte Business College is no infantile project, or a college in name only, but rather a well organized, modern institution with a thorough and comprehensive curriculum, calculated to prepare every student who enters therein in such a manner that he will go forth well equipped for the particular line of endeavor that he has been fitted for. Not only does the Butte Business College carefully look to the preparation of its students, but when they have finished the prescribed course, lucrative positions are readily forthcoming for them, the record of the college in Butte being of such high order that no business man of the city would hesitate to place a graduate of the Butte Business College. At the present time the school has an enrollment of over four hundred day students and over two hundred and fifty night students and occupies the entire fifth floor of the Owsley block and is completely and thoroughly equipped in the most appropriate and modern manner consistent with the needs of such an institution.

When the school was first organized, Mr. Rice was assisted by Mr. E. L. Kern, but at the end of two years Mr. Kern withdrew, leaving Mr. Rice in complete charge of the school, which had already begun to expand. Under Mr. Rice's able and efficient management the school continued to grow apace, and kept steadily abreast of the most rapid growth of the city, as it arose from a mere mining camp to the metropolis of the state. In 1897 Mr. Rice found that the unremitting responsibility and necessarily close confinement attendant upon the successful management of such an institution were beginning to make heavy inroads upon his reserve of health and strength, and he accordingly became associated with C. V. Fulton and E. W. Gold, who became equal partners with him in the business. The college was then incorporated under the laws of the state of Montana, and the partnership endured for a few years, when Professor Gold withdrew from the firm, and the business was conducted under the name of Rice & Fulton. After some little time, Professor L. A. May bought an interest in the school, and the business now is conducted under the firm name of Rice, Fulton & May, and the city of Butte may be congratulated upon its possession of so worthy a place of instruction, and one which has done so much for the youth of Montana as the Butte Business College has already accomplished.

Professor Rice is justly regarded as a man of some importance in Butte, and he is prominent in social, political and fraternal circles. He is a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Woodmen of the World, and of the Silver Bow and Country clubs, being especially fond of all outdoor sports. He is a Republican in his political faith, and has been active in the interests of the party in a general way, although his close attention to the affairs of the college prevents him from giving more than casual attention to those matters.

On April 25, 1909, Professor Rice was united in marriage with Miss Mollie V. O'Leary, the daughter of John C. and Alice O'Leary of Big Timber, Montana. They have one son, Frank Vernon, born December 23, 1911. Mrs. Rice is a member of the Catholic church, while her husband has retained his membership in the Methodist church, in which he was reared.

WILLIAM R. LEET. Prominent among the public-spirited citizens of Chouteau county whose executive ability and sterling integrity have caused them to be elected to positions of trust and responsibility, is William R. Leet, the efficient county treasurer, who has during his ten years of residence in Fort Benton won the unqualified esteem and confidence of the citizens of this community. Mr. Leet was born in Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, July 13, 1856, the third in order of birth of the four children of Joseph T. and Angeline (Jackson) Leet.

Joseph T. Leet was born in the state of New York, and there was engaged in various occupations until his thirtieth year, when he removed to Fond du Lac county, Wisconsin, and engaged in farming, in connection with which he carried on a successful mercantile business. Later in life he moved to Minnesota, and his death occurred at Ortonville, Bigstone county, in 1892, when he was sixty-five years of age. He was married in New York to Angeline Jackson, also a native of that state, and she survived him only one year, being sixty-five years old at the time of her demise.

William R. Leet was eight years old when the family moved to Minnesota, and there he completed his education in the St. Paul Business College at the age of twenty-one years. At that time he secured a position with the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, and during the following thirteen years acted as agent for that company at Mellette, South Dakota, and Wheaton, Minnesota. Subsequently he was employed by the Great Northern Railroad at Chinook, Montana, in 1889, and until 1902 continued to hold a position with that road, then coming to Fort Benton, to take charge of the duties of clerk and recorder, serving as such three terms of two years each. The able manner in which he conducted the affairs of the county in those positions made him his party's choice for treasurer of Chouteau county in 1911. His election followed and that the voters' confidence in his ability has been justified is evidenced by the universal esteem in which he is held. While a resident of South Dakota, Mr. Leet was initiated into Masonry, and still holds membership in the blue lodge and chapter there. His political belief is that of the Republican party, and he is known as an active worker in the ranks, wielding an extensive and beneficial influence throughout Chouteau county. With his family, Mr. Leet attends the Presbyterian church.

In April, 1880, Mr. Leet was married at Millbank, South Dakota, to Miss Laura Niles. They are widely known in social circles of Fort Benton, where both have many warm, personal friends. Mr. Leet is, in fact, one of the most popular officials Chouteau county has had. His long service in public office is sufficient evidence of his ability and fidelity to duty, but it is due to him to say that he has in his public capacity displayed only the same traits which have characterized his private life—strict attention to the details of his work and thoughtful and intelligent management, qualities which could not fail to bring about satisfactory results. He keeps thoroughly posted on public events and matters of general interest, and is highly esteemed as an intelligent, substantial citizen of the city in which he has spent the last ten years of his life.

CHARLES N. THOMAS. The United States commissioner at Cut Bank, Montana, Charles N. Thomas, has had a long and varied experience in various lines of activity, having been identified with the cattle interests of Montana for some years, and acting in numerous official capacities. His birth occurred April 13, 1862, at Sherbrooke, near Montreal, Province of Quebec, Canada, and he is a son of Daniel and Leonora (Eadie) Thomas. Daniel Thomas was born in 1838, at Melbourn, Quebec, and at the age of eighteen years went to Australia, where he was engaged in mining for six years. Returning to Canada, he prepared for the notary's profession by suitable legal study, and was a notary public and register at Sherbrooke until his death in 1893, at the age of fifty-five years. His wife, also a native of Canada, passed away in 1886, when forty-eight years of age. Charles N. was the oldest of their five children. His sister, Miss Laura Leonora, has been a resident of Cut Bank since 1900.

Charles N. Thomas graduated from the schools of Woodstock, Vermont, and from Sherbrooke Academy, receiving an excellent education. At the age of eighteen years he came to Montana on the steamer Josephine, from Bismarck, North Dakota, and first settled at Fort Benton, but after a short stay went to Alberta, Canada, and joined the northwest mounted police, of Alberta Province, the next five years being spent in patrolling the border between the United States and Canada, and for services rendered during the Reil Rebellion in 1885, was awarded a medal by the British government. He then became a clerk in the Canadian Indian department at Fort McLeod, but in 1889 came to the Piegan Indian reservation as clerk of the Browning office of the agency, and continued in that capacity under all the heads of the United States Indian office from Mr. John B. Catlin up to and including Mr. W. R. Logan, being located at various points in the state until 1900. From 1891 until the spring of 1901 he was also engaged in the cattle business on the south branch of the Milk river. In 1900 he was appointed one of the census enumerators for Montana, and for a short time thereafter was connected with the Great Northern Railroad, but in 1901 came to Cut Bank and was immediately elected justice of the peace, giving such universal satisfaction in that office that he succeeded himself three terms and on November 5, 1912, was again elected to serve two years. In 1909 he was appointed United States commissioner by Mr. Hunt, and holds this position at the present time, being one of the most popular commissioners this section has ever had. In addition to discharging his official duties in an efficient manner, Mr. Thomas carries on a large ranch just five miles from Cut Bank, a very valuable property, where he makes his home, and also owns land in Teton county, one mile from Cut Bank.

Mr. Thomas was married at Birch Creek, in 1887, and has two children living: George and Nora. A Republican in his political views, he served Teton county for two years in the capacity of deputy assessor, and at all times has been recognized as one of the strong party workers in this section. He has interested himself in fraternal work, being a popular member of the Masons, the Odd Fellows, and the B. P. O. E. of Great Falls, and his religious connection is with the Episcopal church. During his long residence in Montana, Mr. Thomas has made and retained many friendships, and as a man who is devoting his activities to advancing the welfare of his community well merits the esteem and respect in which he is universally held by his fellow citizens.

CUTHBERT PEAT, who was for some time one of the two commissioners elected to administer the public affairs of the city of Missoula, in connection with the mayor, when the new commission form of city government went into effect, has had a varied and interesting career. He took up the battle of life at a very early age, and went far from his parental fireside to do it. He has from that time on made his own way in the world without the aid of family influence or outside circumstances of any kind whatever, and although his road has been rugged and at times beset with difficulties, his progress has been continuous and the gains he has made are substantial and enduring.

Mr. Peat is a native of London, England, where his life began on July 18, 1869. His parents, John H. and Mary E. (Bedell) Peat, were also English by birth and rearing, and in 1880 they moved their family to New Brunswick, Canada. The father still makes his home there, and lives retired from active business, while the mother died in Portland, Oregon, in July, 1911.

Cuthbert Peat secured what education he got in the schools in his native city, as after his removal with the family to Canada he had no further opportunities to attend school. The circumstances of the family were such that he was obliged to look out for himself, and he undertook the task with the resolute and manly spirit that has characterized him through all his subsequent years. At the age of twelve he removed over to northern Maine and in that sparsely populated region he worked for ten years in the lumber camps and mills, and in other lines of mechanical industry, the farm taking his attention in the summer seasons.

In the winter of 1889-90 he came to Montana and secured employment at Hodges' Mill, at Riverside, in the Bitter Root Mountain region. But he remained there only a short time, and then went to Bonner, where he was employed in various mechanical occupations for nine years. In 1900, Mr. Peat moved to Missoula, and during the next eleven years he had charge of the furniture warehouse of the Missoula Mercantile company.

Mr. Peat has for years given some thought to the trade union movement, and he has given freely of his aid along those lines. He has also taken an earnest and intelligent interest in political affairs as a firm and faithful member of the Republican party, and has been energetic and effective in his work for that great body. His official career has not, however, been based on partisan consideration, as the people, without regard to party lines, have recognized his ability and called him into their service. During the last five years he has been a member of the local school board, and in the past two years has been its chairman. This is not a political office in essence, nor is the one he held in the municipal government as commissioner of public safety. He was chosen to those offices for the sole and only reason that the people believed him to be the right man for the place, and during his incumbency of those positions he demonstrated to the uttermost that their faith in him was not misplaced. As a member of the school board, his services were of the highest order. The interests of the taxpayers and of the rising generation were always uppermost in his mind when in the performance of his duties in his official capacity, and his record was envied and applauded by all, when he retired from the chairmanship of the board. The newspapers pointed him out as an exemplary official, and words of praise were freely accorded him, regardless of party lines or partisanship. The Missoulian, under date of April 22, 1912, paid him the following editorial compliment, which so aptly expresses the general sentiment with regard to him and his service that it is here presented in full: "The retiring chairman, Mr. Peat, leaves the position with a record which is altogether creditable. He has given strength to the schools and he has added dignity to the office which he has so ably filled. The work of the Missoula schools was never upon a higher plane than it is right now; never was there a better standard and never was it more vigorously regarded. This is the enduring stamp which Mr. Peat has left upon the city school system as a result of his years of service at the head of the board."

In connection with his public service in other lines, it is worthy of mention that while he was superintendent of the department of public safety and charity, his record was of the most praiseworthy order. The increased receipts of the police department during that time were $935, while the decreased expenses were $1,940.97; and the decreased expense of the fire department was $1,158.31, and the decreased expense of the health department $407.50. These figures will serve in a measure to show that the activities of Mr. Peat in his public capacity were not alone confined to abstract matters, but he was able to show results in dollars and cents, as the result of his careful administration of the office of which he was incumbent. His service has been of a most praiseworthy nature, and the pleasing thing to record in this connection is that praise has not been withheld, and that his constituents have not hesitated to give free and forcible expression to their satisfaction.

Mr. Peat was married in New Brunswick, Canada, on March 29, 1889, to Miss Elizabeth Hetherington, a native of that province. They have four children: Lucile, Katherine, Mildred and Arthur.

FRANK W. METTLER is an Illinoisian by birth, and almost by descent, for his father was only one and a half years old when he became a resident of that state. The Mettler family came originally from Germany. In fact, one of Mr. Mettler's forbears came with the Hessian mercenaries in the Revolutionary time, and having come to fight the country, remained to be one of its loyal citizens, and to be the grandsire of a soldier of the Union army, the father of Frank W. Mettler. James I. Mettler was born in New York state, in 1840. Like most citizens of Illinois at that time, he was engaged in farming. In May, 1864, he entered the cavalry service, and his discharge of May, 1865, shows that he served in the Sixteenth Regiment, commanded by Col. C. M. Prevost, and in the company of Captain Hall. Mr. Mettler continued to reside in Illinois, until 1895, when he moved to Great Falls, Montana. Here he was connected with the Great Falls Iron Works, for eleven years, or until his death in 1908. His wife was Anna Augusta Snure, born in Nounaduk, not far from Niagara Falls on June 25, 1839. Her family also emigrated to Illinois, and she was married at Rockford in 1866. She died at Great Falls in 1906.

Frank Mettler was born in Lee county, Illinois, on March 3, 1869. He was educated in the public schools of that district and graduated from the Dixon high school in 1883. For five years following his graduation, he taught school in the rural schools of Illinois. He intended to enter the legal profession, and he was following the time-honored path to it, by starting as a pedagogue. As a further aid to the accomplishment of his purpose, Mr. Mettler learned stenography, and for two years followed that as a means of livelihood in Chicago.

In 1889, Mr. Mettler came to Montana in the month of December, and entered the employ of McConnell & Clayberg as a stenographer and clerk. During the fifteen months that he spent with this firm, he put in his spare time reading law. In March, 1891, he began the work that was of such value to him in his chosen profession, that of a court reporter. The district in which he was to work was that of Judge Du Bose, comprising five counties in the northern part of the state. While here, he finished the study of law and in 1898 was admitted to the bar. He did not at once begin to practice, but continued to work as a court reporter for another year, and then in June, 1899, he went to Nome in the very first of the time of the gold excitement. Mr. Mettler was one of the first arrivals in this new El Dorado. It was his intention only to spend the summer up there, but he became engaged in mining and also in the practice of law, and the summer lengthened into a year, before he returned to Montana. The first fee he received in Alaska was paid in gold dust, which was the principle medium of exchange at that time. Mr. Mettler's own mining ventures were successful, and he sold them out at a profit and returned to Montana in July, 1900.

Immediately upon his return, he was drawn into the current of the political activities of the Democratic party. He became the secretary of Walter Cooper, the chairman of the state committee. Their headquarters were at Helena, during the campaign, and after that was over Mr. Mettler went to Butte and there entered the employ of the law firm of McHatton & Cotter. He was associated with them until March, 1901, when he was appointed assistant attorney general, under James Donovan, elected the preceding fall. He served until the end of the term and was then appointed a second time under Albert J. Galen. After four months he resigned and took up private practice at Helena with Mr. Galen, and the success of the firm of Galen & Mettler has been very substantial. Mr. Mettler is interested in a large number of mining properties, among them being the Little Rockies Gold Mining Company, of which he is president. This company has its properties in Choteau county, and its offices in Great Falls.

On May 12, 1906, Mr. Mettler was united in marriage to Miss Anna E. Theinhardt, of Helena. Her father, John Theinhardt, is now deceased, and her mother is Mrs. F. O. Wilson.

Mr. Mettler is a member of the Theosophical Society and has been president of the Helena branch of that society since it was organized about ten years ago. He is also a member of the Lambs Club and of the Woodmen of the World, and this with his connection with the Bar Association and his work for the Democratic party, completes the tale of his affiliations. Both as a lawyer and business man and as a friend and neighbor, he is one of the representative men of Helena and of Montana.

JAMES McTAGGART. Probably there is no better known or more progressive citizen in Belgrade, Montana, than postmaster James McTaggart, who in addition to holding his government office for more than seven years, has been a school trustee for a period extending over eight years, and chief of the Belgrade fire department for five years, and in each capacity has shown himself to be an upright, conscientious, faithful and efficient official. Mr. McTaggart is a native of County Huron, Canada, and was born December 15, 1868, a son of Oren and Ruth (Ashley) McTaggart, Canadians. His father, born in 1815, spent his life in farming in his native land, where he died in 1910, at the advanced age of ninety-five years, while Mrs. McTaggart, who still survives, has reached her eighty-seventh year. There were thirteen children in the family, of whom ten are still living, and James was the seventh in order of birth.

The education of James McTaggart was secured in the public schools of County Huron, and he was reared to sturdy manhood on his father's farm. On leaving the parental roof he went to Seaforth, Ontario, where he learned the trade of baker, and when he had completed his apprenticeship came to Bozeman, Montana, November 27, 1889. For three or four years he was engaged in the bakery business here, but subsequently removed to Chestnut, Montana, where for a short time he worked as a carpenter. Later he returned to Bozeman, and in 1902 came to the vicinity of Belgrade, where about two years were spent in farming, and he then became deputy sheriff of Gallatin county, under Sheriff T. J. Fowler, stationed at Belgrade, Montana. Mr. McTaggart acted in that capacity for about one year, and in February, 1905, was appointed postmaster of Belgrade. In July of the same year, when it became a third class office, he received the appointment, and on December 16, 1909, succeeded himself in the office, which he acceptably fills at the present time. Mr. McTaggart was first elected school trustee in 1904, and has served continuously in that office to the present writing. While a resident of Bozeman, he was a member of the volunteer fire department for ten years, and for the past five years has been chief of the department in Belgrade. His politics are those of the Republican party, and he is known as one of the most reliable and active workers in the Gallatin valley. Fraternally, he is a member of Belgrade Lodge No. 68, A. F. & A. M., and the Woodmen of the World.

Mr. McTaggart was married August 21, 1892, to Miss Mollie Kewn, who was born in Ontario, Canada, daughter of Thomas and Delia (Lynch) Kewn, natives of Dublin, Ireland, both of whom are deceased. Mr. Kewn came from the Emerald Isle to America as a young man, becoming a pioneer Canadian farmer, and there spent his entire life. He and his wife had a family of five children, of whom Mrs. McTaggart was the youngest. Mr. McTaggart is enjoying and will no doubt continue to enjoy the full confidence and esteem of his fellow citizens. Possessed of executive ability of a high order, he has been absolutely faithful in the discharge of his duties, and his pleasant manner and courteous conduct have made him one of the most popular officials Belgrade has ever had.

HON. JOHN F. ASBURY. Holding an admitted precedence in financial affairs, having a highly creditable public record, and one who has wielded a wide and distinct influence in matters of a business nature, the services of the Hon. John F. Asbury, mayor of Big Timber and president of the Big Timber National Bank, have been of an exalted character. He is a native of Lewis county, Missouri, where he was born April 24, 1864, and is a son of Isham and Sarah J. (Fowler) Asbury, natives of Kentucky. Isham Asbury was born in 1830, and as a youth left the Blue Grass State for Missouri, securing his medical training in the old Gerard Medical College, St. Louis. He spent the remainder of his life in Lewis county, and attained an enviable position among the practitioners of the state, being also known as a prominent Mason and active Democrat. His death occurred in 1872. His wife, who was born in 1827, died in 1887, having been the mother of five children: Thomas, John F., David R. and Isham, who are living, and a daughter who died in infancy.

John F. Asbury received a common school education in Lewis county, subsequently attending Monticello high school and Monticello Seminary, and for two years taught school. He was then made president of the schools of Monticello, Missouri, but in 1889 gave up the profession of educator and came to Montana to accept a position in the Gallatin Valley National Bank, of Bozeman, Montana, with which he was connected until 1893. In that year he was appointed receiver of the United States lands office at Bozeman, acting in that capacity until 1898, when he removed to Big Timber and became cashier of the Big Timber National Bank. He subsequently became president of this bank, which is known as one of the soundest and most substantial financial institutions in this part of the state, and in addition has large interests in the Martinsdale Live Stock Company and the A. F. & K. Elevator Company. Since the incorporation of Big Timber he has acted in the capacity of mayor, and the same shrewd, far-sighted characteristics that have made his own ventures so successful have been applied to the business of the city with very satisfactory results. During his fifteen years of residence in Big Timber he has made a wide acquaintance, and in business, public and social life has many warm friends and admirers.

On October 24, 1894, Mr. Asbury was united in marriage with Mrs. Nellie Blair Vivion, who was born in Lancaster, Ohio, daughter of George and Eliza (Brennan) Blair, the former a native of Lancaster, who died in his sixty-fifth year, and the latter born in Dublin, Ireland, and still living at the age of seventy-seven. Mrs. Asbury's sister, Mrs. Jennie McKean, resides in Mason City, Iowa. Mr. Blair was a contractor and builder in Lancaster, Ohio, at the time of the outbreak of the Civil war, and he became captain of Company A, Seventeenth Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry. After participating in numerous engagements, he was captured by the Confederates, and incarcerated in Libby Prison, where he experienced all the hardships that fell to the lot of the Union soldiers held in that terrible southern prison. After being held for about a year he was liberated by the soldiers of Sherman, at that time on his famous march to the sea. On securing his honorable discharge, Mr. Blair returned to Lancaster, where he became a prominent contractor and builder and was so engaged up to the time of his death. Mayor and Mrs. Asbury have two beautiful daughters: Elizabeth and Dorothy.

HON. JOHN E. EDWARDS, president of the State Bank of Commerce and state senator from his district, is one of the undeniably prominent men of Forsyth and Rosebud county. He has been identified with the western states since his youth, being but seventeen years of age when he located at Colorado. Mr. Edwards was born in Warsaw, Illinois, on July 17, 1866, and is a son of Oliver and Annie E. (Johnston) Edwards. The father was born in Springfield, Massachusetts, and was a mechanic by trade. He served in the Union army, entering the service as a private, and was made colonel of the Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Infantry, which he organized while at home on a furlough. At the close of the war he held the rank of brevet major-general. He was a man who ever displayed a goodly amount of interest in political affairs of the day, and was prominent in local politics all his life. He was for years the mayor of Warsaw, and filled other positions of importance at various time. He died in 1904 at the age of sixty-nine, and is buried in Warsaw, where he made his home for so many years. His widow still survives him. She was born in the town and there married her husband. Two children were born to them, John E. being the eldest; the other, a daughter, resides in Warsaw.

When John E. Edwards was seventeen years old he left school and set out for the west, locating in Colorado and there remaining for two years, engaged in work on the cattle range. He then moved on to Indian territory and northern Texas, being always employed on the range, and in 1889 came up the trail from Texas to Montana, since which time he has been a resident of the state. He first settled in Fergus county where he was superintendent of the Cruse cattle ranch for nine years, and then went into the mercantile business at Junction Mountain. He continued in that business for one year, when he was appointed Indian agent of the Crow Indians, a post which he held for three years, and upon resigning he was immediately appointed inspector of Indian agencies. This position he resigned after six months of service, and settling in Forsyth, he has made this city the center of his business operations and his established home as well.

The first business venture of Mr. Edwards in Forsyth was the organization of the Bank of Commerce, after which the Richardson Mercantile Company was organized by him. He has been president of the bank since it was organized, and under his supervision it has made steady progress among the financial institutions of the city and county. Mr. Edwards was elected to the state senate from Rosebud county on the Republican ticket and is now serving his second term of four years. In addition to his operations as a banker, Mr. Edwards owns and operates the telephone line and electric light system, and has many other interests in and about the city, all of which have helped to develop the community in no small measure.

Mr. Edwards is a member of the Independent Order of Elks, and of the Forsyth Club and the Montana Lambs Club at Helena. He is a member of the Presbyterian church, as is also his wife.

On November 15, 1892, Mr. Edwards was married at Lewistown, Montana, to Miss Julia Anderson, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Reese Anderson, residents of Fergus county, Montana. Three children have been born to them, two daughters and a son. Annie J. and Eunice are now attending college at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, while John O., the youngest of the three, is at home with his parents.

WALLACE N. PORTER. There are many capable and enterprising young and middle-aged citizens in Gallatin county, but none exceeds in capability and progressiveness Wallace N. Porter, who plays an important role in the life of the community, being postmaster and proprietor of a large general merchandise store. His course through life has been upright and prudent and he has been successful in whatever he has attempted. As one of the faithful servants of Uncle Sam in his mail business he is generally appreciated.

Mr. Porter was born in Prescott, Wisconsin, November 28, 1872, the son of Norton T. and Sarah (Miller) Porter. The father was born in Vermont, but gradually made his way westward and eventually located in Great Falls, Montana, where he engaged in the real estate business and became a prominent politician. He was one of the most loyal of Montanians and was an influential factor in the life of his community. He died in 1896 at the age of forty-nine years and is interred at Great Falls. His wife died at the early age of thirty-two, her summons to the life eternal coming in 1881, when the family still lived in Minnesota. There were six children in the family of which Mr. Porter was a member, he being next to the eldest in order of nativity.

Mr. Porter was a child of about five years when his parents went to Murdock, Minnesota and his father remained in that place until 1889, when he brought his children to this state. The immediate subject remained in Great Falls until 1902, during which time he was associated with his brother as a member of the firm of Porter Brothers, retail books and stationery. The steady indoor confinement proved detrimental to his health and the doctor urging the open air treatment, he went into northern Montana and embarked in the cattle business. He continued thus engaged for about five years and then sold out, again entering the mercantile field, for which his tastes and inclinations fitted him. He established himself this time at Gold Butte, where he remained for about two years and where he was appointed to the office of postmaster. About this time he became impressed with the opportunities presented by Three Forks, and disposing of his interests, he came here. He first went into business here on a small scale, but has encountered fair seas and good sailing and his business has grown by leaps and bounds, and today he carries on the most extensive business in the town. He was appointed postmaster by President Taft and he is also chairman of the school board. He is a Republican in political faith, but can not be said ever to have taken an active part in politics.

Mr. Porter received his early education in the public schools of Minnesota and then entered the State School of Agriculture at St. Anthony Park, Minnesota, from which he was graduated. Upon coming to Montana and abandoning the idea of devoting his life to farming, he took a business course in a commercial college at Great Falls. As a lad he lived upon the farm and is by no means unfamiliar with the great basic industry.

Both he and his admirable wife sympathize with the teaching of the Presbyterian church. The subject is a member of the Knights of Pythias and a prominent one, having gone through all the chairs and at the present time holding the office of past chancellor. In the matter of sport he is especially fond of hunting, while his wife delights in riding and driving and is a good judge of horse flesh, her stable housing a fine team of horses. Mr. Porter is one of the many who have absolute confidence in the roseate future of Montana; he has departed several times and sought other scenes, but has always been glad to return.

On June 4, 1898, Mr. Porter was happily married at Great Falls, Miss Za Peek, daughter of George and Almira Peek, formerly of Michigan, becoming his wife. They share their attractive home with a daughter, Genevieve, a student in the schools of Three Forks and a very fine musician.

Two other members of the Porter family reside within the borders of the great state of Montana. Bert W. is a citizen of Great Falls and Jennie, a graduate of the California State University, is one of the popular and efficient teachers in the Great Falls public schools.

JOHN F. DUFFY controls one of the largest and best law practices in the Flathead region, and is known for a lawyer of exceptional ability wherever he has had occasion to exercise his talent in his profession. He has been a resident of the state since 1889, and of Kalispell since 1901, and in addition to the carrying on of his law practice, he has become identified with many an important financial and industrial enterprise in connection with the life of the city and county. He is a Democrat, and an acknowledged power in the politics of this district, and he has been accorded various honors at the hands of the people in the way of official positions of more or less responsibility. On the whole, Mr. Duffy is recognized for one of the influential and solid men of the community, and as such his place in the popular esteem is well founded.

Mr. Duffy was born in the state of Ohio, Columbiana county, on July 12, 1862. He is the son of James and Eliza (McGinty) Duffy, the former a native of Ireland, born there in 1826, and the latter of Ohio, where she was born in 1840. The father came to America in 1844 and in 1909 he died in the same county in which he settled on locating in America. In the early fifties Mr. Duffy joined the throng of gold seekers and went to California, where he passed two years in the mining camps of the West. He went by way of the Nicaragua route, returning the same way, and when his zest for treasure seeking was passed, he returned to his pleasant farm home in Columbiana county, Ohio, and there lived the remainder of his life. The mother of John Duffy died on January 15, 1912, at the advanced age of seventy-two years. They were the parents of ten children, of which number Judge Duffy of this brief review is the eldest born.

As a boy in the country, John Duffy was privileged to attend the district schools, and, always of a studious and ambitious nature, the youth availed himself of every opportunity for study, however limited it might seem. Thus, when he finished with the district schools of his town at the age of eighteen, he was comparatively well posted, and even capable of teaching the district schools. Thereafter Mr. Duffy taught school during the winter months and in the summer seasons gave his time and energy to the work of the farm. He also found time to read law in the offices of McCoy and Taylor, in Carrollton, Ohio. Mr. Taylor was a man of splendid ability in his profession and afterwards became prominent in public life, taking an active place in congress between 1885-7. Mr. Duffy remained in Ohio until 1889, in March of which year he came to Montana, locating first in Missoula, where he taught school in the Bitter Root valley in 1889 and 1890. In 1891 he gave over his pedagogic work and going to Kalispell, opened a law office there, and from that time to this he has been actively occupied in the prosecution of his profession. His many admirable qualities and his very apparent ability soon won to him a generous and pleasing clientage, and his popularity has grown with the passing of the years, until he is today reckoned among the leading men of influence and power in the district. Mr. Duffy was the first justice of the peace Kalispell boasted, filling that office in 1891, and he was a school trustee between the years of 1894 and 1897. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and is, among other associations with industrial enterprises, secretary of the King-Thurman Nursery Company.

On May 6, 1884, Judge Duffy was united in marriage in Ohio with Miss Addie Shaw, the daughter of John and Margaret (Watson) Shaw, well-known farming people of their section of the state. John Shaw is a native of Ireland, while the mother of Mrs. Duffy is a native Ohioan. They became the parents of eleven children, ten of whom are living. They are: Gregory M., born in 1885, a resident of Montana, where he homesteaded on the Flathead reservation. He is not married. Raymond B., a graduate of Minnesota University in the Electrical Engineering Department. He was born in Ohio, and is married to Miss Nora Fritz of Minneapolis, Minnesota. Margaret, the wife of John D. Bowdish, born in 1888 in Montana, also has a homestead in the Flathead district. James, born in the Bitter Root valley in 1889, is a Flathead homesteader. Florence, the wife of Wm. M. Egan, was born in Missoula in 1891. She has one child, Florence, born in Kalispell, July, 1910. Frank, born in Kalispell in 1893, is a nurseryman, located in this city. George Washington, born in Kalispell in 1895, is attending a business college in Kalispell. Alfred, born in 1897, Mary, born in 1899 and Annie, born in 1903, are all attending school in Kalispell, where they were born.

JOHN F. CLAGUE. Since 1909, Mr. Clague has been associated with Mr. Beauchamp in the plumbing business in Kalispell, and in that association has gained a worthy prominence and prosperity with the passing of the years, though few in number since that time. Mr. Clague is a native of Ontario, Canada, born there in August, 1869, and is the son of James D. and Eles (Honner) Clague. The father, who was a native of the Isle-of-Man, born there in 1833, passed his life in Ontario devoted to the farming business, and died there in 1875 at the age of forty-two years. His widow survived him until 1892, her death occurring when she was in her fifty-third year. They were the parents of six children, of whom John F. was the third born.

John F. Clague attended school at Windsor, Ontario, and later attended the Washington University in St. Louis, Missouri, but did not finish his college course, leaving at the close of his first year there. In 1889 he came to Montana and settled first in Annaconda, where he was employed variously for some time. He eventually located at a number of places in the state, and it was in 1909 that he first came to Kalispell, where he worked at the printing trade for a few months until he became associated with Mr. Beauchamp in the business which has since claimed his time and attention.

Mr. Clague is a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and the Kalispell Club. He is a Republican in his political faith, and is a member of the Presbyterian church.

In 1900 Mr. Clague was united in marriage at Deer Lodge with Miss Margaret Wilson, and they have become the parents of three children: Donald, born in Mackey, Idaho, in April, 1903; Wayne, born at Anaconda, Montana, in December, 1906, and Dorothy, born in September, 1909, at Kalispell. The two boys attend school in Kalispell, the daughter not yet having reached a school age.

DON E. SCHANCK. In the list of Montana's representative public officials may be found the names of men who have worked out their own success in life, and whose sagacity, foresight and inherent ability have caused them to take advantage of the opportunities offered by the natural resources of the Treasure state, thus attaining business prestige and the respect and esteem that invariably accompanies the legitimate accumulation of a competency. Those who have shown that they are capable of handling large personal matters in an able and satisfactory manner generally impress their fellows with their fitness for handling the affairs of others, and it is rare that a man who has not had success in his private enterprises is elected to positions of trust and responsibility in the public arena. Don E. Schanck, postmaster of Libby, Montana, belongs to that class of men who hold precedence among their associates on account of business acumen and natural ability. Coming to this city more than twenty years ago, when the community was still a struggling hamlet, he laid the foundation for an active and useful career, and is today known as one of the leading ranchmen and miners of his section. He was born in Meadville, Pennsylvania, June 13, 1857, and is a son of Garrett C. and Sarah (Britton) Schanck, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Vermont. Garrett C. Schanck as a young man enlisted in the Civil war as a member of the Eighty-third Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and, although he was for four years engaged in active fighting and participated in numerous engagements, some of the bloodiest of the war, in fact, was never wounded. On completing his service he returned to Linesville, Pennsylvania, and there established himself in a hardware business, becoming one of the leading business men of that place, where he carried on active operations until his death in 1912, at the advanced age of eighty-four years. His wife, who was taken to Pennsylvania by her parents when a young woman, died in 1882, having been the mother of two children: Don E.; and Nina A., the latter marrying Hon. L. O. McLane of Linesville, Pennsylvania, who was associated with her father in the hardware business, and who was for some time one of the leading members of the Pennsylvania legislature, and is at present a presidential elector.

Don E. Schanck attended the public schools of his native locality, and on completing his education took up the profession of educator, which he followed with some degree of success for twelve years. Subsequently he became associated in the hardware business with his father, with whom he continued until going west to Wichita, Kansas, in 1881, where he taught school for one year. Returning to Pennsylvania, he acted as traveling representative for a hardware firm for two years, and in 1889 came to Montana, locating in Great Falls and engaging in the restaurant business. After one year he again went back to Pennsylvania, but in 1892 returned to Montana and settled in Libby, then only a small village. He at once began prospecting, and while thus engaged located the Blacktail Mine, which subsequently became one of the largest producers of this section. In 1898 he went on a prospecting trip to Alaska, a venture that proved eminently successful, and in 1900 he returned to Libby and engaged in mining, with which he has since been connected, also owning valuable properties in the Shoshone mountains. He has a fine ranch in Lincoln county, and has erected a Schanck has served in various public capacities, and modern residence. A staunch Republican in politics, Mr. is known as one of his party's active workers. In 1893 when Flathead county was first organized, he acted as the first justice of the peace, at Libby, and his duties included the trying of some of the most desperate characters ever brought before the bar of justice in Montana. He also served one full term as under sheriff of Lincoln county, proving himself an efficient and courageous officer, and in 1910 was elected an alderman of Libby, being re-elected to that office in 1912. In addition he has served three years as clerk of the school board, and in 1911 was appointed postmaster of Libby, in which capacity he acts at the present time, being one of the most popular officials in Lincoln county. For a number of years he has been prominently connected with Oddfellowship.

In 1880 Mr. Schanck was married to Miss Lola Kimple, of Meadville, Pennsylvania, and they have two children: Donna M., born in 1887, at Linesville, Pennsylvania, and now supervisor of music in the city schools of Libby; and Nina M., born in 1891, at Linesville, Pennsylvania, who now holds the position of stenographer and forest clerk in the forestry service. Mrs. Schanck is a consistent member of the Universalist church.

Mr. Schanck's circle of acquaintances is a wide one throughout the state, and wherever he is known he is highly esteemed, being recognized as a man who has made his way in the state of his adoption solely through those sterling qualities of character that have served to conquer the great west and to make the state of Montana a center of commercial and industrial importance.

JUDGE CHARLES W. POMEROY of Kalispell, who since 1889 has been a patriotic citizen of Montana, is a native of Kansas, the son of a notable citizen of the latter state and a descendant of prominent colonists of early American settlement. His paternal ancestors came from Devonshire, England, one of them presiding over the first town meeting held in New England, at Dorchester, Massachusetts, where this family settled in 1630. Eltwed Pomeroy was the founder of the American branch of Pomeroy, many of whom served both in the colonial wars and in the Revolution. The judge's maternal ancestors included the Youngs of an early period of Virginia settlement, who later removed to Kentucky and then to Indiana; and the Blake line of North Carolina location and afterward of Kentucky and Indiana. Judge Pomeroy's parents were John F. Pomeroy and Martha J. Blake. The father was a native of Massachusetts, but removed in 1859 to Jackson county, Kansas, of which locality he is still a resident. During his citizenship there he has been very active in public affairs and has been honored conspicuously with public offices. In 1870 he was made county commissioner; in 1892 he was elected a member of the state legislature of Kansas, in which body he served for one term; in 1894 he was chosen mayor of Holton.

He is a Republican in politics and a Congregationalist in church affiliation, although he supports all protestant churches. Martha Blake, the wife of ex-Mayor Pomeroy and the mother of Judge Pomeroy, was born in Indiana. Her marriage to John Pomeroy took place in 1861 and her death occurred in 1872, when the son was six years of age. The father's second marriage was to Miss Isabelle Clark. Charles Pomeroy is the only living member of the first group of four children in the paternal household. Three sons and three daughters, born of the second marriage of John Pomeroy, are still living. One of these is H. G. Pomeroy, of Eureka, an attorney-at-law. The Jackson county home which was the residence of the Pomeroy family for many years was the birthplace of the subject of this sketch, whose natal day was June 2, 1866.

The country schools of Jackson county, Kansas, and Campbell College, of Holton, Kansas, were the institutions from which Charles Pomeroy gained his educational advantages, prior to his professional study. After having been graduated in 1887 from Campbell College, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, Mr. Pomeroy entered the law school of the state university at Lawrence, Kansas, and in 1889, was admitted to the bar of Kansas.

Mr. Pomeroy arrived at Great Falls—in what at that time was the territory of Montana—on July 12, 1889. In that place he began the practice of the legal profession, continuing until March of 1895, at which time he received the appointment of Gov. J. E. Richards as judge of the eleventh judicial district, comprising Flathead and Teton counties. The exercise of this office necessitated the judge's removal to Kalispell. During his incumbency he served the bench faithfully, but retired after two years to resume his private practice. From that time until September of 1905 he was a partner of C. H. Foot, the legal firm being known as Foot & Pomeroy. At the end of that period the partnership was dissolved and Judge Pomeroy has since conducted independently his extensive law business.

Judge Pomeroy is a member of the county, state and American bar associations, being the only man of his name in the last-named organization. He is still active in public affairs, being an important member of the Kalispell Civic Club, of which he served as president for one year. He is a member of the social organization known as the Kalispell Club and of many fraternal organizations. He is particularly prominent in the order of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, ranking in both chapter and commandery of the same and having been grand patron of the Eastern Star of Montana in 1893 and 1894, besides having been honored as grand master of the Masonic Grand Lodge in 1898 and 1899; was the youngest man who had ever filled the last-named office. On July 4, 1899, he was honored by being chosen to lay the corner-stone of the capitol for the grand lodge. The judge is also a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and of the Modern Woodmen of America.

Judge Pomeroy has preferred to have few interests outside his law practice, to which he gives his most complete attention. He is, however, actively connected with the Masonic Temple, of which he is secretary. Educational matters receive much thought and consideration from him and during his residence in Great Falls, he was president of the board of education of that place. He has always been an earnest Republican, being active in county and state conventions of the same. He is interested in all movements for the betterment of the community.

Mrs. Pomeroy was formerly Miss Estella Granger of Phillipsburg, Kansas. She is a daughter of Henry S. Granger, a native of Iowa. Her marriage to Mr. Pomeroy took place June 18, 1889. They are the parents of three children: Mabel, born April 1, 1890, at Great Falls and died July 8, 1900, at Kalispell; Velma M., born July 31, 1891, at Great Falls; and Alice, born February 28, 1895, at Great Falls. Like her husband, Mrs. Pomeroy has many public activities. She has served as president of the Century Club, the oldest woman's club of Kalispell and one organized when the town was first established. She has also been honored with the fraternal office of grand matron of the Eastern Star of the state. She is active in other organizations whose purpose is the public good. The Granger family, like the Pomeroy family, is of Revolutionary stock. Mr. H. S. Granger, father of Mrs. Pomeroy, established the first paper, The Clayton County Iowa Herald, at Grandsville, the first paper between Dubuque and St. Paul. He also was a member of the state senate in Kansas in 1885-1889.

WILLIAM A. HULBUSH, M. D. An energetic, skillful and eminently capable young physician and surgeon of Teton county, William A. Hulbush is making rapid strides in his professional career, since taking up his residence at Cut Bank having gained the confidence of the people by the exactness and thoroughness of his medical work, and built up an extensive and remunerative practice. A son of William T. Hulbush, he was born July 17, 1884, in Cincinnati, Ohio.

A native of Indiana, William T. Hulbush remained a resident of the central states until 1889, when he was induced to come to Montana. Locating in the Chauteau country, he took up a large tract of land and engaged in general ranching, including stock-raising, on an extensive scale, becoming one of the more successful and prominent ranchers of his community. He is still in the prime of life, and having accumulated a competency, is now living retired from active pursuits at his pleasant home in Chinook. He married, in Indiana, Louise Acker, who was born in that state forty-eight years ago, and of their union five children have been born, as follows: William A., with whom this brief sketch is chiefly concerned; Nora, Ida, Walter, and Charles, who was the second child.

Laying a good foundation for his future education in the public schools of Montana, where his parents settled when he was but five years old, William A. Hulbush began preparing himself for a professional career, and in 1908 was graduated from the medical department of the University of Indiana with the degree of M. D. Returning then to Montana, Dr. Hulbush spent a brief time at Hobson, where he gained experience of much value to him. In 1910 he located at Cut Bank, where he has already acquired a good practice, his wisdom and skill in dealing with difficult cases having placed him among the physicians of repute in this section of the state, and won him a generous patronage. On the 5th of November, 1912, he was elected the coroner of the county. He is also surgeon of the Great Northern Railroad at Cut Bank.

Clear headed and broad minded, with decided views on public questions, Dr. Hulbush is closely allied with the Progressive Republicans, and is now serving as an alderman, representing the Third ward in the city council. Although his professional cares prevent his spending much time in mere recreation, the doctor is fond of outdoor sports, more especially of hunting and fishing. His religious views coincide with the Methodist Episcopal creed.

Dr. Hulbush married, in Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, May 17, 1910, Bertha Krug, a daughter of Jacob and Eliza (Stube) Krug, early settlers of that city, and into their household one son has been born, William Russell Hulbush, whose birth occurred July 3, 1911.

CHARLES A. HAMANN. As the mayor of Eureka and president of the Farmers & Merchants' State Bank of this city, Charles A. Hamann has won to himself a degree of popularity which perhaps exceeds that of any other citizen of the community. Twenty-three years of residence in the state has thoroughly familiarized him with conditions prevailing, and he has had a worthy share in the growth and development of the state since his earliest connection with it. Mr. Hamann was born in Holstein, Germany, on August 4, 1862, and is the son of Andrew and Kathrine (Kolatzky) Hamann, both of whom were native Germans, living their lives in the land which gave them birth. The father was born there in 1819, and died in the year 1881, when he was in his sixty-second year. He was a land owner and a man of considerable prominence in his section of the country, well known and highly respected. The mother was born in 1821 and died in 1891, aged seventy.

Charles A. Hamann attended school in Germany up to the age of seventeen years, and in the year 1879 he came to America alone, locating first in the state of Illinois. He went to work on a farm and was engaged in various capacities during the years that elapsed between then and 1889, when he went to Montana. He first settled in Missoula, after which he located in Flathead county and there went into the cattle business. He later engaged in farming, and his operations in that business were for years carried on where the city of Kalispell stands today. Mr. Hamann continued with that business until 1908, prospering with the passing years, and in that year he came to Eureka and built the splendid building in which the Farmers & Merchants' State Bank is now located. In the same year the bank was organized, with Mr. Hamann as president, Mr. Dupuis as vice-president, Elzear Demers as second vice-president and L. J. B. Chapman as cashier. It has since continued to do business in a manner highly pleasing to its promoters, and has won the confidence and patronage of all within its territory.

Mr. Hamann has been twice married. His first wife was Miss Kate Reid, whom he married in Illinois in 1885. She died in Flathead, Montana, four years later. In 1891 he married Miss Lillie P. Elliott at Missoula, Montana. No children have been born to them.

In 1910 Mr. Hamann was honored by the citizens of Eureka by his election to the office of mayor, and he succeeded himself to the office in 1912. He was elected on the citizens' ticket, and in the years of his regime thus far has proven himself an able administrator of the affairs of the city, and altogether capable of holding whatever offices his fellow townspeople give him charge. Mr. Hamann is fraternally identified with the blue lodge, chapter and commandery in the Masons, the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and the Modern Woodmen of America, all of Kalispell. He is one of the prominent and well-known men of his city and county, and is a leader in business and political circles throughout the county.

JAMES STONECHEST. July 1, 1909, James Stonechest came to Libby, Montana, to assume the responsibilities of the office of county assessor, to which he had just been appointed and to which he was elected in the fall of 1910. He is financially interested in a number of important business enterprises in Lincoln county and is a member of the board of directors in the First National Bank of Libby. He is loyal and public-spirited in his civic attitude and is always on the alert to forward those enterprises and measures which are calculated to benefit humanity and advance prosperity.

In Wayne county, New York, June 15, 1869, occurred the birth of James Stonechest, who is a son of John and Mary Jane (DeBurck) Stonechest, both of whom were born in Holland, whence they came to America in the year 1848, settling in Wayne county, New York, where was solemnized their marriage in the year 1855. The Stonechest family removed to Michigan in 1888 and settled on a farm in the vicinity of Kalamazoo, where the father was summoned to the life eternal in 1906. Mrs. Stonechest is still living, in 1912, and she maintains her home in the city of Kalamazoo, where she is beloved by all who have come within the sphere of her gentle influence.

The fourth in order of birth in a family of eight children, James Stonechest was educated in the public schools of Wayne county, New York, and subsequently he attended the Normal Business College in Fremont, Nebraska. He left the parental home at the age of seventeen years and for a short time resided in Woodstock, Minnesota, where he was employed for one year on a farm, receiving a salary of sixteen dollars per month for his services. In 1887 he went to Fremont and for the ensuing two years was engaged in a sash and blind factory and attending school. In 1889 he emigrated west to Montana and in the following year settled permanently on the Kootenai river near Troy, where he was for a time interested in prospecting and mining and where he later turned his attention to the logging and contracting business, supplying logs to mills. He was engaged in the timber business for a period of ten years and at the expiration of that time, July 1, 1909, he came to Libby to take up his work as county assessor, to which position he had just been appointed. In the fall of 1910 he was regularly elected to this office and he is still filling that incumbency at the present time, in 1912. He is a heavy stockholder in the First National Bank of Libby and is the owner of valuable real estate in this city.

At Troy, Montana, December 20, 1896, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Stonechest to Miss Nora May Johnson, a daughter of William and Mary Johnson and a native of the state of Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Stonechest are the parents of three children, whose names are here entered in respective order of birth,—Mildred Virginia, John and Myrtle May, all of whom are attending school in Libby. In religious matters the Stonechest family are devout members of the Presbyterian church, to whose various charities and good works they are most liberal contributors.

Mr. Stonechest owns allegiance to the Democratic party in a political way and he is an active worker in behalf of the progress of the party. Fraternally, he is a valued member of the time-honored Masonic order and of the Modern Woodmen of America. He left home as a youth with a capital of but twenty-five dollars. His persistency and determination have won him a high place as a business and public man and he is popular with all classes of people, the circle of his intimate friends being coincident with that of his acquaintance.

WILLIAM LA VERNE PERRY. As general manager for the Kalispell Bee since 1910, William La Verne Perry has been identified with the business interests of this city for the past two years, and has established a reputation for efficiency in his line of work that has given him a secure footing in the community. Mr. Perry was born in Auburn, New York, in 1870, and is the son of Edgar and Mary (Boley) Perry, the father being a native born New Yorker and the mother a native of old England. Edgar Perry came west early in the sixties and worked at his trade as a sheet metal worker for some time, and also was engaged in prospecting and mining. Later he was identified with the retail hardware business, from which he retired in 1902 and has led a quiet and uneventful life since then. The mother died in 1877 in Nebraska when she was thirty years old. Two children were left motherless at her death,—Clifford and William.

William La Verne Perry was educated in the public and high schools of his native town, and after his graduation from the high school in 1886 he entered Cayuga Military Academy at Aurora, New York. Upon finishing his studies in the academy he removed to the west, locating in Great Falls, Montana, arriving there in 1889. He accepted a position as bookkeeper which he retained for a brief period and then took employment as a range rider. After a short time he took up a homestead from the government and engaged in ranching. He eventually proved up on his homestead and still owns that property. He followed farming for about six years, during which time he devoted himself more or less to learning the printer's trade, doing considerable newspaper work as well as operating his farm. On January 15, 1910, Mr. Perry removed to Kalispell, where he became associated with the Kalispell Bee as general manager, and under his direction and management the paper has reached a state of completeness which makes it one of the best news sheets in the county. It is a semi-weekly paper, Democratic in its tendencies, with a circulation of 2,750—larger than any other paper in the county. Previous to his connection with the Kalispell Bee, Mr. Perry was identified with newspapers in Havre, Glasgow, Libby, Hamilton and Missoula.

Mr. Perry is a member of the Kalispell Club and the Typographical Union. On December 5, 1906, he married Miss Effie Schroeder of Missoula, Montana.

JOHN GRIFFITH BAIR. A member of the Montana bar throughout the period of statehood and collector of customs for the districts of Montana and Idaho, Mr. Bair is an able representative of his profession, has always enjoyed a successful practice and as a citizen has performed a useful and honorable part in his community and state.

John Griffith Bair was born December 4, 1858, at Gerrardstown in Berkeley county, in what was then Virginia, and is now West Virginia. He belongs to a family which has been in America since the early times of colonial settlement and while so far as known none of its members attained to conspicuous prominence in public life, it is also possible to assert that none were without the qualifications of honest character and excellent industry, so that they led careers quiet but worthy, and were people of usefulness in their community and highly respected by all who knew them.

The founder of the family in America was John Bair, who came from Germany about 1760, living in the colony of Pennsylvania. When the Revolutionary war came on he engaged on the side of the colonists in their struggle for independence. The parents of Mr. Bair were William and Eleanor Virginia (Griffith) Bair. The father was born at New Bloomfield, in Perry county, Pennsylvania, whence he moved into Berkeley county, Virginia, about 1855. His occupation was that of blacksmith. He was a member of the Lutheran church and his death occurred at Bedford, in Lawrence county, Indiana, in 1881. The mother, who was born in Berkeley county, Virginia, a descendant of the old family Griffiths on her father's side and that of Seiberts on her mother's side, is now living in Bedford, Indiana.

Mr. Bair, though he has always enjoyed success and has competed on even terms with his contemporaries, began life without special advantages in education, and has had to earn most of his equipment. His education was academic in character and for a number of years he was engaged in teaching school in Indiana. He fitted himself for the law while teaching and in 1889 came out to Montana and settled in the town of Choteau in what is now Teton county, where he has been engaged in the general practice of law since 1889, still having his law office in the town of Choteau. A Republican in politics since he attained his majority, and being now what is called a Taft Republican, Mr. Bair was on June 15, 1909, appointed collector of customs for the district of Montana and Idaho, this appointment coming from the president. He has been one of the most popular Federal officials in Montana, and for many years has enjoyed a large and influential acquaintance with the public and prominent men of the state. Mr. Bair was a delegate from the state of Montana to the national convention of the Republican party held in Chicago in 1908, and voted with the rest of the Montana delegation for the nomination of William H. Taft.

Mr. Bair was when a young man a member of the Methodist church and his preference is still for that denomination. In 1882 he became a member of Bedford Lodge No. 14, A. F. & A. M., at Bedford in Lawrence county, Indiana. On coming to Montana he became a charter member of Choteau Lodge No. 44, A. F. & A. M., at Choteau, Montana, and he has also in this state taken the degree of the Royal Arch, being affiliated with Chapter No. 9, R. A. M., at Great Falls. He has also attained the Knights Templar degree, being now affiliated with Black Eagle Commandery at Great Falls. He is a member of Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, and in September, 1912, was elected grand master of the Masons of Montana, a position which he still holds.

On the first day of September, 1886, at Heltonville, Indiana, Mr. Bair married Miss Mary Ramsey. Her early ancestors in this country were the Ramseys and Elstons. They came from Scotland to America, some time in the eighteenth century, and since early in the nineteenth century both the Ramseys and the Elstons have lived in central Indiana. Mrs. Bair's education was attained in the common schools of Lawrence county, Indiana. Her father was Joseph Ramsey, who died in 1879, and the maiden name of her mother was Euretta Elston, who is now living with her son, T. W. Ramsey, in the state of Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Bair have no children of their own, but have in their home their nephew and adopted child, the son of Mrs. Bair's brother, Arthur Bailey Ramsey, who was born in Walla Walla, Washington, in April, 1905.

GILBERT A. CHEVIGNY, DENTIST. Numbered among the more skillful and successful dentists of Butte is Dr. Gilbert A. Chevigny, who during his residence in this city has made for himself an enviable reputation both in the professional and social circles of his adopted home. Coming on both sides of the house of French lineage, he was born September 14, 1866, in Holbrook, Norfolk county, Massachusetts.

His father, Louis Charles Chevigny, was born in Canada, where his grandparents settled on immigrating to America from France. A man of excellent business ability and judgment, he migrated to Massachusetts, and for many years was engaged in the manufacture of shoes at Holbrook, although he is now living in Brockton, Massachusetts, retired from active pursuits. Fraternally he is a member of Norfolk Union Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons, of Randolph, Massachusetts; and Satucket Chapter Royal Arch Masons of Brockton. He married, February 8, 1859, Lydia Perrault, a charming young miss of twelve years, being his junior by nine years. Miss Perrault descended on her mother's side from one of the earliest settlers in New England, Coporal Gill who was of Scotch parents, and a soldier of the English army. In the early part of the eighteenth century the Abenakis, a tribe of Indians, under the leadership of the French, attacked the inhabitants of eastern Massachusetts, near a place called Gilton or Giltown, and after massacring most of the inhabitants, captured many of the children and took them to their homes in Canada, some three hundred miles away, which distance was traveled on foot. Among these captives was one of the Gill children, a boy of twelve years of age, and a girl, Miss Jane, about eight years old. They were forced to make their home with the Indians and after they grew up to mature age, were persuaded by them to marry, which they did; and from their off-spring the Canadian Gill family tree continued to grow, and from this family of Gills, Miss Perrault is one of the descendants. At the time of her marriage the parents of Lydia Perrault were both ill with an incurable disease, and during the following two years they both died, leaving three children, as follows: Stillman Perrault, now deceased, whose home was in Chicago, Illinois; and Charles Perrault, of Randolph, Massachusetts; and Caroline, wife of John Carr, who is now master carpenter of the Plymouth Cordage Company, in Plymouth, Massachusetts. Although a mere child herself at that time, Mrs. Chevigny assumed charge of her young sister, and brought her up with her own children, of which she had, when but twenty-five years of age, eight. At the age of thirty-five years she was a grandmother, and when, in February, 1909, she and her husband celebrated the golden anniversary of their wedding, she had for five years been a great grandmother. Elaborate plans had been made for the celebration of that event, but on account of illness of Mrs. Chevigny had to be given up.

Mrs. Chevigny was a life-long resident of Massachusetts, her birth having occurred in that state in 1847, and her death in April, 1911, at her home No. 35 Rutland street, Brockton, Massachusetts. She was a bright, energetic woman, much respected throughout the city in which she had spent so many years of her life, and had a host of warm friends. She was a regular member of the Church of New Jerusalem, and an active member of the New England Order of Protection. Of the eight children born of her union with Louis Charles de la Chevrotiers, whose title had descended to him through many generations of French ancestors, five are now living, namely; Gilbert Arthur, of Butte, Montana, the special subject of this sketch, Charles F., and H. H., a well-known dentist of Montello, Massachusetts; Elizabeth May, a teacher in the Brockton schools; and Mrs. Charles Merrill of Easton, Massachusetts. The oldest son, Louis Philip Chevigny, died several years ago, leaving one daughter, Mrs. Isabel Packard, whose son, Calvin Porter Packard, was Mrs. Lydia Chevigny's first great grandchild. Charles F. Chevigny is married and he has one child, Rita Chevigny. Henry Herbert Chevigny is also married, but has no children.

Gilbert Arthur Chevigny was educated primarily in the public schools of the old Bay state, in Holbrook and Brockton. Beginning life for himself at the age of eighteen years, he was for eight years employed in the shoe factory of Emerson & Weeks. Desirous of changing his occupation, Mr. Chevigny, on May 4, 1889, came to Butte, Montana, to enter the employ of his uncle, J. S. Chevigny, with whom he remained for three years, being engaged in architectural work. Going then to Pocatello, Idaho, he had charge of the Pocatello Lumber Yards for a year. On his return to Butte, Mr. Chevigny became associated with the Miners Lumber Company as a collector, but was not content remaining in the position. Entering then the office of Dr. W. H. Wix, he took up the study of dentistry, and when he had completed his apprenticeship, established himself on his own account beginning his professional career in 1896, on a modest scale. Dr. Chevigny met with success from the start and since developed his professional ability to such an extent that he is now one of the foremost dentists of Butte having a large practice.

The Doctor is a member of the State Dental Society and a member and ex-president of the Butte City Dental Society, and also is a member of the Montana State Board of Dental Examiners having been appointed by Gov. Edw. L. Norris on March 2, 1908, and has served as treasurer and president and is now secretary. He also belongs to the Silver Bow Club, a social organization in which he takes great interest. Fraternally Dr. Chevigny is a member of Silver Bow Lodge No. 48, Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons, in which he has taken the York Rite degrees and is past master of his lodge which he served as master in 1906 and in 1910; he is likewise a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows; and of the Modern Woodmen of America.

On January 31, 1898, Dr. Chevigny was united in marriage with Cora Edna Wells, who was born in New York state, and came to Butte with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Richard M. Wells. The Doctor and Mrs. Chevigny have two children, Charles Wells Chevigny, born March 6, 1903, in Butte, and Gilbert Arthur Chevigny, born April 30, 1912.

JOHN H. HANLON, founder and proprietor of not only the oldest but, as well, the leading business of its kind in Montana, that of gravel roofing and dealing in roofing material, is one of the well known business men and citizens of Butte, where he has been identified with the business interests of that city for nearly a quarter of a century.

Mr. Hanlon was born in New York City, on April the first, 1868, and was deprived of the care of his mother when he was but three years of age, and the same year in which she died the father disappeared, and the child was placed in a house of refuge. At the age of five he assumed the burden of self-support, selling papers on the streets of New York and living in the Newsboy's Home. At the age of seven he was sent with nineteen other youngsters to Dixon, Illinois. Homes were to be found for the children on the fertile farms of the beautiful Rock River valley. Young Hanlon was transferred to the neighboring town of Morrison, in Whiteside county, where he was bound out to a farmer. The boy was to work for this man until he was twenty-one, and for that fourteen years' service he was to receive one hundred dollars, two suits of clothes and a Bible. He never came into possession of this equipment, for the work was so hard that he was unable to do what was expected of him, and at the age of fourteen he went to work on another farm, where he received nine dollars per month. He spent a month on this place, and then went west into Dickinson county, Kansas, and for another year was employed on a farm there, then returned to Illinois for the same length of time. His next move was to David City, Nebraska, where he spent two years at farm work. At the age of nineteen Mr. Hanlon went to Denver, where he learned the roofing business, to which he has ever since given his attention. He thoroughly mastered the business while residing in Denver, and soon was able to command the wages of an expert. Although he was bent upon learning this trade, he did not hesitate to work at other things when the building industry was having a dull season. On one occasion, some trouble about supplies threw the whole force in which Mr. Hanlon was working out of employment during the summer time, when building is most active. Loafing is against his principles, and so he promptly secured a job picking strawberries, and thus prevented the troublesome adversary who provides mischief for the idle from taking him into service. Mr. Hanlon early acquired the habit of work, and he has never lost it nor even mislaid it temporarily.

In 1890 Mr. Hanlon came to Butte and began business for himself. The circumstances were far from propitious, as he had but a limited capital, no acquaintance and much competition. He, however, knew that there is always place for good and honest work, and that it must find its market in time. He had the courage that is born of confidence, and of the knowledge that his work would prove itself, and time, that great sifter of the fit and unfit, has established him among the over-comers. The beginning was discouraging in the extreme, for it was almost impossible to get a foothold in the business, amid so much competition, but persistence is one of Mr. Hanlon's notable characteristics, and eventually he secured a patronage among the people he desired and since he was fairly started everything has gone smoothly. He has now a large and prosperous establishment, and is one of the leading exponents of the trade he follows.

The union of Mr. Hanlon and Alice B. Single took place in Idaho, in 1897. Their only child, John Henry, Junior, was born in January, 1899, and is attending Butte Business College. Mr. Hanlon's only other relatives were two brothers, James and Peter, but the latter died in Denver in 1882.

In matters of national policy Mr. Hanlon believes in the principles advocated by the Democratic party, and to this he gives his support. In local politics he is not a partisan, but votes for the best candidate put up, irrespective of political affiliation. He has been often urged to run for various offices, but has always refused, as his business takes all his time, and he is unwilling to neglect it. He is a member of the lodges of the Eagles and the Modern Woodmen of America, was one of the founders of the Pastime Athletic Club, in which he was an active worker until the organization disbanded, and is a charter member of the Butte Curling Club. Whatever Mr. Hanlon undertakes he works at with unflagging energy, and the success which has come to him has been no result of chance, but the outcome of painstaking work and workmanship, of unremitting industry, and of indomitable fortitude and patience.

ROBERT T. FURNISH. Among the truly self made men of Custer county, Montana, whose boyhood was shadowed by the death of his father and the consequent placing of heavy responsibilities on his young shoulders, is Robert T. Furnish, one of the representative business men of Miles City, and chairman of the board of county commissioners of Custer county. It seems a far cry from the little bound boy, who was expected to do a man's work with his childish strength, to the man of affairs, fortune and importance of the present day, but this change was entirely brought about through his own unassisted efforts.

Robert T. Furnish was born at Warsaw, Gallatin county, Kentucky, July 4, 1869, and is a son of Crittenden and Eliza (Baxter) Furnish. The father was also a native of Gallatin county, born in 1832, and died in 1877. The mother belonged to one of the old county families, the name still being well known in Gallatin county, and she survived until 1875. Four of the family of six children are living, namely: Fannie, who is the widow of A. Foster; and Lee, Robert T. and William T. Crittenden Furnish was a man of brilliant parts. He had few early educational advantages, nevertheless he succeeded in preparing himself for the law, on several occasions was elected county attorney of Gallatin county and made so profound an impression at the bar that his services were sometimes called for in different parts of the state. His life closed early, however, his death occurring when he was but forty-five years old and before he had been able to provide adequately for his young family.

Thus it came about that when Robert T. Furnish was only nine years of age he found himself an orphan and dependent upon his own efforts for support. A neighboring farmer secured papers that indentured the lad to him for a term of years, but his brutality caused the boy to take advantage of the first opportunity to escape. He knew no way, however, by which he could make a living except by farm work, and engaged for a summer with another farmer and again found out that there are men who willingly take advantage of the helpless and when the long summer was over refused the wage he had promised to his young helper.

Mr. Furnish then determined to learn a trade or business of his own, one in which his skill could make him independent, and in the offices of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, at Glencoe, Kentucky, he learned the art of telegraphing, so diligently applying himself that he became an expert at the key and easily secured remunerative positions. From being telegraph operator with the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company, he went to Kansas and became an operator in the offices of the Missouri Pacific, and from there came to Montana, becoming agent and operator at Springdale for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, later coming to their offices at Miles City and remaining in the employ of that corporation for seventeen consecutive years. After serving for three years as railroad agent at Miles City, Mr. Furnish decided to turn his attention to another line of business and, in partnership with Mr. Knutson, established the present grocery firm of Furnish & Knutson, which is a leader in the grocery line in this place.

On November 19, 1893, Mr. Furnish was united in marriage with Miss Carrie H. Thompson, who was born in West Virginia and is a daughter of George P. and Mary M. (Massie) Thompson. Both parents of Mrs. Furnish are deceased. The father was a physician at St. Albans, West Virginia, for many years. Of his family of seven children there are but three survivors: Mary L., Mrs. Furnish and George P. Mr. and Mrs. Furnish have four children: Margaret, Hazel, Robert and Gordon.

Mr. Furnish has always been identified with the Democratic party, as was his father. He has taken an active part in public affairs in Custer county, both political and otherwise, and in 1908 was elected a county commissioner of Custer county, for a term of six years, being made chairman of the board, and in 1911 was elected vice president of the Custer County Fair Association. He belongs to several fraternal organizations, including the Knights of Pythias.

MAX JACOBS was born in the German Empire on the fourth day of November, 1865. His father, Hyman Jacobs, became a merchant prince among the pioneers both in California and Montana. A native of the liberty-loving little state of Poland, he first came to America in his twentieth year. Until his eighteenth birthday, he was a school boy in his native state, at which time, having, in the eyes of his countrymen, obtained his majority, he left Poland for London. One year in England sufficed to prove to him that the small island did not offer the opportunities for which he sought. He set out for the new world alone. Landing in New York, he engaged in a small mercantile business there. Hardly was his trade established when there came to his ears rumors of the magic California where yellow gold lay shining in her white sands, only waiting for the hand of man to gather it up. Selling his newly formed business, Mr. Jacobs started overland for the Golden Gate city, arriving in California in the autumn of 1850. The only free gold that attracted the eye of the newcomer was the gold of the California sunshine. Being a man of sound judgment and unusual business acumen, he wasted only a few months in a vain attempt to gain sudden wealth. Many people were flocking into California, all in quest of the shining ore; few there were to supply the immediate and practical needs of the many. Mr. Jacobs was quick to grasp this fact and opened a small store or trading post. So popular did the little post become that he soon joined forces with his brother-in-law and established a series of general mercantile houses. The first were in St. Louis, San Francisco and Marysville. Mr. Hyman Jacobs acted as general purchasing agent for all the stores, selecting all of the stock. So willing were the miners about him to exchange their nuggets for his merchandise that in 1858 he was able to sell out his share in the business at a figure sufficiently large to permit him to return to his native land, a wealthy man. Poland seemed not to appeal strongly to him as a permanent home, and he settled in Thorn, Germany, where he met and married Rosalie Engler. Eight children were born of the union, four sons and four daughters; Louis, Julius, Max and Adolph; Ernestine, Rosalie, Hattie and Jennie. All lived to reach maturity, except Julius, Rosalie and Hattie.

Although a well-to-do and respected citizen of Germany, Mr. Jacobs longed for the life and bustle of the new world. The good frau seemed not averse to accompany him; thus, in 1871, he brought his young family to Nevada, where they made a home for themselves at Pioche. Here the father once more established a mercantile business. Under his skilful hands it grew and prospered for twenty-one years, when he sold out to enter the same line of trade in East Helena, Montana. Here he passed away in 1901, and with his going Montana lost one of the most successful and trusted of her pioneer merchants. His faithful German wife, unable to long endure the loneliness his passing had brought to her, was laid at his side in 1902.

Mr. Jacobs had been a witness to the organization of the first vigilante company in Nevada, the company papers having been formed in his place of business, in the year 1870.

One of the sons and heirs of the senior Mr. Jacobs, and the successor to his large business, is Mr. Max Jacobs, a young man now, and himself prominent in the commercial circles of East Helena. Although born during his parents' residence in the fatherland, he received his early education in the schools of Pioche, Nevada. For two terms he taught in the schools of Hiko, Nevada, and later at Bullionville of the same state, before engaging in the mining and milling business at Pioche and Bristol. This last venture, though promising so well in the beginning, proved most disastrous, owing to the slump in silver at about that time, the new Pennsylvania district being known for its silver ore.

Mr. Max Jacobs then returned to East Helena, where, with his brother Adolph, he formed a mercantile company which was quite successful until 1890, when, owing to the closing of the smelters and the mines, the young men were obliged to temporarily shut down. They then moved to Helena, where they engaged in mercantile business, returning to East Helena on the resumption of work in the smelters and mines and this time joining with their father in conducting the business. Since the death of the elder Mr. Jacobs, the son has carried on the large mercantile interests unaided and with marked success, the profits accruing therefrom being even larger than of old.

Mr. Max Jacobs is a well-known Republican of his district, having much influence in local politics. At present, he has the honor of being postmaster of East Helena. He is a member of the Lambs' Club, the Knights of Pythias lodge and the Woodmen of the World. He was married on the twelfth of January, 1905, to Miss Jean Houston of Londonberry, Ireland. Miss Houston having been for several years a resident of Montana. This union of the blood of a Pole and a German with that of a daughter of Scotland is indeed an unusual combination. If it unite the German thrift with the Scotch acumen and the loyalty of the Pole the two young daughters will have an heritage of which they may well be proud. The oldest of the two girls, Maxine, was born in 1907 and is now attending the East Helena schools. The younger sister, Margaret, was born on the seventh of March, 1909.

Mr. and Mrs. Jacobs are possessed of more than comfortable means, yet if it had not been for a mistaken estimate placed upon a piece of property which Mr. Jacobs received from his father they would now be many-times millionaires. Young Mr. Jacobs was at one time sole owner of the mining property now known as the Golden Prince, in Ely District, Lincoln county, Nevada, which since its change of owners has developed into one of the greatest gold and silver producers of the district. Such is the uncertainty of life in the ore fields.

JUDGE J. MILLER SMITH, a distinguished and able jurist of the first judicial district of Montana is of German ancestry on his father's side. When Emperor Alexander, sometimes called the ablest of the czars, brought on, through his ambition, the Crimean war and the vessels of the allies, forming the mightiest fleet that had yet been launched upon the sea, appeared off the coast of Crimea, many of the Russian subjects fled in terror, especially those living in subjugated Poland, not being in sympathy with the Russian government. One little party of these subjects, stealthily crossed to the German border in the dead of night and the following day, without other property than that which they had been able to carry with them, took ship for America. Among these emigrants was Lewis M. Smith, the father of J. Miller Smith, who was then living in Russian Poland, the son of whom is now district judge of Montana.

The grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Michael Schmidt, emigrated to Russia from Germany during Napoleon's great Russian campaign. Mr. Schmidt, on reaching maturity had become blacksmith to the czar. Their son, Lewis M. Smith, was born in Russia on the first day of September, 1833. On reaching America, after fleeing from Russia, he settled in New Jersey and almost at once engaged in the manufacture of leather. His first factory was established shortly after the Civil war, and the business grew in volume from year to year until Mr. Smith became known as one of the largest wholesale leather manufacturers of the country. He was among the pioneers in the patent leather industry. During the Civil war he enlisted as one of the New Jersey volunteers to go to the front, that he might repay, if necessary, with his life, the land that had brought to him peace and prosperity. The fates, however, decreed that his period of usefulness was not yet over and after serving throughout the entire period with that devotion known only to the grateful foreigner, he was mustered out and returned to continue his life work in Newark. His wife, Mary Miller Smith, born in Oxford, Pennsylvania, on the seventeenth day of April, 1836, passed away at their Newark home in 1876. Her father, James Miller, was of Irish birth, having settled in Pennsylvania in the early part of the nineteenth century.

Mr. Smith survived his wife until the spring of 1908. He left a very large estate to be divided among his heirs. The leather business, still carried on by the two sons who remained in the east, goes under the firm name of L. M. Smith & Sons.

The son who has made himself so much a part of Montana history, J. Miller Smith, was born at New Brunswick, New Jersey, on February 10, 1862, being only an infant in arms when his distinguished father volunteered his services in the cause of his new-found home. The lad, after attending the public schools at Newark, completed a course at the New Jersey Commercial College, in Newark. Later he attended Park College in Missouri, and after graduation went to the national metropolis to begin his study of the law at the University of New York City. In 1890 he entered the law office of Massena Bullard at Helena, Montana. Mr. Bullard was conceded to be one of the leading members of the Helena bar. Judge Smith was admitted to the Montana bar in 1892 and for seven years practiced with his preceptor.

In 1899 Mr. Smith opened an office in his own name and had a lucrative practice from the beginning. He devoted himself to an increasing general practice until 1904, when he was appointed assistant United States attorney. During the next four years he acted as prosecutor for the government, but resigned to become a candidate for the district judgeship. Judge Smith was elected by the Republicans at a general election by a good majority. He is a careful and conscientious jurist, whose rulings are upheld by the highest tribunals of the state. His first term is nearly finished, but there is little possibility of his being permitted to retire at its expiration, as he has been renominated for a second term.

Mr. Smith was married the year that he came to Helena, the woman of his choice being Viola E. Wynne of Lyndon, Kansas, a graduate of Park College, Missouri. Her father, Robert Wynne, of Lyndon, Kansas, having passed away some years ago from injuries received in the Civil war. The mother still resides in Kansas.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith were married on the seventeenth day of October, 1890. They are the parents of six children, four boys and two girls. Lewis Kelsey Smith, born on the eighteenth of December, 1892, is now a student in the Wesleyan University. His next brother, Paul Wynne, two years younger, has not as yet completed his high school course. David Robert Smith, born September 5, 1896, is attending the Helena high school, and J. Miller Smith, Jr., now thirteen years of age, is attending the grade schools of Helena, as is the little sister, Verna Ruth, who was born on the ninth day of March, 1903. Viola Emiline is the baby of the family, being but five years of age.

The large family of little ones have prevented Mrs. Smith from being as active as she otherwise might have been in the public life of Helena. She and the judge are, notwithstanding, among the working members of the Presbyterian church.

The judge cares little for so-called social life, preferring to spend his evenings in the family circle when not engaged in reading and study. Politics naturally absorbs a portion of his thoughts, though he believes that the judiciary of the country should be raised above political issues. In lodge circles, he is a member of the Woodmen of the World, and of the Royal Highlanders.

Mr. Smith is well prepared, in inheritance, education and general trend of mind, to occupy the seat of honor to which he has been chosen. His understanding of the law is clear and concise and his judgments fearless.

STEPHEN B. CHAPPELL. Probably no citizen has been more closely identified with the business interests of the city of Wibaux, Montana, than Stephen B. Chappell, the extent of whose operations as hotel keeper, stockman, financier, and progressive business man have made him a leading figure in the commercial and industrial life of Dawson county. Although the early years of his life were spent in his native south, Mr. Chappell's real career as an important factor in the business world began in 1890 when he came to Montana, and this state has since been the scene of his activities. He was born March 31, 1856, in Mississippi, and is a son of George and Katherine (Jacks) Chappell, also natives of that state.

George Chappell spent his boyhood days in Mississippi, and was there educated in the public schools and reared to the life of an agriculturist. He was there married, and in 1857 took his wife and children to the state of Texas, where he engaged in the cattle and horse business on the range, and had many thousand head of cattle and sheep. During the Civil war he enlisted for service in the Confederate army in a Texas regiment, as his sympathies were entirely with the South, he having been an extensive slave owner, and participated in all the battles and skirmishes of his regiment, which belonged to the command of Gen. Robert E. Lee. He was twice wounded in battle, and was present at the surrender of the noted general at Appomattox. On his return to Texas he resumed his business, but in 1866 sold his stock and removed to Louisiana, where he had about five hundred or six hundred acres of land devoted to corn and cotton on the Red river, one hundred miles below Shreveport, and there he continued to carry on operations until his death in 1871, when only forty-two years of age, the last illness having probably been hastened by the wounds and exposure to which he was subjected during his army life. His widow, who is seventy-one years of age, resides in Texas, and has been the mother of three children: Stephen B.; James, who died at the age of twenty-two years; and Wiley, living at Floresville, Texas.

Stephen B. Chappell received his education in the public schools of Fillmore, Louisiana, and Griswold College, and after the death of his father became superintendent of the home plantation, where he remained until he reached his majority. At that time he went to northern Texas, where he joined an outfit hunting buffalo for their hides. Young Chappell was one of the best shots in the outfit, which that year secured 18,000 hides, and during the following winter, that of 1879, he was with another party in Yellow House Canon, Texas, that took 12,000 hides. Subsequently Mr. Chappell went to the Pan Handle country, on Candaian river, where he engaged as a cowboy with T. S. Bugbee, and after the second year was promoted to the superintendency of the outfit, with which he was connected until 1884. In that year he located at Great Bend, Kansas, and there engaged in buying and shipping stock to Kansas City, Missouri, until 1890. In that year Mr. Chappell came to Dawson county, Montana, and engaged in the stock business, giving the greater part of his attention to horses, and this has grown to be one of the largest ventures of its kind in the county. In 1904 he became interested in land dealings, to which he has since devoted a large part of his time, and he is also stockholder in the Farmers' Elevator Company, and a director in the First State Bank of Wibaux, of which he was one of the organizers in 1909. In 1911 Mr. Chappell erected the Chappell Hotel, a forty-room hostelry which reflects the cheerful personality of its owner who has made it a monument to himself and his ideas. The rooms are bright and comfortable, being supplied with hot and cold running water, and a number are fitted with bath and toilet appointments, while steam heat is used throughout. Every facility which makes life pleasant to the traveler in this age of modern hotel-keeping has been faithfully installed, and the Chappell is one of the best houses of its size in Montana. Ever since he erected the second residence built in Wibaux, Mr. Chappell has been engaged in work for the benefit of the city. Aside from his business interests which have assisted greatly in making this a live commercial center, and his progressive methods and ideas which have served to stimulate other capable men and rouse them to action, he has also been faithful in his duties as a public-spirited citizen. In 1909 he was chosen a member of the school board, on which he is still serving, while his wife acted as a member of that body for two terms, beginning 1897 and 1900. In political matters he is a Democrat, and his fraternal connections are with Wibaux Lodge, I. O. O. F. In 1893, as a matter of speculation, Mr. Chappell purchased thirty-one sections of railroad land in North Dakota, the greater part of which he has since disposed of.

On October 29, 1884, Mr. Chappell was married to Miss Grace Mullendon, who was born in Cass county, Indiana, daughter of Samuel and Catherine (Seibert) Mullendon. Mr. Mullendon was born May 14, 1831, and still survives, while his wife, a native of Maryland, died in 1894. They had six children, of whom three are living: Mrs. Chappell; Lillie, her twin, and now the wife of Burt H. Rice, of Wibaux; and Henry, who resides in Glendive. Mr. Mullendon spent his boyhood days in his native city of Dayton, Ohio, and there received his education in the public schools. As a youth he removed to Indiana with his parents, and after completing his studies engaged in the lumber business in Cass county for some fourteen or fifteen years. He then removed to Dodge City, Kansas, where he was for a number of years connected with the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, but after leaving that company settled down in Oklahoma, where he was engaged in farming until 1908. Since that time he has lived a quiet life, enjoying the fruits of his many years of hard and faithful industry. He is a prominent Mason and a well known worker in the ranks of the Republican party. Mr. and Mrs. Chappell have had seven children: Roy B., cashier of the First State Bank of Wibaux, who married Marion Gallagher; W. Byrle, assistant cashier of the Exchange State Bank of Glendive, who married Loretta Harrigan; Rex, engaged in the implement business with his father under the firm name of S. B. Chappell & Son; Orlin Lee, who died at the age of eleven years; and Harry, Stella and Dwight, who are attending school.

LOVELL FARNUM, junior member of the leading drug firm of Glendive, Davis & Farnum, has been identified with the business interests of this city for sixteen years, during which time he has become well known to the citizens of his community. He has proven himself a public-spirited citizen in many ways and in making a success of his business has also contributed in no small way to the best interests of Dawson county, being possessed of much civic pride. Like a number of Glendive's successful business men, Mr. Farnum is a native of the state of Michigan, having been born at Almont, Lapeer county, December 18, 1871, a son of Rufus K. and Ascenath (Goetchins) Farnum.

Rufus K. Farnum was born in New York state, and when a young man removed to Michigan, following his trades of carpenter and millwright for a number of years. He built many of the mills in that section during the early days, and later became a pioneer sawmill owner of the state. He was one of the active members of the Masonic fraternity in Michigan for many years, and was first a Whig and later an influential Republican in his political proclivities. He still resides in Michigan, although he has retired from active business pursuits and has reached his eighty-fourth year, while his wife is sixty-eight years old. They have had two children: Nellie, who is the wife of H. S. Davis and resides in Arizona; and Lovell.

Lovell Farnum received his early educational training in the schools of Lapeer county, Michigan, and was then given the advantages of a collegiate course, graduating from the State University at Ann Arbor, Michigan, with the class of 1894, where he had been a student in the pharmaceutical department. Almost immediately after completing his studies, in 1895, he came to Glendive and purchased an interest in the drug business of Mr. Davis, which had been established in this city in 1881 and was one of the oldest establishments here. The firm style was made Davis & Farnum, and has continued as such to the present time, the business having grown commensurately with the growth and development of the city. A skilled and careful pharmacist, Mr. Farnum has assisted in making this the leading drug store in Glendive. Modern methods and ideas have been combined with a large amount of enterprise, energy and enthusiasm, and several innovations have been made that have increased the trade in a large degree. A complete stock of up-to-date goods is carried, including everything that is to be found in a first-class pharmacy, and a wholesome, steady trade gives evidence that the citizens of Glendive appreciate the opportunities offered them. Mr. Farnum has interested himself in fraternal work, and belongs to the Knights of the Maccabees and Glendive Lodge No. 31, A. F. & A. M. He is affiliated with the Republican party, but has never cared to enter the political arena.

On October 6, 1897, Mr. Farnum was married to Miss Clara Taylor, who was born in Clarkston, Oakland county, Michigan, daughter of Austin J. and Josephine (Oamaais) Taylor, residents of that county. Mr. Taylor, who is a prominent and influential farmer of his community, is well known in Democratic politics, and has held a number of township offices. He and his wife have three daughters: Alla, Nora and Clara. To Mr. and Mrs. Farnum there have been born two children: L. Katherine and M. Josephine.

A. I. REEVES, the proprietor of the Reeves Music House, has an extensive acquaintance in various circles of the city. In the social affairs of Helena he has the entree of the best circles; in the lodge of the Elks he is one of the most popular members, and now occupies the position of exalted ruler of that body; and, withal, he is one of the progressive business men of the city. Industrial efficiency is a matter to which he has given intelligent consideration, and he has applied its principles to the conduct of his establishment, with gratifying results. Nothing short of the best does he consider that he can afford to handle, and that in itself is the mark of a sagacious dealer and of the successful one.

A. I. Reeves, whose childhood and schoolboy name was "Al," began life in the state of Minnesota at Spring Valley on the eleventh of January, 1864. His father, Michael Dean Reeves, was a minister and a "fighting parson," too, who did good service in the Indian wars with the Mohawks, besides preaching the Gospel for sixty years. He died in 1907 in Minnesota, the state in which he spent the most of his years of service. Rev. Michael Dean Reeves was married first to Martha Harrington, and they became the parents of five sons and four daughters. After her death Rev. Reeves married Mrs. Hulda (Newman) Rider, a widow with nine sons. By the marriage of Rev. Reeves to Mrs. Rider there were born four children, making a total of twenty-two children born to the three marriages. Therefore, A. I. Reeves had fourteen half brothers, four half sisters, one full brother and two sisters. Of the latter, Charles and Hattie still live, Martha having died some years ago.

Mrs. Hulda (Newman) Reeves shared the veneration and respect in which the devoted servant of the cause of Salvation was ever held, and her declining years are brightened by the love of many friends, in the town of Alexandria, Minnesota, where she recently celebrated her eighty-fourth birthday.

Rev. Reeves was a believer in education and he inspired his son with the same veneration for learning. A. I. Reeves went first to the public schools and then to Pillsbury Academy at Owatonna, Minnesota, named for the famous Pillsbury family of Minnesota, and from which he was graduated in 1885. He interrupted his studies here to engage in teaching and so provided himself with the means of livelihood while studying. His youngest half brother, James, was the proprietor of a newspaper in Groton, South Dakota, and when the younger brother finished the academy, he went to that town and for a time helped James in the running of his journal and the printing establishment in connection with the paper. The work was of a nature for which Mr. Reeves had a decided aptitude, and later he leased the plant from his brother and ran it for two years independently. When he gave it up he bought the Claremont (S. D.) Gazette and conducted that successfully for a period of three years. In 1890 Mr. Reeves sold his paper and decided to come to Montana. He selected Helena as a suitable location and went into the Jackson Music House where his knowledge of music obtained during his course in the academy proved of practical use to him.

When the Jackson Music House went out of business in the financial crash of 1893, Mr. Reeves determined to set up another store of the same style, and accordingly, in the following year, he opened his present establishment. His excellent methods have built up the business to its present large proportions, and made his the largest music house in the northwest, as well as the most exclusive establishment in this line.

Mr. Reeves has not been content to make a signal financial success in his chosen line. He has worked hard for the increase of musical knowledge in the city and has invested largely in projects which would give to the citizens an opportunity to hear the great artists of the world. Such ventures are usually in the class of benevolences, so far as money returns are concerned, and in this respect Helena is no exception. Mr. Reeves has often made up the deficiency in the receipts for musical attractions, but this has not in the least discouraged him. Through his efforts, such artists as Nordica, Schumann-Heink Paderewski, Kubelik, Carreno, Lillian Blauvelt, Maud Powell, Remenyi, Leonora Jackson, Camilla Urso, Godowsky, Rosenthal, Hambourg, Petschnikoff, Reisenauer, Gerardy, Ysaye, Emma Nevada, Marie Rappold, Mme. Jacoby, Campana, Riccardo Martin, Ellen Beach Yaw and Gabrilowitsch, have been heard in Helena, beside a long list of others only less celebrated. Probably no other city in the country the size of Helena has been favored by visits from such an array of artists. In the large majority of instances these artists made Helena the only stop in Montana. Mr. Reeves' greatest ambition is not a personal one, or one that affects his personal affairs, but it is to see an opera house built in Helena so complete that the finest companies in the land can be accommodated in it, and thus Helena may enjoy theatrical and musical advantages second to none in the country.

Mr. Reeves is a Republican, but is not active in politics. He is a member of the Montana club and is one of the influential men in that association. He is unmarried, and, being of genial manner and temperament, is a favorite in social circles throughout the city.

STEPHEN PARKER. Pluck and industry always have been and it is safe to say always will be the best assets for an individual to start out in the world with to carve a career of independence and honor. Many a youth has had only his two hands and an indomitable spirit to assist him in his struggles to rise, and when he has used those helps unceasingly and judiciously has climbed to positions of prominence and importance. In this class belongs Mr. Stephen Parker, who was left an orphan in early childhood and when seven years old was brought by an aunt to the United States from Ireland, he having been born at Athlone in that country, September 7, 1866. His aunt went to Vicksburg, Mississippi, to live, and it was in that city that the young boy spent the next seven years of his life, attending school, applying himself to his books with diligence, as he realized that his days for study would necessarily be limited.

At the age of fourteen years Stephen set out to take care of himself and his first employment he found on a steamboat which plied between New Orleans and St. Louis. He remained at that work but a short time, however, leaving it to accept a position with the American Sugar Refinery Company at New Orleans and remained with that concern for five years. His next move took him to Silver City, Idaho. There he met Colonel Dewey, who had charge of the Delemar mine, and for two years he worked for that gentleman on the Delemar property. The year 1890 found Mr. Parker a resident of Butte, Montana, and this city he has continued to call his home ever since that time. His specialty in connection with mining work had always been as an engineer in charge of hoisting machinery, and he worked at various times in many of the larger camps in this vicinity. By study, careful observation and practical experience he finally achieved expert ability in his chosen field. His ability attracted the attention of Governor Norris who appointed him as assistant state boiler inspector, and since March 4, 1909, when he assumed the office, he has been fulfilling its duties with marked success. He is careful and thoroughly competent, uses tact and firmness, and discharges his inspections with full realization of the importance of the work to the public as well as directly to employers and employes who have charge of boilers, or are responsible for their proper condition.

In addition to his prominence as a state official Mr. Parker is well known as a business man of Butte through his ownership of the Lenox Hotel, one of the finest hostleries in the city. His inspection duties necessitating his absence from home a great deal of the time, the management of the Lenox has fallen in large measure upon the shoulders of Mrs. Parker. She has proven herself fully capable of conducting the business and to her is due the credit of making this hotel one of the most popular and largely patronized in Butte. She is a careful manager, possesses a high order of executive ability, keen commercial instincts and enjoys the respect and admiration of all with whom she comes in contact in a business way or socially. Previous to her marriage to Mr. Parker on November 19, 1892, she was Katie Cotter, a daughter of Daniel P. and Julia Cotter, her father having come here from Virginia City, Nevada, where he was engaged in mining. Mr. and Mrs. Parker have two children. The son, Stephen, Jr., was born August 24, 1896, and is now a student at Gonzaga College at Spokane, Washington. The daughter, Adeline, born October 10, 1898, attends the Butte public schools.

The Catholic church counts Mr. and Mrs. Parker as among its most devout members; they give generously of their time to promoting its religious activities, and are liberal contributors to its various benefactions. Mr. Parker is a member of the Knights of Columbus. In political affairs he is an active worker in the ranks of the Democratic party and is keenly interested in the promulgation of its principles and the extension of its influence in governmental affairs. Personally he is a man of healthy, diversified interests, is a baseball enthusiast, reads extensively on a wide range of subjects, is of broad gauge in his views and is highly esteemed by a host of friends and acquaintances throughout the state.

HERBERT ARTHUR CONYNE. In the life of Herbert Arthur Conyne, mayor of Anaconda, is reflected the stories of the careers of many residents of the great west, the story of a young man from the east who sought wider fields and greater opportunity, and by unerring instinct was led toward the setting sun, finding in the great reaches of the Pacific coast states and the mountain states the chance for individual expansion.

Honesdale, Wayne county, Pennsylvania, was the birthplace of Mr. Conyne, whose natal day was July 22, 1865. He was educated in the public schools of his home town, but at the age of eighteen felt the call of the west and came to Montana. He settled in Dillon, but after six months' residence in that place went to South Dakota and commenced the study of pharmacy. He secured his diploma and followed this line of occupation in South Dakota for six years.

In 1890 he returned to Montana and settled in Anaconda, following the grocery business as a clerk. In 1902 the MacCallum & Cloutier Mercantile Company formed and he became a partner and manager of the business. In 1910 the business was sold out, but he continued as manager for the new firm of the MacCallum & Cloutier Mercantile Company until June 15, 1911, when he severed his connections to purchase the Main Street Garage, forming the company of White & Conyne. All of his business ventures have yielded a consistent success, and this was the more gratifying to the subject from the fact that they were all achieved by his unaided effort. He is a true type of the self-made man, and his sturdy independence and self reliance made him very popular with all classes in Anaconda and Deer Lodge county.

He was elected mayor of the city in April, 1911, on the Republican ticket. Few members of the party are more active during campaigns, but Mr. Conyne's influence is of the quiet kind, as he is not a public speaker but is reserved in his demeanor. He is a member of the Elks and of the Odd Fellows and has passed through all the chairs in these organizations, his associates delighting to recognize his abilities with repeated elections to positions of honor.

Mr. Conyne is married. He is a man of substance and owns some splendid business property in Anaconda, besides having excellent mineral land investments.

His father was Alexander Conyne, a native of New York state, who was a railroad engineer by occupation and later became a farmer. He met a tragic death April 1, 1876, a tree falling upon him. The mother of our subject is still living at Whites Valley, Pennsylvania, at the advanced age of eighty-nine. Before her marriage she was Laura Gregory, of New York state. Ten children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Conyne, three of whom are deceased. The others are Francis Francisco Conyne, a contractor at Seattle, Washington; Charles G. Conyne, a jeweler at Mandan, North Dakota; Case V. Conyne, a retired merchant and agriculturist of Woodburn, Oregon; Herbert Arthur Conyne, mayor of Anaconda; Clara Conyne, who married H. W. White, of Whites Valley, Pennsylvania, and who now cares for the aged mother; Eva L. Conyne, wife of F. W. Chase, of Seattle, Washington; Frances I. Conyne, now Mrs. A. P. Bowie, of Butte, Montana.

FRANK LEONARD BURNS. Distinguished as one of the original settlers of Hamilton, and as one of its most enterprising, progressive, and successful business factors, Frank Leonard Burns is a fine representative of the self-made and self-educated men of Montana, having been in very truth the architect of his own fortunes. A native of Canada, he was born November 19, 1864, in Georgetown, Ontario. His father, Walter Burns, was born in New York, in 1810, and was there brought up and educated, as a young man learning the carpenter's trade. In 1860 he removed from New York to Canada and then with his family to Michigan in 1874, he followed carpentering and contracting in Manistique for many years, residing there until his death, in November, 1896. His wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Baker, was born in Ontario, and is now living at the old home in Manistique, Michigan. They were the parents of eight children, as follows: James, of Deer Lodge, Montana; Samuel, carrying on the home farm in Manistique, Michigan; Frank Leonard, the subject of this sketch; William Freeman, of Seattle, Washington; Wyndom, of Manistique, Michigan; Edward, of Escanaba, Michigan; Alexander, of Germfask, Michigan; and Melissa, wife of John Mashinter, of Mono Road, Ontario.

Living in Ontario until ten years of age, Frank Leonard Burns received all of the schooling he ever had prior to that time in his native town, the education he there received, having been subsequently advanced by reading and observation. Accompanying the family to Manistique, Michigan, in 1874, he remained beneath the parental roof-tree until fifteen years old, when he made his way to Dassel, Minnesota, where for three years he was employed as a farm hand, a part of the time earning as much as seven dollars a month. He subsequently learned the weaver's trade in all of its details in a woolen mill at Dassel, and after following it for six years, became manager of the mill, which he afterward operated on his own account for a year. His lease of the mill expiring in the spring of 1890, Mr. Burns came to Montana for the benefit of his health, which had become impaired on account of close confinement indoors, and for four months was brakeman on a passenger train running between Helena and Billings.

Locating then in Grantsdale, Ravalli county, Mr. Burns, who had saved just two hundred and eight dollars of his earnings, purchased, on July 12, 1890, at the opening sale of lots in the newly platted town of Hamilton, a lot; on it he erected the first business house in the place, a barber shop, which he conducted two years. Selling out, he operated a confectionery store for six years, making considerable money thereby. Selling that store at an advantageous price, he next opened a jewelry establishment, in the management of which he was successful from the start. Developing his natural mechanical talent and ability, he mastered the jeweler's trade, becoming an expert at watch and jewelry repairing. Under his wise supervision, the business has assumed large proportions, and is being successfully handled by Mr. Burns, whose store is one of the largest of the kind in the city and one of the very best in the entire state.

An account of the active career of Mr. Burns reads almost like the tale of a story-writer, and furnishes to the young a noteworthy example of what can be accomplished in life by a man of brains, energy and persistency of purpose. He was the owner of the first store and the first residence in Hamilton; is now the owner of a fine brick block on Main street; and is the largest tax payer in Hamilton, his real estate and other property being valued at nearly $50,000. He has also been fortunate in his mineral investments, owning ten thousand shares in one of the best asphalt mines in the state.

Politically, Mr. Burns, is identified with the Democratic party, and has served his fellow citizens as alderman, city treasurer and city trustee. Fraternally, he belongs to Hamilton Lodge, No. 48, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which he has passed all the chairs; and to Ravalli Aerie, No. 1693, Order of Eagles, in which he has filled all the offices, and which he represented at the Grand Aerie, held at Miles City, Montana, August 20, 1911.

Mr. Burns married, January 1, 1891, at Livingston, Montana, Ada May McIntyre, of Chatfield, Minnesota, daughter of James and Rebecca (Shear) McIntyre.

ROBERT A. O'HARA. Finely educated and of studious habits, Robert A. O'Hara, of Hamilton, has brought to the practice of his profession, an enthusiastic zeal and a well-trained mind that has won him success at the bar, his technical knowledge of law and its application being unassailable, while as a man and a citizen, he is held in high regard throughout Ravalli county. A native of Indiana, his birth occurred in June, 1867, in Marshall county, where his parents lived for a brief time. His father, Owen O'Hara, was born and reared in Ireland, 1838 being the year of his birth. In 1848, ere attaining his majority, he immigrated to the United States, settling first in Elk county, Pennsylvania, and in 1864 he removed to Marshall county, Indiana. A short time later he settled in Minnesota, and was there employed in agricultural pursuits until his death, in April, 1904. He married Margaret Nugent, who was also a native of the Emerald Isle, and is still living in Lanesboro, Minnesota. Eight children blessed their union, as follows: Peter, a prominent farmer and extensive land owner in North Dakota; Robert A., the special subject of this brief biographical review; James, engaged in farming in Minnesota; Frank, professor of political economy at the Catholic University, Washington, D. C.; John, of Portland, Oregon, editor of the Catholic Sentinel; Rev. Edwin O'Hara, in charge of a Catholic church at Portland, Oregon; Anna, residing with her widowed mother in Lanesboro, Minnesota; and Mary, residing in Omaha, Nebraska.

The family moving to Minnesota shortly after his birth, Robert A. O'Hara was brought up on a Minnesota farm, and in the rural schools of his district obtained his early knowledge of books. Entering the University of Notre Dame, in 1887, he attended its law department until 1889. Returning then from Indiana to Minnesota, he was admitted to the bar in November, 1889, and began the practice of law in Saint Paul. Remaining there but a brief time, he came to the newer state of Montana, foreseeing in a large measure the great possibilities it held in future for young men of energy and ability. He located first at Great Falls, and subsequently at Missoula, where he was associated with Hon. F. H. Warely and F. C. Webster, later judges of the district. In October, 1890, Mr. O'Hara came to Ravalli county, settling in Hamilton when it was yet in its infancy, and has since been prosperously engaged in the practice of his chosen profession. As a lawyer Mr. O'Hara has a great natural aptitude for his work, being conscientious, earnest and persistent in the advocacy of his client's cause, and through his successful defence of many important cases has gained the confidence and good will of the citizens of Ravalli county, and won for himself a prominent position in the legal fraternity of both the county and the state.

Possessing excellent business ability and judgment, Mr. O'Hara has made judicious investments, and owns valuable real estate in Hamilton and vicinity. In 1905 he organized the Citizens State Bank, of which he has since been a director and a stockholder. Politically, he is an active member of the Republican party, doing much campaign work, and in 1906 was a candidate for the state legislature, but was defeated at the polls. He was the first mayor of Hamilton and served two terms. Religiously, he is a member of the Roman Catholic church. He takes an intelligent interest in local affairs, and is now serving as a member of the Hamilton board of education.

In 1893 Mr. O'Hara married Miss Frances Hughes, who was born in Chicago, Illinois, and they are the parents of three children, namely: Mary Frances and Geraldine, pupils in the Hamilton high school; and Roberta.

MAX HEBGEN. One of the most important factors in the industrial growth and development of Montana, and one of the largest public utility concerns in the country, is the Butte Electric and Power Company, with its allied power plants, lighting and transmission systems developing more than 110,000 horse power. Among the principal companies under its control are The Madison River Power Company, Billings and Eastern Montana Power Company and the Butte Gas Light and Fuel Company, in all comprising the largest power company in the United States.

The directing head, general manager and chief engineer of all the Butte Electric and Power Company's interests is Mr. Max Hebgen, who for nearly a quarter of a century has been identified with electrical interests, and is regarded as one of the ablest men in the country in such circles. A native of Wisconsin, Mr. Hebgen was born in 1870, and in 1890, came to Butte to take a position with what was then the Butte Electric Lighting Company. Later, as superintendent of that company, he turned on the first incandescent light in the city of Butte. The Butte Electric Lighting Company was succeeded by the Butte General Electric Company, which was merged with the Silver Bow Electric Company into the Butte Electric and Power Company. Mr. Hebgen was advanced from superintendent to general superintendent and then to general manager, a position requiring keen business ability and rare capacity for organization as well as superior technical knowledge.

He is a member of the Silver Bow and University clubs of Butte, also of the Montana Club of Helena.

MILTON HAMMOND, who as its chief stockholder, founded the State Bank of Darby, (Mont.), in 1911, was elected its first president, but has resigned that position. He is considered a leading pioneer of that part of the state. He has also accumulated, during the past few years, much choice agricultural land in the Bitter Root valley. Mr. Hammond claims that there is not on this continent a spot so fertile as this little valley, shielded from the northern blasts by her protecting mountains and watered by their inexhaustible streams. Even the dry-farming statistics show that some pieces of land in the Bitter Root have yielded as high as thirty-three bushels of wheat to the acre, while other whole farms have averaged twenty-one bushels. Mr. Hammond's enthusiasm for the northwest, Montana in particular, has been one of the chief factors in his popularity and success. His own sincerity is so unquestionable that he readily gains the confidence of other men of means. The growth of the State Bank of Darby is due largely to him and his influence.

Mr. Hammond was born in Victoria county, New Brunswick, on the twentieth day of February, 1847. After attending the schools of that place until the age of nineteen, he began his life in the lumber camps, where he worked in almost every capacity; in fact, there are few phases of the lumber business with which he is not acquainted. In 1869, he left New Brunswick for Maine, where he continued in the same line of work for ten years before going to Stillwater, Minnesota, to accept a reliable position in the huge lumber mills at that time situated there. For almost another decade he worked for the company at Stillwater, when the Black Foot Milling Company made it worth his while to leave Stillwater for Bonner, Montana. Until 1897, he was general manager of the property at Bonner, at which time he left the lumber business for a less strenuous life. After having been so active, however, he found it almost impossible to go into retirement. After choosing Darby for his home, partly for her own promise and largely for the charm of her surroundings, he erected there the city's first hotel. For almost fifteen years he occupied himself with the active management of this house. Under his wise supervision it necessarily flourished until, in 1911, he disposed of the management that he might establish the State Bank of Darby, as stated.

Mr. Hammond was married during his sojourn in Maine, to Miss Sarah Kendall, a native of that Yankee state, but of Scotch parentage. Her father's ancestors were the bold Kendall clan of Scotland, who fought so bravely for their native rights.

Mr. and Mrs. Hammond are now the parents of three children. Albert Edward Hammond, their only son, is the young civil engineer of whom the entire continent is proud. It is he who built the famous "Taft tunnel" near Butte. This is generally conceded to be the longest tunnel in the world. Under young Mr. Hammond's careful instructions the work of excavation was begun from both ends simultaneously, and so accurate were his estimates that it lacked but one-eighth of one inch of being absolutely true at the point of meeting. He now makes his home in Seattle, Washington. Of his two sisters, the elder, Pearl, is the wife of John McGrath, who resides in Hanna, North Dakota. Myrtle, the youngest of the family, married Mr. Perry Hopkins, a ranchman in the Bitter Root valley.

Milton Hammond, the subject of this sketch, is himself the son of George Hammond, who although born, like his son, in New Brunswick was an Englishman by inheritance. Most of the sixty-three years of his life were spent as a blacksmith in his native town, all of it in the land of New Brunswick where he was finally laid to rest by the side of his good wife who had been before her marriage, a Miss Johanna of the same province. To their union were born seven children, two of whom are now deceased. Anna Hammond, the oldest daughter, is the wife of Calvin Brown, a miner of Denver, Colorado. The subject of our sketch is the next in point of years. Carolina married John Archibald. Both Mr. and Mrs. Archibald are devoting their lives to missionary labors in far India, working under the auspices of the Baptist church. Jennie Hammond makes her home in Denver with her sister, Mrs. Brown. The youngest of the girls, Melvina, is the wife of George Brown, a ranchman. They also reside near Denver. Milton Hammond is therefore the only son of the family; his brother, Justice, having passed away several years since. It is to him, naturally, that the sisters look for advice and counsel, particularly in financial affairs. Perhaps no citizen of Darby has a wider or more general acquaintance and none is more deserving of the respect in which he is held in the community.

JAMES A. SHOEMAKER. The enthusiastic enterprise which overleaps all obstacles and makes possible almost any undertaking in the new and vigorous west, is pleasantly exemplified in James A. Shoemaker, by the circumstance of birth a Pennsylvanian, but since 1890 a citizen of Montana. Loyalty to Montana seems almost to approach a religious faith with many of those residing within its boundaries and Mr. Shoemaker is of this number. His relation to the community has been in several capacities, and for some years he was state manager of the National Surety Company of New York. Since 1903 he has been identified in one way or another with the Montana State Fair Association, and since 1910 he has been secretary of the same, and an exceedingly competent one. In 1906 he was elected sheriff of Lewis and Clark county and in 1908 became a member of the state legislature, as a member of that body proving an able and discreet legislator, taking an active and influential part in the general deliberations.

Mr. Shoemaker was born in Lawrence county, Pennsylvania, October 18, 1866. He is the son of David D. Shoemaker, also a native of the Keystone state, whose demise occurred July 18, 1871. He was a farmer by occupation and a veteran of the Civil war, and his death was directly due to injury received in the service. He was a prisoner at Libby, Belle Island, and Salisbury, and he was not released until five months after the close of the great conflict. He was captured at Petersburg, and his long incarceration so undermined his health that he never recovered from its effect and passed away in comparatively young manhood. He was a member of Company A, Seventy-sixth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, known as the Zouaves, and held the rank of corporal. Six months after enlistment he was wounded and upon recovery re-entered the service, and participated in some of the principal campaigns, being in all the battles of the Army of the Potomac with the exception of the time spent in the hospital or in prison. The remains of this gallant patriot, who offered himself a sacrifice to the cause in which he believed, are interred in Lawrence county, Pennsylvania, in Slippery Rock cemetery. He was born in 1839. The mother, whose maiden name was Mary M. Evans, was a native of Pennsylvania, born in 1841, and the demise of this worthy lady occurred in her native state in January, 1891. Two children were born to this union. The subject's brother, Jonathan Evans Shoemaker, is two years younger than himself, his birth date being August, 1868, and the scene of his nativity Lawrence county, Pennsylvania. Since 1894 he has devoted his life to the foreign missionary service of the Presbyterian church and at the present time is stationed at Ningpo, China.

James A. Shoemaker received his primary schooling in Lawrence county, Pennsylvania, and subsequently entered Piersol's Academy at West Bridgewater, Pennsylvania, where he remained a student for two years. In 1884 he removed to Iowa and for four years attended Parsons' College at Fairfield, Iowa. The ensuing two years he spent at Chicago, as a student in the College of Dental Surgery, and graduated from that institution with the class of 1890. However, he has not practiced dentistry to any great extent.

Mr. Shoemaker came to Montana April 22, 1890, and by May 14 had arrived in Helena, coming to this city to accept a position with the Consolidated Water Company, holding the office of cashier and assistant secretary until February 1, 1901. In that year he became associated with the Mutual Life Insurance Company, of New York as a superintendent of agents, and until 1906 acted as superintendent of agents for the state of Montana. He proved a remarkably effective incumbent of this office, but his entering public life made it impossible for him to attend to duties so extensive. His services as sheriff of Lewis and Clark county and member of the lower house of the state assembly have been above alluded to. On April 1, 1909, he accepted a position as state manager of the National Surety Company of New York, and he retained the same until March, 1910, when he resigned to accept the office of secretary of the Montana State Fair, which he holds at the present time. For seven years previously, Mr. Shoemaker was general superintendent of the Montana State Fair Association. He takes a public-spirited interest in all matters affecting the welfare of the city and is the stalwart champion of good education, which makes his office of director of Helena school district, No. 2, most appropriate. He is one of the standard bearers of the Republican party and has always been active in national, state and local affairs. He is one of the men who exert very definite influence in party councils.

Mr. Shoemaker, like all well-balanced men, has sufficient social proclivities to make his fraternal relations a source of pleasure. He is a prominent Mason, belonging to Morning Star Lodge, No. 5. He is a life member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and is also connected with the Montana Club. He belongs to the First Presbyterian church of Helena, and takes an active part in its affairs, being chairman of the board of trustees and superintendent of the senior department of the Sunday school.

On April 27, 1893, Mr. Shoemaker was married at Sharon, Pennsylvania, to Miss Carrie J. Marshall, daughter of Thomas J. and Maria W. Marshall. Mrs. Shoemaker, who is prominent in social and philanthropical affairs in the city and who presides graciously over an attractive household, is a native of Pennsylvania. Three children have been born to their union: James Marshall, born July 23, 1895, is a student at Annapolis Naval Academy, having been admitted July 25, 1910, and now being midshipman. John Evans, born August 6, 1898, is in attendance at the Helena high school; and Charles Sherman, born December 19, 1899, died August 5, 1900. All were born in Helena. The Shoemaker residence is in Kenwood.

The subject is of Dutch, Welsh and Irish descent. The founder of the paternal side of the house came from Holland to the United States early in the eighteenth century and located in the Keystone state. The maternal family, the Ralstons, came to this country from the north of Ireland in 1731, and made location in eastern Pennsylvania. The Evans family came from Wales early in the nineteenth century and located in southeastern Pennsylvania. Members of both families fought in the colonial and Revolutionary wars, and patriotism has distinguished them in all generations. Mr. Shoemaker is a member of the Sons of the American Revolution.

Mr. Shoemaker finds his greatest pleasure at his own fireside, his tastes being essentially domestic. Aside from this most admirable one, he has no particular hobbies. He is a self-made man, that product of which America is so justly proud and of which she has nurtured so many fine examples.

L. Q. SKELTON, cashier of the Bank of Boulder and mayor of that city, was born on a farm near the village of Augusta, Carroll county, Ohio, on September 21, 1863, and was the third child in a family of nine sons and daughters of Jason and Mary Skelton, poor but worthy and estimable people of that community, both of whom are now deceased.

L. Q., as he was always familiarly called, was educated in the village school, Damascus Academy, a Quaker institution, the University of Ohio at Athens, and the Northeastern Ohio Normal College, working at whatever he could find to do in vacation seasons to enable him to continue his studies as far as was practicable. He taught school after leaving college, studying law in the meantime, and married Flora Manfull, of Augusta, Ohio, after which he moved to Montana and located at Boulder in 1890. There he took charge of the city schools, such as they were at the time, and organized the high school, building up the entire system to a splendid state of efficiency, and continued in charge until he resigned in 1895 to assume a responsible position in the Bank of Boulder. Since that time Mr. Skelton has held every position in the bank except that of president, and he is now cashier of the institution, a position which he has held for many years. The Bank of Boulder is known to be one of the soundest and most stable banking institutions in the state of Montana, and does a business of half a million dollars. It practically represents the life work of Mr. Skelton, of which he may be justly proud.

Mr. Skelton is a staunch Republican, and has always been prominent in the public affairs of his town and county, being mayor of Boulder at the present time. He affiliates with the Episcopal church, in which he is bringing up his only child—a daughter, Miss Mary Isabelle—and is a Free Mason. Aside from the latter, he has no other fraternal connections.

In his successful career, Mr. Skelton effectively illustrates the possibilities open to an energetic boy, be he ever so poor. He has demonstrated that such a boy may come to be a scholar of wide learning—a pleasing speaker—a large, many-sided public man of high character and ample means.

JOHN HENRY PRICE. The proprietor of the Crown W Ranch, is a recognized judge of horseflesh, and has built up a large business in this line from a humble start. He is a native of Sussex, England, and was born in March, 1858, a son of David and Annie (Morgan) Price, natives of Wales, both of whom are deceased.

John Henry Price was the third in order of birth of his parents' eight children, and secured excellent educational advantages, graduating from the noted Oxford College with the class of 1882. A lover of fine horses from his earliest boyhood, in 1887 he came to the United States, and in 1890 engaged in the horse business in Custer county. This venture at first proved anything but promising and from 1893 to 1898 Mr. Price met with numerous disappointments and had to overcome a number of serious obstacles, the principal of which was finding a market for his animals. He did not allow himself to become discouraged, however, and kept steadily forging ahead, his enterprise and perseverance eventually winning a much deserved success. At present he is breeding from imported animals, having fourteen or fifteen head of Hackney and Shire stallions. One of his specialties is the breeding of polo ponies, for which he finds a market in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and other large cities in this country, while a large number are shipped to the English and French markets. Not only does he supply the United States with animals for its army, but the fame of these Montana bred horses has grown to such an extent that the armies of other countries have been willing to pay him fancy prices for his stock.

At the Crown W, a large ranch situated near Miles City, every improvement known to the business of horse breeding may be found in charge of men who thoroughly understand their business. Under the capable management of Mr. Price the venture has grown into one of the leading enterprises of its kind in this part of the country, and its reputation for a high standard has been constantly maintained. Personally Mr. Price is pleasant and affable and easy of approach. He favors no political party, and has not identified himself with public matters, although he shows a lively interest in public issues and is ready at all times to assist movements having for their object the betterment of his community. He has never married, but keeps bachelor apartments at Knowlton.

DR. JAMES FRANCIS SPELMAN. Some men must give of their brain, some of their muscle in service to their fellow men, but a doctor must give both. To be a success he must be not only a man of unusual physical and intellectual powers but he must also possess will power above the average in order to endure the strain under which he constantly works. Just as this is true of every physician so it is even more noticeable in hospital work. The city specialist with his downtown office who only sees patients by appointment is as far away from the general surgeon with a great hospital practice on his hands as is the former from the six-hour-a-day business man. Dr. James Francis Spelman, of Anaconda, Montana, is a fair example of the type of surgeon above mentioned. With one of the largest surgical practices in the state of Montana, he is so conscientious and thorough in his work that the demands made upon him in a professional way are more than he can fulfill. He is chief surgeon of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, and this in itself is a big enough task for any man, but in addition to this he has other professional work and has never lacked the time to interest himself in public affairs. In short he is a perfect example of the product of today, one of those men who accomplish enough for two ordinary men in their lifetime, and yet always seem to have time for one thing more.

James Francis Spelman was born in New York City, on the 18th of April, 1868. He is the son of Michael Spelman, who was a farmer and stockman of Pawnee, Oklahoma. His mother was Katherine Rogan, who was born in the Emerald Isle, and who is now dead. To Michael Spelman and his wife seven children were born, only two of whom are now living, Dr. Spelman and his brother John, who is an engineer for the Butte, Anaconda and Pacific Railway Company.

After the preparatory education of Dr. Spelman was completed he was sent to the University of Pennsylvania to take up the study of medicine. He was graduated from this school, which at that time, as now, was one of the best medical schools in the country, in 1890. He received an appointment as house surgeon at the hospital in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, and there he remained for six months following his graduation. In the fall of 1890 he turned to the west, and coming out to Anaconda decided to settle here. He began to practice here and it was not long before his ability and skill as a surgeon was recognized by his appointment as surgeon for the Montana Union Railway Company. This occurred in 1896, and since that time he has been tendered the office of surgeon for the Butte, Anaconda and Pacific Railway Company and of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company's hospital. This hospital is one well known throughout the state and, indeed, throughout the northwest, for it is a splendid institution of its type. That it has won this reputation is due in no small degree to the unremitting toil of Dr. Spelman. The capacity of the hospital is one hundred beds and it is open to all creeds and nationalities, as well as to any reputable physician or surgeon who may choose to take advantage of its facilities. Not only, therefore, as a surgeon does Dr. Spelman merit praise but also as an executive, for the practical working out of his plans for the hospital have resulted in the high reputation which the institution bears.

Not content with the practical experience he was getting, realizing that in his profession, as in no other, was it necessary to keep abreast of the times, in 1899 Dr. Spelman made a special trip to Europe and England for the purpose of study. While in London he entered St. Bartholemew's Hospital and took a special course in surgery which lasted for six months. He endeavors through constant reading and study to keep informed of the improved methods of surgery which are each day being advanced, and his patients need never fear any thing bordering on old fogysm from Dr. Spelman.

In politics he is a member of the Democratic party, though he has never cared to take a very active part in the political game. His interest in education led him to accept an office as member of the school board, and for one year he served as its very efficient president. In his own profession he has been honored with the office of president of the Montana State Medical Association, serving during the year of 1895. He is a firm believer in the value of Montana real estate and is the owner of considerable valuable property in the city of Anaconda and elsewhere. His beautiful home is a silent witness of the doctor's modern and progressive ideas.

In March, 1895, Dr. Spelman was married to Miss Isabelle Coburn, a native of New York. Three children have been born to this marriage. The eldest, James Rewalt Spelman, now aged fourteen, is attending high school, and the younger two are Mary Belle and Francis Coburn Spelman. Mrs. Spelman is the daughter of Francis Coburn, who was a native of Scotland, and a railroad engineer by profession. His wife was Mary Cross, who was born of Irish parentage. Both are now deceased.

The visitor to Anaconda is certain to be shown the hospital of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company among the first sights of the city, for the citizens of Anaconda are proud of this institution, and well they may be. It is seldom that outside of the big cities of the east one finds so splendidly equipped and well managed a hospital. Dr. Spelman's name is well known throughout the state on this account, but fame and reputation mean little to him, for his heart is wrapped up in his work, and perhaps this is the very reason why he is so successful.

WILLIAM A. SELVIDGE. Every department of mercantile business has its high class representatives in Billings, Montana, and in the hardware line a conspicuous example of this fact is exemplified in Mr. W. A. Selvidge, president and manager of the Billings Hardware Company. He has spent his entire commercial career in some department of the hardware trade and is thoroughly acquainted with its peculiarities and points of advantage and especially with those features of the trade which require expert knowledge.

Mr. Selvidge was born in Jasper county, Missouri, on his grandfather's old homestead, June 24, 1867, the son of William Lee and Margaret (Cummings) Selvidge. His mother was a native of St. Louis, where she was born March 22, 1849, and her demise occurred in this city May 5, 1906. Mr. Selvidge, senior, claims Knoxville, Tennessee, as his native home, and December 28, 1846, was the date of his birth. He was taken by his parents to Missouri when very young, and attended school in Casper county until sixteen years old, when he enlisted in the Sixteenth Regiment of Volunteer Cavalry of Missouri, and remained in the conflict until the end of the war. Returning to the pursuits of peace, he followed his trade as machinist until 1892, when he went west and settled at Lewistown, Montana, on a ranch and remained at that place during the succeeding ten years. He then took up his residence in Rosebud county, locating near Forsyth, and is still living at that place, following the occupation of ranchman. A well known and highly respected citizen of that community, he is interested in all departments of life necessary to the well being of the people of any such locality. Politically he is an advocate of Republican party principles, he is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and is fraternally affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

W. A. Selvidge spent his early life on his father's farm in Casper county, Missouri, and in his boyhood days attended the district school of that community. He early decided upon the business which he would adopt as a life career and as a young man went to Cedar county, in the same state and there found opportunity to learn the hardware business. From there he went to Guthrie, Oklahoma, which then, although the first capital of the territory, was but a small town, and Mr. Selvidge's hardware store which he opened at that point was the first of its kind in town. He remained in Guthrie for two years and in 1890 disposed of his business there in order that he might seek a better location further to the west. His choice settled upon Livingston, Montana, and he preceded to conduct a hardware business there. From then until 1895, Mr. Selvidge conducted hardware stores successively in Castle and Lewistown, then retired from the retail hardware business and accepted a position as traveling salesman for a large wholesale hardware house, and thenceforward made his home in Billings. In 1904 he again decided to engage in business for himself and organized the Billings Hardware Company. This firm purchased the business of the A. L. Babcock Hardware Company, wholesalers, and under Mr. Selvidge's energetic management the concern's trade has increased very extensively and the Billings Hardware Company is rated as one of the most substantial and prosperous in this section of the state.

Mr. Selvidge is a liberal, public spirited citizen and is deeply concerned for the commercial, industrial and civic welfare of this city, being ready at all times to lend the weight of his influence to such projects as have for their object the further development and upbuilding of this section. He has numerous prominent lodge connections, holding membership in Judith Lodge, No. 3, Knights of Pythias, Lewistown, Montana; Guthrie (Okla.) Lodge, No. 3, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; and Billings Lodge, No. 394, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Mr. Selvidge was married September 24, 1890, at Kansas City, Missouri, to Miss Emma Rahner, who was born in Kansas City. They have one son, George Byron.

WILLIAM P. MURN. Possessed of a broad and comprehensive knowledge of the principles governing the operation of railroads and all the rules and regulations pertaining to railroad traffic, William P. Murn, district roadmaster of the Yellowstone division of the Northern Pacific Railroad, is recognized as a railroad operator of superior capacity and ability throughout the northwest. Having begun his career as a railroad man in the humble capacity of water boy to a section gang, he has thoroughly familiarized himself with all the details of the business and management, and has won promotion through hard work and thorough honesty, intelligent effort and efficient services. Mr. Murn was born in the province of Quebec, Canada, August 19, 1863, and is a son of Thomas and Dora (McGorlick) Murn, natives of County Leitrim, Ireland.

Mr. Murn's parents left their native Erin in 1850 on a sailing vessel and after a voyage of six weeks landed in Quebec, Canada, where for about fifteen years Thomas Murn followed the sea for a livelihood. He then engaged in farming, on a property about forty miles north of Quebec, but in 1871 moved to St. Cloud, Benton county, Minnesota, and was there engaged in farming up to the time of his death in 1906, when he had reached the remarkable age of ninety-nine years. Mr. Murn was a man of remarkable memory, and could recall scenes and reminiscences of his boyhood in the old country, one of his favorite remembrances being of the time he saw the soldiers returning from the great battle of Waterloo. His wife passed away in 1898 at the advanced age of eighty-six years, and they were the parents of ten children, four of whom died in infancy. Six lived to maturity, and five still survive. The second in order of birth was Paul, who died at the age of fifty-seven years. He was engaged in railroading during the greater part of his life, being roadmaster on the Northern Pacific for about twenty years, but at the time of his demise was engaged in farming in Minnesota. Margaret, one of Mr. Murn's sisters, is the wife of Peter Conley, of Ottawa, Ontario, Canada; Katherine is the wife of William Lavis, of Anaconda, Montana; Mary, resides in Dickinson, North Dakota; and John, Mr. Murn's surviving brother, makes his home in Benton county, Minnesota.

William P. Murn attended school in Quebec until he was ten years of age, at which time he moved with his parents to Benton county, Minnesota, and there finished his education in the public schools. His first employment was as water boy for track hands on the Great Northern Railroad when he was fifteen years or age, and he later became a section hand. Faithful and intelligent work won him the foremanship of a gang when he was only nineteen years old, and in 1883 he went to Mandan, North Dakota, and entered the service of the Northern Pacific Railroad as assistant foreman over an extra gang. He was then made foreman of a section gang, and in 1887 resigned his position and turned his attention to braking on a freight train for one year. Returning to his position of foreman, he was engaged in laying steel rails, and in March, 1890, was promoted to the position of acting roadmaster of the Yellowstone division. In October of the same year, having proved his ability in this capacity, he was appointed district roadmaster, a position which he holds at the present time, his headquarters being in Glendive. Mr. Murn was pilot of the first through passenger train over the Northern Pacific from Taylor, North Dakota, to Glendive, and in various ways has participated in the growth and development of transportation facilities in this section. He is widely known in railroad circles, and is popular alike with officials and employees. In political matters he has maintained an independent stand, reserving the right to vote for the candidate he deems best fitted for the office at stake, irrespective of party connections. He is an active member of the Roman Catholic church, being identified with St. Julian's congregation at Glendive, and belongs to Miles City Council, Knights of Columbus.

Mr. Murn was married to Miss Annie K. Reuther, who was born in the southern part of Germany, and they have had four children, of whom two died in infancy, the survivors being Thomas and Ottilia. The former is attending Georgetown University at Washington, D. C., a student in the law department.

DONALD L. BLACKSTONE. A rising young lawyer of Chinook, where he has a fine practice, Donald L. Blackstone is fast winning for himself an honored and prominent name in the legal profession of Blaine county. Gaining success through his own efforts, he is eminently deserving of the high position which he has won, not only as an attorney, but as one of the most popular and esteemed members of the community. A native of Wisconsin, he was born of pioneer stock on a farm in Shullsburg, Lafayette county, April 4, 1881.

Theodore E. Blackstone, his father, was also born in Wisconsin, and there spent the earlier part of his life. For many years he followed the profession of a civil engineer, but after coming with his family to Montana, in 1890, was also engaged to some extent in agricultural pursuits. He was a prominent member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and was a veteran of the Civil war, in which he fought valiantly, taking part in many important battles. He died at Helena, Montana, in 1890. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Hardy, was a native of Pennsylvania, and is now living in Chinook, Montana. Nine children were born of the marriage of Theodore E. and Mary E. (Hardy) Blackstone, as follows: Harry R., a ranchman, living in Chinook; John D. and Mary B., both engaged in ranching at Chinook; Edith J., of Chinook, widow of a Mr. Wescott; Daisy L., living at Fort Benton, superintendent of the Chouteau county schools; Theodore C., a stenographer in Helena; Katherine, wife of James Gilpatrick, of Seattle, Washington; Ernest, a wholesale druggist at Portland, Oregon; and Donald L.

Previous to coming with his parents to Montana, Donald L. Blackstone attended school in Shullsburg, Wisconsin. The educational advantages in Chinook, where the family located, being exceedingly limited, in the fall of 1890 he was sent to Helena to continue his studies, going first to the grammar schools, and being graduated from the Helena High School with the class of 1899. Four years later, in the spring of 1903, he was graduated from the law department of the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, and in June, 1903, was admitted to the Michigan bar. Returning to Montana, Mr. Blackstone was admitted to the bar at Helena in July, 1903. He then began the practice of his chosen profession in Chinook, being for a few months associated with W. S. Townner. The partnership, however, was dissolved in 1904, and Mr. Blackstone has since continued his legal work alone, through his own efforts having built up a splendid legal practice.

Taking a prominent part in town and county affairs, Mr. Blackstone was appointed United States commissioner in 1905, and reappointed to the same position in 1909. He has also the distinction of having been elected county attorney of Blaine county, which was formerly a part of Chouteau county, in the first year of its existence.

On August 22, 1906, Mr. Blackstone was united in marriage with Sarah H. McKibban, of Detroit, Michigan, and they have one child, Donald L. Blackstone, Jr. Mrs. Blackstone is a woman of culture and refinement, and a valued member of the Presbyterian church.

WILLIAM H. DAVEY, proprietor of the Butte Grill, former mayor, and one of the well known and progressive citizens of Butte, was born in St. Lawrence county, New York, on the first day of August, 1862, a son of Thomas and Elizabeth (Gilmore) Davey. Thomas Davey was a native of Ireland, served as a Union soldier in the Civil war, and later was the proprietor of a grocery business in St. Lawrence county. He also conducted an hotel in that pleasant rural region for a number of years. At the time of his death, in 1896, he was residing on his farm, which had been his home for some years previously. His wife, the mother of our subject, was a Canadian by birth, and died when but twenty-two years of age, and is buried in York state.

William H. Davey received his education in the public schools of his native county, and for several years after leaving school was engaged at various occupations. In the year 1890 he came to Butte, and for three years worked at first one thing and then another until he could find some line of business into which he wished to establish himself. In 1893 he established a catering business, of which the present Montana Catering Company is the outgrowth. In 1912 he became proprietor of the Butte Grill, which he is successfully conducting along the same high standard that has always marked his business efforts.

In political matters he has for many years been one of the foremost members of the Democratic party in his city, and has been called upon to fill positions of honor and trust. In 1895 he was elected alderman from the sixth ward, and in 1901 was elected mayor of Butte, serving until 1903. Mr. Davey is a well-known member of the Masonic order, having attained the thirty-second degree, and also belongs to the Elks, as well as the Eagles.

His public spirit, like his loyalty to Butte, has never been questioned, as no movement of benefit or along the lines of progress has ever appealed to him in vain. He represents a high type of a business man whose success has come from his own efforts and the practice of giving to his patrons service, quality and full measure of value. He is one of the best known men in the state in his line of business. He was married on November 13, 1893, to Miss Sophia Cogler.

NEIL COLLINS. One of the most influential and popular labor leaders of Montana is Neil Collins, the present city weighmaster of Anaconda. He has been identified with Montana practically ever since it became a state of the Union, and has been active and well known in the industrialism which has produced so large a share of the wealth of the Treasure state.

Mr. Collins was born in Ireland, on the 13th of January, 1865, and spent the first twenty-four years of his life in his native country. His education was obtained in the national schools of Ireland, and his first wages were earned as a lad of fifteen when he secured employment in a mercantile house of Belfast. This continued to be the general line of his work until he came to America.

His parents were Neil and Rose (Sweeney) Collins, both of whom spent all their lives in the old country and now rest under the green sod side by side. The father, who died in 1889 at the age of seventy-four, was a farmer by occupation, took an active part in Irish politics, and was connected with the Land League movement. The mother passed away in 1886, when about sixty-eight years old. Of their eight children, Neil was the sixth and the youngest son, and he has two sisters and one brother in Montana, namely: John A., of Anaconda; Katie, the wife of W. A. Deeney, of Butte; and Rose, who is unmarried and keeps house for her brother Neil.

On leaving Ireland for America Neil Collins came direct to Montana, where he arrived January 1, 1890, locating in Anaconda. The first four years he was sampler in the local smelter, and then did similar work at Salt Lake City for one year. During the next three years he was employed in the mill at Wood River, Idaho, and during this time participated in the Thunder Mountain stampede, but remained there only a few months. Since that time Mr. Collins has been a continuous resident of Anaconda. His work in the skilled departments of mineral production had resulted in his acquiring a position of influence among his associates, and he has for many years been active in organized labor. On his return to Anaconda he was again connected with the smelter until his election as financial secretary of the Mill and Smelter Men's Union, an office which he filled for five years. He was appointed to his present office, that of city weighmaster, in April, 1911. As a labor leader he has enjoyed the confidence and respect of both sides, and gained the reputation of being a fair and trustworthy counselor in all difficulties. Citizens of all classes admire Neil Collins.

Mr. Collins is a member of the Catholic church, and fraternally is affiliated* with the Knights of Columbus, the Ancient Order of Hibernians, of which he is now county president, the Woodmen of the World, of which he has been one of the managers, the Modern Woodmen of America, and the Fraternal Order of Eagles. In politics he takes an active interest in the work of the Democratic party, and has a broad-minded, public-spirited attitude toward all social and civic activities.

Mr. Collins states the views of a laboring man toward the Treasure state: "From the standpoint of a working man, for conditions, wages, etc., I know Montana is the best state in the Union. The main cause for this is that labor organizations have established conditions on a basis that is solid and fair to both sides. To my mind there are no clouds to obscure the future." Mr. Collins is unmarried and resides at 511 West Sixth street.

MORTIMER M. DONOGHUE, president of the Montana State Federation of Labor, was born in New Britain, Connecticut, on January 17, 1867, and is the son of Malachi and Katherine (Garfield) Donoghue, natives of Ireland. The father came to the United States when he was twenty years of age, the mother also coming over in her early years. They were married in Connecticut, where they located soon after their arrival in this country, and the father is still a resident of New Haven, now in his sixty-eighth year. The mother died in Ireland in 1879, during their sojourn there of a few years, and in later years the father contracted a second marriage in the state of Connecticut, when Mary Day became his wife.

When Mortimer Donoghue was seven years old his parents returned to Ireland, taking him with them, and they settled at Cahirciveen, County Kerry, their former home, and there he spent seven years of his life. He was educated in the schools of Ireland and his native state, Connecticut, and when he left school began to learn the plumbing trade under the instruction of a Mr. Duffy, one of the leading plumbers in Hartford, to whom he was apprenticed for that purpose. He remained with Mr. Duffy until he had gained a thorough mastery of the trade, and then came west to Denver, Colorado, where he worked at his trade until 1890.

The Centennial state offered him prosperity, but he looked upon Montana as a better field for his advancement, and in the year last named he moved to Helena, where he was engaged in business as the partner of Jeremiah McCarty for a year and a half. At the end of that period he was appointed deputy sheriff of Lewis and Clark county by Gen. Charles D. Curtis, who was then sheriff, and served in that capacity as long as General Curtis held the office. When his official term was over he moved to Anaconda, which was then attracting nation wide attention to its smelting interests.

Mr. Donoghue, however, did not become absorbed in mining, as he found plenty of work at his trade as a plumber and for three years he worked at that. At the end of that time he was elected a justice of the peace, but soon after he assumed the office he resigned to accept the position of under-sheriff, tendered him by John Fitzpatrick, then county sheriff. He served as under-sheriff through 1897 and 1898, and at the end of his term moved to Red Lodge, removing in 1899 to Butte, where he continued to work at his trade.

Mr. Donoghue was president of the Building Trades and Labor Council for two years and was a member of the council for six years. For two years he was chairman of the arbitration committee of the Building Trades and Labor Council, and under Mayor Corby's administration he was plumbing inspector for two years. He was vice-president of the Montana State Federation of Labor for two years, and in August, 1909, was elected president, since when he has given his time and attention to the duties of that office. Mr. Donoghue is an interesting speaker and writer on the subject of labor, and in an article by him which appeared in the Inter Mountain of Butte in 1910, he says in part: "The Montana Federation of Labor has been instrumental in passing most of the laws now in vogue which are beneficial to the masses of the people. They maintain a legislative committee at the state capital, and many a pernicious bill introduced in the legislature has met defeat solely through the watchfulness of our committee.

"The Montana Federation of Labor demands that which is right and condemns that which is wrong.

"We demand shorter hours and better sanitary conditions for the mothers and future mothers of our state, who, through force of circumstances, are obliged to work for day's pay.

"We demand better conditions for all who toil. "We are endeavoring to fight the battle of the people in our own way as we see it."

The incumbency of this leading place in the labor movement of Montana has made it necessary for Mr. Donoghue to attend meetings of labor organizations in all parts of the United States, and in all of them he has proven himself a worthy representative of the labor unions and central labor bodies of the Montana state, and one of the wide-awake, capable and progressive adherents of the labor movement. He is well versed in all that pertains to labor matters. He is not radical. He seeks the uplift of the working man and asks for justice and no more.

In the annual convention of the American Federation of Labor held in Atlanta, Georgia, in November, 1911, which lasted over two weeks, and was the most imposing and important assembly of the representatives of organized labor that ever convened in the world, Mr. Donoghue was a conspicuous figure. He was up to date and ready for discussion of all matters affecting the interest of the organized toilers of the land, and he also had many problems growing out of his own experience in the labor movement to present for the consideration and action of the convention.

On September 6, 1893, Mr. Donoghue was married to Miss Katherine Hogan in Helena, Montana. She is the daughter of Lieut. Martin Hogan, one of the early pioneers of that part of the state, and during the Civil war was a lieutenant of the Twenty-first Montana Infantry, and was assigned to scout duty and stationed at Fort Shaw in this state and Fort Buford. He was killed in Missouri after the close of the war, during the reign of terror that lasted sometime after the contending armies in the great conflict returned to the pursuits of peaceful industry. Mrs. Donoghue came to Montana in 1867, during the period of her father's location at Fort Shaw, coming by boat from Indiana to Fort Benton, prior to the days of steam trains. Mr. and Mrs. Donoghue have four children; the eldest being twins, Mortimer and Marguerite, who were born in Helena on June 24, 1894, and who are now students in the Butte high school; the others are Kate, born in Anaconda on August 30, 1897, also attending high school, and Nellie, born in Butte on April 22, 1902, and now enrolled as a student in the McKinley public school.

Mr. Donoghue is a member of the Plumbers' Union in Butte, one of the most advanced and active unions in the labor movement in this section of the state. Fraternally he is a member of the Loyal Order of Moose. He is a Catholic in his religious faith, and in politics he holds himself beyond partisan control, his vote always being cast with reference to the most worthy candidate, in so far as he feels himself able to judge.

NELSON MCGARVIN, M. D. A venerable and highly esteemed physician of Butte, Nelson McGarvin, M.

D., is a practitioner of much experience and skill, and during his residence in this city has had a fair share of professional practice, and to a marked degree has won the regard of the people, his genial manner and pleasant words making him a welcome visitor to the well and strong as well as to the sufferer to whom he ministers. He was born January 30, 1830, in Canada.

The doctor's father, James McGarvin, was born in Canada, and died in Ohio. He was a painter and contractor by trade, and an excellent worker. He married Mary Kelley, also a native of Canada, and they became the parents of two children, as follows: Elmira, wife of John Raymond, of Michigan; and Nelson.

Receiving his rudimentary education in the graded schools of his Canadian home town, Nelson McGarvin entered the medical department of the University of Toronto, from which he was graduated with the degree of M. D. in 1856. Immediately beginning the practice of his chosen profession, Dr. McGarvin continued it successfully in Canada for thirty-four years. Coming from there to Montana in 1890, the Doctor located in Butte, where he has since built up a good general practice, his knowledge and skill winning for him the confidence of the people, and assuring him a fine patronage. The doctor has kept abreast with the times in regard to the advancements made in the medical science, not only by a close study of the medical journals, but through his visits to the leading hospitals not only of our own country, but to those of Paris and London.

Dr. McGarvin is a member of the Ontario, Canada, College of Physicians. He is a Republican in politics, but takes no active part in public affairs. Fraternally he belongs to Masonic and Odd Fellows No. 219, of Ontario; and is one of the oldest members of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in America, having joined the Order in 1849. Religiously he is a member of the Episcopal Church.

In Ontario, Canada, December 27, 1860, Dr. McGarvin was united in marriage with Catherine Sarah Hiltz, who was born, February 13, 1835, in Canada, a daughter of Joseph and Sarah (Johnson) Hiltz. Five children have been born to Dr. and Mrs. McGarvin, namely: James Edgar, now living in Mexico; Emma J., wife of Charles Hill, of Monroe, Michigan; Mary Frances, wife of Harry White, of Des Moines, Iowa; Alberta, wife of M. M. Bricker, of Berlin, Canada; and George Nelson, of Vancouver, British Columbia. Dr. McGarvin is of Irish ancestry, his ancestors on both sides of the house having emigrated from Ireland to Canada many years ago. Mrs. McGarvin, however is of German descent on the paternal side of the house, her grandfather Hiltz having immigrated to Canada from Germany in early manhood, and having there married.

JOHN DRYBURGH is a Scotchman by birth, born in the city of Glasgow, where his father, also christened John Dryburgh, was foreman of the factory owned by Tennants. John, Junior, was born in 1864, on November 29, the sixth of seven children. When John was eight years of age his father died, and two years later his mother went to her brother in America in the state of New Jersey. John had begun to go to school in Scotland, and he continued to attend in America for two years and then the family removed to Iowa, where the uncle had purchased a farm in the southeastern part of the state. This was Mr. Dryburgh's home for fourteen years, during which time he worked on the farm and also learned the carpenter's trade. At the age of twenty-six he went to Bismarck, North Dakota, which then offered a promising field for builders, and when the demand became somewhat less for carpenters in Dakota he went to Spokane, where he followed the same trade for a time. In 1890 Mr. Dryburgh came to Helena and for a year was at work on the interior of the state capitol. In 1901 he decided to go into business for himself and he at once secured some valuable contracts for the erection of a number of handsome residences in the city. For the first four years his business was chiefly the erection of private residences, but later he did considerable work on public buildings. One of his earliest contracts in this line was for the Denver Block, on which he secured a sub-contract. At present he is one of the most successful men in the contracting business in the city.

Of his brothers and sisters, but one is living, William Dryburgh, born in Scotland and now a resident of Helena and a painter by trade. Mr. Dryburgh is unmarried. Until recently his mother, Margaret Crawford Dryburgh, resided with him, but she died in this city in 1909.

Fraternally Mr. Dryburgh is prominently connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is a past grand master of the Odd Fellows of the state. He has held all chairs in his order and in 1910 served as representative to the Sovereign Grand Lodge at Atlanta, Georgia. He is a member also of the Helena Lodge of Elks, and the Brotherhood of American Yeomen. He takes an active part in the political life of the city and is one of the powers of the Progressive Republican party. For six years he was alderman and in 1910 ran for mayor of Helena. In that campaign he was defeated by Mayor Edwards, who won by a majority of thirty votes, there being a split in the party.

In addition to his contracting business, Mr. Dryburgh is a stockholder in the Montana Mining Company, and also in the Montana Sheep Ranch. He is one of Helena's successful and prosperous bachelors, and one of her popular citizens as well. He declares that his favorite amusement is base ball, which he thinks a game worthy of the attention of all true Americans, of whatever nationality, and comparable with that other good American diversion, politics.

JOHN B. COPPO. The city of Butte, Montana, boasts as many modern and up-to-date improvements as can be found in any community of equal size in the United States. Factories, business establishments and homes have every new equipment and the latest discovered conveniences to make work easy and life comfortable. In respect to the installation of modern conveniences in buildings of all classes there is no feature of the work that is greater in importance or requires more skillful ability and exact knowledge than that of plumbing and the placing of plumbing fixtures. The city is therefore fortunate in numbering among its leading business institutions the Butte Plumbing Company, in which John B. Coppo is an active partner.

Mr. Coppo was a lad of eleven years when his parents came to Butte in 1890, coming from Houghton county, Michigan, where the son was born September 23, 1879. His father and mother both were born in Italy, the former, John Anthony Coppo, immigrated to America in 1874, and the latter, who was before her marriage Madeline Ragano, arriving here three years later in 1877. They settled in Michigan where for several years Mr. Coppo, senior, worked as a miner, although he was by trade a tinner. Both parents are still living and are numbered among the most respected residents of Butte.

Mr. Coppo received his first schooling in the county schools of his native home, and continued his studies in Butte after the removal of the family to this city, becoming a graduate of Butte High School with the class of 1895. After securing his diploma he entered the Butte Business College and completed a commercial course in that institution of learning. His education completed, he secured employment as a messenger with the World Company, worked eight months in that capacity then accepted a position in the office of J. R. Reed of the firm of Sherman & Reed, and six months later became an apprentice with the Eschle Plumbing & Heating Company, 57 East Broadway. This proved to be the work which he most enjoyed and for which his natural talents seemed to best fit him and so well did he perform his work at all times that he remained with the company for nine successive years. Severing that connection at the end of the period named Mr. Coppo next became the assistant of Edwin Wright, plumber, working with him for two years.

Shortly after resigning his position with Mr. Wright he decided to make a change of location and went to Caldwell, Idaho, in which city he established a plumbing business of his own and after a time took a partner in the person of Christopher Fahey. The business was then conducted under the firm name of the Caldwell Plumbing & Heating Company. A very successful business was done for some time by this concern, then on account of the ill health of his wife Mr. Coppo found it necessary to return to Butte. This he did and for three years was employed in various shops of this city, the last two with the Butte Plumbing Company. Finding his services invaluable to his business, Mr. William Dewerkin who was then proprietor of the Butte Plumbing Company, invited Mr. Coppo into the firm, and in May, 1911, the present partnership between these two expert plumbers was formed. It would be strange indeed if the business did not prosper under the personal management of two such able and experienced men and it is a safe prediction to make that so long as the enterprise continues in the hands of its present proprietors it will continue to hold its place of leadership among the plumbing establishments of this progressive city. The firm also install all modern system of heating apparatus.

Mr. Coppo was married at Pocatello, Idaho, June 17, 1905, when he took as his wife Miss Elizabeth Ray, daughter of Patrick and Helen Ray, and a native of Utah. Her family were among the oldest settlers in Butte. Mr. and Mrs. Coppo have a pleasant and hospitable home at 401 South Excelsior street.

Mr. Coppo is a man of independent thought and action, is liberal and progressive in his ideas and methods, and is a public citizen of the highest type, while his many admirable personal qualities give him an enviable popularity wherever he is known.

MATHIAS KRANZ. Among the floral and business houses known to Great Falls is the one conducted by Mathias Kranz, and he has been gradually building up such an establishment in this city since 1891. At the present time his operations have reached an important place, and constitute one of the leading enterprises of the city. Mr. Kranz is a man eminently fitted to carry on this work, in view of his early training in Germany, where in his youth he was employed in the landscape department of the royal domain of Kaiser William. All his life has been devoted to similar pursuits, and his success of later years is but the outcome of his natural love for the work, and his continuous study of the most approved methods of conducting the business.

Mr. Kranz was born in Prussia, on November 18, 1864. He is the son of Mathias Kranz, Sr., and his wife, Lucille. Both were natives of Germany. The father, who was a military man, died in 1869 at the age of seventy-one and the mother died two years later, when she had attained the age of sixty-four years. Eight children were born to them, Mathias, Jr., being the youngest. He was a student in the public schools of Germany until he reached the age of fourteen, when he entered the landscape department of the kaiser, and he was thus employed until he was eighteen years old, when he immigrated to America, making his way first to Minneapolis, Minnesota. He was in the horticultural business there for a year, when he and his brother, Peter, who had also immigrated to the United States, entered the gardening business. After two years of industrious and profitable work Mathias Kranz sold out his interest to his brother and came to Great Falls, reaching there on April 7, 1890. He remained there but a few days, then going to Helena and securing employment with the L. B. Wells Conservatory, with which firm he remained until December, 1890. He next returned to Great Falls, with the intention of starting in business. He bought a number of lots in a suitable locality, which he prepared in a suitable manner as to soil, after which he built his hot beds. He began by putting in lettuce plants, and in June of 1891 he started the first hot house known to Great Falls. He has continued to increase his quarters from time to time and add new departments until now he conducts a flourishing florist business in addition to hot house market gardening. The present plant is covered with forty thousand feet of glass and is equipped with a modern steam heating plant, and the entire concern is managed and fitted out in the most up-to-date and approved manner known to the business. He has developed a heavy outside trade, as well as local, and his plant runs at its capacity in all seasons in order to meet the demands upon it. Altogether, he has made a most splendid success of the venture which he launched in a small way, and the results of his labors are justified by the unfailing energy and careful precision with which he has conducted the business from the beginning.

Mr. Kranz is well known, and is both prominent and popular. He has a large number of influential and admiring friends in and about Great Falls who have been interested in his progress these many years, and who take much pleasure in the distinctive success which he has achieved. He is prominent in fraternal circles, and in that relation is a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Modern Woodmen of America, the Woodmen of the World, of which he is a trustee, and the Catholic Order of Foresters. He is a Democrat in his political allegiance, and is a member of the Roman Catholic church, in which he was reared in the Fatherland.

On February 11, 1896, Mr. Kranz was united in marriage with Miss Annie Stergart of Great Falls, Montana. She was a daughter of Charles and Lizzie Stergart of Great Falls, the mother being now deceased. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Kranz—Charles M., born in Great Falls on June 9, 1898 and Dorothy, born November 15, 1899. Both children are attending school in Great Falls, where the family home is maintained.

LEWIS W. SUHR. The combination of business interests with which he is connected has made the name of Lewis W. Suhr too well known in business circles of Great Falls to make necessary an introduction, but a brief record of the career of this prosperous figure in the commercial life of the city may prove of interest to the younger generation, as well as to their elders, in that it shows the successive steps by which the boy in humble circumstances gained the position of head of the largest business of its kind in his adopted city and won the esteem and confidence of his conferees to such an extent that he has been chosen to direct the management of some of this section's leading enterprises. Born in Oldendorf, Germany, August 5, 1868, Mr. Suhr was still an infant when brought to the United States in 1869 by his parents, Henry and Wilhelmina (Lenn) Suhr, natives of the Fatherland. His father, who followed farming throughout his life, passed away in Buchanan county, Iowa, at the age of seventy-eight years, while his mother was seventy-seven years of age at the time of her death in February, 1907. Of their seven children, the two oldest died in infancy, while Lewis W. was the sixth in order of birth.

Lewis W. Suhr secured his education in the district schools of Buchanan county, Iowa, during the months when he could be spared from work on the home farm, as was the custom of the agriculturists' sons of his day and vicinity. When he was sixteen years of age he had completed his studies, and from that time until he attained his majority he was engaged in work on the Iowa homestead. He had passed his twenty-first birthday when, with his little capital, he started out to make his own way in the world, going direct to St. Paul Park, Minnesota, where he secured employment as a clerk in a retail grocery store. Later he was initiated into the mercantile business in the same city, working two years for twenty-five dollars per month and his board, but resigned his position to become associated with the firm of Hoxsie & Jagger, wholesale fruit dealers of St. Paul, with whom he remained for two years. In 1890 he came to Montana and for a short period engaged in ranch work, but eventually went to Great Falls and took a position with the Great Falls Meat Company, a concern with which he was connected two years. His next employers were Bach, Cory & Company, wholesale and retail grocers with whom he was connected in a clerical capacity, and eventually he became identified with Churchill & Webster. It was while he was employed by this firm that Mr. Suhr conceived the idea of establishing the Great Falls Ice and Fuel Company, which was incorporated in 1898, at which time he became president, a position he has since held. This is the largest company of its kind in the city, and the first to be incorporated here. In 1904 the company purchased the business of the Great Falls Transfer Company, which was made a part of the original corporation, and a large ice plant is now located on the river above the water works. Mr. Suhr is also proprietor of the Merchants Fruit Exchange, which was established in February, 1907, exclusively a wholesale fruit and farm produce company, doing an annual business of $60,000. This firm is situated on First avenue, South, and Park Drive, and in addition has a cold storage plant on the railroad, with all modern facilities for the accommodation of shippers and one of the finest plants of its kind in the state. Mr. Suhr has displayed great organizing and executive ability, and justly merits the confidence in which he is universally held by business men of the city. Although his rise has been rapid, only legitimate business operations have received his attention, and his reputation is that of a man of the strictest integrity. He belongs to the Merchants Association, and to the Builders exchange and Board of Commerce, and to the local tent of the Knights of the Maccabees, is a Republican in political matters, although he takes no active part in public life, and in his religious views is a Presbyterian and holds the office of elder in his church.

On May 16, 1894, Mr. Suhr was married at Great Falls to Miss Lenora R. Robinson, of Indiana, and four children have been born to this union: Donald L., born October 27, 1895, and in his third year at the Great Falls high school; Carl Henry, born August 1, 1897; Charles Edgar, born September 14, 1899; and Esther Margaret, born May 14, 1903. The pleasant family residence is located at No. 727 First avenue, South, where the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Suhr are welcomed with true western hospitality.

JOHN DOHERTY. Eminently worthy of the respect and confidence so universally accorded him by his fellow associates, John Doherty, of Townsend, is rendering satisfactory service as county clerk of Broadwater county, performing the duties devolving upon him ably and intelligently. A native of Ireland, he was born in County Antrim, February 14, 1865.

His father, Michael Doherty, has spent his entire life in County Antrim, Ireland. During his active career he was one of the foremost educators of his county, as a teacher being highly esteemed, and very popular. He is now retired from active pursuits, and is living at ease in his old home town, an honored and respected citizen. His wife, whose maiden name was Sarah O'Raw, died in County Antrim, her native place, in 1908, leaving six children, as follows: John, the special subject of this brief personal record; Mary D.; Patrick C., engaged in farming in County Antrim; James, who is farming in County Antrim; Michael J., who, following in his father's footsteps, is a school teacher in County Antrim; and Sarah C., who is living with her father in the old home.

An apt scholar from boyhood, John Doherty completed his early education at Belvidere College, in Dublin, Ireland. Returning after his graduation to County Antrim, he engaged in professional work, for four years being principal of the Lough Giel National School. Immigrating to the United States in 1890, Mr. Doherty traveled extensively for six months, visiting many of the larger and more important cities, including New York, Chicago, and Denver, and in the autumn of that year located at Great Falls, Montana, where he remained until August, 1891, being employed as clerk in the Woolridge Hotel. During the ensuing nine years he was prosperously engaged in mining and prospecting in different parts of the state. Coming to Townsend in 1900, Mr. Doherty secured a position as clerk and bookkeeper in the hardware establishment of the Berg Hardware Company, with whom he remained until January, 1907. He has since served as county clerk of Broadwater county, having been elected to the office in the latter part of 1906, and re-elected each term since. Mr. Doherty is a loyal Democrat in politics, in his quiet way working hard in the interest of his party. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and consul of the local camp; and a member, and the secretary of the Brotherhood of American Yeomen.

Mr. Doherty married, November 22, 1899, Ada E. Van Voast, who was born in Townsend, Montana, of pioneer ancestry, and to them three children have been born, namely: Mary Doris, aged ten years; Florence Sarah, aged five years; and John Emmet, aged three years. Mr. and Mrs. Doherty are members of the Roman Catholic church, and are rearing their children in the same faith.

John G. Van Voast, Mrs. Doherty's father, was born in Iowa, where he was reared and educated. In 1870 he came to Montana, and having bought land in Broadwater county was here engaged in ranching until his death, in 1907. He married Florence McFadden, who is still living on the home farm. She is a daughter of the late George McFadden, an early pioneer of Montana, who made two trips across the plains with ox teams. Mr. McFadden, Mrs. Doherty's maternal grandfather, came from Missouri with his wife and family to Montana in 1862, and spent a year at Alder Gulch. The journey westward was fraught with perils, he and his family having narrowly escaped being massacred by the Indians. The accidental poisoning of Mr. McFadden's stock at Poison Springs, compelled him to return with his family to the nearest trading post, a day's journey to the eastward from the springs, to buy more stock, the other members of the train with which he was traveling having refused to sell him any. Buying more stock, he again turned his face westward, and on the second day's journey came upon the remains of the companions with whom he left Missouri, all of whom had met death at the hands of the treacherous savages, who had massacred the entire party, and stolen their stock and wagons. Mr. McFadden's wife refused to remain at Alder Gulch after the first year, and they returned east by the same route which they had followed in coming to Montana, going to Kentucky. In 1866 Mr. McFadden again crossed the plains to Montana, settling in Broadwater county, where he subsequently carried on a flourishing business for many years, being a miner, a rancher, and a trader, bringing in supplies in large quantities by wagons.

JOSEPH E. REHAL, known as the founder of Joplin, Montana, came to this place in 1910. He has valuable real estate holdings here, is financially interested in a number of important local enterprises and is a man of mark in all the relations of life.

A native of Syria, Joseph E. Rehal was born July 14, 1872, and he is a son of Elias and Bekash (Tahla) Rehal, both of whom were born and reared in Syria and the former of whom passed to the life eternal in 1892, at the age of sixty-five years. The mother is still living, her home being in Syria. Elias Rehal was engaged in the wholesale liquor business during the greater portion of his active career and was a merchant of note in his native place. He figured prominently in the Syrian revolution in the early '60s and his father was one of the leaders in that disturbance. Mr. and Mrs. Rehal became the parents of twelve children, four of whom are living at the present time, in 1912.

The ninth in order of birth in a family of twelve children, Joseph E. Rehal was reared to maturity in the place of his birth and there attended school until he had reached his sixteenth year, when he entered the employ of his father and worked in the liquor business until 1888. In that year he immigrated, with four brothers, to America, coming to Montana in 1890. In 1891 he located in the city of Great Falls, where he engaged in the retail dry-goods business and where he continued to reside until 1900. He then filed a homestead in Chouteau county and subsequently founded the village of Joplin in 1910, which now has a population of three hundred and which holds rank as one of the most enterprising little towns of this section of the state. Joplin has a postoffice, fifteen mercantile houses, two good hotels, concrete walks, and is equipped with excellent telegraph and telephone service. The town is beautifully laid out, its streets being fully seventy-five feet wide. The people come about forty miles to Joplin to do their trading, coming from the Canadian line on the north, which is about forty miles distant.

Mr. Rehal erected the first four buildings to go up in Joplin and among them is the Park Hotel, a fourteen-room hostelry, equipped with steam heat and other modern conveniences. It is recognized as the best hotel between Havre and Shelby. He also built and owns the opera house, which is now being remodeled for mercantile purposes and which will eventually be the home of the Rehal Mercantile Company. Up to the fall of 1911 Mr. Rehal was extensively engaged in the sheep-raising business in Chouteau county and he still owns his fine homestead, which comprises 320 acres and which is eligibly located one and one-half miles distant from Joplin. Nasef Rehal, an older brother of the subject of this review, is residing on a large ranch adjacent to the village of Joplin and is achieving marked success as sheep raiser and rancher.

In his political allegiance Mr. Rehal is a staunch supporter of the principles promulgated by the Republican party, in the local councils of which he is a most active factor. In May, 1910, he was appointed postmaster of Joplin and for one and one-half years he has been a member of the board of trustees of school district No. 59. Prior to coming here he served for two years on the Chester school board. Mr. Rehal is deeply and sincerely interested in all that affects the general welfare of Joplin and Chouteau county and his fine character and exemplary life commend to him the unalloyed confidence and esteem of all with whom he has come in contact. In religious matters he and his wife are devout communicants of the Roman Catholic church, in which faith they are rearing their children.

May 14, 1898, in the city of Butte, Montana, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Rehal to Miss Annie Zinnil, who was born in Syria and who came to America with her parents when she was a child of but four years of age. Mr. and Mrs. Rehal are the parents of five children, whose names are here entered in respective order of birth,—William J., Olga, the first white child born on Lonesome Prairie homestead; Hazel, Gertrude and Julius.

NELS L. OLSON. A man who has gained unusual prominence in the business world of Butte, Montana, is Nels L. Olson, who is president of the Olson Implement Company, of that city, and is also at the head of the Swedish Crucible Steel Company, of Detroit, Michigan. From the humble trade of blacksmith Mr. Olson has made his way upward and, in addition to extensive financial interests, he has won world-wide distinction as inventor of the Olson adjustable plow points, which are manufactured by the Swedish Crucible Steel Company, Detroit, Michigan.

A native of Sweden, Nels L. Olson was born October 15, 1868, and is a son of Ola and Ingar (Christofferson) Olson, both of whom were also of Swedish birth, the natal year of the former being 1818 and of the latter, 1828. Ola Christofferson was a farmer by occupation and he passed his entire life in the place of his birth, where he died in 1883. His cherished and devoted wife passed away in 1905.

Nels L. Olson attended the schools of his native place until he had reached the age of fourteen years, when he was apprenticed to learn the trade of blacksmith. At the age of seventeen years he decided to come to America and after arriving in this country was for six months a resident of Chicago, whence he later removed to the Sacramento valley, in California. For one year he was a resident of the Golden state and then he located in the city of Portland, Oregon, there engaging in the blacksmith business for a number of years. In 1890 he moved to Butte, Montana, where he resided for about twenty years and where he conducted a blacksmith shop of his own, continuing to operate the same for the ensuing five years. In 1897 he established the Olson Implement Company, which he conducted individually until 1901, when the business was incorporated under the laws of the state with a capital of $20,000. Mr. Olson is president of the company; Mrs. Olson is secretary and treasurer; and Arthur Brown is a stockholder and a member of the board of directors. Offices of the company are located at No. 745 South Wyoming street. This concern ranks as the largest implement house in the entire state and controlled a very large and lucrative business. The business, however, is being wound up, owing to the fact that Mr. Olson cannot give it his personal attention.

Mr. Olson has extensive realty holdings in Butte and as a business man in that city is honored and respected for his fair and straightforward dealings. On November 1, 1910, he patented a plow point, known as the Olson adjustable plow point, which is manufactured by the Swedish Crucible Steel Company of Detroit, of which he is president and the largest stockholder. The other officers are: A. J. W. Nixon, vice president; and J. H. Tobin, Jr., secretary and treasurer. The adjustable plow point is a great time and labor saver for the farmer.

In politics Mr. Olson maintains an independent attitude and his religious faith is in harmony with the tenets of the Swedish Lutheran church. He was one of the founders of the Swedish chapter or lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, at Butte, and has figured prominently in many movements tending to promote progress and development in this section of the state.

At Butte, in November, 1899, Mr. Olson was united in marriage to Miss Ina Mickleson, who was born in Finland, whence she came to America with her parents as a child. She was raised and educated in Michigan. Mr. and Mrs. Olson have three children, all of whom were born in Butte, namely,—Florence, Norman and Blanche.

EGBERT H. IRISH. Butte, Montana, is recognized as the commercial and industrial center of this portion of the northwest, and numbered among its important enterprises are many which devote the greater amount of attention to supplying the wholesale trade. In this class of business undertakings is classed the harness and saddlery establishment of Egbert H. Irish, located at No. 133 South Main street originally, but now occupying greatly enlarged quarters at No. 106 East Park street.

Mr. Irish learned his trade at Yarker, Ontario, Canada, serving his apprenticeship in the factory of A. A. Van Luven. After achieving competence as a saddle and harnessmaker he continued to work for Mr. Van Luven for a time, but four years later went to Manitoba and followed his trade as a journeyman during the subsequent fourteen years. The date of his arrival in Butte was 1890, and during the first six years of his residence here he found employment in the leading shops and gained the reputation of being one of the most competent experts in his line of industry. He established his present business on an independent basis in 1896, and the continual growth of the enterprise finally obliged him to seek a location where operations could be advantageously carried on at increased capacity. Accordingly in May, 1907, he moved into the factory he now occupies, which is reputed to be the largest and best equipped establishment of its kind in the entire northwest. He manufactures all kinds of heavy harness and has an equipment embracing the most modern and highly improved machinery to be obtained for this line of work. Three expert workmen are employed and under Mr. Irish's personal management and direction the quality of product turned out is of the highest grade, material and workmanship being also of the best class.

Mr. Irish is a native of Canada, having been born at Ontario, November 4, 1855, the son of William Stafford and Jane (Jones) Irish, both of Canadian parentage. The elder Irish died in Canada in 1862, when forty years old, his wife surviving him many years. She was a resident of Yarker, Canada, at the time of her death which took place in 1884, in her fifty-sixth year. They were the parents of four children, Egbert H. being next to the oldest. His early life was spent on his father's Canadian farm and his education secured in the public schools which he attended until sixteen years of age. His marriage to Miss Agnes Henderson was solemnized at Manitoba, November 28, 1890, she being also a native Canadian and the daughter of Thomas Henderson.

Mr. and Mrs. Irish have two children, the elder of whom, William G., was born in Manitoba, August 31, 1889, and the younger, Egberta, born in Butte, September 4, 1903. They reside at No. 1113 West Aluminum street, in an attractive home which is owned by Mr. Irish, and are recognized as among Butte's influential factors in leading political, social and religious circles. They are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, and Mr. Irish is fraternally affiliated with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, in which lodge he has been a trustee for three years. He is a man of high moral principles, strict honesty and integrity, an independent thinker and a conscientious citizen of the city and country of his adoption.

EDWIN NEWTON. Born and reared on a farm in Ohio, and now one of the enterprising, far-seeing and resourceful contractors and builders of Missoula, Edwin Newton is one of the valued and serviceable contributions of the East to the progress, development and adornment of the Farther West. He is knowing and skillful in his business, and has found a fruitful field for his enterprise in this new country and his services in constant demand since he first offered them to the public here.

Mr. Newton was born in Medina county, Ohio, on April 17, 1864, and is a son of Lewis and Lucinda (Wise) Newton, also natives of that state, where the father carried on the operations of a good farm. They came to Missoula in 1890 to pass their declining years with their son, and here the father died when at fifty-nine years of age, and the mother at about the same age. They were active in business during their residence in this city.

Their son Edwin began his education in the public schools of his native county and completed it at the Normal School in Ada, Ohio. After leaving that institution he learned the carpenter trade and worked at it a number of years in the state of his birth. In 1890 he came to Montana and located in Missoula, and here he has ever since had his home and employed his energies in good work. His first employment in the city was with A. J. Gibson, with whom he was associated until 1895, when he determined to set up in the contracting and building business for himself.

Subsequent events have proven that he was wise in making the venture, as he has been very successful in securing big contracts, and has made for himself an excellent and wide-spread reputation by the manner in which he has done the work provided for by them. He has a large and completely equipped plant, which affords him ample facilities for big undertakings, and his energy leads him to keep all his forces in motion at all times, as far as possible. He is therefore diligent in seeking business and very zealous and industrious in attending to it when he gets it.

Mr. Newton has erected his own monument in Missoula in the form of many imposing and useful structures, which he has built with every regard to permanency of endurance and adaptability to requirements in each case. He put up the Harnois theatre, the Cheney block, the Greenhood building, and many others of equal magnitude, massiveness and attractive appearance. As he is a man of strict integrity, whose work can be relied on for its excellence in every respect, he always has plenty of engagements on hand to keep him and his force occupied, and by reason of his ability, progressiveness and devotion to his work, the city is improving in the solidity and impressiveness of its business and public structures under the guidance of his wise head and the tireless industry of his skillful hand every year.

Mr. Newton was married in Missoula in 1905 to Mrs. Louise Hershey, like himself a native of Ohio. Fraternally he is connected with the Order of Woodmen of the World. Politically he is a member of the Progressive party. In business he is solid, substantial and productive. In all the elements of his citizenship he is altogether worthy of the high regard so freely bestowed upon him by all classes of Missoula's population. He is deeply interested in the welfare of the community, and the community knows this and esteems him cordially as one of its best and most useful residents.

CAPT. AMOS SHAW, senior member of the transportation firm of Shaw & Powell, and owner of a fine ranch in Shields River valley, makes his home in the city of Livingston, Montana, although for a number of years he has been widely known among and universally popular with the tourists visiting Yellowstone National Park. A seafaring man during the greater part of his life, he was captain of a vessel on Yellowstone lake more than twenty years ago, and still spends a large part of his time in displaying the wonderful beauties of that great section to visitors from every part of this and other countries. Captain Shaw is indeed a "son of the water," for he was born on the Atlantic ocean, June 1, 1848, a son of Amos and Mary (Cassedy) Shaw. His father, a native of Yorkshire, England, was educated in his native country, and as a young man enlisted in the English army, becoming a member of the Twenty-first Royal Infantry. During the fourteen years of his services he saw many foreign lands, and later he joined the English navy and continued as a man-o'-war's man for six years. Coming to the United States shortly prior to the Civil war, he first located at Flint, Michigan, and later removed to Bay City, that state, where he enlisted in the three months' service at the outbreak of the war between the states. He was sergeant of the First Michigan Cavalry at the first battle of Bull Run, after which he was appointed drill-master at Bay City, and sent two well-equipped companies to the front. His was not the nature to remain so far away from the scene of activities, however, and he eventually veteranized as sergeant of a Michigan regiment of volunteers, with which he served until the close of the war. Shortly thereafter he died, being in his sixtieth year. His wife, who was born in Dublin, Ireland, survived him until 1871, and was sixty-two years old at the time of her death. They were married in England and had twelve children, as follows: Mary, born in the Holy Land; a son, John, born at Gibraltar; Sophia, born on the coast of Spain; William, born in Egypt; Elizabeth and Louise, born in London; Amos born on the Atlantic ocean, but his birthplace was chosen in Michigan, by law of the state; Albert born on the coast of Africa; Maria, Charles and Lillian, born in Canada; and Edward, born in Michigan. Of the foregoing, three survive, namely: Amos; Charles, who resides in Michigan; and Lillian, the wife of Charles Rich, living in Indiana.

Amos Shaw received his education in the schools of Bay City, Michigan, and when only nine years of age began working on the old steamer "Globe," a coast-line vessel, running between Saginaw, Michigan, and Buffalo, New York. For four years he acted in the capacity of cabin boy, and then began sailing on the Great Lakes during the summer months and working in the lumber woods in winter. He was so engaged until 1890, on December 8th of which year he arrived in Livingston, Montana, where he supervised the building of the steamer Zillah for the Yellowstone Lake Boat Company, for use on Yellowstone lake in the National Park. This vessel passed inspection July 10, 1891, and was immediately put into service, with Captain Shaw in charge, a position which he held during the seasons of 1891, 1892 and 1893. Since the latter year he has been engaged in the transportation business under the firm name of Shaw & Powell, taking passengers through the great park of natural wonders. Mr. Shaw's ranch, located in the Shields River valley, is devoted to horses, cattle and grain, and is known as "Idylewyld." He was first made a Mason in Frankfort lodge, No. 32, A. F. & A. M., at Frankfort, Michigan, from which he demitted to become a member of Livingston lodge, No. 32, A. F. & A. M., and he also holds membership in other fraternal societies. His political proclivities are those of the Democratic party, but he has never entered the public arena as an office holder.

On April 20, 1876, Captain Shaw was married to Miss Eunice Conway, who was born in Medford, Maine, daughter of John and Margaret Conway, natives, respectively, of New Brunswick and Maine. Mr. Conway removed to the state of Michigan as a young man, and there spent his life in agricultural pursuits, rising to a position of prominence among his fellows and being a well-known Democratic politician and office-holder. Mr. and Mrs. Shaw have had six children: Jessie E., Walter, Chester, Reether and Reeva, twins, the former of whom is deceased, and Rose. The comfortable family home, where the many friends of the captain and his family often meet on social occasions, is situated at No. 123 West Geyser street.

EUGENE D. COLEMAN has been a resident of Glasgow since 1890, and is a pioneer builder of the city. He is now, and has been for many years, a prominent merchant and hotel man in the city, and is altogether one of the leading spirits of the place. He has watched the city grow from a small village to its present thriving state, and has ever had the best interests of Glasgow close to his heart. While he has prospered in a financial way, his prosperity has furthered the growth of the city, and every venture launched by Mr. Coleman has proved a developing influence in the history of Glasgow.

Mr. Coleman is a native of the state of Wisconsin, born in Greene Lake county, that state, on January 29, 1857. He is the son of Thomas and Ellen (Wilson) Coleman, the father a native of Ireland, born in Dublin, as was also the mother. Thomas Coleman immigrated to America as a young man and settled in Wisconsin in 1844. He later moved to Olmstead county, Minnesota, and died in 1908 at the age of ninety years. The mother died at the home of her son, Eugene, of this review, in 1911, at the age of seventy-seven. They were the parents of eight children, of which number five are living today, Eugene being the eldest. The others are: Hannah, living in Baltimore, Maryland; Theresa, in Valley county, Montana; Thomas, a farmer in Valley county; William, a farmer and stockman in Canada.

Until Eugene Coleman was fourteen years of age he attended the public schools of his native town, after which he remained with his parents until he reached the age of nineteen years, employed in various capacities. At the time he was nineteen years of age he went to Swift county, in western Minnesota, where he took up a tract of land and for four years he farmed there, after which he sold out and went to Devil's Lake, North Dakota, there securing another piece of land, where he remained for another four year period, engaged in farming and cattle raising. He then disposed of his interests there and went to Minot, where he was for five years engaged in the livery business, and at the end of that time sold out again and came to Glasgow, reaching here in 1890. Mr. Coleman began life in Glasgow as a hotel keeper, as the business partner of Hiram Rowell. In a comparatively brief time he purchased the interests of his partner, and shortly thereafter the building burned to the ground. Mr. Coleman erected in its place a first class modern fireproof brick structure, at that time by far the finest building in Glasgow, and to this day the best hotel in the city. He has continued as the proprietor of this hotel through all the years, although having many other interests in and about Glasgow. In 1902 Mr. Coleman erected a brick block to be used for store purposes and engaged in the meat and grocery business, which venture proved a decided success with him. In 1906 he entered the general hardware business, and he has continued in all these lines to the present day, in consequence of which he is occupying a leading place in the ranks of the mercantile men of Glasgow. In addition to his hotel and store buildings, Mr. Coleman has done considerable other building in Glasgow, and is the owner of some fine residence property, owning eight houses, and also holds several sections of valuable ranch lands in the county. He is a director of the First National Bank of Glasgow, and in a public way, has served as county commissioner of Valley county, and was the first elected to the office. He has served as state committeeman for the past fifteen years. He is a Democrat, and is active in politics in a quiet and undemonstrative way. During his life in Minot, North Dakota, Mr. Coleman assumed his share of the civic burden, as he has ever done in Glasgow, and was one of the first aldermen of the town of Minot, and was also sheriff of the county of Ward, North Dakota, for one term. He is affiliated with a number of fraternal orders, among them being the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Knights of Pythias, and the Order of Eagles, in all of which societies he has held all offices.

In 1878 Mr. Coleman was married to Miss Sarah Buckley, a daughter of John Buckley, who was a pioneer settler of the state of Iowa where he passed his life as a farmer. She died in 1890. One son was born to them,—Leo Coleman, who is the manager of his father's hardware and general merchandise business. He is a young man of splendid qualities, who finds his heartiest amusement in his deer-hunting expeditions, of which he possesses as mementoes a fine collection of mounted deer and goat heads, which he has brought down in the mountains of Montana.

JACOB H. KARNOP. Every line of business is being successfully prosecuted at Harlowton, Montana, for the city is of sufficient importance to command a large trade from the surrounding country, and the people who make it their market demand the best of goods and service. One of the leading business ventures of this community is that conducted by Jacob H. Karnop, dealer in implements and automobiles, who has built up a large enterprise from a small beginning and won the confidence of the people of his adopted section. Mr. Karnop is a native of a country that has given to the United States some of its best citizens, having been born January 17, 1867, in Germany, son of Henry and Wilhelmina (Gutzman) Karnop.

Henry Karnop was born in Germany and there married, and in 1875 brought his family to the United States, settling in Wisconsin, where he followed various occupations. In his native country he had been a soldier in the German army during the Franco-Prussian war. He died at about seventy years of age, in Wisconsin, where his wife also passed away, and they were laid to rest side by side. They were devout Christians and active in church work, and were the parents of six children, Jacob H. being the third in order of birth, while the remainder reside in North Dakota and Wisconsin.

Jacob H. Karnop was eight years old when the family came to the United States, and until he was fifteen years of age made his home in Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, where he secured his English education. At that time he started out to make his own way in the world, traveling to Minnesota and locating on the Kimmel Indian Reservation for about two years, where he hunted and trapped in addition to working in the lumber camps. He then went to the Red River valley, in North Dakota, where he conducted a grain ranch for several years, but since 1890 has been a resident of Montana. On first coming to the Treasure state he engaged in ranching on the open range, and also drove freight teams for some time, and then came to Harlowton, where for three years he acted in the capacity of city marshal. At the present time he serves as city constable, and while on the range acted in the capacity of school director. On leaving the office of city marshal, Mr. Karnop established himself in the implement and automobile business, an enterprise that has had a steady and pleasing growth from its inception. He carries a complete and up-to-date line of goods, being the only exclusive dealer in this line in the city and his progressive methods and absolute integrity have served to materially advance his city's commercial importance. At all times he is ready to testify to his belief in Montana's future, especially as an agricultural state, and it must be conceded that he is fully competent to judge, his long business experience, in which he has dealt extensively with the farming class, making him fully conversant with agricultural conditions. In Democratic politics he is recognized as wielding much influence, but he is not an office seeker or active politician, although he believes that every man should enter the arena when called upon to do their duty as citizens. Personally, he has the true out-of-door man's love for all kinds of square sport, especially baseball, and also enjoys a good speech, public lectures and music. His fraternal connection is with the Modern Woodmen of America.

On March 10, 1897, Mr. Karnop was married at Big Elk, Montana, to Miss Ida Smith, daughter of an old pioneer couple who came to this state at an early day from Missouri, and four children have been born to this union: Henry F., who is deceased; Katherine L. and Freda, in school; and Henry Glenn, the baby, at home.

JAMES M. BURLINGAME is one of Montana's well-known public men, having been active in the business and political life of the state for the past twenty-three years. Mr. Burlingame belongs to one of the old families of New England, his paternal ancestors and the founder of the American branch of the family, Roger Burlingame, having come from England to Connecticut in 1650.

Mr. Burlingame's father, who was also named James M., is a veteran of the Civil war. He was born at Sterling, Connecticut, but in early boyhood moved with his father, Peter Montgomery Burlingame, to a new home in central New York. Here he lived until early manhood and received his education, and from here he enlisted for service in the Civil war. He was mustered out in May, 1865, upon the close of the war. Later he moved to Decatur, Illinois, where he married Mary L. Grant, a native of Lexington, Kentucky, on October 2, 1866, and soon thereafter with his wife, drove overland from Decatur, Illinois, to Owatonna, Minnesota, where for more than a quarter of a century they had their home. There Mr. Burlingame, who was a graduate of the University of Michigan, was engaged in the practice of law.

It was at Owatonna, Minnesota, that James M. Burlingame of this review was born and there he passed his boyhood days. He is the eldest of the eight children of his parents, five of whom are yet living, as are also his parents. He attended the public schools of Owatonna and was graduated from its high school in 1887. Entering the law department of the University of Minnesota as one of the first students, he was graduated in June, 1890, receiving his LL. B. degree at that time. He had, however, in the year previous been admitted to practice in all the courts of Minnesota, being so admitted after a special examination by a committee of attorneys appointed by the judge of the district court at his old Owatonna home, the certificate permitting him to practice law having been issued on his twenty-first birthday. Upon completing his legal studies in Minnesota, he came to Great Falls, Montana, and commenced the practice of his profession. This he followed closely for several years, but finding the confining nature of his work seriously impairing his health, he gave up the practice of law in 1897, and became associated with W. S. Frary in the insurance, investment, loan and real estate business, which copartnership still continues, the firm of Frary & Burlingame being now one of the oldest in Great Falls.

Mr. Burlingame is a Republican in politics and has always taken an active interest and part in political matters. In 1896, during the free silver campaign, Mr. Burlingame was chosen secretary of the regular Republican county central committee for his home county of Cascade. In 1900 he was secretary of the Montana Republican state central committee, and in the campaigns of 1910 and 1912 has been the state committeeman for Cascade county on the Republican state central committee, in 1912 being also a member of the executive committee of that organization.

In December, 1900, Mr. Burlingame was appointed deputy collector of internal revenue by Charles N. Webster, collector for Montana, Idaho and Utah. This position he held until appointed register of the United States land office at Great Falls, Montana, having been appointed to the office in 1902 by President Theodore Roosevelt. He entered upon his duties as its first register when that office was opened on August 1, 1902, and served two terms, having been re-appointed by President Roosevelt in 1906, retiring at the expiration of his second term, on August 1, 1910.

During his period of service as register of the Great Falls land office, the business of that office rapidly increased, until, reaching high water mark in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, its business was by far the largest of any government land office in the United States. During that year over fourteen thousand homestead filings were made, in addition to many hundreds of filings under the other public land laws.

At present Mr. Burlingame is serving in the capacity of state senator for Cascade county, having been elected in 1910, and having first served as state senator in the twelfth legislative assembly. During his first session he introduced and assisted in passing many bills of public importance. Among the bills so introduced by him were a bill for "An Act to Regulate the Sale of Prison Made Goods;" one known as the "Weights and Measures Bill," and providing for the inspection of all public weights and measures, and the seizure and destruction of any found short, etc.; another, amending the statute, providing that sewerage systems must be approved by the state board of health and to prevent the pollution of streams, etc.; one providing for special improvement street lighting districts in cities; and one providing for raising revenues to maintain and improve public parks. All of these bills became laws. Mr. Burlingame was also a member of the Joint Senate and House Conference Committee which framed and presented the bill providing that candidates for United States senator should be nominated the same as the state officers and voted for by the electors of the state, this bill, in effect, providing for the election of United States senators by direct or popular vote. The bill, which was one of the most important measures passed by the assembly, also became a law, as did many others which he advocated and assisted in pushing through. Mr. Burlingame will also be a member of the senate in the thirteenth legislative assembly.

In 1893 Mr. Burlingame married Miss Amy Gregg, a native of Ohio, and the daughter of Joseph Olds Gregg. To them were born two daughters, Frances Marie and Amy Louise, both students in the Great Falls high school. The wife and mother died in May, 1903.

In September, 1904, Mr. Burlingame returned to Owatonna, Minnesota, and there married Miss Kathryn Percy Berg, the daughter of Frederick C. Berg. Miss Berg, like himself, was a native of that place. She died on August 21, 1906, without issue.

Mr. Burlingame has always been active in lodge circles, and is a member of the several Great Falls Masonic bodies, including the blue lodge, royal arch, council and commandery, and is a member of Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Knights of Pythias and the Sons of the American Revolution.

J. WILSON ANDERSON, county treasurer of Meagher county, Montana, has been a resident of the state since about 1890, at which time he left the Ohio home where he was born and reared, and sought the larger advantages and opportunities of the west. The establishment of his brother, E. J. Anderson, in the state some years previous, was one incentive, and after his locating in Meagher county he became associated with the sheep business which his brother had been successfully conducting for a number of years, and also worked in the store owned by that brother. Previous to his coming to Montana he had confined his activities to his father's farm in Columbiana county, Ohio, where he was born on February 10, 1858.

Since his coming to Montana some twenty years ago, Mr. Anderson has seen the greatest period of development which the state has known, and has prospered most happily, and has taken a prominent place in the life of White Sulphur Springs. His election to the office of treasurer of Meagher county came as a recognition of his ability and high character as a citizen, and since he became the incumbent of that office he has discharged its duties in a manner in every way creditable to himself and his constituents. He is ably assisted in the routine work of the office by his daughter, Queen, as deputy county treasurer.

Mr. Anderson is a Democrat, and has been actively interested in the political affairs of the county since he became a citizen of it. He is a member of the Presbyterian church, that faith being shared by his wife and children as well. He is a Mason, holding membership in the blue lodge, in which he has filled all chairs. Mr. Anderson is a man who is possessed of quiet and home-like instincts, one of his chief enjoyments being found in his love of reading. He is enthusiastic with reference to the future of the great state in which he makes his home, and as to its opportunities for the man who wishes to make the best of his life in the way of progress in material things. He believes that Montana leads all her sister states in climate, agricultural and mining possibilities and in her wonderful power sites, as well as innumerable other natural advantages.

In November, 1880, Mr. Anderson was married in Ohio to Miss Fannie Kramer, the daughter of Christian and Hanna Kramer. Eight children have been born to them, four boys and four girls, all living. They are: Argall, living at home; Dilworth, resident of Twin Falls, Idaho; Fred, at Havre, Montana; Maud, the wife of Clinton McKetchen, of White Sulphur Springs; Queen, deputy county treasurer, employed in her father's office as previously mentioned; John and Jennings Bryan Anderson, both living at home.

BEN LEVALLEY. The efficient and popular sheriff of Custer county, Montana, needs but little introduction to the citizens of this part of the state, for he has been identified with the business and public activities of Miles City and the vicinity for more than twenty years, during which time he has proven himself an excellent representative of the best types of western citizenship. Born in the Province of Quebec, Canada, on his father's farm, situated about twenty miles from the city of Quebec, August 23, 1867, he is a son of John and Jennett (McCartney) Levalley, and a grandson of David and Mary Levalley, of French birth.

Mr. Levalley's father was born on the Isle of Guernsey, in the English Channel, in 1817, and when still a lad was brought to the Dominion of Canada, his parents settling in the Province of Quebec. After obtaining a common school education, John Levalley turned his attention to fishing on the coast as far north as Labrador, and after leaving the ocean took up his residence on a farm, and the remainder of his life was spent in agricultural pursuits, his death occurring in 1908, when he had reached the advanced age of ninety-one years. His wife, who was a native of Ayreshire, Scotland, died in 1892, when seventy years of age, and of their nine children, eight survive:

Dan, John, Thomas, Jennett, James, David, Ben and Alexander.

Ben Levalley remained at home, working on his father's farm and attending the district schools, until he was eighteen years of age, at which time he removed to Price county, Wisconsin, and was there employed in the lumber woods during the winter months, also driving logs down the Flambeau river. He spent four years as a lumberman, and in 1890 first came to Miles City and secured employment as a cowboy. After eight or nine years spent in that occupation he went into the sheep business with his brother Dan in Dawson county, but after five years as a sheepman sold his interests to engage in the livery business in Miles City. This venture proved a successful one, but in November, 1910, when he was elected sheriff of Custer county on the Republican ticket, Mr. Levalley sold his business in order that he might give his whole attention to the discharge of the duties of his office. As sheriff Mr. Levalley has proved himself efficient, active and courageous, and in addition is one of the most popular men who ever held the office. His administration of affairs has been marked by conscientious performance of duty at all times, and no man is held in higher respect or esteem.

On March 4, 1902, Mr. Levalley was united in marriage with Miss Laura Carlotta McBain, who was born in the Province of Quebec, Canada, daughter of William and Anna (Brown) McBain, the former a native of Scotland and the latter of the Province of Quebec. Mrs. Levalley's parents had a family of nine children, of whom eight are living, she being the fourth in order of birth. Mr. McBain came to the Province of Quebec as a young man, and has since been engaged in agricultural pursuits. Sheriff and Mrs. Levalley have three interesting children, namely: Lila, Wallace and Harold.

JOHN FRANKLIN WILLIAMS. A man of broad capacity, untiring energy, and steadfastness of purpose, John Franklin Williams has gained distinctive recognition among the prominent and prosperous merchants of Chouteau county, being proprietor of a large and well-stocked drug store at Chinook, where he also owns other property of value. He was born, March 24, 1869, in Eastman, Wisconsin, of English lineage.

His father, William Williams, was born, bred and educated in Burton, England. Migrating to the United States as a young man, he became a skilful veterinary surgeon, and also follows farming to some extent. He served his adopted country in the Civil war as a brave and gallant soldier, and afterwards located in Wisconsin, living there many years. In 1887 he migrated with his family to McCook county, South Dakota, making the long and tedious journey with teams, being a long time on the way. He located first at Montrose, but subsequently moved to Sioux Falls, where his death occurred in 1905. He was a highly respected man, and a prominent member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons. He married Mary Reed, who was born in England, and died at Sioux Falls, South Dakota. Two of their twelve children have passed to the life beyond, and ten are still living, as follows: Joseph R., William T. and James Henry, engaged in farming at Sioux Falls; Arthur G., of National City, California; Jane, wife of George Finney, of Eastman, Wisconsin; John Franklin; Clara M., wife of Albert Larsen, of Sioux Falls; Anna, wife of L. E. Gage, of Sioux Falls; Lillie E., wife of Winslow Braley, also of Sioux Falls; and Emma, who married a Mr. Schroeder, of Sioux Falls.

Educated in Wisconsin, John Franklin Williams was graduated from the Eastman high school with the class of 1887, and the same year accompanied the family to South Dakota, locating on a ranch in Montrose. Taking up the study of pharmacy in Montrose, he was there for five years in the employ of the Walker Drug Company, becoming in the meantime very familiar with the business. In looking about for a favorable location when about to start in business on his own account, Mr. Williams wisely decided that some point further west was the proper place for a man of energy and brains; he accordingly came, in March, 1890, to Chinook, Montana, and started in the drug business on a modest scale. Successful far beyond his expectations, he has built up an extensive and profitable business, the leading one of its kind in Chinook, and through persistent attention to his business, good management and wise investment has acquired considerable wealth. Mr. Williams owns a valuable ranch lying about ten miles from Chinook, and good residential property in Chinook, including among other residences his own cozy and comfortable home. Several years ago he was appointed postmaster at Chinook to fill out an unexpired term of a Democrat, and was afterwards appointed postmaster by President McKinley for an additional term. Politically he is a stalwart Republican, and is now serving as alderman. Fraternally he is an active member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and of the Modern Woodmen of the World.

Mr. Williams married, in 1905, Ida May Cardiff, who was born in Illinois, a daughter of J. R. Cardiff, who is now living in Texas, where he has a large rice plantation. Both Mr. and Mrs. Williams are held in high esteem throughout the city, and their home is a center of social activity. They have one child, Mildred May Williams.

GEORGE R. SAFLEY. Prominently identified with the business interests of Bozeman for more than twenty years, largely interested in ranching, farming and stock raising operations, prominent in fraternal work and in the organization of movements for the betterment of his community, and the possessor of a brilliant record as a public official, George R. Safley is well deserving a place among the representative men of Montana. Like many other successful Montana business men, Mr. Safley is a product of an Iowa farm, having been born in Cedar county, December 15, 1855, a son of George and Janet (Brown) Safley. His father, a native of Dall House, County Perth, Scotland, was born in 1812, and when thirty years of age left his native land for the United States. From June, 1842, until October 1st of that year, he traveled over the Atlantic ocean, and through river, canal and Great Lakes to the city of Chicago, where he met his brother, John, who had preceded him to this country in 1836. The latter, an Iowa farmer, met George with his ox teams, and they immediately started their journey overland, crossing the Mississippi river on the ice in the month of November. George Safley first located in Linn county, near Mount Vernon, and eventually took up government land in Red Oak township, Cedar county, Iowa, where he spent the rest of his life in agricultural pursuits. His death occurred in 1882, in the faith of the Presbyterian church. Originally a staunch Whig, during the war he was known as an Abolitionist, and subsequently became a supporter of Republican principles. He married Janet Brown, in 1838, in Scotland, she being a native of Abbotsford, Scotland, and they had ten children, of whom the first two were born in the old country: John, Ellen, Adam, Agnes, Mary, Charlotte, Janet, George R., William and Lewis.

George R. Safley secured his education in the public schools of Cedar county, Iowa, Tipton high school and Hopkinton Institute. He assisted his father in his farming operations until his marriage, September 22, 1890, to Miss Ella M. Shearer, who was born in Cedar county, Iowa, daughter of John D. and Susan A. (Noe) Shearer. Mrs. Safley's father was born in Loudenville, Ashland county, Ohio. He received his education in the schools of Ohio and as a young man became a teacher, following that vocation until he secured a farm in Iowa and engaged in stock-raising and grain growing until his death. He served as sheriff of Cedar county for ten years, and also acted as clerk of the county court for two terms, his daughter, Ella M., being his deputy. A staunch Republican and faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal church, he was honored and esteemed by all who knew him. He and his wife, also a native of Ohio, had four children, of whom two are now living: Mrs. Safley, and Charles T. Shearer, editor of the Butte Inter-Mountain, an evening newspaper.

Mr. Safley came to Montana on his wedding trip in the month of September, 1890, visited Yellowstone National Park, and on reaching Bozeman was so impressed with the city that he decided to embark in business here and soon thereafter established a furniture store and undertaking establishment. Mr. Safley has had no reason to regret his decision, for as the years have passed he has steadily forged to the front of the city's substantial citizens, associating himself with large enterprises and being honored with high public office. In 1907 he sold his furniture store, and moved his undertaking establishment one-half block west to his own modern building, at No. 230-232 West Main street, which he has fitted out with all the latest equipments of the business. In December, 1903, he purchased 660 acres of land in Gallatin county, which he has since devoted to grain growing, and in addition owns considerable city realty, both in Bozeman and Manhattan, Montana, and has 320 acres of valuable land near the latter city. He was one of the organizers of the Manhattan State Bank, in which he is a stockholder and director, is serving as a director of the Montana Life Insurance Company, and also assisted in the organization of the Gallatin Valley Electric Railroad. He has not only been successful as a promoter, but has shown great executive ability, and has the full confidence and esteem of his business associates.

Although his numerous business connections have made great demands upon his time, Mr. Safley has found leisure to engage in fraternal work. He is a popular member of Pathagoras Lodge No. 2, Knights of Pythias; Bozeman Lodge No. 6, A. F. & A. M.; Bozeman Lodge No. 463, B. P. O. E., Western Star Lodge No. 4, I. O. O. F., and other societies, and he and Mrs. Safley are connected with Lily of the Valley Chapter No. 4, O. E. S. In political matters a staunch Republican, he was in 1907 elected to the eleventh state legislature, being a member of that body when the famous Glacier Park was established.

IRA ALBERT LEIGHTON, M. D. The life of the city physician and surgeon in these modern days is one of unceasing activity. Modern methods and the high speed with which civilization pursues its relentless way makes demands upon the time and energy of the physician greater, perhaps, than upon men in any other profession. The extent to which specialization is pushed, the deep study required to keep abreast of the discoveries of the age and the everlasting call of the suffering public all combine to sap the vitality of the most rugged. But as modern days are strenuous, so the modern man has something of power in his makeup which works best under pressure. Dr. Ira Albert Leighton is well equipped to handle the responsibilities of his position. As not only is he well known, and that favorably, as a practitioner, but also as a legislator, having served with credit in the Tenth legislative assembly and is at present acting as state senator, and having the distinction of being the first and only Republican state senator elected from Jefferson county, which is the most eloquent commentary possible upon his standing in the community.

By the circumstance of birth Dr. Leighton is a New Englander, his birth having occurred in Corinth, Maine, March 8, 1860. There he lived until the age of five years and then removed with his parents to Pittsfield, Maine, where he remained until 1880. His father, Ira Leighton, was a native of Corinth, Maine, and there married. He was a farmer by vocation and devoted the earlier part of his life to agriculture. However, he was an invalid for forty years and died at Pittsfield at the age of ninety-two years. The maiden name of the mother was Eunice Tibbetts and she was the daughter of John Benjamin and Sanaba Tibbetts. Her demise occurred at Pittsfield at the age of eighty-six years and both she and her husband are buried in that city. Dr. Leighton was the youngest of a family of eight sons, all of whom survive with the exception of one.

Dr. Leighton is a self-made and self-educated man. In his youth he earned money in various humble capacities. His first work was in a shoe factory at Haverill, Massachusetts, starting in with a salary of three dollars and a half per week, but he did not long remain at the bottom of the ladder, working up eventually to be head man in the shipping department. The big fire which nearly destroyed the whole town lost him this position and doubtless changed his whole career, taking him from the industrial field and giving him to his profession. He also worked for a while at one of the resort hotels at Old Orchard Beach, Maine. He made his own way unaided through the several institutions of learning in which his education was obtained. In 1880 Dr. Leighton matriculated in the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor and was graduated there in 1885, having taken a literary and law course and then a complete course in medicine, to which his choice turned while in college. While at Ann Arbor he earned his way through college by acting during vacations as traveling representative for a publishing house. This concern offered a handsome gold watch as a special prize, and the Doctor, who won the watch, still carries it today. The results of his first year's medical examination at Ann Arbor (the same being competitive) were so excellent that he was placed in charge of the first ward of an Ann Arbor hospital. From his first introduction to Minerva he was known as a splendid student. His earlier education was received in the public schools of Kent's Hill and at Bucksport's Seminary, and after finishing in the public schools he attended and was graduated from the Maine Central Institute at Pittsfield. Subsequent to that he took a four years' preparatory course at Westbrook Seminary, whence he went to Ann Arbor. This self-acquired education will thus be seen to have been of the most thorough and varied character.

Dr. Leighton's brilliant career out of the immediate field of his profession has been referred to in a preceding paragraph. He was elected to the Tenth Montana legislative assembly in the fall of 1896 and served two years, well representing the cause of his constituents. His professional duties were such as to make it expedient for him to refuse renomination, but in 1910 the nomination for state senator was forced upon him and he was elected for a term of four years, being the present incumbent of the office. A circumstance of which the Doctor is justly proud is the fact that notwithstanding Jefferson county's being overwhelmingly Democratic he was elected on the Republican ticket, the affair being a great personal victory. He holds the pleasant position of pioneer Republican state senator from Jefferson county, Montana. At the present time he is acting as president pro tem of the senate. He was acting governor of the state from November 25, to December 2, 1912. His personal integrity and fine capacity for public usefulness are generally recognized and he everywhere enjoys trust and confidence, having conducted all his transactions according to the strictest principles of honor.

Dr. Leighton enjoys a number of fraternal affiliations, being prominent in Masonry and in his own life exemplifying those ideals of moral and social justice and brotherly love for which the order stands. For ten years he has been treasurer of the Masonic lodge. He is also affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is a communicant of the Episcopal church.

Dr. Leighton took a western girl for his bride, being married in Boulder, December 9, 1886, to Miss Cora Mae Hartell, of Kansas City, Missouri, a daughter of Jacob and Susan Hartell. Dr. and Mrs. Leighton share their charming home with one daughter—Katherine—aged thirteen. They enjoy a secure position in the best social life of the city and their circle of friends is co-incident with that of their acquaintances. Mrs. Leighton's mother died at the comparatively early age of forty, Mrs. Leighton being an infant at the time of that lamentable event. Her father died at the age of sixty, and both of these worthy people are interred at Independence, Missouri.

Dr. Leighton is exceedingly fond of reading good books, his taste in literature being of the highest character. He would be an out-of-doors man did he have leisure, but he is one of the busiest of men, his duties, professional and legislative, giving him time for no other considerations. Boulder has been indeed fortunate in acquiring him, for he has successfully achieved that highest vantage point of good and public-spirited citizenship.

EDWARD J. O'NEILL, president of the O'Neill Brothers Company, wholesale dealers in fruits and produce at Butte, one of the prominent and successful establishments of the kind in the state, was born in Saline county, Missouri, on September 8, 1850, and is a son of James and Mary (Ryan) O'Neill, the former a native of Canada, where his life began in 1811, and a pioneer farmer in Missouri, where it ended in 1886, and the latter of the same nativity, born in 1801. She died at the home of her son, F. D. O'Neill, a prosperous and prominent ranchman near Miles City, Montana, in 1906, having been a member of his household from the time of the death of her husband.

In his native county Edward J. O'Neill obtained a good common-school education, and after completing the course of instruction in those schools he went to Abilene, Kansas, where he secured a position as clerk and salesman in the mercantile establishment of Barry Brothers. He remained in their employ one year, then was appointed district agent for the McCormick Reaper Company, a post which he occupied for two years with benefit to himself and to the company.

Ever ambitious to become the proprietor of a business of his own, Mr. O'Neill, at the end of the time named, left the services of the McCormick people and changed his residence to New Mexico, where he entered general merchandising and also invested in profitable mining prospects. He grew tired of that country, however, and sold his interests there, and in 1890 he came to Butte and started the business in which he is now engaged. He carried it on for a number of years himself, until his brother, F. D. O'Neill, became associated with him in the management of it, and thereby increased the resources for conducting it and the enterprise and sweep of its operations, and aided in making it what it is now, one of the most progressive and prosperous in its line in this part of the country, with a large scope of territory tributary to it and a constantly increasing trade in both volume and value.

Mr. O'Neill is independent in politics, a devout Catholic in religion, a public-spirited citizen, true to every duty in public and private life, and ardently devoted to outdoor life and the sports and recreations it furnishes, especially hunting and fishing.

Ed J. O'Neill

ISAAC FREUDENTHAL has been a resident of the state of Montana since 1890, during a great portion of that time conducting an independent business enterprise in Great Falls and Whitefish, the latter being his present location. He has evidenced the well known ability of his countrymen in the merchandise business, and is today the proprietor of a thriving and thoroughly up-to-date shoe and clothing business in Whitefish. He has seen much of the difficulties, financial and otherwise, that the business interests throughout the country experienced in the panic of 1893 and its attendant results, and so severe was the effect of that depression upon his business that he was forced to succumb to the overwhelming tide of inactivity, and for some years thereafter he was engaged in other enterprises. The return of prosperity, however, brought renewed courage and strength, and in 1906 Mr. Freudenthal came to Whitefish and established his present business, which has from the time of its inception to the present proved a successful venture, and one which has added in no small measure to the mercantile advantages of the town.

Mr. Freudenthal was born in Baden-Baden, Germany, on July 1, 1864. His parents were both born in Germany, where they still reside. The father is a prominent and prosperous wholesale importer of Rhine wine, and is well and favorably known to the American trade. He is now in the eighty-fourth years of his life, and is still hale and hearty, and yet carrying on the industry which has claimed his attention for so many years. The mother is now seventy-nine years of age. They became the parents of six children, four of whom immigrated to the United States. They are: Mrs. A. F. Leopold, of Kalispell, Montana; Mrs. George F. Leopold, of Livingston, Montana; A. L. Freudenthal, of Spokane; Isaac L. Freudenthal, the subject; Beno Freudenthal, in Germany, as is also Regina, the wife of a Mr. Rosenfeld.

Mr. Freudenthal was a student in the schools of his native land until he immigrated to America at the early age of fifteen years. He came directly to Chicago, Illinois, where he entered the employ of his uncles who were the proprietors of the Lake Michigan and Lake Superior Transportation Company. He remained in their service in a clerical capacity until 1890, in which year he came to Montana and located in Great Falls. Here he opened a store which he conducted until the financial and industrial conditions of 1893 forced him out of business. In 1896 he entered the employ of a Chicago clothing house, and he remained with them for four years as a traveling salesman. Terminating his connection there, he came to Kalispell where he became associated with his brother-in-law, A. F. Leopold, in business, where he continued until 1906. In that year he came to Whitefish and here established the Star Shoe & Clothing Company, which has grown apace with the passing years, and which is now one of the foremost establishments of its kind in the city. The business methods of Mr. Freudenthal are of a nature that have been sufficient to firmly establish him in the confidence and esteem of the community, and he is eminently deserving of the leading place which he has come to occupy in the city. He is a Republican of strength and courage, and a citizen of the highest order.

On August 10, 1908, Mr. Freudenthal was married to Miss Lillie Lane, at Peet Lake, Idaho, where she was born and reared. They have no children.

JOSEPH J. MCCAFFREY is of Irish ancestry, although he was born in Glasgow, Scotland, on September 3, 1872. The following year his parents moved to Canada, and it was here that he began his schooling. Before it was finished, however, his father decided to move to Anaconda, Montana. The family settled in this latter place, and Joseph attended school there. Afterward he went to Valparaiso, Indiana, where he took instruction in a number of courses. The first subject in which he specialized was chemistry, and from that transition to scientific work was a natural one. The first study, which might be said to be a preparation for the profession in which he has made a notable success, was that of elocution. He had a natural gift for public speaking and this was fostered by his training in reading and expression. Wishing to round out his course, he took work in the commercial department and upon completing that entered the law school. In all, Mr. McCaffrey spent five and a half years in the Valparaiso college, and he secured a broad general culture as well as training in the special work which was to be his profession.

Upon returning to Anaconda, Mr. McCaffrey did not immediately open a law office, but spent the summer working on a farm. In the fall he began his practice as an attorney, and his first work to attract the attention of the community was the securing of a pardon for one of the inmates of Deer Lodge prison. He had heard that the man was entitled to executive clemency, and investigation of the case convinced him that the accused should be released. A petition was circulated, under the direction of Mr. McCaffrey, and it secured the largest number of signatures of any such document ever submitted to the governor. The prisoner was pardoned, and also Mr. McCaffrey was brought into the public eye. Almost immediately he was offered the nomination for county attorney, and he carried the election by a large plurality over his opponents.

In 1907 Mr. McCaffrey removed to Butte and opened an office here in partnership with Mr. E. E. Kenerk. This association lasted for one year, and at the expiration of that period Mr. McCaffrey took a vacation from practice to superintend the erection of his home on a tract of land which he had secured at some distance from the city. After his residence was finished he returned to Butte and resumed his practice, with Mr. G. O. Tyler as his colleague. This partnership is still in effect, and the firm occupies a handsome set of offices in the Phoenix building. They enjoy a large and a desirable practice and their services are in demand by those who desire expert work both as office lawyers and in court. Their practice is of a general nature, and throughout the western part of the state and in Idaho, their reputation has secured them a large clientele.

Joseph McCaffrey, the father of the subject of this sketch, was born in Ireland. Before leaving that island he was married to Miss Mary Curran. Both are still residing in Anaconda, where Mr. McCaffrey follows the trade of shoe making, which he learned in this country. Mr. Joseph J. McCaffrey is not the youngest of that name in his family, for he also has a son, Joseph P., born in Butte on July 15, 1908, to Joseph J., and Mae E. (Riordan) McCaffrey. Mrs. McCaffrey is the daughter of Patrick and Ellen Riordan, of Vaca Valley, California, whose home she left on June 9, 1903, to reside over that of Mr. McCaffrey.

When Mr. McCaffrey can get away from his office he is to be found with rod or gun in hand, and both the chase of such game as Montana abounds in and in fishing for mountain trout give him the keenest delight in the world, except possibly that of convincing a jury. He is not a person who takes his pleasure in solitude, either, for he is fond of the society of his many friends. One of the leading men in his profession in the city, he is also interested in commercial matters of different sorts, and is president of the Lucky 20 Mining Company, whose plant is eleven miles east of the city. Mr. McCaffrey is a member of the Knights of Columbus and has taken the fourth degree in the lodge at Butte. He is a communicant of the Roman Catholic church, as is Mrs. McCaffrey. In matters political Mr. McCaffrey is not strongly partisan, and like most successful attorneys, public affairs and their conduct interest him keenly. Successful, and popular, he is one of the men who are well known in Butte, and who make the city well known throughout the state and also outside its borders.

AMOS L. THOMPSON, formerly sole owner of the A. L. Thompson Banking Company in Libby and the owner of considerable real estate in this city, is a representative business man and one who not only has achieved his individual success but who has also public-spiritedly devoted himself to the general welfare of his fellow citizens and been foremost in advancing enterprises and improvements which will prove of lasting benefit to his home city. He is, furthermore, a self-made man, having run away from home at the age of nine years and having thereafter been compelled to seek his living and advancement as best he could.

A native of Polk county, Iowa, Amos L. Thompson was born July 29, 1868, and he is a son of Lew and Bertha (Landy) Thompson, the former of whom was born in Scotland and the latter in Norway. The parents were married in Scotland and came to America in the early '60s, locating in Polk county, Iowa, where Mr. Thompson turned his attention to the great basic industry of agriculture. He was summoned to the life eternal August 5, 1911, at the age of seventy-two years, and she passed away in 1898. Of the ten children born to Mr. and Mrs. Lew Thompson seven are living, in 1913, and of the number Amos L. was the sixth in order of birth.

To the age of nine years Amos L. Thompson attended the public schools of Polk county, Iowa, and at that time, after receiving a severe whipping for some misdemeanor, he ran away from home. Although but a mere child, he was possessed of unusual determination and he immediately boarded a railway train and beat his way to Minneapolis, Minnesota, where a married sister lived. He spent a day and a night on the way to Minneapolis and after locating his sister remained with her for three weeks, when he secured work as dishwasher in a railway camp near Duluth, Minnesota, the same being connected with the Hinckley & Duluth Short Line. Thereafter he was variously engaged until 1890, when he came to Montana and settled in Kalispell, where he entered the employ of the Great Northern Railway Company as section hand. With the passage of time he was advanced in the railroad business and eventually became a conductor on the Great Northern. In 1898 he removed to Flathead county near Lincoln county, and there took up a homestead of three hundred acres, following farming for the ensuing five years, at the expiration of which, in 1904, he came to Libby, Montana. He established the first exclusive hardware store in Libby and gradually accumulated considerable real estate in this city. He met with marked success as a hardware merchant but in January, 1911, sold out his business to the firm of Fleek & Fleek. Previously, in February, 1909, he had established the A. L. Thompson Banking Company, the first permanent bank in Libby, but in July, 1911, Mr. Thompson sold the A. L. Thompson Banking Company to the First National Bank, and he now devotes the greater portion of his time and attention to the real estate and loan business.

In politics Mr. Thompson owns allegiance to the Democratic party and he served as one of Libby's first aldermen. In a social way he is affiliated with the local lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is a member of the board of trustees. Mr. Thompson is unmarried.

ROBERT LEE CLINTON. The city of Butte, Montana, has within its borders professional men of exceptional abilities, members of the various callings who have brought credit to themselves, their vocations and their city, and who while pursuing their professional duties have developed the best interests of their community. Among these may be mentioned Robert Lee Clinton, who, as a man versed in the laws of the country, has been a recognized power. Indomitable energy, perseverance, patience and strong mentality have served to bring him to his present high position, and as a prominent figure in many legal controversies and an able solver of numerous complexities his reputation has become state-wide. Mr. Clinton was born at Anderson, Indiana, February 18, 1865, and is a son of Henry V. and Melvina (Shafer) Clinton.

The father of Mr. Clinton was born in County Down, Ireland, and when a lad of fourteen years came to the United States with his parents, the family settling in Paterson, New Jersey. There he grew to manhood, and during the gold rush of 1849 journeyed to California via the Panama route, but after spending a few years in mining returned to the east. Subsequently he became a correspondent for a number of the metropolitan newspapers, a vocation which he followed until his death, which occurred in 1906, at Trenton, New Jersey. His wife was a native of Virginia and a member of a prominent old family of the Old Dominion state, a niece of War Governor John D. Letcher. She is of German descent and still survives, making her home in the east.

Robert Lee Clinton secured his early education in the Anderson, Indiana, high school and for three years attended the Indiana State University at Bloomington, now the University of Indiana, where he received his early law training. He spent a short time in a law office in Indiana, but in 1890 came to Montana and became associated in a clerical capacity with the Missoula Mercantile Company. After a short time he decided to resume his law studies and went to Kalispell, Flathead county, where the Missoula Mercantile Company had large interests, and was retained by that concern to represent it in legal affairs and was also attorney for the First National Bank at Kalispell. He continued to be so engaged until 1897, also carrying on a general practice, but in that year came to Butte, which has since been his field of practice. Mr. Clinton has numbered for many years among his other clients the First National Bank of Butte, Montana, the largest financial institution in the state. He also had charge of the litigation on the part of the farmers in their famous suit against the Washoe Smelter. (F. J. Bliss vs. Anaconda Copper Mining Co., and Washoe Copper Co.) This suit has become one of national prominence, and has played an important part in the state's history, not only from a judicial standpoint, but also from the political and social standpoint. It has even attracted the attention of the national government at Washington, under President Theodore Roosevelt, who sent a number of experts on behalf of the government to make investigations in the Deer Lodge valley as to the fume injury to the farmers in that locality, and who gave important testimony for the farmers in this litigation. It has also been known among the members of the bar as the largest record ever made in any one case in the history of the civilized world, there being on file now, in the supreme court of the United States, where this litigation is pending, 68 large volumes of printed testimony, containing over 30,000 pages of printing. A writ of certiorari having been recently granted upon petition of the farmers, whereby the supreme court of the United States has decided to review the entire case.

Mr. Clinton's abilities have been recognized by his retention as attorney for some of the largest corporations in the city, and he also has a large and representative general practice. Of unerring judgment, there have been none who have comprehended the ethics of the profession better than he. His clients know him to be a man of honor and integrity and none fear at his hands any underhanded dealing or chicanery, while as a citizen he has gained the universal respect of his fellow men. He takes very little interest in politics and has not been an office seeker, but has interested himself in fraternal work as a member of the Masons and the Elks, and in social circles is popular as a member of the Silver Bow and Butte Country clubs.

In 1891, while a resident of Kalispell, Mr. Clinton was married to Miss Maude Golden, a native of Nevada, whose father, Thomas L. Golden, was born in Londonderry, Ireland. Four sons have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Clinton: Robert V., Thomas L., John K., and Earl J. Robert V. Clinton, the eldest son, was graduated, in 1912, from the St. John Military Academy at Delafield, Wisconsin, receiving a classical diploma, the first to be issued in twelve years by that school. He took the class medal in 1909. Thomas L. Clinton, the second son, was a student at the same school, a member of the class of 1913, but in 1912 was appointed principal cadet midshipman to the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland.

JACOB ZIMMERMAN. The branch of the Zimmerman family to which the popular leader of the Zimmerman band belongs, is of Swiss origin, and the first to come to America was the grandfather of Jacob, who was among the early settlers of Ohio. He married in his native country, and the father of our subject was seven years old at the time they moved from the little republic, with its stirring history, to the vast new one, whose short existence had proved it also to be a place which bred heroes. With the Zimmermans came the family of Jacob Wasem, whose daughter Elizabeth was the wife of Jacob Zimmerman and the mother of Jacob. The Wasems settled in Ohio, and later moved to South Dakota. Joseph Zimmerman, like most pioneers, followed the occupation of farming and in addition to this he was also a minister. He moved from Ohio to Minnesota, and both as a farmer and as a preacher, he was a factor in the life of the community in which he resided. During the Civil war, he enlisted, but was not called into active service. He died at Aberdeen, South Dakota, in 1899, at the age of sixty-five. Of his eight children, six are still living, Jacob being the only son. Mrs. Sarah Keterling lives at Big Stone, Montana; Mrs. Elizabeth Swartz at Fargo, North Dakota; Mrs. John Cortey and Mrs. Andrew Hydner also reside at Big Stone, and Mrs. Harry Hague's home is at Lockport, Indiana. The mother, was married in Minnesota, and died there in 1879.

Jacob Zimmerman was born on a farm near Winona, Minnesota, on July 6, 1865. His early life was the usual one of the farmer's son; district school and farm work filled the long winters and the short summers until he reached the age of eighteen. He had determined to be a musician, but as that was not only as unprofitable calling, but also one which required a considerable outlay of money as well as of time to prepare for, he entered the Tower City Commercial College at Fargo, North Dakota, and took a thorough course in commercial branches, specializing in bookkeeping and commercial law. In 1890, he came to Helena and secured a position in the congenial surroundings of the Jackson Music House. The panic of '93, however, proved disastrous to this firm, and Mr. Zimmerman found himself thrown out of employment by reason of his employers going out of business. But shortly after Mr. A. I. Reeves opened a similar store, and Mr. Zimmerman was tendered a place with the new concern. He remained with them for seventeen years, during which time he did much to further interest in music in the city, apart from his business connection with it. There is scarcely a musical project in the city which has not received his support and his hearty co-operation. Foremost of his undertakings is the Zimmerman band, of which he is the organizer, as well as the director. This is now something in the nature of an avocation, since he has entered the real estate business. Since 1910, Mr. Molten and Mr. Zimmerman have been in partnership and engaged in the land business. They have prospered in their new undertaking, and though it is in altogether a different line from the work which has occupied Mr. Zimmerman for so long, it does not interfere with his efficiency as a director of the band, nor with the popularity of that body. They are in demand for numerous engagements on important occasions both in Helena and in adjacent districts.

The Methodist church has in Mr. Zimmerman one of its most valued members, not only for his musical ability, but on account of his great personal popularity. Though unmarried, he is no recluse, and few men can count a larger circle of influential friends. In politics he is Independent, and his only connection with the lodges of the city is his membership in the Woodmen of the World. Second only to his enthusiasm for music is that he holds for outdoor recreations, especially hunting and fishing—but it is remarking the obvious to state that predilection in a true Montanian, such as Mr. Zimmerman assuredly is.

PARSON MOODY ABBOTT. One of the most distinguished citizens of his section of Montana is Parson Moody Abbott, who is a potent factor in several departments of business and industry, being a successful rancher and stock grower and also identified in an important way with the banking and real estate activities of the county. Mr. Abbott belongs to one of America's noted families, the Abbotts having been established on our shores as early as 1700 and having produced an unusual number of soldiers, patriots, and men of unusual honor and distinction.

Mr. Abbott is himself a native of Ohio, his life record having begun in Bowling Green, Wood county, that state, October 2, 1869. He is the son of Philander S. Abbott, an attorney-at-law, and a veteran of the Civil war. Soon after the first guns were fired at Fort Sumter, he enlisted in the cause of the Union and became first lieutenant of the First Ohio Heavy Artillery, seeing three years' service in the great conflict between the states. His untimely demise occurred in 1876 as the result of wounds received in the service. This gentleman, himself a man of unusual attainments, was a cousin of the noted Dr. Lyman J. Abbott, editor-in-chief of the Outlook, author and devine. The mother, whose maiden name was Mary L. Fisher, was the descendant of a family founded in this country at an even earlier date than the Abbotts, her forebears having settled in Pennsylvania at the same time as William Penn, the great Quaker and philanthropist. The demise of this admirable lady occurred in the year 1889.

Parson Moody Abbott received his early education in the public schools of Bowling Green, Ohio. At the age of ten years he tried his wings in the capacity of a money earner, selling papers to make a living, the death of the father having reduced the family to straitened circumstances. As soon as his years would admit of such proceeding, he learned telegraphy and at the age of fourteen years he accepted his first position as a telegrapher on the Pennsylvania system in Ohio. In 1890, the time of the attainment of his majority, young Abbott became inoculated with the desire for the life of the west with its promise of opportunity and adventure, and in the year mentioned arrived in Montana. He has been in Gallatin county nineteen years and for a considerable portion of his time he has been identified with railway activities. In the capacity of telegraph operator he worked on the old Utah Northern, now the O. S. L. Railway, and also as such he was employed by the Northern Pacific and the Great Northern lines. He left the service in 1905, having taken an active part in a telegraphers' strike and being "fired" when the strikers lost their cause. This was doubtless a good destiny working for him in disguise, for larger and better fortunes have been his ever since that time. He has engaged extensively in ranching and stock growing and subsequently added real estate to his interests and he has been successful in a marked degree, particularly in ranching. He is vice-president and director of the First National Bank of Three Forks, Montana, and has proved an able and discriminating financier.

Mr. Abbott has ever been loyal to the tenets of the Democratic party and almost since first becoming of voting age has taken an active interest in politics, his loyalty to the causes in which he believes being of the aggressive sort. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and for twenty-one years belonged to the Order of Railway Telegraphers.

On May 23, 1901, Mr. Abbott was happily married at Helena, Montana, Catherine Miller, daughter of J. L. Miller and Mary J. Miller, of Logan, Montana, becoming his wife. Mrs. Abbott is a native of Coles county, Illinois, where the Millers lived for many years and whence they came to Gallatin county in 1893. Her father is a rancher.

Glancing again at Mr. Abbott's ancestry, we find that the Abbott family located in Vermont upon their arrival in America in 1700. From the Green Mountain State they moved westward by degrees, first to New York, then to Michigan, then to Ohio, and the family now boasts one stalwart descendant in Montana. Abbotts were represented in all the wars,—the Revolution, the War of 1812, the Mexican war and the Rebellion. The maternal family, the Fishers, were of English origin and from Pennsylvania migrated to Ohio. They too are a race of patriots, having furnished soldiers to the Revolution, the War of 1812 and the Civil war. Few citizens have as just cause for pride in a loyal and unblemished ancestry as the subject of these lines.

JOHN N. PEARCE, general superintendent of the Nelson Coal Company of Sand Coulee, is one of the most successful and best known mining men in this section of the country. He has been identified with the mining interests of Montana since 1890, and previous to that time had followed the coal mining industry for six years in Clay county, Indiana, where he was born on August 23, 1871.

He is the son of Nicholas and May (Netherland) Pearce, both natives of Cornwall, England. The father was born there in 1827 and he emigrated to America in 1863. He located in Clay county, Indiana, and was there actively engaged in the mining industry up to the time of his death, which occurred in 1897. The mother is still living at Brazil, Clay county. Mr. Pearce received the usual advantages of schooling in his home town, and while yet in his teens gave up his studies and engaged in mining. He was occupied thus for six years in Clay county, when he came to Belt, Montana, which then, in 1890, had just been opened up as a coal mining district. He remained there for a year, then came to Sand Coulee and worked in the mines until 1905, when he decided to take a trip abroad. He spent one year in foreign travel, making a particularly careful study of the British Isles, and giving a good share of his time to careful study and research, and when he came back to Sand Coulee after an absence of a year, he again took up his mining work. After about a year he went to the new mining camp of Stockett, where he remained about six years, and again returning to Sand Coulee he was made general superintendent of the Nelson Coal Company, with a force of two hundred men under his direct supervision. His years of close study of mining conditions and methods have made it possible for him to fill this important position in the most creditable manner, and he is enjoying a most pleasing success in his work at the mines, where he is as popular with his men as he is throughout the entire community. Mr. Pearce is recognized as one of the most valuable citizens of Sand Coulee, and he is a member of the school board. He is independent in his political opinions, giving his support where he sees the fittest candidate for office. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Mr. Pearce was united in marriage with Miss Emma A. Martin on September 12, 1899. Seven children have been born of their union. They are: Martha May; John N.; Franklin Alexander; William J.; Mildred; Arthur; Alice. Those of the children who are of school age are attending the schools of Sand Coulee. All were born at Sand Coulee with the exception of the eldest, Martha May, who was born in 1900 at Stockett, Montana.

PHILIP FRANCIS BUCKLEY. From the position of breaker boy in the Pennsylvania coal mines at a salary of thirty-five cents per day to the ownership of a magnificent ranch in Harlem township and a position of importance among his fellow men, such has been the record of Philip Francis Buckley, assessor of Chouteau county, a man whose life is strikingly illustrative of the fact that industry, perseverance and well-directed effort are the means by which to achieve success. The birth of Mr. Buckley occurred in a house at No. 149 River street, Wilkes Barre, Pennsylvania, June 29, 1878. His father, William Buckley, was a native of Cappagh, County Tipperary, Ireland, and for a period of ten years served in the English army, being a crown sergeant of artillery and participating in the Crimean war. About 1860 he came to the United States and when the Civil war broke out became captain of a company of volunteer infantry, serving therewith until the close of hostilities. For a number of years he was engaged in mining operations, being successful in his ventures and holding positions of trust and responsibility, and on March 17, 1890, came to Harlem, where he became the first justice of the peace of Harlem township. His death occurred here February 28, 1904, when he was seventy-one years old. Mr. Buckley was married in England to Margaret Skelly, a native of that country and now a resident of Harlem, Montana, and they had eleven children, eight of whom are living, while Philip Francis was the seventh in order of birth.

As a lad, while still a resident of Pennsylvania, Philip Francis Buckley attended the public schools of Tunnel Hill during the winter months, while in the summers he worked as a breaker boy, earning thirty-five cents per day. He was twelve years of age when he accompanied his parents to Montana, and for two seasons attended the first school established in the Harlem school district. At the age of thirteen he left school to accept a position as section hand on the Great Northern Railroad, where he worked for two years, and then became a sheep herder on a ranch, but gave up this position to become a round-up rider. In the following year, with his father and older brother, he engaged in the stock raising business, which he followed extensively and successfully for a period of ten years, when he sold his interest in the business to enter ranching on his own account on a tract of 160 acres, situated about two miles from Harlem, to which he has since added an adjacent tract of 160 acres. From earliest boyhood, Mr. Buckley has relied upon his own ability to make his way in the world, and his present enviable position is ample evidence that he has been a faithful and industrious worker. He readily admits that his life has not been devoid of discouragements, disappointments and misfortunes, but he has never allowed himself to become disheartened, and the reward for his courageous persistence is an honorable standing among his fellow men and a steadily increasing competence. He has so well managed his private affairs that on a number of occasions the citizens of his community have decided that he was capable of handling the affairs of the public. He has served two terms as constable of Harlem township, subsequently was made deputy game warden of Chouteau county for two years, and then became deputy sheriff, in which position he served four years. In January, 1909, he moved to Fort Benton, where he filled the office of jailor for two years, and in the fall of 1910 was elected county assessor, an office which he fills at the present time. He is a Republican in his political views and an active and influential worker in the ranks of the party. In fraternal matters, Mr. Buckley belongs to the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Odd Fellows, the Eagles and the Knights of Columbus, is a popular member of the Harlem Club, and consistently attends the Roman Catholic church.

At Fort Benton, Montana, February 22, 1905, Mr. Buckley was united in marriage with Miss Ellen Theresa Murray, daughter of John Murray, of Minneapolis, and they have had three children, as follows: Emmet F., born at Great Falls, November 22, 1906; Arthur William, born at Harlem, November 13, 1908; and Philip Sheridan, born at Fort Benton, February 2, 1912.

ALBERT MAURER, prominent merchant of Great Falls and one of the leading men of his community, is a native born Iowan, born in Muscatine county on the 25th of April, 1874. He is the son of Benedict and Elizabeth (Marolf) Maurer, both natives of Switzerland. The father came to America when a young man and settled at Milton Junction, Iowa, where he lived the life of a pioneer farmer, and passed away there at the age of sixty-seven in the year 1887. The mother, who came to America as the bride of Benedict Maurer, died at Great Falls, Montana, at the home of her son, Albert, and is buried by the side of her life-partner in the cemetery at Milton Junction. She was seventy-three years of age when she died, and was the mother of eight children.

Albert, the fifth child born to his parents, was educated in the public schools of his home town, later attending the high school at Muscatine. His education was finished at the Wilton Collegiate Institute, and he was twenty-one years of age when he concluded his schooling. During his school days his father had conducted a mercantile establishment at Wilton Junction, and in this house Albert received the early business training which was of such value to him in later life. After leaving college he studied telegraphy, and for some years was employed by the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific as an operator, and later was agent for that company at various points, giving five years to that service. He then resigned his position with the railroad company and came west, arriving in Great Falls in July, 1890. After a short period, he, with John B. Maurer, an older brother, purchased the business of J. H. Johnson & Company and established the business which has grown from a small concern to the largest mercantile house in Great Falls. They dealt in general merchandise, and by careful management and the exercise of the natural business ability which was theirs by birth and training, the brothers prospered from the beginning. The partnership continued unbroken until in September, 1896, when Albert Maurer purchased the interest of his brother John and has since conducted the business alone. The business aggregates a yearly amount of $60,000, and is constantly growing. In addition to his mercantile interests, Mr. Maurer is engaged with his brother, John B., in a live stock business of extensive nature in the Teton county region, and in that also is prospering in a most agreeable manner.

Mr. Maurer is a Republican, but not active in political affairs. He is a Lutheran in his religious faith.

GEORGE PRINGLE. In every nook and corner of the wide world the traveler will find the Scotchman. Everywhere, plodding, patient, determined, steadfast, reliable, prosperous. To understand his nature one must know Scotland. If he appears crabbed, stern, unsocial, dour (as the Scotch say), consider the barren land in which he has fought nature for all the centuries in order to wring from a fertile soil and harsh climate a subsistence for himself and his family. But that is only one side of him. Beneath the practical and rugged exterior lies deep a softer stratum and from this stratum one can dig up the poet, the dreamer, the idealist, the hero. Against Black Douglas and his cruelty stand out the heroes Wallace and Bruce. Against the treacherous Comyn can be shown such noble spirits as Chinese Gordon; even among the faithless Stuarts the historians find James the Fifth, the poet king and lover of righteousness. Against the cynical Carlyle can be shown the kindly and equally able Walter Scott. Against Archbishop Sharpe can be shown John Knox; and finally against the crafty money lovers like Gilbert Glosson can be shown Bobby Burns, the greatest true poet the world has produced. This many-sided land has given to America a body of citizens whose priceless value can not be reckoned and who have made such an imprint upon our history that any of our citizens are proud to claim Scotch blood. Among Missoula's Scotchmen is that good citizen, George Pringle, proprietor of the leading monument works of Missoula.

Mr. Pringle was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, June 24, 1860, and in his native country received the advantages of a good common school education. At the age of fourteen years he began to think of a life work and commenced to learn the trade of a stone cutter and carver in the historic city of his birth and at the age of twenty years he was a skilled workman, doing the very best kind of monument work. It occurred to the young man that the newer land of America presented greater opportunities for energy and ambition and in pursuance of this idea, he crossed the blue Atlantic and landed in America in March, 1881. He remained in New York for a time and found work at his trade in that state for a year. Desiring to see the west, of which he had heard such flattering report, he came to Minneapolis, Minnesota, and there found employment, remaining within that city until the year 1890, when he came to Missoula, Montana. After a year here, during which he was constantly employed, Mr. Pringle went to Helena and there assisted in the stone work on the Helena jail. He came back to this place and worked as a journeyman until 1900, when he began business for himself and he has proved indeed successful on an independent footing, owning today the leading monument works in the county. His success has been directly traceable to his energy, industry and thrift, and he has made his way quite without assistance. Besides the native stone used in his works, many of his monuments are made from imported granite and marble. He has had considerable recognition in public life and acted as a member of the city council for two terms, or four years, and as county clerk and recorder for one term of two years. In every trust he has proved his quality and enjoys general respect and regard.

Fraternally he is a member of the Masons, Knights of Pythias, the Elks, and the Eagles, being state president of the last-named.

The subject was happily married on June 10, 1887, his chosen lady being Miss Agnes Charlton, also a native of Scotland, whom he first met in Minneapolis. The following five children have been born to their union: Andrew Edgar, George, Jeannie, William and James. The family are members of the Presbyterian church.

The subject's father, Andrew Pringle, was engaged in the transfer business in Edinburgh. His demise occurred in that city in 1871. The mother's maiden name was Margaret Gow and she came to the United States in 1878, settling in Minneapolis and acquiring property there. This worthy lady passed away August 28, 1899. There were seven children in the elder Pringle family, as follows: William Pringle, carpenter and contractor, who died in Butte, Montana, July 29, 1900; Andrew, residing in Michigan; Jessie, now Mrs. McGuffy, of Philadelphia; David P., merchant tailor, of Minneapolis; Alexander, a plumber residing in Oregon; and Elizabeth, now Mrs. William Coles, of Hereford, Herts, England.

When asked to give his opinion of Montana, Mr. Pringle replied: "Montana can support twice the population that it does at the present time with scarcely any assistance from the outside world. We can raise all we need here and the mineral resources of this wonderful state are as yet undeveloped."

FRANK LAMBERT. In the nine years which have elapsed since Mr. Lambert established the Lambert Mercantile Business in Polson, the concern has, under his careful and wise management, made rapid strides in development and progress. From a small, unpretentious affair, the business has grown to be the large and flourishing establishment it is today, and it is one of the solidest, best paying and generally up-to-date concerns in this part of the state. It now occupies a fine two-story building and a large warehouse adjoining, with a meat market in connection. Up until three years ago Mr. Lambert conducted the business alone, but in 1909 he took a partner in the person of Mr. Grove, who has since shared the responsibilities with him.

Frank Lambert was born in Jefferson, Ash county, North Carolina, on October 2, 1871, and is the son of Reuben and Mary Lambert. The father, who was a native of North Carolina, was born in 1842, and died in 1898 at the age of fifty-six years. He passed his life in agricultural pursuits, and died in the state in which he was born and where he passed his life. The mother, also born in North Carolina, died in 1878 at an early age. They were the parents of five children, Frank Lambert being the first born of that number.

The country schools of Jefferson, North Carolina, gave to Mr. Lambert such education as he started life with, and when he was eighteen years old he came to Montana and settled in Billings, becoming interested in the cattle business there, in which he continued until 1902. In that year he came to the Flathead reservation and again became actively engaged in the cattle business, remaining for two years. In 1904 he withdrew from his ranching operations and established what is now the Lambert Mercantile Business in Polson. The population at that time was scattered, and at first the business was limited, but with the growth of the country and the gradual settlement of the district, business increased gradually, and he was warranted in making numerous extensions to handle the ever growing trade. Mr. Lambert has demonstrated his ability as a merchant and man of business, and it is not too much to predict that he will yet be identified with the big mercantile interests of the state.

In 1904 Mr. Lambert was united in marriage with Miss Ada Murray, of Missoula, Montana. No children have been born to them.

Mr. Lambert is a member of the Woodmen of the World, and in his political affiliations is a progressive Republican. He is a good citizen, always bearing his full share of the civic burdens, and has proved a valuable acquisition to the communal life of the city which has represented his home since 1903. He has a large circle of stanch friends in the state, and is an enthusiastic promoter of the best interests of Montana.

THOMAS E. MILLS. Not all the industries of Helena are those which deal in metals, brick, produce, and the things which minister to the primal wants of man. The great Northwest has a taste for the luxuries and the graces of life and in Helena, for instance, the trade in flowers would rival that of an eastern city of twice its population. At the head of the horticulture industry of the region stands the State Nursery Company, of which Mr. Thomas E. Mills is president. Born in Middlesex, England, in 1869, Mr. Mills came to America when but four years of age. His father, James G. Mills was a prominent agriculturist of Virginia, and in the city of Hampton in the Old Dominion, Mr. Mills grew up and received his education. He decided to follow his father's interesting line of work, and at the age of seventeen, returned to England and spent three years in London studying at the Royal Horticultural Gardens. In 1890, he returned to the United States and came to Helena. His father came with him and together they began the business which has grown to the State Nursery Company.

At present, Thomas E. Mills is president of the company and W. F. Mills, the vice-president. The secretary and treasurer is Walter Card. The project was started in 1890 with six hundred square feet of glass and now some twenty odd years later, this has increased to the largest institution of its kind in the northwest. The nursery is located in the extreme western part of Helena, close to the celebrated Broadwater natatorium. One would scarcely expect to find in the heart of the Rocky Mountains so complete and so extensive a horticultural plant. The prevalent idea of Montana in the eastern section of the republic is of a place given to mining and stock raising, and it would greatly surprise many of the dwellers of the east and middle west to learn that one may do a thriving trade in exotics in the far west. One thing for which the State Nursery Company is famed is its American Beauty roses. The society of Helena are very fond of these decorations and use great quantities of them, the city being famed for its production of this gorgeous flower. One novel feature of the green houses is the system of heating. The hot springs about a mile away supply the heat, as the pressure is sufficient to secure a good circulation, when piped into the plant. The owners do not depend entirely upon Nature to protect their flowers from her frosts for they have three heating plants on the grounds which they use when the weather is exceptionally severe.

Mrs. Mills has been in Montana only one year less than her husband, as they were married on January 12, 1891. She too is a native of Middlesex, England, and resided there until her marriage. Their family consists of two daughters and two sons, all in school in Helena. Gwendolyn, the eldest has finished the high school and is now continuing her studies in selected lines. Miss Dorothy, born in 1895, is in high school. William, born in 1905 is in the Kessler school, and Thomas E., who celebrated his sixth anniversary in 1912, is just beginning his education.

Mr. Mills is the holder of a large amount of valuable real estate in the city. He is a Mason and a member of the Montana Club. He and Mrs. Mills are communicants of the Episcopal church. Both are well known in the city and extremely popular in their large circle of acquaintances.

GEORGE T. McCULLOUGH, M. D. For nearly twenty-two years a physician in active practice in Missoula and throughout the surrounding country for many miles in every direction, and during the greater part of that period mingling freely with the people of the county in the administration of their public affairs, in which he has always taken a very earnest and helpful interest, Dr. George T. McCullough has endeared himself to the residents of this region both as a professional man and as a citizen. In his professional work he is learned, resourceful and skillful. As a citizen he is progressive, broad minded and stimulating in his influence for good; and as a man he is upright, estimable and worthy in all the relations of life.

Dr. McCullough's life began at East Springfield,

GEORGE T. McCULLOUGH

Jefferson county, Ohio, on November 22, 1858. His parents, Alexander and Beth Anne (Hammond) McCullough, were also natives of Ohio, and lived in that state until 1872, when they moved their family to Howard county, Missouri. There they engaged in farming and raising live stock during the remainder of their lives, the mother dying in that county in 1880 and the father in 1884. The doctor's paternal grandfather, John McCullough, came to this country from the north of Ireland soon after the Revolutionary war and settled in Ohio, where he was a pioneer and farmed extensively after breaking up the wild land on which he took up his residence. His son Alexander, father of the doctor, served in the Civil war as captain of an Ohio regiment in the Union army and participated in a number of important battles in that contest.

Dr. George T. McCullough obtained his academic education in the district schools of Ohio and Missouri, finishing it at Central College in Fayette, in the state last named. After leaving that institution he began the study of medicine, but a short time afterward suspended his attention to this to assist in a government survey in New Mexico. When his services in that connection were ended he entered the medical department of the University of Missouri as a student, and from there was graduated with the degree of M. D. in the class of 1889.

For a few months he was engaged in practice, then began a post graduate course in Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York City, which he completed in 1890, receiving a diploma from that great institution. He then passed a few months in Mexico, and in June, 1890, came to Missoula, where he has ever since resided and been busily occupied with an extensive and very active practice, except during a short time in 1898, when he took another post graduate course of special instruction in the city of New York.

Mr. McCullough has demonstrated his knowledge of his profession in both theory and practice to the full satisfaction of the people of Missoula county and is one of the leading practitioners of the medical science in this part of the state. He was president of the Montana State Medical Society in 1899, and has long been an earnest interest and an active part in every phase Mountain Inter-State Medical Society and the American Medical Association and an ex-president of the Missoula County Medical Society. He has served as county physician and is a member of the board of United States pension examiners for Missoula county, and has taken an earnest interest and an active part in every phase of the activities belonging to his profession in this part of the country.

In his political faith and allegiance the doctor is affiliated with the Republican party. And while he is not desirous of any of its honors or emoluments for himself, he is always zealous and effective in the service of the organization because he believes firmly in its principles. He believes firmly also in fraternal organizations as beneficial and uplifting forces, and belongs to a number of them. He gives his lodges all the time and attention his other engagements will permit, and does everything in his power to make them as influential for good and as useful as possible.

When the Missoula Trust and Savings Bank was organized the doctor was chosen its first vice president. He served the bank in this capacity for a number of years, and is still a member of its board of directors. He is, moreover, deeply interested in every element of the industrial, mercantile and social life of the community, and always ready to give his aid in making them as potential for the general welfare and wholesome progress of his home locality as they can be rendered. On July 1, 1886, he was united in marriage to Miss Mollie Massey, a native of Missouri, who came to Montana with her husband in 1890, and resided in the state ever afterward. Mrs. McCullough died of apoplexy September 26, 1912, leaving a son, Massey S. Mc-Cullough, and a daughter, Maude B. McCullough, both graduates of the state University of Montana.

Mrs. McCullough's early life was spent in several cities—Booneville, Jefferson City, Springfield, Kansas City and St. Louis, in all of which places she has friends and relatives. Her college training was received at Christian College, Columbia, Missouri. Mrs. McCullough was, before her health failed, an earnest worker in the Episcopal church of this city. She was beloved by a large circle of friends and her loss will be sincerely mourned, although death came as a blessed relief from long illness.

Mrs. McCullough was the daughter of Benjamin U. Massey, who was secretary of state in Missouri at the beginning of the Civil war.

Dr. McCullough is still engaged in active practice in the same office he located in on coming to Missoula twenty-two years ago.

GEORGE A. HORKAN, a leading lawyer of Forsyth, Montana, and one of the most prominent citizens and political leaders of Rosebud county, is a son of Erin, born in Ireland, July 4, 1876, and was about fifteen years of age when he left the shores of his native isle to come to the United States. Locating in Montana, he first settled at Miles City and remained a resident of Custer county until 1897, employed in the meantime in herding cattle and sheep and in working on a ranch. He then entered the government service in the printing and census department at Washington, D. C., where he continued thus employed until 1902. His earlier education, acquired in the public schools of Custer county, was supplemented by a preparatory course in the Flynn preparatory and business college at Washington D. C., and after his removal to that city he took up the study of law in Georgetown University, from which institution he was graduated with the law class of 1902. He remained in the national capital about one year after completing his legal studies and then came to Forsyth, Montana, to practice his profession. He is a thorough student of law, gives the most provident care to the cases intrusted to him, and has shown in the process of his practice that he possesses all the qualities which go to make permanent success.

His character and acquirements have made him a prominent and valued factor in the public life of his community. As a Republican and active political worker he has served as chairman of the Rosebud County Republican central committee and in an official capacity has served as county attorney two terms, as well as clerk of the Forsyth board of education, and at the state convention of the Progressive party, held at Helena, Montana, September 6th and 7th. He was nominated as one of the parties' choice for congress for the state of Montana.

He was chairman of the first state Progressive convention held in Montana, and also chairman of the Montana delegation of the first national Progressive convention held in Chicago, August 6th and 7, 1912. Fraternally Mr. Horkan is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Knights of Pythias and has been chancellor commander of his local lodge of the latter order four times and is now deputy grand chancellor of district No. 44 of Montana. Mr. Horkan is also a member of the Forsyth Club. He is interested in farming and enjoys all forms of out-door recreation, his automobile affording him many pleasurable hours amid the diversified scenery of Montana.

Mr. Horkan is the son of Patrick T. Horkan and Mary Monahan, who were natives of Ireland and spent their entire lives there. The father was engaged in the mercantile business and was a devout Christian gentleman. He died in 1885 and was buried in Dublin beside his wife, who had passed to the life beyond in 1881. There were but two children born to their marriage:

George A., of this review, and a daughter who is now married and resides in Washington, D. C.

At Forsyth, Montana, on September 11, 1906, Mr. Horkan wedded Miss Marie Newnes, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Newnes, of Howard, Montana. To this marriage have been born two daughters and a son: Miriam J., George W. and Carroll V.

JOSEPH MCKINNON. Civilization will hail riches, prowess, honors, popularity, but it will bow humbly to sincerity in its fellows. The exponent of known sincerity, of singleness of honest purpose, has its exemplification in all bodies of men; he is found in every association and to him defer its highest honors. Such an exemplar, whose daily life and whose life work have been dominated as their most conspicuous characteristic by sincerity, is Joseph McKinnon, who has been interested in mining projects in Montana for a number of years past and who is now secretary and treasurer of the Miners' Union, No. 1, having been elected to this office in December, 1910.

Joseph McKinnon was born in the province of Nova Scotia, Canada, the date of his nativity being the 29th of January, 1867. He is descended from a fine old Scotch ancestry, both his paternal and maternal grandfathers having been born and reared in Scotland. Mr. McKinnon is a son of Alexander and Elizabeth (Gillis) McKinnon, both of whom were born in Canada, the former in 1820 and the latter in 1830. Alexander McKinnon, was a son of Neal McKinnon, founder of the McKinnon family in America, and his wife was a daughter of John Gillis, who immigrated to Canada from Scotland about the year 1838. During the major portion of his active career Alexander McKinnon was engaged in business as a merchant tailor in Nova Scotia and he was summoned to the life eternal on the 5th of March, 1881, his cherished and devoted wife, who survived him by a number of years, having died on the 8th of February, 1896. Concerning the five McKinnon children Alexander and John reside in Canada; Charles maintains his home in Butte, as does also Joseph, the immediate subject of this review; and Mary A. is the wife of Randall McInnis, of Canada.

In the public schools of his native place Joseph McKinnon received his early educational training. At the age of eighteen years he went to work in the coal mines of Nova Scotia and there followed mining for the ensuing four years, at the expiration of which he removed to Montana, settling at Great Falls on the 1st of April, 1891. He worked in the smelters at Great Falls for the following two years and in 1893 he located in Meagher county, where he engaged in mining operations for the next two years. In 1896 he came to Butte and here has resided during the long intervening years to the present time, with the exception of six months spent in the Klondike, where he was prospecting. At Butte he followed mining until 1910 and he was eminently successful in his various enterprises. In December of the latter year he was elected secretary and treasurer of the Miners Union, No. 1, and as the incumbent of that important position he is achieving splendid results for the Union and its respective members. In politics Mr. McKinnon maintains an independent attitude, preferring to give his support to men and measures meeting with the approval of his judgment, rather than to vote along strictly partisan lines. He does not take an active part in local politics but contributes in generous measure to all movements projected for the good of the community and city at large. Fraternally, he is a member of the Scottish Clan, of which he is recording secretary, and he is also affiliated with the Fraternal Brotherhood. He is strictly a self-made man and as such his fine success in life is the more gratifying to contemplate. He is popular amongst all classes of people and commands the confidence and esteem of all who know him.

At Butte, on the 7th of July, 1908 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. McKinnon to Miss Anna McDonald, a daughter of Alexander McDonald and a native of Canada, where her birth occurred on the 29th of January, 1872. Mr. and Mrs. McKinnon have one son, Alexander John, who was born in Butte, May 8, 1910. In their religious faith the McKinnon family are devout communicants of the Roman Catholic church, to whose various charities they are most liberal contributors.

ANKER P. HENNINGSEN, president of the Henningsen Produce Company, at Butte, the leading house in its line in the Northwest, was born at Woyens, Germany, on the 26th of July, 1874. He is a son of Fritz A. and Agnes (Paulsen) Henningsen, both of whom were natives of German, the former born in 1849 and the latter in 1851. The father was actively engaged in the produce business with his son, Anker P., of this notice, for a number of years, but is now living in virtual retirement in Superior, Nebraska.

Anker P. Henningsen attended school in Denmark and Germany, and was a youth of fifteen years when he preceded his parents to America. His parents came the following year and for about three years after their arrival in this country the family home was maintained in the city of Denver, Colorado, thereafter in Superior, Nebraska. While in Denver Mr. Henningsen was interested in the produce business, but in 1891 he came to Montana to manage the affairs of the Henningsen Produce Company, which had been established about two years previously at Butte, and is now one of the largest and most prosperous commercial houses in the state.

The company manufactures butter, ice cream and cheese, and handles poultry and eggs, and also does an extensive cold-storage business. This concern operates a number of houses in the northwestern states thus disposing of a large amount of produce outside of the state in addition to the large local trade. In connection with the produce business the company has the best equipped creamery and cheese factory in the state, the same being fitted out with the latest improved machinery and modern cold-storage facilities, and turning out many thousand pounds of butter daily.

Fritz A. Henningsen retired from active participation in the business during the past year and since that time the affairs of the company have been conducted by A. P., W. F. and F. A., Jr. Anker P. Henningsen is a business man of splendid executive ability and untiring energy and holds prestige as one of the most prominent produce men in the northwest.

At Butte, Montana, on July 15, 1899, Mr. Henningsen was united in marriage to Miss Phyllis M. Bailye, a daughter of Thomas and Martha (Woodwiss) Bailye of Butte. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Henningsen have been born seven children, as follows: Doris, Anker B., Arthur, Robert, Frederick, Phyllis and Ardean.

Mr. Henningsen is a Knight Templar Mason, and a member of Bagdad Temple, Mystic Shrine. He is also a member of both the Silver Bow and the Butte Country clubs, the Chamber of Commerce and other business associations. In his political views he is nonpartisan and his religious faith is in harmony with the tenets of the Episcopal church, of which his wife is a communicant.

ALBERT I. CLEMENTS. With supreme confidence in the future of Montana and an earnest desire to assist others in securing the success that has met his efforts, Albert I. Clements, more familiarly known as "Bert," continues to remain one of the most progressive and enterprising ranchmen of eastern Montana, where he is widely known and has many friends. Mr. Clements is one of those self-made men of whom the west has always been so proud, his youth having contained all those incidents of lack of opportunities, absence of advantages and presence of plenty of hard work that have marked the careers of many of Montana's most successful citizens, and, like them, Mr. Clements is grateful to the section which gave him his chance and today is one of its most enthusiastic admirers.

Albert I. Clements was born May 21, 1865, in Ontario, Canada, a son of William and Mary Ann (Dill) Clements, the former a native of England and the latter of the state of Delaware. William Clements came to the United States in his boyhood days, in 1843, first locating at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where he was married. He then removed to Canada, and there he and his wife had five children, namely: William; Laura, who is now deceased; Esther, who married a Mr. Gaffield, of Glendive; Albert I.; and Walter, who died at the age of eighteen years. In 1869 the family moved to Montcalm county, Michigan, where the mother died two years later, and where the father still resides. He engaged in farming after coming to this country.

Reared to agricultural pursuits and educated in the Michigan public schools, at the age of nineteen years Albert I. Clements embarked in farming for himself, returning to Canada, where he spent the summer months in agricultural pursuits and the winters in the lumber camps. In 1889 he returned to the United States, locating in South Dakota, where he remained for one and one-half years, then returning to Michigan for the winter. In 1891 Mr. Clements came first to Montana and for three years worked on cattle, sheep and horse ranches, in the meantime saving what he could from his wages with the intention of entering business on his own account. This ambition was realized in 1894, when he embarked in ranching in a small way, and so ably has he conducted his affairs that the youth who arrived in Montana with but seventy-five cents is now the owner of 1,400 acres of land, of which 200 acres are in wheat, flax and oats, and 500 acres are tillable. He has devoted a great deal of attention to breeding English Shire horses, and has a drove of about 125 fine animals, one of the best in this part of Montana. In addition to a handsome modern residence, Mr. Clements has a barn thirty-six by sixty feet and a granary twenty-four by thirty feet, with suitable and well-built outbuildings for the shelter of his farming implements and equipment. His ranch, situated forty miles north of Glendive, the county seat of Dawson county, is one of the well-appointed and conveniently situated ones of this part of the state, and the general air of prosperity which pervades the whole property testifies eloquently to the presence of able management. Mr. Clements has been eminently successful in his operations, but this success has not come without a full measure of hard toil, perseverance and courage, the overcoming of obstacles and the usual discouragements and disappointments that fall to the lot of every struggling youth. Throughout it all he has maintained a cheerful, optimistic spirit and genial manner that have attracted and held friends, and his section of the county has no more popular resident.

GEORGE DONALDSON has been a resident of Montana since 1894, and in that time has been engaged in the sheep raising business, an industry in which he has amply demonstrated his adaptability to western methods, and his splendid business capacity and judgment as well. He owns from four to five bands of sheep, each numbering between three and four thousand head, and is acknowledged to be one of the most successful men in that business in the state.

Born in Ontario, Canada, on February 23, 1869, George Donaldson is the son of Alex and Jeannette (Mitchell) Donaldson, the father a native of Glasgow, Scotland, and the mother of Ontario. They met and married in Ontario, whither the father, Alex Donaldson, had come as a young man from his native land, and they reared a family of seven children, George being the sixth born. The father was a carpenter and contractor throughout his life, and he died in March, 1899, while the mother still lives at the old home with one daughter. Four sons of these worthy parents came to the United States, and three of that number still live here. Albert is engaged in the mercantile business at Billings, Montana; James is the owner of two Montana sheep ranches, but he makes his home for the most part in Maine, giving some attention to his western interests from time to time.

George Donaldson had reached years of manhood before he came to the United States, and his education was that of the common schools of the Dominion. He left home on March 16, 1886, and engaged in farming in western Canada, but circumstances were unpropitious, and a few failures were sufficient to turn his interest to the United States, where his brothers were already making good in business. He came to Montana in 1894 and started in the sheep raising business, and his success from the start was exceptional. He has continued to be thus identified, and has added to his holdings in land and live stock with each passing year until he is now known as one of the leading men in the state in that business.

On October 1, 1901, Mr. Donaldson was united in marriage with Miss Belle Grant, the daughter of Francis W. and Mary (McPherson) Grant, native born Scots, Mrs. Donaldson on also having been born in Edinburgh. She came to America with her parents, locating first in Toronto, Ontario, when she was about three years old. Two sons have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Donaldson, George Harold and Grant Calvin, both born in Miles City. Mrs. Donaldson is a member of the Presbyterian church, which place of worship Mr. Donaldson also attends, although he is not a member. He is a staunch Republican, and popular and prominent in local affairs of a political nature, as well as being a citizen of worth and value to any community.

JOHN PETERSON, owner of the property formerly known as the Martin Barrett Ranch of Horse Prairie, which is located about forty miles from the county seat of Beaverhead county, is a native of Smoland, Sweden, born there on the 8th of September, 1873. He is the son of Peter and Anna (Anderson) Peterson, natives of Sweden, who passed their lives there. The father was a farmer by occupation and he died in his native land some twelve years ago, although the mother still lives.

In the land of his birth John Peterson attended the common schools practically up to the time of his coming to America, that event taking place in 1889, he being sixteen years old at the time. He first located at Alta Vista, Kansas, where a brother and a sister had previously located, and here for some eighteen months he worked on a farm, receiving twelve dollars a month during the summer and fall months and working for his board in the winter. In 1891 he came to Montana and in the Big Hole basin he was for four years employed in ranch work, earning from twenty-five dollars to forty dollars a month. He was of a saving and industrious nature, determined to reach an independent state, and at the end of that time he felt himself sufficiently advanced in experience to undertake the purchase and management of a ranch of his own. He accordingly purchased a tract of six hundred and forty acres, or one section, and afterward continually added to the place until he owned some eight thousand acres. He later sold that property for $100,000 and in the spring of 1911 he bought the Martin Barrett ranch. This ranch comprised approximately the same acreage, but since Mr. Peterson acquired the property he has added to his holdings until the ranch has about ten thousand acres, all in use in the raising of stock. Mr. Peterson has about four thousand head of cattle on the place, together with an enormous number of horses, and his is known as one of the best stock ranches in the state of Montana.

When it is recalled that Mr. Peterson came to America a little more than twenty years ago as a penniless youth, his high standing today among the wealthy ranchmen of the state of Montana must be accepted as the evidence of his possession of splendid business capacity, as well as energy and pluck. He is a Democrat, and he and his wife are members of the Lutheran church.

In 1907 Mr. Peterson married Miss Thilda Swenson, like himself a native of Sweden, and one son has been born to them, Herman, born August 8, 1909.

JUDGE R. LEE McCULLOCH. Distinguished not only for his own upright and noble life, but for the illustrious and patriotic ancestry from which he is descended, Judge R. Lee McCulloch, of Hamilton, Ravalli county, is eminently deserving of honorable mention in a work of this character. A son of the late Colonel Robert McCulloch, he was born January 29, 1869, in Tipton, Moniteau county, Missouri. His paternal grandfather, Capt. Robert McCulloch, was born in Albemarle county, Virginia, December 2, 1781, and died in Cooper county, Missouri, June 12, 1853. He served as a brave soldier in the War of 1812, being captain of a company of Virginians. His wife, whose maiden name was Patsy Mills, was also a native of Virginia.

Col. Robert McCulloch was born November 23, 1820, in Albermarle county, Virginia, where he received a good education, while attending school being known by the students as "Old Formality." Venturesome and daring as a young man, he was ever quick to respond to the lure of the new and wild, in 1848 making a business trip to Santa Fe, Mexico, ere the territory of New Mexico was organized. In 1849, with a band of emigrants, he crossed the plains to the gold regions of California, where he was engaged in mining and prospecting for nearly three years. In 1852, accompanied by fifty-three companions, he recrossed the plains, coming eastward as far as Missouri, on the return trip acting as captain of the little band and being chosen for the position on account of his experience, good judgment and courage.

Locating in Cooper county, Missouri, Colonel McCulloch was there a tiller of the soil until the tocsin of war was heard throughout the land. In quick response then to Governor Jackson's call for Missouri troops to resist the Federal forces, he cast his lot with the south, was made captain of a company which he raised, and in October, 1861, joined the command of Gen. Sterling Price, at Springfield, Missouri. He was immediately commissioned colonel of the Second Regiment of Missouri Cavalry, which he commanded throughout the conflict. Noted for his courage and skill, Colonel McCulloch was at the front in many of the battles fought west of the Mississippi, General Price giving him the credit of saving the Battle of Pea Ridge. At Corinth, Mississippi, the colonel was detached from Price's command, and afterwards served under Generals Jackson, Armstrong, Lee, Van Dorn, Chalmers and Beale, each of whom, following the example of General Price, selected him for the point of danger on the battlefield. He also commanded a brigade under General Forrest. He was twice wounded by the enemy, once at Tupelo and again at Harrisburg.

Returning to Missouri at the close of the war, Colonel McCulloch was engaged in farming near Tipton, until a short time after the birth of his son, R. Lee McCulloch, when he removed to Cooper county, settling on a farm in the vicinity of Booneville, where he remained until his death in 1907, at the venerable age of eighty-six years. He was quite active in public affairs, holding various offices of responsibility. He was collector of Cooper county three terms, being elected to the office in 1872, 1874 and 1876; was county sheriff two years, and state registrar three successive terms of four years each. Courageous and skilful in war, Colonel McCulloch faithfully carried out his duties as a loyal, public-spirited citizen in times of peace, as a public official being honest and efficient.

Colonel McCulloch married, in 1852, Louisa Weight, daughter of Judge Weight, a prominent citizen and lawyer of Cooper county, Missouri, and one of the early surveyors of that county. She died in Missouri, and, with her husband, was buried in the cemetery at Booneville. Of the children born of their union three are living, namely: Mittie, wife of George Williams, of Dallas, Texas; Miss Bettie McCulloch, residing with her sister, Mrs. Williams; and R. Lee McCulloch, the subject of this sketch.

Acquiring his education in his native state, R. Lee McCulloch attended school in Booneville, Pilot, and Louisiana, and was subsequently graduated from the law department of the University of Missouri, in Columbia, with the class of 1891. Immediately beginning the practice of his profession in Missoula, Montana, he remained there five years, meeting with most encouraging success. On March 1, 1896, he located in Hamilton, Montana, and for three and one-half years was in partnership with Chester M. Crutchfield, but has since been alone. In the fall of 1908, Judge McCulloch was elected county attorney on the Democratic ticket, and after serving ably and acceptably two years in that office was reelected, in 1910. The position, however, he soon resigned to fill, by appointment, the unexpired term of District Judge H. L. Meyers, who was at that time appointed United States senator. In this capacity, Judge McCulloch is district judge of three counties, Missoula, Ravalli and Sanders, and is filling the position with commendable fidelity and ability, having been re-elected to this bench November 5, 1912. In 1900, he was appointed adjutant general by Governor Toole, and served acceptably. A Democrat in politics, the judge was defeated for the state legislature in 1894. He is active in campaign work, being a ready and fluent speaker and quite popular as an orator. Fraternally, he is a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons, in which he has taken the third degree. He has accumulated considerable property, owning valuable agricultural and timber lands in Montana, and numerous mineral claims.

On April 19, 1899, Judge McCulloch was united in marriage with Miss Leonora Miles, a native of St. Louis, Missouri, and to them four children have been born, namely: Robert Miles, Lenore Barnard and two children deceased.

ALFORD A. ARNOLD, now deceased, was a resident of the west from 1885 until the day of his death. His life was one replete with experiences which do not ordinarily fall to the lot of man, the circumstances of his birth being different from that of most mortals. He was a twin, born on the ocean, on January 10, 1851, but he claimed American birth owing to the fact that the ship had reached the place where she was flying the Stars and Stripes when he and his twin sister were ushered into the world. He was one of the five children of his parents, there being three brothers besides his twin sister, Rose. The brothers were: John, a resident of California; Harvey, who enlisted in an Ohio regiment during the Civil war and died in Andersonville prison; and Samuel, now deceased.

On reaching America, the family located at Cleveland, Ohio, and when Alford A. was but eighteen months old the father died, leaving his widow with five young children. Alford A. was reared by one Paul Carey, a farmer near the city, and when the war broke out the Carey home was used as a recruiting station. There the White Horse Cavalry was recruited, and the head of the house enlisted with them, leaving his farm to the management of his young charge and his wife. So well did the boy discharge the duties entrusted to him that when Mr. Carey returned home at the close of the war he found that a heavy mortgage had been cleared away from the place, and there was a substantial bank balance to his credit.

Mr. Arnold then secured employment in a paper mill, it being his wish to go his own way, independent of others, and during his experience in that place he met with a number of accidents, more or less serious. He had but a meagre education, his boyhood years having been devoted to farm work, with but little opportunity for the pursuit of knowledge. In 1885 he made his way to Deadwood, and in 1891 made his first appearance in Miles City. Here he met and married Mary Schairo, a daughter of Bernard and Elizabeth Schairo, both natives of Germany. Mrs. Arnold was the sixth born of the eight children of her parents, who came to America in 1835 when the mother was about twenty years old. They married in Canton, Ohio, and there settled on a farm in the then new country, and there they passed the remainder of their lives, the father dying just previous to their fiftieth wedding anniversary, and the mother six years later. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Arnold settled on a ranch and engaged in the cattle business for several years. They then came back to Miles City where they bought the Eureka Hotel, with a number of other pieces of city property. They rebuilt the hotel, improving it in every way, and today the property is valued at $20,000. They managed the place for some years and were particularly successful in the business, always keeping an attractive, up-to-date and pleasant place.

Mr. Arnold died on August 27, 1909, and his loss was deeply felt in the circles where he was known. He was a Republican, and was a member of the Odd Fellows, his affiliations being with the Canton (Ohio) lodge. One son, Arthur, was born to them, and he is now eighteen years old, in school at Miles City. Mrs. Arnold is a member of the Catholic church.

WILLIAM B. RODGERS has been identified with the legal profession in Montana since 1891. He is not a native of the state, but was born in Coles county, Illinois, the son of John White and Margaret Elizabeth (Gillenwaters) Rodgers, both natives of the state of Illinois. The father was born in Morgan county, Illinois, in 1831, but soon removed with his parents to Coles county, where he passed the remainder of his life. He died in 1883, at the age of fifty-two, his widow passing away in the following year, in the forty-ninth year of her life. They became the parents of five children, of which number William B. of this review was the third born. Two brothers of Mr. Rodgers are in Montana. Hiram W. is a lawyer and is associated with Rodgers & Rodgers. Henry G., also an attorney, resides at Dillon, Montana.

The early education of Mr. Rodgers was received in the public schools of Coles county, but at an early age he determined to obtain a college education and entered upon his studies at Lincoln University, Illinois. To obtain sufficient funds for this purpose he alternately taught school and attended college. Later he entered Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee, from which institution he was graduated with the class of 1891. Shortly after his graduation, Mr. Rodgers came to Montana, locating first in Philipsburg, where he began the practice of law. His stay in Philipsburg was brief, lasting something more than one year, when he was elected county attorney of Deer Lodge county. He moved to Deer Lodge and remained there about five years, carrying on the practice of his profession in a private way in conjunction with his duties as a county official. In 1897 Mr. Rodgers removed to Anaconda, and after a year in that place he was appointed United States district attorney by President McKinley, which brought about his removal to Helena. He acted four years in that capacity, and in 1902 he returned to Anaconda, which has represented the scene of his principal activities since that time. He has represented his district in the state legislature, in addition to filling the offices previously mentioned, and while acting as representative he was appointed to serve on practically all of the important committees. Upon his retirement from the office of United States district attorney, he ceased to actively participate in politics and since that time he neither desired nor sought public office, although at all times he has taken a deep interest in the public welfare. He has been a Republican in politics, and an ardent believer in the principles and policies of that party. He takes great interest in his profession, at one time being president of the Montana State Bar Association, and a large and constantly growing business requires all of his attention. For three years he has been and is now vice-president for Montana of the American Bar Association.

Mr. Rodgers, as a member of the Masonic fraternity, affiliates with the blue lodge and chapter, and is a member of the Knights of Pythias as well. He is a member of the Silver Bow Club of Butte, the Lambs Club of Helena and the Anaconda Club at Anaconda. He is the owner of one of the finest and largest private libraries in the state, aside from his professional library, which, in view of his fondness and that of his wife and daughters for good literature, is an especial pleasure to him.

On June 17, 1896, Mr. Rodgers was married to Alice Jeannette Knowles, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William D. Knowles, of Petersburg, Illinois, where the marriage took place. They have one child, Margaret Elizabeth, who is attending school. Mrs. Rodgers is a member of the Presbyterian church in which she takes an active interest, and shares in all the labors of that organization. She is a woman of wide culture, devoted to her home and deeply interested in Mr. Rodger's success, to which she has contributed in a large measure.

DANIEL BUTCHER. The subject of this review, a well-known citizen of Helena, where he has resided for the past twenty years, has been an important factor in business circles, and his popularity is well deserved, as in him are embraced the characteristics of an unbending integrity, unabated energy and industry. He is public-spirited and takes a deep interest in whatever tends to promote the intellectual and material welfare of the community in which he resides. Daniel Butcher is engaged in the notions, fancy and art goods business, his concern being one of the most important in the city.

On January 30, 1852, the life record of Daniel Butcher had its inception in Richmond county, New York. His father, also Daniel Butcher, was a native of England, who came to America in 1837, before the attainment of his majority. He was born in 1819 and died in 1882, in Richmond county, New York, where for many years he had followed the occupation of a farmer. The mother, whose maiden name was Jane Lindsay, was a native of the north of Ireland, who came to America in company with a brother in the same year her future husband crossed the Atlantic to the "land of promise." They were married in Richmond county, November 21, 1846, and of the four children born to them, Daniel was the third in line.

For his education young Daniel depended upon the public schools of his native county and at the age of fourteen years his education was deemed completed and he was introduced to the serious affairs of life. He found his way to New York City and there found employment as an errand boy, his employers being the firm of Lord, Huntington & McNary, dealers in drug-gist sundries. He was employed by them for two and a half years and in the great metropolis he learned much of the world. On account of the wishes of his parents, he was apprenticed to learn the carpenter and joiner's trade, and served a three years' apprenticeship in this useful occupation. He soon rose to the position of contractor and followed that for twenty years. Personally, however, he had always preferred the mercantile business, and in May, 1891, he concluded to follow out his own desires in this matter. There was still time to become a merchant. Accordingly, in May, 1891, he came to Montana. It must be mentioned that for two years before coming west he had been employed in the dry goods and notions business at Castleton Corners, New York, so that he was by no means a novice.

Upon his arrival in this city Mr. Butcher purchased the business formerly conducted by Mrs. M. M. Styles, this being in notions, fancy and art goods. The subject formed a partnership with Miss L. S. Bradley, and in the first years the firm was known as Butcher & Bradley. This co-partnership continued until the death of Miss Bradley on February 2, 1902, and after that occurrence Francis T. Fowler bought the Bradley interests and the firm of Butcher & Fowler came into being. This association continued until January, 1907, when Mr. Butcher purchased the entire business, taking Mr. Fowler's share as well as his own, and he has since that time conducted it independently. He has added to the business very extensively, his stock of goods being of the most excellent and artistic type and his patronage large and enthusiastic. He holds an assured place in commercial circles and has contributed liberally to the city's prestige in this field.

Mr. Butcher is a loyal Republican, having subscribed to the articles of faith of the party since his earliest voting days. However, when he believes the other parties are presenting a better man or a better measure, his partisanship does not prevent his giving his support to them. He does not take an active part in public affairs. He is a member of the Retail Merchants' Association of Helena. He is a zealous member and liberal supporter of the Presbyterian church, in which he holds the office of senior elder and clerk of session.

Mr. Butcher was married November 21, 1875, in Richmond county, New York, the young woman to become his wife and the mistress of his household being Miss Anna A. Sommer, daughter of Robert and Johanna Sommer, of that county. Five children have been born to the subject and his admirable wife, two being sons and three daughters. Alfred D., born September 2, 1876, in Richmond county, is associated with his father in business. He is a veteran of the Spanish-American war, having served as a member of Company B, Second United States Infantry. He saw active service, going with his command to Cuba and participating in the siege of Santiago and also in the assault of San Juan Hill, in which latter engagement he met with injury. His regiment was under General Shafter. He was discharged at Paso Caballo, Cien Fuegos, July 23, 1899, having entered as a corporal and was discharged a sergeant. He is one of the well-known citizens of Helena. The second son, Edwin, also born at Richmond county, New York, is a graduate of West Point, and is now serving as first lieutenant with the Fifteenth United States Infantry. The daughters are natives of Richmond county, also. Louise Amelia, born November 19, 1882, is the wife of Charles E. Davies, a resident of Ottawa, Canada. Alice L., born March 29, 1885, is the wife of H. L. Gregory, of Spokane, Washington. The youngest daughter, born January 24, 1887, died June 11, 1891. Both of the sons are married. Mrs. A. D. Butcher was previous to her marriage Miss Ellen M. Colberg, daughter of Nels Colberg, of Princeton, Illinois. The wife of Lieutenant Butcher was Elizabeth Skyrme, daughter of William Skyrme, one of Montana's pioneer settlers and for many years associated with Marcus Daly.

Particular credit is due Mr. Butcher for his success and the honor he enjoys, for he is thoroughly self-made, and from earliest boyhood he has known the responsibilities of life, and his success is the logical result of his unswerving and enlightened efforts.

HON. FRANK T. WOODS. The municipal prosperity of the exceedingly well-governed city of Billings must be attributed in a great degree to the business-like and economical administration of the city's affairs. Its good government must be attributed likewise to the enforcement of law and the preservation of order, so essential in every well regulated community, by the city's chief executive, the Hon. Frank T. Woods. Mayor Woods was born in Monroe county, Missouri, June 17, 1868, and is a son of Judge James F. and Ann (Glasscock) Woods.

James F. Woods was born in Mercer county, Kentucky, September 7, 1833, and died January 2, 1902. He was married in Missouri to Ann Glasscock, who was born in 1836, and she now resides in Kansas City. At the time of his death the Paris Appeal had the following to say of Judge Woods: "Judge James F. Woods died at his home near Woodlawn, at four o'clock Monday morning, of cancer. Funeral services were conducted by Eld. C. H. Strawn at Woodlawn, Tuesday morning, and the remains were laid to rest at Oak Grove. The crowd in attendance was perhaps the largest seen on a similar occasion in the township. We doubt if the death of any one man has ever called forth as many expressions of regret or inspired as much sorrow in the hearts of his acquaintances as has the death of Judge Woods. Every man has his faults, and he no doubt had his, but they were so little in evidence that the average man failed to see them. He was one of the few men to whom the mind would revert when the ideal citizen was mentioned. Judge Woods was born in Mercer county, Kentucky, sixty-eight years ago. Two years later his parents moved to this county. They were people of small means and few opportunities. Their children as they grew up were largely dependent upon their own efforts. Judge Woods made his first money as a farm laborer, and by his own exertions and good management finally became one of the leading land owners and most extensive stockmen in the county. His specialty was mules. He handled none but the best, and took great pride in gathering together the best bunches in his section. His home was one of the most pleasant and hospitable places in the county. We have been there many a time, and will always look back with pleasure to such visits.

"The judge was a gentleman of the old school—jovial, generous, unassuming. He knew half the people in the county, and delighted to meet them. Twice he was a candidate for county judge from his district and both times he was elected with ease. The county may have had just as good men on the bench, but it will never have better. What a pleasure it must have been to such a man as he when he saw the dark waters of death closing about him to have looked back over a life so well spent, to have known that he would be followed to the grave by the universal regret of the people among whom he had lived, and to have left to his family a name that would be cherished far more than his lands and his money. It is such men that keep up the standard of citizenship and by example teach others the value of a life well spent. The death of this man is a sad loss to his family, to his community, to his church and to his county. In all the county the Appeal had no stauncher or more valued friend. The wife, the daughter, and seven stalwart sons who survive him, have the sympathy of everybody. Judge Woods was a member of the Christian church and of Woodlawn Lodge, A. F. & A. M."

Again we are allowed to quote an extract from the Paris Mercury: "Judge James F. Woods, who died at

J. M. Barber

Woodlawn Sunday, could of a truth be called Monroe county's Grand Old Man. For years he faced approaching death and endured sufferings of which it is hardly possible to conceive. Yet his grim fortitude never once relaxed, nor was he, on most occasions, without the cheerfulness and optimism that more generally accompany good health. He never lost interest in the world about him and died with the heroism becoming a man of his type."

The boyhood of Frank T. Woods was spent much the same as that of other farmers' youths of his day and locality. During the long summer months he assisted in the work on his father's farm, and in the winters he secured his educational training by attendance at the district school. When he had reached the age of sixteen years he was sent to the Shelbina school for one year, and in 1887 was graduated from the Kirksville Normal School. For the four years that followed he was engaged in teaching, and September 11, 1891, saw his advent in Billings. Subsequently, however, he spent three years in Livingston, where he acted as secretary and treasurer of the Livingston Electric Light and Water Power Company. In the spring of 1893 he was elected to the office of city treasurer, and served one term, and in the fall of 1895, in company with T. P. McDonald, he sold the present townsite of Red Lodge. Shortly thereafter he returned to Missouri and entered the Missouri University, from the law department of which he was graduated in June, 1897. Locating in Moberly, Missouri, Mr. Woods engaged in the practice of his profession for eight years, and in the spring of 1899 was elected city attorney, his services in that office being so appreciated as to cause his re-election in 1901. In 1905 Mr. Woods returned to Billings, and was here engaged in the sheep business until the fall of 1910.

Mr. Woods' political affiliation is with the Democratic party, in whose ranks he has done much effective work. He was elected alderman from the Second ward in 1908, but retired from the council and on April 3, 1911 was elected mayor of Billings on a non-partisan ticket, carrying every ward in the city. He is giving Billings an effective, sane and clean administration, of which every citizen, regardless of politics, may be proud. His career as mayor has been characterized by the bringing about of some greatly needed reforms in the municipal government, and these reforms have not been merely spasmodic, but have been carried on conscientiously and consistently. He has the reins of city government firmly in hand, his administration has been a wise and a just one, and he is entitled to the universal esteem and respect in which he is held. His fraternal connections are with Ashlar Lodge, No. 29, A. F. & A. M., and Billings Lodge, No. 394, B. P. O. E.

On October 26, 1899, Mayor Woods was married to Miss Nellie T. Rodes, who was born in Monroe county, Missouri, daughter of John C. and Jennie (Rice) Rodes. John C. Rodes was born in 1834, in Tennessee, and now resides in Missouri, where for many years he has been engaged in farming and stock raising. His wife, who was born in Virginia, April 9, 1840, died January 21, 1907. Of their three children, Mrs. Woods is the second in order of birth.

JOHN MANNING BARBER. A man who for more than twenty years or more has been closely identified with leading business activities in this city is Mr. John Manning Barber, manager of the Butte branch of the wholesale meat dealers of Anaconda, W. M. Montgomery Company. In addition to this commercial connection, Mr. Barber has also another claim to a position of influence in the community since he is deeply interested in civic and political affairs and is a potential factor in shaping the policy in public matters through his membership in the city council as duly elected alderman from his ward.

Mr. Barber is a descendant of an old Ohio family, and was born in Knox county of that state, February 12, 1866. His father, Clem Barber, was by occupation a farmer, and he died February 12, 1867, when John, the youngest of the family of three children, was less than a year old. His mother, who was before her marriage, Jane Baughman, survived her husband many years and died in Ohio, September 22, 1885. After availing himself of such school advantages as were possible at that time in the country districts of Knox county, Mr. Barber started out, a youth of sixteen years, to carve his own fortune. Leaving the farm home where he was reared he went to the city of Columbus, Ohio, and spent a year as clerk in the grocery store of C. B. Miller of that place. At the end of that time the opportunity presented itself to accompany a shipment of thoroughbred cattle to Texas for DeWeese & Strickland, large stock raisers of that state, and upon his arrival there he decided to remain for a time. Becoming interested in and informed concerning the fine qualities of stock for market, a year later he returned to Columbus and, in partnership with Plummer Merrit of that place, engaged in the purchase and sale of live stock for the Columbus market, carrying on a successful business in that line for three years. The call of the west again lured him, however, and his next venture in an independent business was made at Georgetown, Colorado, where he conducted a retail meat market until 1891. He proved himself a good business man, thrifty and industrious, but believing that in the northwest he would be able to do better than at his old location he disposed of the Georgetown market and in November, 1891, became a resident of Butte, Montana, at once identifying himself with its commercial life by engaging in the retail meat trade. He continued as an independent dealer until 1899, when he disposed of his market and the subsequent eighteen months was manager in Butte for Armour & Company, the well known meat packers. Having purchased stock in the firm of W. M. Montgomery Company, meat wholesalers with a large packing plant at Anaconda, Mr. Barber resigned his connection with Armour and assumed the position of manager of the Montgomery business in Butte, and has had charge of this branch of the business continuously ever since. The Montgomery Company packing plant is reputed to be the largest local establishment of its kind in the state.

The prestige enjoyed by Mr. Barber both through his responsible commercial position and his official connection is of the most influential character and marks him as a leader in vital affairs that make for the advancement of the best interests of this city and state. Mr. Barber was married at Helena, Montana, March 24, 1896, to Miss Lottie I. Cooper, daughter of Lucien Bonaparte Cooper, a native of Wisconsin.

WILLIAM D. MOWRE. The business interests of Billings, Montana, have grown to an amazing extent during the last few years, and the credit for this desirable state of affairs may be given to the enterprising business men whose energy and modern methods have put the city on a sound financial basis, while they have co-operated with the city officials in looking after its municipal needs. It may be said of William D. Mowre, of 2811 Montana avenue, that he has aided in the city's business development and helped to advance its civic welfare, while he is well and popularly known in fraternal circles. Mr. Mowre was born in Van Buren county, Iowa, November 18, 1861, and is a son of Joel A. and Margaret (Gray) Mowre.

Joel A. Mowre was born in Kentucky, in 1833, and as a youth removed to Van Buren county, Iowa, with his parents. There he secured a common school education, and was reared in agricultural pursuits, following farming and stockraising all of his life and dying in 1898. His wife, who was a native of Indiana, passed away in May, 1910, when sixty-five years of age, having been the mother of three sons and two daughters, of whom the sons, William D., Emery H. and Charles E., are living. Joel A. Mowre was a member of the school board for a number of years, was a Republican in politics and a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and as soon as he was of age identified himself with Masonry, gaining membership in Troy Lodge, No. 40.

The education of William D. Mowre was secured in the common schools of Van Buren county, and it was his father's intention that he should become a farmer. He remained on the home place until 1882, at which time he started for the west, and after a journey of eight days arrived at Stockton, California. During the four years that followed he was employed on the ranch of his uncle, William J. Gray, never losing a day's work in this time, and in the fall of 1886 returned to his Iowa home. He was there married, and subsequently returned to California, locating at Linden, where he was engaged in the blacksmith business until the spring of 1891. That year saw his advent in Stillwater, now known as Columbus, Montana, where he followed the same line of work until the fall of 1892, and he then took up a ranch on the Rose Bud. For six years he was successfully engaged in farming and cattle raising, and in 1898 came to Billings and established himself in a general merchandise business, but after three years disposed of his interests therein to enter the wholesale and retail cigar and tobacco business, a line to which he has since devoted his attention. Mr. Mowre is a business man of progressive ideas, and the manner in which he has handled his enterprise has given him standing among the legitimate business concerns of the city. His goods are well and favorably known and have had a steadily increasing sale. Mr. Mowre is a Republican in his political views, but takes only a good citizen's interest in public matters, although he is at all times ready to enlist his influence in the cause of any movement which he feels will be of benefit to his adopted city. He has interested himself in fraternal work, being a member of Ashlar Lodge, No. 29, A. F. & A. M.; Billings Chapter, No. 6, R. A. M.; Aldemar Commandery, No. 5, K. T., of which he is captain general; and Helena Temple; and is also connected with Billings Star Lodge, No. 4, I. O. O. F. Formerly he was identified with Scio Lodge, No. 102, of Linden, California, which he joined in 1883, and in which he filled all the chairs and was a past noble grand.

On November 4, 1886, Mr. Mowre was married to Miss Irene Campbell, who was born in Mansfield, Ohio, daughter of William S. and Sarah (Brown) Campbell, both deceased. Mrs. Mowre's parents had eight children, the last two being twins, one of whom was Irene. Her father was a farmer and located in Iowa in 1863 or 1864, spending the rest of his days in Van Buren county. He was a staunch Republican and a deacon of the Presbyterian church. Mr. and Mrs. Mowre have two daughters; Edna, who was educated in the Berkeley (California) University, and the University of Wisconsin, and Arminda J., who finished the course at the latter institution and is now attending Northwestern University, Chicago.

LUTHER VAN WAGENEN. One of the well-irrigated farms of the Yellowstone valley which shows what excellent results may be obtained by intelligent cultivation is that of Luther Van Wagenen, located three miles southwest of Billings. Mr. Van Wagenen is an experienced agriculturist, having been born on a farm and reared to follow that vocation, and during the past twenty years his operations have been confined to the vicinity in which he now lives, and where he bears an excellent reputation for upright citizenship. Mr. Van Wagenen was born in Ulster county, New York, October 26, 1841, and is a son of Jonas and Sarah Ann (Wells) Van Wagenen, natives of New York state, who were there married. Jonas Van Wagenen followed agricultural pursuits all of his life, developing a farm from wild land in Ulster county and residing thereon until his death, at the age of eighty-two years, his wife having passed away when fifty-seven years of age. They were faithful members of the Reformed church, and in political matters Mr. Van Wagenen was a Whig until the year 1855, at which time he gave his allegiance to the Republican party. He and his wife had seven children, of whom two are living: Luther and Eli, the latter of whom resides at Omaha, Nebraska.

Like other farmers' sons of his day and locality, Luther Van Wagenen secured his education in the district schools during the winter terms, when he could be spared from his share of the duties of the home farm. He continued to reside on the home place until a year after his marriage, when, his mother dying, he left the parental roof and started out to establish a home of his own, being engaged in farming in the east until 1869. In the spring of that year he moved to Adams county, Iowa, where he also engaged in cultivating the soil, but after a few years gave up farming to become a bridge builder in the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. Mr. Van Wagenen continued in the service of that company until the spring of 1891, when he became a resident of Billings, and the following year was spent in carpenter work about the city. He subsequently found a property that suited him, located about twelve miles west of Billings, and was there engaged in farming until 1905, when he moved to his present ranch, situated three miles southwest of the city. This Mr. Van Wagenen has devoted to alfalfa, wheat and oats, and his industry and good judgment have enabled him to take advantage of all natural opportunities for productive cultivation, and his crops are gratifying both in quality and abundance. The land is worth $150 an acre at the present time, and the improvements which Mr. Van Wagenen has made are at the same time valuable and handsome. A thoroughly practical farmer, he is an advocate of irrigation and rotation of crops, and the general appearance of his land proves him to be an able and industrious agriculturist. He has always kept good stock, and at this time has nine horses of superior breed. Politically Mr. Van Wagenen is a Republican, but he has preferred to give his entire attention to his farm and has never entered the political arena. He and his family attend the Methodist Episcopal church.

On December 14, 1862, Mr. Van Wagenen was married to Miss Fannie Freer, who was born in Ulster county, New York, daughter of Josiah Freer, a cabinet maker who spent his entire life in the Empire state. Mrs. Van Wagenen, who died December 14, 1899, had two sisters: Josephine, the wife of J. C. Fitch, of Billings, Montana; and Sophia, wife of George Birdsall, of New York state. Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Van Wagenen, of whom two died in infancy, the survivors being: Clarence, who married Mary Lau-man; Jesse; Jennie; Harry, a half owner with his father in the ranch; Stella E., wife of L. W. Thorpe, living at Livingston, Montana; and Louise.

THOMAS ASH SNIDOW. Self-reliance, conscientiousness, energy, honesty—all these traits of character have been instrumental in attaining for Thomas Ash Snidow, of Billings, the remarkable measure of success which has attended his efforts, but, more than anything else, perhaps, credit must be given the indomitable resolution that has given an irresistible impetus to his operations and caused him to forge steadily forward in the face of all difficulties and discouragements. In the business world, varied and important as are his interests, he has escaped the criticism which has frequently been passed upon various prominent men of his generation, and his career is worthy of study and emulation by the youth of today, not only as one that has been free from stain or blemish, but also as an example of self-made western American manhood. Mr. Snidow was born near Madison, Monroe county, Missouri, January 31, 1863, and is a son of James Martin and Martha (Ash) Snidow.

The paternal grandparents of Thomas A. Snidow, William and Chloe (Frely) Snidow, were both born in Virginia, of German parentage. In 1837 they traveled overland by ox-team to the state of Missouri, settling in Monroe county, on a tract of 320 acres, of which 120 acres were in timberland and 200 acres were prairie. Deer, wild turkeys and other game were to be found in abundance, and the Indians had not left the locality. Breaking his prairie land by means of teams of oxen, William Snidow became one of the successful farmers of his location, and was well and favorably known all over his district. He also became prominent in Democratic politics, and with his wife was a consistent attendant of the old Baptist church. They had a family of three sons and four daughters, James M. being the first born. James Martin Snidow was born September 21, 1825, in Cabell county, Virginia, and was twelve years of age when he accompanied his parents to the new country, his education being secured in the primitive schools of that day and locality, and his boyhood and youth being spent in the hard work of the home farm. He was married October 16, 1853, in Monroe county, to Miss Martha Ash, who was born in Indiana, April 11, 1832, daughter of George and Naomi Ash, natives of Kentucky, where the former was born in 1800 and the latter in 1803. They removed to Indiana in 1831, and subsequently became pioneers of Monroe county, Missouri, where Mr. Ash was the owner of large tracts of farming property. He died in 1863, while his widow survived him until 1891, being eighty-eight years old at the time of her demise. They had eleven children. James M. Snidow remained on the parental farm for one year after his marriage, and in 1854 purchased a farm in Monroe county, Missouri, but eventually disposed of that property and bought another in the same county. He spent the remainder of his life in that section, following farming, fruit growing and stock raising, and being especially interested in breeding good horses. He took advantage of the latest inventions in farming machinery, and, being a skilled mechanic, was at all times able to keep his machinery in the best of repair. He was recognized as an able agriculturist and an excellent judge of land and crop conditions. He was a faithful member of the old Baptist church and a great Bible student. In political matters, like his father, he was a Democrat, but he never cared for public office, although often pressed to accept positions of public trust. His wife passed away August 2, 1895, and he survived until June 28, 1908. They had a family of ten children, as follows: Laura E., wife of Cyrus D. Lusk, living in Randolph county, Missouri; Naomi, who died at the age of twenty-two years; Martha J., who died at the age of thirty-one years, the wife of W. D. Gerrard; William G., living in the west; Christian M., who lost his life by drowning when he was twenty-one years old; Thomas Ash; James P., vice president and manager of the State Bank of Huntley, Montana; Henry L. and Jasper, who died in infancy; and Victor R., who died at the age of twenty-seven years.

The boyhood of Thomas Ash Snidow was spent on his father's farm, where he assisted his brothers in tilling the soil during the summer months, the winter terms being devoted to attendance at the district schools. On March 25, 1885, he left home to go to Jacinto, Colusa county, California, where he entered the employ of Dr. Hugh Glenn, on whose ranch he worked for fourteen months. At this time young Snidow decided to enter the agricultural field on his own account, and accordingly secured a farm of 640 acres in the same county, but after raising one crop of wheat sold the land and entered the employ of the Sierra Lumber Company, where he was engaged in cutting cord wood. He then became fireman of the hoisting works at Butte Meadow, a position which he held until December 21, 1887, then removing to Chico, in the Sacramento valley of California. Subsequently he returned to the lumber camps in the Sierra Mountains, but on December 20, 1888, returned to his old home in Madison county, Missouri, and continued to visit his parents until February, 1889, when he purchased a farm of 120 acres in Randolph county, Missouri. He was there engaged in farming until August of that year, when he disposed of his crop and farm and returned to the home of his parents, and engaged in buying and selling stock until April, 1891, at which time he removed to Castle, Meagher county, Colorado. At that place he carried on the ice business until July 19, 1891, and then came overland to Billings, and in October, 1891, invested his savings in the sheep business. Purchasing 855 head of sheep, he took the herd to Clark's Ford and there disposed of it and having made a decided success of this first venture purchased 1500 head, which he took to Crouper creek, Bighorn county, Wyoming. In March, 1893, he added 700 head to his flock, but during the following winter he lost about 900 head by the extreme cold, and the financial panic which followed swept away all of his earnings and put to naught the years of hard, faithful labor. It needed more than this to discourage a man of Mr. Snidow's spirit, however, and in April, 1894, he took the remainder of his stock to Blue creek, in Yellowstone county, south of Billings, and formed a partnership with P. B. Moss, who furnished 700 head of sheep and a ranch for range, both becoming equal partners in the enterprise, although the active operation of the venture was left in the hands of Mr. Snidow, who successfully conducted it until October, 1900. At that time a partnership was formed with the First National Bank of Billings, of which Mr. Moss was president, and the Snidow Sheep Company was organized, with Mr. Moss as president and Mr. Snidow as treasurer. In 1907 Mr. Snidow purchased the interest of all the other stockholders and became sole owner of the company, which at that time was running approximately 77,000 head of sheep, with 400,000 acres of leased land in the Crow Indian Reservation. Mr. Snidow disposed of his interest in this business May 1, 1911. On October 1, 1909, with three others, he bought the stock of the H. P. Rothwell Livestock Company, of Rothwell, Wyoming, now known as the Owl Creek Land and Livestock Company, with about 31,000 head of sheep, horses, and cattle. Also in 1908 Mr. Snidow purchased a two-thirds interest in what is known as the Basin Cattle Company, located in Bighorn county, Wyoming, this company owning 2,300 head of white-faced Hereford cattle, about 1,000 head being full-blooded animals. In addition, this company breeds as fine Belgium Percheron and Shire horses as can be found in the United States.

Mr. Snidow is the owner of a ranch of 1,500 acres, located about thirty miles west of Billings, at Youngs Point, on the Northern Pacific Railroad, which may be reached in Mr. Snidow's forty-eight horse-power automobile in about an hour and twenty minutes from Billings, the trip being made over a finely graded road running through some of the most beautiful parts of the famous Yellowstone valley. This ranch is a model of its kind. In addition to a handsome, modern residence for the family of the superintendent, there is a comfortable, well-built bunk house for the herders, while the barns, ice house and other buildings are substantial and commodious. Running water supplies the stock, which consists of 2,300 head of sheep, 200 Duroc hogs, fifty Bronze turkeys and a large number of Plymouth Rock chickens. Twenty valuable horses are kept, principally for the use of the herders. Mr. Snidow raises small fruits and has a fine young orchard, and the 900 acres of irrigated land are devoted to oats, which run forty-five to fifty pounds to the acre. He also has about 1,200 tons of alfalfa in stacks, and in 1908 he raised the banner crop of sugar beets on 120 acres of land, this crop paying him over $11,000. In honor of his boyhood home, Mr. Snidow has named this the Missouri Ranch, and at the present writing he is erecting the Missouri Building in Billings, a fire-proof theatre, hotel, office and store building on Twenty-eighth street, in the center of the business district. He has also demonstrated his ability in the field of finance, being president of the Huntley State Bank, of which he was one of the organizers in 1905; a director in the State Bank of Powell, Wyoming; and in the First National Bank of Hardin, Montana; and vice-president and one of the organizers of the Farmers and Traders State Bank of Billings. He holds 147 shares of stock in the Broadwater Subdivision in the city of Billings. In political matters he is a Republican, but his business interests have been too numerous and varied for him to think of a public career.

On November 26, 1899, Mr. Snidow was united in marriage with Miss Sallie L. Rodes, who was born in Monroe county, Missouri, daughter of John C. and Virginia Rodes. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Rodes, of whom three died in infancy, and Mrs. Snidow, who was the third in order of birth, was born December 18, 1868. Her mother is now deceased, but her father, a prominent agriculturist and Democratic politician, is now residing in Shelby county, Missouri, where he has served for a number of years as justice of the peace. Mr. and Mrs. Snidow have had two children: Martha and Virginia. The former died in infancy, but the latter is now in her tenth year, a bright and interesting child, and a general favorite with all who visit the comfortable family home in Billings. The young lady inherits her sunny disposition from her father; whose whole-souled, genial manner has made him friends in whatever community he has found himself. Among his business associates he is recognized as a man of versatile talents and one whose activities have always been centered in enterprises of a strictly nature, while his friends know him as a big-hearted, generous man, who successful himself, finds enjoyment in the success of others.

J. WARD HUSE. The career of the late J. Ward Huse, in whose death Billings lost one of its leading business citizens, was one of constant industry and courageous perseverance from his earliest boyhood. From modest beginnings, the Michigan lad, who was later to become an influential merchant, triumphed over all obstacles in his way and set an example of success won without double dealing or unfair advantage over any men. With none of the advantages open to the youth of to-day who can prepare for a business career, as a sequel to a college education leading directly to that end, Mr. Huse applied to the tasks and problems he encountered a native commercial sense which his perspicacity developed with years. When he came to Montana some twenty years ago, he found the mercantile business practically in its beginning—a vast, untried field of commercial endeavor with but few precedents to guide those that engaged in it. To him, as much as to any other, is due the credit for the marvelous development of Montana's commercial interests during the past several decades. J. Ward Huse was born October 10, 1869, in St. Clair, Michigan, and is a son of Charles and Helen (Woodbury) Huse, his father having been a steamer captain on the St. Clair river.

The second in order of birth of the five children of his parents, Mr. Huse secured his early education in the common schools of St. Clair, and as a youth of fifteen left the parental roof to make his own way in the world. Going to the lumber town of Oscoda, Michigan, he secured a position as clerk in a store, there receiving his initiation into the mercantile field. Subsequently he went to Chicago and took a course in a business college, and in that city secured valuable training in the great wholesale grocery house of Sprague, Warner & Company. In 1891, Mr. Huse decided to go farther west, and in that year made his advent in Lewistown, Montana, where he immediately became connected with the Power Mercantile Company, and for years continued to be associated with that firm as manager of the various stores under its control, and during the greater portion of this period he was manager of their large mercantile establishment at Fort Benton. From Fort Benton he came to Billings in 1905, to take charge of one of the branches of his company, then known as the Donovan-McCormack Company, proprietors of a general store. And in 1907, when the company retired from the field at Billings, Mr. Huse and his partner, Mr. Yates, bought out the implement business, forming the company of Huse-Yates & Company, that partnership continuing until the death of Mr. Huse on the 25th of July, 1910. This concern, which is one of the leading implement houses in the state, is now controlled by Mr. Yates.

On September 11, 1895, Mr. Huse was married to Miss Fay A. Turner, daughter of Dr. Will E. Turner, of Fort Benton, a pioneer physician of that place, whence he came as a United States army surgeon. When the fort was abandoned, he resigned his commission and engaged in a large general practice until his death in 1889. Dr. Turner was married to Annie Snow, who joined him in Montana in 1875, and is at this time a resident of Seattle, Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Huse had one daughter, Fay Irene.

Mr. Huse was connected with the Elks and the Masonic order. In politics he was a Republican, and he was chairman of the Chouteau County Republican Central Committee for many years. He had large business interests of numerous kinds and was for several years an extensive dealer in and raiser of sheep. At various times he rendered signal services to his city where his business abilities, executive capacity and high sense of commercial integrity made those services of great importance. His was a busy life, and it is to his high credit that he was busied about those things which make for the material growth of a community. He found leisure, however, to take occasional hunting and fishing trips, from which he invariably returned with excellent specimens of the furry and finny tribes, and he was a valued member of the Fort Benton Hunting and Fishing Clubs. A business man of honor and a citizen who had the welfare of his community at heart, he was highly respected and liked by all with whom he came into contact in any way, and his place will be hard to fill in the business world of Billings and in the hearts of his many friends.

Mrs. Huse is a favorite in the best social circles of Billings, and with her charming daughter, who is a student in the high school, entertain most graciously in their model home.

EUGENE CARROLL. Well known not only as one of the more progressive and enterprising citizens of Butte, but for his activity in the public and social circles of the city, Eugene Carroll is eminently worthy of special mention in a work of this character, and it is with pleasure that we place a brief resume of the more salient points of his life before our readers. A son of the late Robert W. Carroll, he was born, April 7, 1861, in Cincinnati, Ohio, of honored Irish ancestry. Thomas Carroll, M. D., the founder of that branch of the Carroll family from which he is sprung, came to the United States in colonial days from Ireland. He subsequently settled as a physician in Ohio, and there spent the remainder of his life.

Robert W. Carroll, a life-long resident of Ohio, was a lawyer of note and ability in Cincinnati, where he was engaged in the practice of his profession until his death, December 17, 1897. He married Mary Arabella Piatt, who was born in Ohio and is now living in New York City. She was of English and French ancestry, and of Revolutionary stock, and is now a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Obtaining his early education in the public schools of Cincinnati, Eugene Carroll entered the United States Naval Academy, from which he was graduated in the class of 1881. He remained in the navy two years longer, and on resigning, in 1883, took up the civil engineering profession, which he still follows and in which he is an expert. Locating at Butte, Montana, in 1891, Mr. Carroll, as superintendent and chief engineer of the Butte Water Company, built the water works system of Butte, and is now general manager of the Water Works Company's affairs.

A wide-awake member of the Republican party, Mr. Carroll takes an intelligent interest in local, state, and national affairs. He is a member of the American Society of Civil Engineers, and a member and ex-president of the Montana Society of Engineers. He likewise belongs to the Navy League of the United States. Socially, Mr. Carroll is past president of the Silver Bow Club; and is also a member of the Country Club of Butte, and the Montana Club of Helena. Fraternally, he is a Knight Templar Mason and a member of the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine.

Mr. Carroll married, in Butte, Montana, March 21, 1895, Mary S. Napton, who was born at Deer Lodge, that state, a daughter of Thomas L. and Anna (Chadwick) Napton.

J. HUMPHREY JOHNSON, M. D. In looking around for men of vigorous and forcible character who have taken important and prominent part in the affairs of men, the biographer is not expected to deal only with valiant and martial heroes, for in the world of science and arts, the professions and politics, are found men of action, capable and earnest, whose talents, enterprise and energy command the respect of their fellow men and whose lives are worthy examples and objects of emulation. That the life of such a person should have its public record is peculiarly proper, because a knowledge of men whose substantial fame rests upon their attainments, character and success, necessarily exert a wholesome influence on the rising generation of Americans. In this connection it is appropriate to review in this volume the circumstances of the life of J. Humphrey Johnson, M. D., of Bridger.

The progenitor of the branch of the family to which Dr. Johnson belongs, John Johnson, a native of England, came to America prior to the Revolutionary war, in which he participated as an American officer, and in the possession of the doctor's brother is an old sword which this John Johnson captured from a British officer. On his mother's side, Dr. Johnson is descended from settlers of 1635 who located near the present site of Falmouth, Massachusetts, one of the descendants being Capt. Zephaniah Hatch, of Connecticut, who, in the early part of the eighteenth century was a master mariner and engaged in the West India trade. Timothy, the head of Mrs. Johnson's branch of the family, was born in 1757. He entered the Colonial army at the age of nineteen, and took part in the battle of White Plains, where he was taken prisoner, and was thereafter confined in the Bridewell prison in New York.

Rev. Leonard Johnson was born in the state of Vermont in 1801, and received his education in Amherst College, where he was valedictorian of his class, delivering the first valedictory address at that institution. His life was spent in the service of the Presbyterian ministry, and he held various charges throughout Vermont and New York, and died at Triangle in the latter state. His wife, a native of Massachusetts, died in 1868, at the age of seventy-four years, having been the mother of nine children, as follows: Narcissa H., who died at the age of forty-five years, the wife of Thomas S. Rodgers; Leonard J., a surgeon with the rank of major in the First New York Volunteers during the Civil war, who died in 1911; George M. T., a member of the First New Jersey Cavalry under General Kirkpatrick, during the Civil war, and now a resident of Binghamton, New York; M. C., who was living in Nebraska at the time of the Jay Hawk trouble, served in the Kansas militia, and during the Civil war was a member of a regiment of Nebraska volunteers, and died in 1867; Charles H., a well-known practicing physician and surgeon of Michigan, who died in 1870; William E., who served three years as a member of Company D., Twenty-seventh Regiment, New York Volunteer Infantry, participated in thirteen engagements, received a medal for personal bravery at the battle of Antietam, and died in 1893, at Strong, Maine; Joseph M., who served during the Civil war as captain of a company of New York volunteers, and after the war settled down to a law practice in Washington, D. C., where he is now living retired; Norton, who died at the age of twenty-one years; and J. Humphrey.

J. Humphrey Johnson was born August 7, 1850, at Binghamton, New York, and after graduating from the high school of that city was appointed deputy clerk of Broome county, a position which he held for nine years. He then entered the medical department of the University of the City of New York, from which he was graduated in 1879, and returned to Binghamton and entered practice. He was elected to the office of coroner, and served in that capacity for four years, but in 1884 went to Lebanon, Oregon, where he remained only two and one-half years, when he returned to the city of his nativity. Subsequently he went to Lebanon, New York, where he continued in practice until 1891, that year seeing his advent in Red Lodge, Montana, where he continued in practice until the fall of 1898. At that time he was elected a member of the Sixth legislature of Montana, and removed to Helena, but in the spring of 1899 located in Bridger, where he was physician and surgeon for the Bridger Coal Company until 1907. In 1904 he acquired a homestead in Carbon county, eleven miles from Bridger, where he now has about 4,000 apple trees, in addition to much small fruit on a tract of 320 acres of finely improved land. It is given to few to possess such versatile talents, but Dr. Johnson has shown himself as skilful an agriculturist as he was an able medical practitioner, and in his new field of endeavor has gained an enviable position. Politically a Democrat, in addition to the offices heretofore mentioned, he served as a member of the school board of Red Lodge for a number of years, and since residing in Carbon county has been a trustee of school district No. 35. He is a valued member of Carbon County Medical Society, Montana State Medical Society and the American Medical Association, and his fraternal connection is with Lebanon (N. Y.) Lodge No. 582, of which he was one of the organizers and past noble grand; the encampment at Canton, Uniform Rank; the Rebekahs of Norward, New York, of which Mrs. Johnson is also a member; Bridger Lodge, I. O. O. F.; and Star of the West Lodge No. 40, A. F. & A. M., of Red Lodge.

Dr. Johnson was married February 17, 1874, to Miss Catherine M. Brown, daughter of Charles M. and Charlotte M. (Moulter) Brown, the former born at Palmyra, New York, December 24, 1825, and the latter at Cassadaga, New York, July 12, 1827. Mrs. Johnson's father passed away July 2, 1887, and her mother, September 18, 1880, she being their only child. Mr. Brown was educated at Cassadaga Seminary, New York, and Norwich Academy, and as a youth engaged in clerical work, securing a position in a large eastern bank. Later he was engaged in the hotel business, first at Norwich, and later at Binghamton, at which latter city his death occurred. For many years he acted in the capacity of overseer of the poor, and was active in Democratic politics. Fraternally, he was an Oddfellow and was also prominent in Freemasonry, having passed through the thirty-second degree, and being in line for the thirty-third degree at the time of his death. Dr. and Mrs. Johnson have had three children: Mary, the wife of Samuel H. Glidden, of Seattle, Washington, and formerly of Montana, where he served two terms as state senator, has two children: Jane M. and Ann; Anna A., wife of Frederick B. Williams, master mechanic for the Bear Creek Mining Company, of Bear Creek, Montana, has two children, Winnifred Narcissa and William H.; and Joseph Hatch, who is also in the employ of the Bear Creek Mining Company. Dr. Johnson's handsome home is a center of pleasing and genial hospitality, and a popular meeting place for the hosts of friends he and Mrs. Johnson have drawn about them.

HERBERT V. BAILEY. A number of the present representative business men of Montana came to this state very soon after its admission to the Union, a large number of these being yet in early manhood, with untried powers and youthful enthusiasm, and in the two succeeding decades have been those who have advanced the quality of citizenship in the Mountain states as well as forwarded its commercial prosperity. Herbert V. Bailey, who is secretary of the great mercantile firm of W. B. Jordan & Sons' Company, at Miles City, Montana, came to this section in 1891. He was born at Agency, Wapello county, Iowa, August 10, 1870, and is a son of Chapman and Anna E. (Hilton) Bailey.

Chapman Bailey was born in Indiana, August 17, 1848, and is a son of Howard Bailey, a native of Kentucky, who was a very early settler in Indiana, a farmer, stock raiser and lumberman, later in life moving to Wapello county, Iowa, where the rest of his life was spent. Chapman Bailey completed his school attendance after his father removed to Iowa, and there he also engaged in stock raising and became additionally a miller and a merchant. In 1879 he moved into Dallas county, Iowa, and continued his agricultural and mercantile enterprises there for some years when he located at Springfield, Missouri, where he was a merchant for some years and then embarked in the same business at St. Louis, Missouri, which city is his present home. He has always been prominent in Democratic politics. He is a Knight Templar Mason and belongs to the Mystic Shrine. He married Anna E. Hilton, who was born in Virginia and they have but one child, Herbert V., of Miles City.

Herbert V. Bailey completed his education at the Pennsylvania Military Academy, at Chester, Pennsylvania, after which he was connected with the civil engineering department of the Norfolk & Western Railroad Company. In May, 1891, he came to Billings, Montana, where he entered the office of the A. L. Babcock wholesale hardware Company and continued with this house for thirteen years, for a large part of this period being its representative on the road, and for some five years was engaged in the mercantile business on the Crow Indian Reservation. When the Spanish-American war was precipitated, he enlisted in Troop M, Third United States Volunteer Cavalry, with which he went to Chattanooga, Tennessee, serving as regimental quartermaster and squadron adjutant. After the war terminated he returned to Montana and resumed his mercantile activities on the reservation. He was one of the organizers of the State Bank at Columbus, Montana, of which he became cashier, but later sold his interest in this institution and in February, 1908, bought an interest in the W. B. Jordan & Sons' Company at Miles City. This business house was established in 1879 and was incorporated in 1908, its officers and directors being: E. A. Richardson, president; Kenneth McLean, vice-president; H. V. Bailey, secretary; E. A. Cornwell, treasurer; and J. E. Edwards, W. A. Jordan and Thomas Wear. Perhaps no mercantile firm in Montana is better known than the above and it is as well officered as it is splendidly financed.

On July 21, 1891, Mr. Bailey was married to Miss Lillian H. Brown, who was born at Big Rapids, Michigan, and is a daughter of Judge Michael Brown.

Mr. Bailey is a Republican in his political attitude but office holding has never appealed to him, business ever occupying his attention. He has frequently, however, demonstrated his good citizenship by forwarding public-spirited measures, lending his interest and contributing financially when important civic movements have been under consideration. He belongs to Yellowstone Lodge, No. 26, A. F. and A. M., Miles City Chapter, No. 14, R. A. M., and Billings Lodge, No. 394, B. P. O. E.

ALEXANDER S. CHRISTIE. The business contingent of Butte, Montana, is recruited from all over the world, some of the city's shrewdest and most substantial commercial leaders being natives of other countries than the United States. One of the highly respected adopted citizens of this land whose business operations are extensive and of a high-class character, is Alexander S. Christie, who for seventeen years maintained a retail jewelry store at the northeast corner of Main and Park streets, and now occupies larger and more beautiful quarters with his rich and extensive stock of goods at No. 20 North Main street, this being the largest retail establishment of the kind in the state of Montana.

Mr. Christie is a native of Portsoy, Banffshire, Scotland, where he was born October 13, 1860, a member of a family of twelve children, his parents having been John and Jane (Simons) Christie, both of whom lived and died in Scotland. The father was born in 1819 and the mother in 1823. They sent their son to the public schools for his education until he arrived at the age of fourteen, when he was apprenticed to learn the trade of jeweler, five years being consumed in that task. After working for a year as a journeyman jeweler in Scotland, Mr. Christie decided to seek larger opportunities in the United States, and arrived in America in August, 1881. He chose Marion, Kansas, as the point of destination immediately after landing, and it was in that city that he made his first American business venture. The enterprise was successful from the first, Mr. Christie being a well educated workman and thoroughly acquainted with the intricacies of the jewelry business, and he continued to conduct his store at Marion for ten years. During the latter part of that period of time he formed a partnership with his brother-in-law, James D. Leys. Mr. Leys in 1888 went to Butte and opened up a store here and carried on business under the firm name of Leys Jewelry Company, which name has ever since been retained. From the time of the first establishment of the business it was one of the three leading emporiums of the city, but its managers long since enlarged the business and left their competitors behind, Leys being now the largest of any similar store in this state.

In 1891 Mr. Christie disposed of his Kansas store and removed to Butte. The business in that city had grown to such proportions as to demand great expansion, and Mr. Christie as once assumed an active part in its management upon arrival there. In 1897 the company decided to enlarge its operations to include the wholesale trade, and in furtherance of this plan Mr. Leys went to New York City, opened up the firm's headquarters at No. 65 Nassau street, and has continuously been in charge of that end of the business since that year. The conduct of the store at Butte has been entirely in the hands of Mr. Christie, whose able management has been a large contributory factor in the continual growth and unbroken success of the business throughout the years of its establishment.

The marriage of Mr. Christie took place in New York City at the Church of the Stranger, in August, 1887, when Miss Agnes Shepard Leys, a daughter of David Leys, and a native of Scotland, became his wife. Three children were born of this union. The oldest son, Collin Leys, who was born at Marion, Kansas, August 13, 1888, resides in New York City, and is a traveling representative for the New York branch of his father's business. Gladys was born at Marion, Kansas, December 31, 1890, and Alexander was born in Butte, October 10, 1893.

Mr. Christie is recognized as a leading citizen of Butte and one who is actively interested in every project that has for its object the promotion of the best interests of the city or state. Politically, he believes in the principles of the Republican party, but he is not an enthusiastic participant in partisan affairs. He is associated in membership with several of the leading lodges, including the Knights Templars, Shriners, and Silver Bow Lodge No. 48 of the Masonic order, being a past master of the last named. He is also secretary of the Masonic Temple Association board.

Mr. Christie has, by his own unaided efforts, succeeded in accumulating considerable wealth and, besides the jewelry business, is financially interested in the Haskins Drug Company of Butte, the Silver Bow National Bank, of which he is director, and in the ownership of extensive mining enterprises. He is a man of high moral principles, unimpeachable personal integrity, liberal and progressive in his attitude on public questions, and is held in high esteem by a host of friends and acquaintances throughout this section of the state.

JOHN D. POPE. Among the industrial activities that dominate the business life of Montana that of mining stands pre-eminent, and in the advancement of this special industry are employed many men of ability and foresight, prominent among the number being John D. Pope, widely known as general manager of the North Butte Mining Company and as an esteemed and respected citizen of Butte. He was born November 9, 1869, in Georgia, which was also the birthplace of his father, John D. Pope, Sr.

Brought up and educated in Georgia, John D. Pope, Sr., was early imbued with a spirit of loyalty and patriotism, and during the Civil war enlisted in defense of the south, serving under the gallant and beloved soldier, General Joseph Wheeler. He subsequently studied law, and now, at the age of seventy-four years, is an active and prominent attorney of Los Angeles, California. He married, in Georgia, Grace Sims, who was born in South Carolina, being a daughter of Edward D. Sims and a lineal descendant of Rev. Thomas Hooker, the founder of the Hooker family in New England. She died in St. Louis, Missouri, in 1888.

Educated in St. Louis, Missouri, John D. Pope attended first the public schools of that city, and in 1890 was graduated from the mining engineering department of Washington University. Beginning his professional career in Arizona, he remained there a few months, and in January, 1891, came to Montana in search of an opening that should suit him. He worked for a time for the Bimetallic Mining Company at Philipsburg, serving in all the departments of the mill and in various positions in the mine and as mining engineer. He remained there until the panic of 1893, when he went to Winston, Montana, where he was engaged at mining until the summer of 1894. Going from there to Monte Cristo, Washington, Mr. Pope was engaged in mining operations until 1895, when he returned to Winston, Montana, where he remained three years. Coming back to Butte in 1898, he remained here a brief period, after which he spent a year or more in southern California. In 1900 he became associated with the Butte and Boston Mining Company, of Butte, but later severed his connection with that organization and has since been actively identified with the North Butte Mining Company, in which he has held various positions of trust and responsibility, at the present time being general manager of all the properties belonging to the company, a position that demands a clear, cool head, keen foresight, an unlimited amount of energy and patience and a tact for dealing with men and methods.

Mr. Pope is an Episcopalian in religion, a Democrat in politics, a member of the Silver Bow Lodge, No. 240, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and of the Silver Bow Club.

In November, 1898, he was united in marriage with Abbie E. Shaw, a daughter of George W. Shaw, a pioneer settler of Helena, Montana, and into their home one child has been born, Grace Shaw Pope, whose birth occurred February 9, 1900, in Los Angeles, California.

WILLIAM EDWARD CARROLL. For more than twenty years a resident of Butte, and now one of the leading lawyers of the state of Montana, William Edward Carroll has been a very welcome and highly appreciated addition to the population of the commonwealth and especially to that of the city of his home. He has shown in many ways and on all occasions his earnest interest in the welfare of the commonwealth and its people, and as they have found him worthy of their confidence and esteem, they have bestowed their regard on him without stint, and have manifested it in tangible and substantial ways.

Mr. Carroll is a native of Independence, Missouri, where he came into being on December 24, 1868. When he was three years old the family moved to Olathe, Kansas, where it remained until 1881, then returned to Independence. In 1891 William came to Butte, Montana, and here he has ever since had his home. He is a son of Rev. Alanson and Mary F. (Murch) Carroll, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of Vermont. The father was a Presbyterian clergyman, and was educated and prepared for the ministry in his native state, completing his education at the Western Reserve University. He died in Independence, Missouri, on August 17, 1908, and his remains were buried in Olathe, Kansas. The mother is still living and has her home with one of her daughters in Independence, Missouri. They were the parents of three sons and two daughters, William Edward being the fourth in line.

William E. Carroll obtained his academic education in the public schools of Olathe, Kansas, and Independence, Missouri, and at the high school in Kansas City, that state. He prepared himself for the practice of law in the law department of the University of Michigan, from which he was graduated in the class of 1890. Since coming to Butte he has been continuously engaged in the practice of his profession, with an ever increasing business and a steadily growing reputation.

In early life his circumstances were very moderate and he did whatever he could find to do to make a little money for his needs. Mr. Carroll is, as has been noted, one of the leading lawyers of the state. He is also one of its strong campaigners in political contests, and always takes a prominent part in them. He is a loyal and devoted member of the Republican party, and his fealty to it is based on firm faith in its principles and theories of government. At the time of this writing (1912) he holds no official position, but from 1907 to 1909 he was assistant city attorney of Butte, and his services in that office were rated as of great value by the people of the city of all classes.

For a number of years Mr. Carroll has been a member of the Masonic order, belonging to Mount Moriah Lodge, No. 24, in Butte, and has been enthusiastic and highly serviceable in his work in the fraternity. He served two years as worshipful master of his lodge, 1897 to 1899, and has also been junior grand deacon of the Grand Lodge of the state. The other fraternities in which he holds membership are the Modern Woodmen of America and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, belonging to the lodge of each which works in Butte, but being known in all throughout the state.

On September 27, 1894, Mr. Carroll was married to Miss Anna Martin, a daughter of James T. and Margaret (Corby) Martin, of Butte, where the marriage was solemnized. Three children have been born to the union: Helen, whose life began on December 9, 1896; Chauncey M., who was born on August 8, 1901; and Charles R., who came into being on December 12, 1902. They are all living and attending school from the parental home, and all are worthy exemplars of the estimable traits of character of their parents and fine fruits of good training in the family circle.

James T. Martin, the father of Mrs. Carroll, was a native of England but lived in Montana many years. He was a mechanic and worked at his trade in times of peace. But when the Civil war raged in our afflicted country, he became a soldier in defense of the Union. He died in Truro, Massachusetts, December 5, 1909, where his widow now resides. Uprightness in conduct, zeal for the good of their home community and genuine interest in the welfare of the people living around them have marked the lives of both, and wherever they have lived they have always been most highly esteemed.

HUGH J. MILLER. A prominent member of the Montana bar for more than twenty years, during which time he has rendered distinguished service to his city, county and state in official capacities, Hugh J. Miller, city attorney of Livingston, and senior member of the well-known legal firm of Miller & O'Connor, holds an eminent position in the ranks of Montana's professional men. Born December 31, 1866, at Genoa, Olmstead county, Minnesota, he is a son of Rev. Hiram and Mary S. (Vaughn) Miller.

The Miller family originated in Scotland, whence three brothers emigrated to America during early colonial days, Colonel Miller, a descendant of one of the brothers, serving as an officer in General Washington's army during the Revolutionary war. The paternal grandfather of Hugh J. Miller was John Miller, a New Yorker by birth, and his maternal grandfather, Daniel Vaughn, was a native of Vermont. Rev. Hiram Miller was born at Brokenstraw, New York, November 19, 1836, and at the age of eighteen years removed to Minnesota, shortly thereafter being ordained by the authorities of the Baptist Free Will church at Lansing. He subsequently entered the Northwestern University at Wasioja, Minn., for two years, continuing his labors in the pulpit in the meanwhile, and after graduation continued to preach for seven years, then being obliged to retire from the ministry on account of a throat affection. Moving to the village of Genoa, in New Haven township, Olmstead county, he opened a grocery store, but in 1878 removed to Douglas, where, on the arrival of the railroad he erected a residence and store and engaged in business. He had served as postmaster while a resident of Genoa, and was appointed to that position in Douglas, where he acted also as justice of the peace. After a long and useful career, Mr. Miller retired from business activities and went to the home of his son, Harley E., at Moosejaw, Northwest Territory, Canada, where his death occurred March 10, 1909. In 1858 he was married to Miss Mary S. Vaughn, who was born near Lake Champlain, in Vermont, and she died in 1893, having been the mother of five children, as follows: Harlen E., residing at Moosejaw; Hugh J.; Herbert B., twin of Hugh J., and postmaster at Grenada, Mississippi; Hiram A., farming in the Shields River valley, Park county, Montana; and one child which died in infancy.

After attending the public schools of Olmstead county, Minnesota, and Darling's Business College, Rochester, Hugh J. Miller began to teach school in his native state, and during the five years that followed proved himself an able instructor, his school securing second position in a competition in which the different institutions of the state vied for supremacy in methods of instruction. In 1889 he entered the law department of the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, from which he was graduated in the class of 1891, with the degree of LL. B., being recommended by the faculty for his able work as a student and his effective assimilation of the technical lore of the law. He also completed a two-years' course in elocution and oratory, under the efficient instruction of the distinguished Professor Trueblood. On June 10, 1891, he was admitted to the bar of Michigan, but left that state not long after, arriving in Livingston, Montana, August 14, 1891, soon thereafter being admitted to the bar of the state on motion of the supreme court. He then formed a professional partnership with Allan R. Joy, an association which continued for about nine months, and in the fall of 1892 was the successful candidate of the Republican party for the office of county attorney of Park county. After serving one term he refused a nomination, preferring to give his attention to his rapidly-growing practice, but in 1898 was again elected to the office, in which he succeeded himself in 1900. The excellent record made by Mr. Miller in protecting the county's interests caused a demand to be made for his re-election in 1902, but he again refused the nomination. In the case of Danforth v. Alexander Livingston, county treasurer, involving the collection of a large amount of tax money, Mr. Miller represented the defendant, meeting defeat in the lower court and promptly carrying the case before the supreme court, where the decision was reversed, thus saving to Park county many thousand dollars. The decision rendered by the supreme court stands as a precedent in the state, and Mr. Miller received high praise on all sides for the masterful manner in which he presented his cause and secured the reversal. In 1906 he was elected a member of the Tenth Assembly, serving one term as representative, and in May, 1911, was appointed city attorney, an office which he efficiently fills at the present time. He has also served as president of the Park county high school board for several terms, and during Gov. Robert B. Smith's administration acted in the capacity of judge advocate. On January 1, 1907, Mr. Miller formed a partnership with James F. O'Connor, formerly of Iowa, and the firm of Miller & O'Connor is recognized as one of Montana's leading legal concerns, representing the First State Bank of Livingston and numerous other large interests. Mr. Miller has interested himself to some extent in land investments in the Shield River valley, Park county, and is also well known in fraternal circles, belonging to Livingston Lodge No. 246, B. P. O. E., and Aerie No. 273, F. O. E.

On January 9, 1889, Mr. Miller was married in Minneapolis, Minnesota, to Miss Georgianna Cole, who was born near Waterloo, in Blackhawk county, Iowa, daughter of Oscar and Lavintha J. (Gordon) Cole, natives of New York state. Oscar Cole was a pioneer farmer of Blackhawk county, Iowa, where he was engaged in farming up to the time of his death, in 1909, his wife having passed away some years before. They were the parents of three children, of whom two survive: Ella, the wife of Elmer Heskett, of Waterloo, Iowa; and Mrs. Miller. Mrs. Miller was assistant principal in the high school at Livingston for several years, being a graduate of the Iowa State Normal School, Cedar Falls, class of 1885. Her uncle, W. J. Gordon, one of the eminent citizens of Cleveland, Ohio, presented that city with Gordon Park, a property valued at upwards of $1,000,000, and recognized as one of the finest of the many beautiful parks which grace the Forest City. Mr. and Mrs. Miller's only son, Vilroy C., graduated from Phillips Academy, Andover, Massachusetts, in the class of 1909; and from Princeton University, class of 1912. The family attends the Congregational church, and is widely and popularly known in church and social circles of Livingston.

ANDREW C. GRAVES. To the young men of our land the career of Andrew C. Graves, of Harlowton, Montana, is a fit example of the cardinal virtues of industry, uprightness and frugality, of honorable dealing and unwearied perseverance. Born of honest but humble parentage, his life from the time he reached the age of eight years has been one of hard and unceasing toil, but his inherent ability triumphed in the end, and he is now one of the leading business citizens of Harlowton, president of the First National Bank, owner of the townsite, and identified with practically every enterprise of any importance now doing business in this section of the county. Mr. Graves was born March 12, 1866, in Denmark, and is a son of John Graves and wife. The father is still living in Denmark; the mother died in the fatherland in 1874 when about thirty-two years of age. During the war between Denmark and Germany John Graves served in the army of his native country, and was also a devout Christian and consistent member of the Lutheran church. He and his wife had four children, Andrew C. being the second child and youngest son.

The early education of Andrew C. Graves was slight and his opportunities for culture of a genuine sort were more so, but one cannot be in his presence long before realizing that he is a man of intellectual attainments and great general information. While still attending public school, at the age of eight years, he began earning money, his savings all being given to his parents. When he was sixteen years of age, feeling that there was no future for him in his own country, he embarked for the United States, first landing, a poor emigrant lad, without money or friends, in Grand Rapids, Michigan. There, while working faithfully during the daylight hours, he studied assiduously to familiarize himself with the English tongue. Two years later he removed to St. Paul, Minnesota, and until 1890 spent his time between that city and Duluth, working at whatever occupation presented itself, usually hard, manual labor. Subsequently he went to Seattle, Washington, for one year, and in 1891 came to Montana, first settling in Helena, which city was his headquarters until 1898. In that year he removed to Castle, where he embarked in business on his own account for the first time, selecting the hide and wool industry as the medium through which to work out his success. In 1900, his shrewd foresight having convinced him that Harlowton was to become one of the leading commercial and industrial centers of the state, he located in that city, where he erected the second building in town and established a meat market. He has had no reason to regret this move, for today he is just as enthusiastic over the possibilities and opportunities left open for the young man, and especially the poor young man, as he was at the time of his arrival, and sincerely believes that the Treasure state is growing more rapidly than any other that he has visited.

Mr. Graves may be properly termed the "father of Harlowton." From his advent here he has invested heavily in real estate holdings and to this day is the owner of the townsite of the city. In addition he has been one of the leading factors in the establishment of nearly every large enterprise organized here. He erected the Graves Hotel, one of the finest hostelrys in this part of the state, built and still operates the Electric Light Plant, and was the builder of the First National Bank, the prime mover in its organization, and its president from its inception. In addition he owns four large ranches in the vicinity of Harlowton, with more than 7,000 acres under irrigation. In his religious belief he leans toward the Lutheran faith, his wife being a member of that church, and he has at all times been liberal in his support of all worthy movements, while Mrs. Graves is connected with the Ladies' Aid Society. He has interested himself fraternally with the Odd Fellows, in the local lodge of which he has held office, while Mrs. Graves is a valued and popular member of the Rebekahs. Like all true sons of Denmark, he is fond of outdoor sports, and is a devotee of automobiling, owning his private car.

Mr. Graves has never posed as a philanthropist or public benefactor, but by the honest and honorable methods by which he has acquired a fortune, and especially by the manner in which he uses it, he is fairly entitled to consideration, and is recognized as one who deserves the utmost confidence and esteem of his community. He has always evinced a public-spirited citizen's interest in municipal affairs, but has been too busily engaged with personal matters to engage prominently in public life. He is, however, acting in the capacity of city alderman, and his intelligent and conscientious discharge of his duties in this capacity, as well as the good influence which his sound judgment and high character exerted on it, are evidences that he would be a valuable representative in higher positions. He is, however, not only too busy, but also too modest a man to enter the list for public honors, although often importuned to do so. His political principles are those of the Republican party. That Mr. Graves maintains the same kind and genial spirit and the same accessibility to all classes that marked his earlier years, is shown by the fact that to every one who has his acquaintance he is affectionately known as "Chris."

In August, 1904, Mr. Graves was married at St. Paul, Minnesota, to Miss Louise Berquist, daughter of John Berquist, of that city, and they have one daughter, Mary, a bright and interesting miss who is now attending school.

FRANK A. SCHEUBER, ex-mayor of Livingston, by virtue of the distinguished position he has held in the government of the city of his adoption, his long residence in the locality, and his extensive business interests, is entitled to prominent mention in the pages of this work. He was born in Jefferson county, Wisconsin, May 18, 1866, and is a son of Adolph and Henrietta (Kraus) Scheuber.

Adolph Scheuber was born in Germany, where he received his education in the public schools, and at the age of fourteen years came to the United States with his parents in a sailing vessel. From New York City, where the family landed, Mr. Scheuber went to Milwaukee, Wisconsin, where he attended the English schools for a short period, and subsequently went to Jefferson county, becoming a pioneer in the mercantile business in the village of Erfurt. A stanch Democrat in politics, he was register of deeds of Jefferson county for several terms, county poor agent for many years, and was sent to the Wisconsin state legislature from Jefferson county, and was the first to act in the capacity of postmaster of Erfurt and held that office more than thirty years, a longer time than any other man has held the office of postmaster in the country. Some years before his death he retired from business activities, and removed to Milwaukee, Wisconsin, where he passed away at the age of sixty-five years. They had a family of ten children, of whom six are living, and Frank A. was the sixth in order of birth.

After attending the schools of his native locality, Frank A. Scheuber entered Wisconsin University, and was graduated in 1885. Subsequently he engaged in the drug business at Sauk Rapids, Benton county, Minnesota, but later removed to Jefferson, Wisconsin, where he was engaged in the drug business until 1891. That year saw his removal to Phillipsburg, Granite county, Montana, where he continued to conduct a pharmacy until 1893, and then came to Livingston and established himself in a wholesale and retail drug business, in which he has continued to the present time. During the past twenty years Mr. Scheuber has been an eye-witness to the marvelous growth of Livingston and of material assistance in its development. He is a member of the National Wholesale Druggists Association, the Montana Pharmacists Association and the American Pharmaceutical Association. His fraternal connections are with the Sons of Herman; Livingston lodge No. 32, A. F. & A. M., Livingston Chapter No. 7, R. A. M., St. Bernard's Commandery No. 6, K. T., Particular Consistory of Eastern Montana No. 1, thirty-second degree of Masonry, and Algeria Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Helena. A stalwart Democrat in politics, in 1909 he was elected to the mayoralty chair, and gave his city an efficient and business-like administration, making a good record as an official who had at heart the interests of the people at large, the convictions of an honest representative and the courage of his convictions. Widely respected, earnest and persistent in his advocacy of reform, and steadfast in keeping his reputation above reproach, his influence has always been for the best interests of Livingston and cannot safely be ignored.

On November 9, 1893, Mr. Scheuber was married to Miss Emma J. Ware, who was born in Iowa, daughter of the late Dr. Lemuel L. and Mary P. (Stockwell) Ware, natives of New York state. Two children have been born to this union: Frank A., Jr., and Mary O. Mrs. Scheuber is a graduate of the University of Minnesota, is president of the Yellowstone Literary Club, a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and regent of the local chapter. Both she and her husband are widely known in social circles of Livingston, where they have many warm, personal friends.

CHARLES E. K. VIDAL, M.D., the coroner of Cascade county, and one of its best physicians, was born in Sussex county, England, on February 6, 1870. His father was an officer in the British army, and while Charles was still a boy, was transferred to Canada. The boy completed his education in the excellent schools of Canada. When he finished his high school course, he entered Toronto University at Toronto, famed for the thoroughness of its training and the high standards of its scholarship. For his professional study, Dr. Vidal went to the University of Toronto, and graduated in medicine in 1890. The following year, he went to Lethbridge, as assistant to Dr. Mewburn, and remained with him until August of that year, when he came to Cascade county. Upon first arriving here, Dr. Vidal took up his residence at Niehart and began to practice there alone. Not until 1895 did he leave this town and then he went to Belt, where he had been appointed on the medical staff of the Anaconda Copper Company. Dr. Vidal remained in Belt until January 1, 1908, when he came to Great Falls and resumed his private practice. Here he ranks as one of the foremost in the medical profession, and is most successful in combating the diseases to which the flesh is heir. The year of his coming to Great Falls, he was elected on the Democratic ticket to the office of coroner of the county, and at the expiration of his first term, was reelected, and is the present incumbent of the office. Dr. Vidal is a member of all the medical societies of the state, as well as of the national organization. He keeps abreast the latest methods and discoveries in his profession and is a student as well as a practitioner. He is a member of the state board of health.

Beaufort Henry Vidal, his father, was born in Sussex, England in 1843, and was prominent in military circles of the British Empire. He was a general, and was in command of the English army of Canada at the time of his death, in 1908. As an officer, his record was one of rare ability. His father, T. E. Vidal, was vice-admiral in the Queen's navy and died in England in 1863. Dr. Vidal's mother, Kate Allen Vidal, was also born in England, the year of her nativity being 1850. She died in Canada in 1883, and is buried there beside her husband. Dr. Vidal was one of two children; the other, Mrs. Nelson Collard, resides in Alberta, Canada.

On July 4, 1893, Dr. Vidal was married to Miss Mabel Macrae. Mr. Macrae was one of the Queen's council of Montreal. Both Dr. Vidal and his wife are members of the Episcopal church. Lawrence Vidal, their oldest child, was born in Great Falls in July, 1895, and is now attending Shattuck Military School, at Fairbault, Minnesota. John Forrest Vidal was born at Belt in November, 1898, while George, the youngest, began this life in Great Falls on August 1, 1908.

Dr. Vidal is a member of the Masons, the Elks, and of the Knights of Pythias. His large practice does not give him time to take much part in the activities of these lodges, but that does not prevent his being very popular in these organizations as elsewhere. All kinds of open-air amusements commend themselves to him, but motoring is the one which he finds best adapted to the exigencies of an active professional and public life. Socially, professionally and politically, he is one of the representative men of Great Falls and of Montana.

OLIVER M. HOLMES was born in St. Paul, Minnesota, April 16, 1861, a son of James B. and Caroline Virginia (Friend) Holmes. He was educated wholly in private schools, and for years followed journalism as a publisher.

James B. Holmes was born in Pittsburgh, and Mrs. Holmes in Philadelphia, and they came to St. Paul in the early days of that city. Mr. Holmes' engaging in the hardware and grain business. In later years, as promoter and president, he built the Duluth and Manitoba railroad extending from Winnipeg Junction, Minnesota, to Winnipeg, Manitoba, the line now being a part of the Northern Pacific system. He died at his home in Minneapolis in 1910, his wife having died in the same city in 1907.

Mr. O. M. Holmes came to Great Falls in October, 1891, and shortly afterwards commenced the publication of the Great Falls News, a weekly newspaper which he published for ten years, when he sold the publication and went to Helena to take charge, as chief clerk, of the bureau of agricultural labor and industry, and during the latter part of the term of the office he was acting commissioner, and converted the bureau into one of publicity as well as of statistics. At the expiration of his term he was appointed deputy state auditor and insurance commissioner, which position he filled for four years. In 1910 he returned to Great Falls and became secretary of the Board of Commerce, a position which he now occupies. Public projects have always had the benefit of his co-operation and influence, and at the time of the erection of the Central high school he acted as chairman of the board that had charge of the construction. In political matters he is a Democrat, and is known as an active worker in the ranks of the party. In fraternal matters he is connected with the Woodmen of the World, and socially he holds membership in the Electric City club, while the family are members of the Baptist church.

On December 27, 1883, Mr. Holmes was married to Miss Virginia Johnston, daughter of George H. Johnston of Boston, Mass. Three children have come to Mr. and Mrs. Holmes: George B., Marion Ethel, now Mrs. Morton B. Dodson and Dorothy Virginia. Mr. Holmes is a great lover of home, and his comfortable residence at No. 312 North Eleventh street possesses greater charms for him than any club. Like all vigorous, virile men, however, he is fond of out-door sports, and when he finds time for a vacation indulges in a hunting and fishing jaunt. He has a wide acquaintance throughout the state, and numbers among his friends some of Montana's most prominent and influential men.

WILLIAM H. DUNNIGAN. Among the leaders in the political life of Montana, one of the most influential is William H. Dunnigan, present state senator from Deer Lodge county. He is a thorough student of political science, is popular among citizens, and has made an excellent record in the legislature.

Senator Dunnigan was born at Louisville, New York, April 12, 1863. When he was about eighteen years old he went west as far as Iowa, where he spent a year in different occupations, and then moved to Washburn, in northern Wisconsin, where he was engaged in the cigar and news business about seven years. The burning of his establishment caused him to leave, and in 1891 he settled in Montana, with which state he has been identified now for more than twenty years. His first location was in Butte, where he remained a year, was then in the restaurant business at Helena for a similar period, after which he returned to Butte and made it his home and place of business twelve years. Since then he has been in Anaconda, where he established the Turf Cafe, which he has made one of the most popular places of the kind in the city.

During his boyhood days in New York, Senator Dunnigan attended the public schools of Louisville, being a student of the high school before he took up his practical career. His first money was earned by farm work at five dollars a month, his wages being given to his mother, and he continued in this way until he left home and found larger fields of enterprise in the west.

Mr. Dunnigan's parents were William and Nancy (Finnegan) Dunnigan. His father, who was a native of New York state and lived there until his death in 1873, when about forty-eight years of age, was a farmer by occupation, and took a very prominent interest in his church, the Catholic. His wife, who was also born in New York state, still lives on the old homestead at Louisville. There were five children, of whom William H. was the second and the oldest son.

Senator Dunnigan was married at Helena, in 1893, to Miss Emma Gustine. Her parents came to this country from Sweden. Two children have been born to them: Florence, who is a student in the high school; and William, a student in the grades. In religious matters Mr. Dunnigan inclines to the Catholic faith. Since casting his first vote for James G. Blaine in 1884, he has always manifested a keen interest in politics. But until recently he had steadily refused the solicitations to run for municipal and other local offices, and the nomination and election to the state senate from Deer Lodge county were virtually forced upon him. The indications at this writing are that he will have to serve another term in the same office. He is very fond of reading, especially the subjects of political science, political economy and history, and is well informed on the fundamental principles of government. On different occasions he has proved his vigorous ability as a campaigner, and under all circumstances he enjoys a good speech or lecture. Athletic and general sports have always interested him, and he is a baseball "fan" and formerly played the game himself. He is also fond of fine horses. To Montana, as the state of his choice and home, he yields the best tributes of his loyalty and pride. The development of its resources, in his opinion, has only begun, and no other portion of the Union offers such attractions and opportunities.

DANIEL L. MCQUARRIE. It would be impossible to point to a worthier and more striking example of the self-made man than the gentleman whose name stands at the head of this paragraph. From an orphan boy, utterly without advantages and early thrown upon his own resources, he has come to be one of the representative men of this part of Montana, a well-known and highly honored citizen, and distinctively one of the builders of the city. He is serving with great efficiency and general satisfaction as county commissioner of Missoula county and for many years has been extensively interested in mining and latterly in the lumber business. Daniel L. McQuarrie is one of those valiant souls who have triumphed over adverse conditions and pressed forward to the goal of a large and worthy success. He is in most significant sense a self-made man and integrity and honor characterize him in the relations of life.

Mr. McQuarrie was born at Lower Caledonia, in Gysusboro county, Nova Scotia, February 2, 1871. Both parents died during his early childhood days, his mother when he was but two years old and his father when his years numbered but seven. The homeless lad was taken into the home of one John McQuarrie, a farmer, who although of the same name, was no relation to him, and he remained with this good man until the age of twenty years. He attended the public schools until the age of fourteen. Believing that opportunity awaited the energetic, capable young man in the western United States, young Daniel came to Montana in 1891 and located in Granite county, where he secured work in the silver mines, and remained in that locality for two years. When the slump in silver forced so many mines to close he found it necessary to find other work and he went to Bearmouth, Granite county, and secured work in the lumber camps surrounding that place and remained thus engaged until 1894. Then having accumulated some money, he paid a visit to his old home in Nova Scotia and spent a pleasant summer in the household of his foster parents. In the fall, he returned to Bearmouth and engaged as foreman in the lumber camp of his brothers, and continued in this association until 1898, when he returned and engaged in farming at Clinton, Montana. In that place he remained but a year and then returned to his brother's lumber company, where he engaged as foreman, or overseer of the woods. He also bought a farm and followed agriculture and stock-raising until 1904, when he was elected to the office of county assessor of Missoula county on the Republican ticket, and so well did his services recommend him that he was re-elected, thus serving two terms in that important office. In 1908, at the termination of his services in the office aforementioned, he engaged independently in the lumber business in Missoula and in 1910 was elected to the office of county commissioner in which he is serving at the present time. He has ever served the interests of the people in the most whole-hearted fashion, and Missoula county is proud to claim him as one of its most influential and public-spirited citizens.

Mr. McQuarrie is identified with many good causes and is a valued member of the Presbyterian church. He is a prominent fraternity man, his affiliations extending to the Odd Fellows, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Eagles and the Modern Woodmen of America. In the matter of politics he gives heart and hand to the men and measures of the Republican party, which he has supported with his ballot since his earliest voting days.

Mr. McQuarrie was married in June, 1898, his chosen lady being Grace Betters of Clinton, Montana, their union being celebrated in Missoula. They share their attractive home with four interesting children, namely: Irena, aged thirteen; Herbert, aged eight; Flora, aged four; and Verne, aged a year and a half. The two elder children are public school pupils. The subject is strictly a home man, finding his greatest happiness at his own fireside.

In addition to his business interests previously mentioned, Mr. McQuarrie owns farm and ranch lands and also considerable mineral land.

The subject's father, John McQuarrie, was a native of Nova Scotia and a farmer and lumberman by occupation. He died in 1878. The maiden name of the mother was Lizzie Kelley. These worthy people, both of whom died at untimely ages, are buried side by side in Caledonia. Mr. McQuarrie's only brother, Herbert, who preceded him to Montana, and became a successful lumberman, is also deceased.

ROBERT WEIR. One of the leading business establishments of its kind in Great Falls is that of the Black Eagle Carriage Works, the founder of which, Robert Weir, has the distinction of being one of his community's successful self-made men. Something more than twenty years ago, when he first arrived in this city, he opened a little blacksmithing shop on the present site of the postoffice, and this, started in a humble manner, has developed into a large industry, giving employment to a small army of workers and adding to the city's industrial prestige. Like many of his fellow townsmen, Mr. Weir is a native of the Dominion of Canada, having been born at Ottawa, June 4, 1869. His father, Thomas H. Weir, was born in 1842 in Canada, early in life became a blacksmith, and built up a prosperous business in Ottawa, where he still resides. He married Elizabeth Tripp, also a native of Canada, where she died in 1871.

Robert Weir secured his education in the public schools of Ottawa, and after graduating from high school learned the business of blacksmith with his father, in addition to securing a knowledge of the profession of veterinary surgeon. Both these vocations he followed in Ottawa until coming to Great Falls in 1891, at which time he embarked in business at First and Second avenues, North, on the lot where now stand the postoffice and federal building. After continuing there for a number of years, he removed to a location on Central avenue, and by that time his business had grown to such proportions that he needed a little extra working capital and accordingly took a partner in the person of Mr. E. W. Reid. Subsequently property was purchased on Third street, North, and a larger plant was erected, the partners beginning the manufacture of wagons and carriages, although the blacksmith business was still continued. In 1909 incorporation papers were taken out, Mr. Reid being president; Mr. Weir, vice president, and Mr. Donald McDonald, secretary and treasurer. Much of the success of this large undertaking can be accredited to the hustle, characteristic energy and business acumen of Mr. Weir, whose business methods have ever conformed to the strictest ethics of commercial life. He has interested himself in various other ventures, among which may be mentioned the Fergus Mining Company, owners of a well-equipped mine in the Little Rockies, at Sortman, of which he is a director. He is a member of the Presbyterian church. In politics, a stanch Democrat, he has served his adopted city in the office of councilman, and during his term was successful in securing a number of improvements for his part of the city, and was instrumental in getting the city sidewalks and waterworks. Fraternally, he is connected with the Independent Order of Foresters and the Fraternal Brotherhood, in which he has filled all the chairs, the Woodmen of the World, and the Knights of Pythias.

On August 19, 1897, Mr. Weir was married to Miss Jessie Floyd, and four children have been born to this union: Robert Floyd, born September 20, 1898; Wallace D., born May 9, 1904; and Jessie Laverne, born May 31, 1900, all of whom are attending the graded schools; and Arthur, born January 28, 1909, the baby.

DAVID W. ERICKSON. The business element of Missoula, Montana, is recruited from all parts of the world and some of the most substantial and intelligent citizens who are among the most influential factors of both public and private activity are men of foreign parentage and birth. One of the adopted citizens of this community who belongs in this classification is Mr. David W. Erickson, born in Sweden, August 8, 1866, his father, Erick Johnson, still living in that country. His mother was before her marriage, Marie Swanson.

Mr. Erickson was reared and educated in his native land and there learned the trade of carpenter and cabinetmaker, his term of apprenticeship to this trade extending over four years. He worked for a period at his trade in Sweden, the last year in an organ factory, then deeming himself a fully competent and experienced worker, came to the United States to seek his fortune. He arrived at Red Wing, Minnesota, in the spring of 1886, and after working a year there went to St. Paul, where he was employed at his trade until 1891, when he decided to go further west, and finally located at Missoula, where he has ever since resided.

For several years after his arrival here Mr. Erickson worked at his trade, at times taking independent contracts for the erection of buildings and had such success in his work that he ultimately decided to go into business for himself exclusively as a contractor. This he did in 1906. The decision proved to be a wise one for he had established a splendid reputation as an honest, conscientious and competent worker and business man and builders were glad to award him their contracts. Within two years his business had grown to such large proportions as to require increased facilities and workroom, and he accordingly built and equipped his present fine shop. Among the numerous fine buildings in Missoula which he has erected may be mentioned the county high school as a typical example.

While devoting his time diligently to the prosecution of his private business Mr. Erickson is also mindful of his duty as a high-minded citizen and takes much interest in public affairs. The confidence which his immediate neighbors and associates have in his ability and honesty was convincingly shown when they elected him to represent the Fourth ward on the city council for two years. Although a Republican in national politics he believes in men rather than measures and exercises worthy independence in his decisions and actions in other matters as well as political affairs. His fraternal affiliations are with the Knights of the Maca-bees and Royal Highlanders orders.

The marriage of Mr. Erickson to Miss Ellen Erickson occurred in Missoula, in 1896, and they have six children, Marie, David, Evelyn, Hilma, Frank and Robert. Mrs. Erickson, like her husband is of Swedish nativity.

FREDERICK S. BACHELDER. The execution of civil and criminal process throughout the county, the complete control of the jails and prisoners under his jurisdiction, the attending of courts and the preservation of the peace, as constituting the duties of those who hold the office of sheriff, make it necessary that the incumbent of this office be an individual of the highest degree of efficiency, integrity and energy, and for this reason, when a man has received three consecutive elections to this position, it is ample evidence of his capability and of the general confidence and esteem in which he is held by his fellow-citizens. Sheriff Frederick S. Bachelder, of Red Lodge, now serving his third term as chief officer of Carbon county, has gained a well-merited reputation in his official capacity, and also holds precedence as one of the leading farmers and sheepmen of his section. He was born at Castleton, Rutland county, Vermont, May 27, 1867, and is a son of William N. and Agnes (Curtis) Bachelder.

William N. Bachelder was born in the state of Vermont, and there was the proprietor of a hotel at Castleton until 1872, in which year he removed to Fort Collins, Colorado, and engaged in the sheep business, having purchased the ranch of Mr. Abner Loomis. Several years later he disposed of this property and removed to Orchard, Colorado, where he purchased a tract of 320 acres of land, which he devoted to cattle and sheep raising for six or seven years, then retiring and spending the remainder of his life at Fromberg, Montana, where he died in 1905, at the age of seventy-seven years. A stalwart Democrat in politics, he was active in the ranks of his party, and while a resident of Colorado was appointed by Governor Eaton a member of the state irrigation committee, of which he acted as chairman for some time. Throughout his life he was a consistent member of the Universalist church, and prior to leaving Vermont built a church of that faith at Castleton. His wife passed away in 1876, at Fort Collins, Colorado, having been the mother of six children, of whom two survive: Frederick S. and Ida A., the latter the wife of Dr. R. L. Thorpe, of Denver, Colorado.

Frederick S. Bachelder was five years of age when he accompanied his parents to Fort Collins, Colorado, and there he secured his early education in the public schools. Reared to the vocation of sheep and cattle raising, at the age of eighteen years he left home and removed to Wyoming, where he worked as a cowboy in the employ of the Powder River Live Stock Company for three years, then returning to Colorado to visit his father. On his return to Wyoming, he was employed by the same company for another year, and in the spring of 1891 came to Billings, Montana, where he secured employment as a cowboy with the Ox Yoke Cattle Company, with which he was connected several years. Subsequently he became a bartender in Linton Brothers' establishment in Billings, but after about three years removed to Joliet, Montana, and engaged in the grocery and liquor business, remaining therein with some degree of success for three years. At this time he took up government land on Clark's Fork, in Carbon county, where he first engaged in farming and cattle raising, but after several years sold his cattle and replaced them with sheep, which he now raises in addition to carrying on general farming. He is known as one of the substantial men of his community, an excellent agriculturist and an acknowledged authority on matters pertaining to sheep raising. In his political views Mr. Bachelder is a Democrat, and on the ticket of that party was elected sheriff of Carbon county November 6, 1910, having formerly served from 1900 to 1902 as deputy sheriff. His term of office was so satisfactory to the voters of the county, that in November, 1908, he received the re-election, and in November, 1910, again succeeded himself. A man of courage, he has the strength of his convictions, and has demonstrated that he regards his office as a sacred trust and that he is fully capable of preserving the peace within the borders of Carbon county. In fraternal matters he is connected with Bear Tooth Lodge No. 534, B. P. O. E., in which he has numerous friends, as he has, indeed, throughout this part of the state.

Mr. Bachelder was married July 18, 1893, to Miss Mary E. Casey, of Billings, who was born at Paterson,

New Jersey, daughter of Daniel Casey. They have an interesting family of six children, named as follows: Eva May, Ida A., Freddie, William F., Sidney and Claude.

JAMES SULGROVE. The oldest lawyer of Choteau, Montana, is James Sulgrove, who located there in 1892 when the town had barely begun its existence and therefore he may also be termed one of its pioneer citizens. In the score of years that has passed since then he has in numerous ways been prominently identified with the public life of Teton county and there is probably no one within its borders better or more favorably known than Mr. Sulgrove.

Born in the beautiful city of Indianapolis, Indiana, on March 31, 1861, he is sprung from two prominent pioneer families of the Hoosier commonwealth, the Sulgroves and the Jamesons, and is a son of Berry R. Sulgrove, who was one of the most talented and most widely known journalists that Indiana has produced. More extended mention of the interesting journalistic career of Berry R. Sulgrove will be found in the sketch of Leslie Sulgrove, of Helena, which appears on other pages of this volume. The entire life of the father was spent in Indiana, where he was born March 16, 1827, and died at the city of Indianapolis in 1890, his age at death being sixty-three years. Mary M. (Jameson) Sulgrove, the mother of James, was born in Jefferson county, Indiana, April 29, 1829, and died at Choteau, Montana on December 1, 1905 at the age of seventy-six years. She had accompanied her son to Montana in November, 1891. Of the four sons born to these parents, James is the youngest and is one of two now living, his brother being Leslie Sulgrove, of Helena.

In the public schools of Indianapolis James Sulgrove pursued his scholastic studies, graduating from the high school there in 1880. Upon completing his high school studies he entered the Central Law School in Indianapolis and remained one year, when the school was discontinued. He then completed his course in law in the office of Florea & Wishard, a well-known legal firm of Indianapolis, and was admitted to the bar on December 12, 1882. Until 1891 he practiced his profession in Indianapolis; then in that year he removed to Montana, where on the motion of Judge Cornelius Hedges, he was admitted as a member of the Montana bar on March 9, 1892. About a month later and after purchasing a lot of law books he set out with his belongings for Choteau and arrived there on the 18th of April. His was the first law office opened there and in the score of years that has passed since then his priority has retained the distinction both of time and professional ability. By appointment from the Montana legislature creating Teton county, he served as county attorney from March, 1893 until January, 1897, being re-elected in 1894, and filled that office again in 1901 and 1902. He has also served as a member and as chairman of the Choteau board of education. In politics Mr. Sulgrove is a staunch Republican and formerly took an active part in the work of his party in Montana but in recent years has withdrawn from active participation in political affairs. His fraternal associations are with the Chevalier Lodge No. 12, Knights of Pythias, at Choteau, of which he is a past chancellor commander.

At Choteau, Montana, on March 31, 1907, Mr. Sulgrove wedded Miss Christina McPherson, whose parents are John A. and Sarah McPherson, residents and natives of Prince Edward Island. Mr. and Mrs. Sulgrove have three children: James M. Sulgrove, born October 23, 1908 at Choteau, Mary Christina, born September 1, 1910, and John Leland, born September 30, 1912.

Mr. Sulgrove has carved his own career and by well-directed efforts and perseverance he has achieved no mean degree of success. Besides a profitable law practice, he owns 640 acres of irrigated land adjoining Choteau and the most of it is under cultivation. Opportunities may abound, but not every individual has the vision to see or the courage to dare when he sees. Mr. Sulgrove saw opportunity and seized it; he met difficulties and overcame them; and by his own strength has won his place among the successful men of Montana.

JOHN HENRY BOOZ. Success comes to some men only after long years have been spent in trying to locate their proper groove—the occupation in which they can make the most of their talents, and the field in which to carry their ventures through to a conclusion. Often these years, although seemingly illspent, are the direct cause of an individual's prosperity, for during the period in which he has striven to find himself and his proper environment, he has been developing, perhaps unknowingly, the very traits which eventually raise him to a place of importance among his fellows. A case in point that may be noted here not inappropriately is the career of John Henry Booz, of Raymond, Elkhorn county, Wyoming, who, although not at present a resident of Montana, claims the Treasure state for his home as the scene of his first success. Mr. Booz was born in Rockingham county, Virginia, April 17, 1858, and is a son of the late Thomas and Mattie (Whitehead) Booz, natives of the same county.

The early life of Thomas Booz was spent in Rockingham county, where he was engaged for a number of years in agricultural pursuits, but in later years he removed to Georgia, and after spending some years on a farm near Rome, in Floyd county, went to Polk county, in the same state, and there passed away in 1909. His widow, who survives him, resides at Cedartown, Georgia. They had eight children, as follows: Katie; John Henry; Walter, residing at Cedartown, Georgia; Benjamin, living in Chicago, Illinois, where he is chief clerk for the Trans-Continental Freight Bureau and Passenger Association; William, living at Cedartown, Georgia; Thomas, whose home is at Rome, Georgia; Elizabeth, also a resident of Cedartown; and Lillian, the wife of William A. Evens, a prominent attorney of Sandersville, Washington county, Georgia.

John Henry Booz received only an ordinary schooling in his youth, as at the age of sixteen years he decided to sever family ties and enter the world of business on his own account, intent on making his fortune. Accordingly, he ran away from home and made his way to Texas, where he worked at whatever occupation presented itself until he had become sufficiently experienced to make his services valuable to the cattle men, when he was given steady employment. The year 1891 saw his advent in Montana, and at Billings he secured work as a cattle herder, an occupation which he followed for seven years, in the meantime carefully saving his earnings. He eventually found himself in a position to enter the field on his own account, and began in a modest way to raise cattle. His business grew to such an extent that in 1907 he was able to purchase a large band of cattle from John W. Cole, and in 1907 he became associated with Thomas A. Snidow, the prominent business man and capitalist of Billings, and the cattle and horse business known as the Basin Cattle Company, is owned by John H. Booz and Tom Snidow. Mr. Booz was made superintendent of this company in Bighorn county, Wyoming, and has charge of 2,300 head of white-faced Hereford cattle, of which 1,000 are pure Hereford breed. In addition, the company is engaged in raising high-grade Percheron, Belgrade and Shire horses, having imported a number of stallions. The greater part of Mr. Booz's time is spent in looking after the ranch, but twice a year he visits Billings to renew acquaintance with the many who know him in that city. Although he has made over $150,000 in the business in the few short years since he came to Montana, he has not been spoiled by success, and is the same genial, hearty, whole-souled man that he was when he came as a stranger from the Lone Star state looking for a chance to earn his living at some honest employment. He is a Democrat in his political views, but his business activities have kept his time too occupied for him to think of actively entering the public field. He has never married.

CHARLES H. FOOT has been practicing law in Kalispell since April, 1891, and bears the distinction of being the first representative of his profession to locate in the city. He has carried on a continuous practice here since that time, and has gained prominence and position in his profession, as well as in other ways.

Born in Minnesota, near the town of Willmar, on May 11, 1839, Charles H. Foot is the son of Silas and Julia A. (Barton) Foot. The father was a native of New York state who moved to Minnesota in the autumn of 1858—a pioneer of the state. The subject was the first white child born in that section of the country, which was in a practically uncivilized and wholly unsettled state when the family went there to make their home. The country was infested with hostile Indians, and Silas Foot was massacred in the spring of 1863 by Sioux Indians, while his brother, Solomon Foot, was wounded and narrowly escaped a similar fate the summer before. That year marked the outbreak of the Sioux war, and more than one family was bereft of its mainstay and support before the uprising was quelled. The mother, a native of Ohio, was married in her home state. She was the mother of six children, and when her husband was foully murdered, the eldest of her little family was but twelve years old, Charles being next to the youngest. She died in March, 1886, aged fifty-six years, having lived to see all her children well started in independent careers despite the heavy handicap of their youth.

Charles H. Foot attended the country schools as a boy, and was also privileged to attend the high school and State Normal at St. Cloud, Minnesota, graduating from the latter institution with the class of 1882. After leaving the normal school he spent five years in Minnesota engaged in teaching, and in 1886 decided that he would enter the profession of law. He accordingly went into the law office of Capt. Oscar Taylor of St. Cloud, and for two years devoted his every energy to the study of law. At the end of that time he was admitted to the bar, and began the practice of law in St. Cloud, but in April, 1891, went to Kalispell. As mentioned in a previous paragraph, he was the first lawyer to hang out a shingle in Kalispell, and though other lawyers have come, and some have gone, Charles H. Foot has remained steadfast, and has won a most pleasing clientele to himself with the passing years.

His early experience as a teacher gave him a knowledge that has made him invaluable to his adopted city in educational circles, and he was trustee of the district school board from 1893 to 1897, and on the high school board from 1898 until 1911, with the exception of a two year period when he did not serve. He is a director in the First National Bank, as well as its authorized attorney, and is similarly connected with other local concerns.

Mr. Foot is a Republican, but not particularly active in politics, not being ambitious as an office seeker, and only interesting himself in politics as a good citizen may always be expected to assert himself. He is a member of the County, State and American Bar Association, and fraternally is connected with the Yeomen and Maccabees. He is a Unitarian in his religious belief.

On April 28, 1890, Mr. Foot was married in St.

Arthur D. Johnson

Cloud, Minnesota, to Miss Theresa Polley, daughter of John and Amanda Polley, both natives of Minnesota. Six children have been born to their union: Dorothy, born in Kalispell, November 12, 1891; Eugene B., born February 21, 1895; Jessie, born June 8, 1897; Katherine, born January 22, 1899; Isabel, born July 27, 1900, and Helen, born December 22, 1901.

The family home is maintained three miles south of the city, where Mr. Foot has a fine ranch of 240 acres. It is a well developed place, boasting fine orchards, modern buildings, etc., and Mr. Foot gives no little attention to the breeding of thoroughbred horses on his ranch.

ARTHUR D. JOHNSON. As president of the Johnson Lumber Company at Conrad, Montana, Arthur D. Johnson is a prominent and influential factor in business circles in this section of the state. He is likewise an energetic and public-spirited citizen and has been incumbent of a number of local offices of important trust and responsibility.

In the city of Minneapolis, Minnesota, December 14, 1878, occurred the birth of Arthur D. Johnson, whose parents, Lars and Martha (Johansen) Johnson, were both born and reared in Norway. Lars Johnson immigrated to the United States in the year 1872 and for a period of twenty years he was engaged in the contracting business at Minneapolis, Minnesota. He came to Montana in 1891 and is now a resident of Flathead valley, where he is engaged in fruit farming. His cherished and devoted wife was called to eternal rest in Minneapolis in 1893, at the early age of thirty-three years. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson became the parents of four sons, of whom Arthur D. was the first born.

Arthur D. Johnson was educated in the public and high schools of Minneapolis and he also pursued a commercial course in the Minneapolis Business College in that city. In 1895 he came to Montana and located in Kalispell, where he secured a position as bookkeeper for the North Western Lumber Company, for which concern he worked at various periods—in all five years. For two years he was in the employ of the O'Neil Lumber Company at Kalispell and for three years he was with the John O'Brien Lumber Company. For two years he was manager of the O'Brien Lumber Company at Havre and from 1905 to 1907 was superintendent of the North Western Mills at Kalispell. In the latter year he came to Conrad and in company with B. J. Boorman, of Kalispell, purchased the plant, yards and stock of the Somers Lumber Company, which was incorporated with a capital stock of ten thousand dollars and known as the Johnson Lumber Company. In June, 1911, Mr. Johnson purchased Mr. Boorman's share, the same being now incorporated with a capital stock of fifty thousand dollars. It is known as the largest retail lumber business in Teton county and the company also deals in coal, hay and grain. A. D. Johnson is president of the company; Charles W. Johnson, vice-president; and Mrs. F. M. Johnson, secretary and treasurer. Yards are operated at Brady, Montana, under the management of Charles W. Johnson.

Mr. Johnson is an Independent Progressive in his political attitude and he has served his home community in various important official capacities. In April, 1911, he was elected a member of the Conrad board of aldermen and is incumbent of that position in 1912. He is president of the Merchants Association at Conrad. He was a poor boy and his success in life is the outcome of his own well-directed endeavors. In addition to his lumber business he is the owner of six hundred and forty acres of ranch land in Montana, two hundred acres of that tract being under cultivation. In a fraternal way Mr. Johnson is a Mason, being connected with Black Eagle Commandery No. 8 at Great Falls and with the blue lodge at Conrad, being elected as master for 1913, Helena Consistory No. 3 and Algera Temple, A.

N. M. S. at Helena. He is likewise affiliated with the Woodmen of the World and with the Royal Highlanders.

January 15, 1902, at Kalispell, Montana, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Johnson to Miss Florence May Disbrow, a daughter of E. S. Disbrow, of Nebraska. Three children have been born to this union, namely—Helen Lucille, Charles Arthur and Robert Eugene. In their religious faith the family are devout members of the Presbyterian church.

HON. DAVID FRANCIS SMITH. One of the able and prominent members of the Montana bar is Judge David Francis Smith, of Kalispell, who has served two terms as judge of the eleventh district and in 1904 was a strong candidate for the office of chief justice of Montana but was defeated owing to the overwhelming Roosevelt tide of that year. In no profession is a career more open to talent than in that of law, and the men who succeed are men of strength, moral and mental, men who have made careful preparation for their profession and then have the native ability to use their equipment. Character makes the final decision as to a man's status in life. Judge Smith ranks among the most prominent of Montana lawyers; his judicial service was dignified and impartial and as a citizen he stands for the best and highest ideals of useful living.

He was born at Benedicta, Aroostook county, Maine, February 1, 1865. The family was established in the Pine Tree state by his father, William H. Smith, who came to America from his native Ireland and settled at Bangor, Maine, in 1820. He was a merchant during the greater part of his life, and died at Flint, Michigan, in 1874, at the age of seventy, while on a visit to a son. William H. Smith married Sarah A. Moore, a native of Maine, who died at Benedicta in 1874 when forty-five years of age. David Francis Smith is the eldest of two children born to their union.

In the public schools of Aroostook county, Maine, and in the academy there Judge Smith obtained his earlier education, graduating from the latter institution in 1885. In 1889 he completed the course at Colby College, Waterville, Maine, where he was graduated as a Bachelor of Arts, and following this he matriculated in the Boston School of Law, which institution awarded him a Bachelor's degree in 1891. During his student days he taught school, did soliciting, and engaged in other work of a like nature in order to obtain the means to defray his expenses. After time has been given in which to prove their merit, the names of such students are usually the ones on the alumni roll which the alma mater points to with pride. After graduating from the law school in 1891 Judge Smith came to Montana and first settled at Columbia Falls, but in 1896 he removed to Kalispell, where he has since been actively engaged in the practice of his profession. He was elected judge of the eleventh district in 1896 and was re-elected to that responsible station in 1900, winning for himself recognition as one of the ablest district judges of Montana. As previously mentioned, he was a candidate for the office of chief justice in 1904 but was defeated. He has won a professional success and at the same time has given heartily of his time and ability to further the progress and public welfare of his community. At all times he is a patron of useful learning and is now and has been for a number of years president of the high school board of Flathead county. A Democrat in politics, he has long held a prominent place in the counsels of his party in national, state and local affairs. Fraternally, he affiliates with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Knights of Columbus, and in religious faith he is a devout communicant of the Roman Catholic church. His professional interest is shown by his membership in the county, state and American bar associations.

At Boston, Massachusetts, on February 1, 1892, Judge Smith was united in marriage to Miss Hattie M. Collins, a daughter of Rev. and Mrs. W. H. H. Collins, the latter of whom was Miss Elizabeth Hartwell before her marriage, and both of whom were born in New Hampshire. Three sons have blessed the union of Judge and Mrs. Smith. Harold Smith, the eldest son, born at Columbia Falls, Montana, on July 16, 1893, graduated from Phillips Andover Academy in June, 1912, and in September following entered Harvard University; Charles, born in Kalispell, Montana, on August 3, 1899, and Walter, born in the same city on March 25, 1902, are both attending the public schools of their native city.

Judge Smith finds his greatest pleasure in the charm of his own fireside, and the interest nearest his heart is the education of his sons and the molding of their characters into those of noble men.

JOSEPH B. GIBSON has been identified with engineering and architectural projects all his life, and since 1891 his activities in this line have been confined to the state of Montana. He has done some of the more important survey and construction work carried out in the state in recent years, and has been county surveyor of Flathead county during six years of his residence in Kalispell, as well as being county assessor for a like period.

Born in Caledonia county, Vermont, on January 7, 1864, Mr. Gibson is the son of William B. and Elizabeth (McGill) Gibson. The parents were both natives of Scotland. The father came to America with his parents as a child of three, and passed his life as a farmer in Vermont. He died in 1900 at the advanced age of eighty-three. The mother came to America when she was seventeen years of age. She passed away at the family home in Vermont in 1871, when she was but thirty-seven years of age. They were the parents of seven children, Joseph B. being the first born. He was educated in the public schools of Vermont as a boy and later attended the Boston Polytechnic Institute, now known as the Massachusetts School of Technology. He studied architecture and engineering and after completing his education in 1878 settled at Caledonia, North Dakota, a point then known as Goose river, and secured employment with the Hudson Bay Company as a clerk.

In the spring of 1879, he came to the western part of North Dakota and there secured employment in the engineering department of the Northern Pacific Railroad, where he continued until 1883. He then resigned from service with the Northern Pacific and from that time until 1891 was engaged in civil engineering and architectural work at various points in Minnesota and North Dakota. It was in 1891 that he first came to Montana and located in Kalispell. When he arrived, two log cabins represented the extent of the development there, and he was the first engineer and architect to become identified with the place. Here he assisted in much of the development work in the city, laid out the town, and since that time has served Flathead county as engineer for six years and as county assessor for a similar period. Mr. Gibson drew the plans for the Masonic Temple, the Young Men's Christian Association building, the Buffalo block, and many others of the larger and more important buildings in the city.

On June 12, 1907, Mr. Gibson was united in marriage at Portland, Oregon, with Miss Grace Johnston, the daughter of Zadok Johnston, a native of Maine. They have no children.

The family home is maintained at Fourth avenue and California street, and is a beautiful and commodious place.

ABRAHAM L. JAQUETH, city engineer and street commissioner at Kalispell, Montana, has gained a high place in the hearts of his fellow men by reason of his ardent devotion to duty and splendid achievements in making Kalispell a thoroughly modern and strictly up-to-date city. The greater part of his energy for a number of years past has been given to beautifying Kalispell and as the result of his vigilance this city boasts miles of macadam and asphalt paving, a good sewer system and many fine boulevards.

In the state of Ohio, on the 10th of October, 1865, occurred the birth of Abraham L. Jaqueth, who is a son of Benjamin I. and Mary (Hazlett) Jaqueth, the former of whom was born in New York and the latter in Ohio. The father was a pioneer settler in Ohio, where he was engaged in farming operations during the greater part of his active career and where he was called to eternal rest in 1895, at the venerable age of seventy-seven years. At the time of the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted as a soldier and went to the front but sickness compelled him to resign and return home. Mrs. Jaqueth passed to the great beyond in 1893, aged seventy-five years.

The eighth in order of birth in a family of ten children, Abraham L. Jaqueth was reared to adult age in the old Buckeye state of the Union, where his preliminary educational training consisted of a course of study in the district and high schools of Deunquat. In 1884 he was matriculated as a student in Heidelberg College, at Tiffin, Ohio, and subsequently he attended Northwestern University at Ada, Ohio, in which latter institution he was graduated as a civil engineer in the class of 1886. For one year after leaving college, Mr. Jaqueth was engaged in teaching school in Wyandotte and Crawford counties, Ohio, and in 1887 he went to Fort Worth, Texas, where he was for a short time employed in the city engineer's office. Later he entered the service of the Choctaw Railway as assistant civil engineer, his territory being between Savannah, Oklahoma, and Fort Smith, Arkansas. In the latter part of 1888 he went to eastern Tennessee, where he assisted in laying out the town of Harriman and in installing the municipal water works of that place. Thence he went to Dayton, Tennessee, there working as city engineer for the ensuing two years, and in 1891 he came to Montana, locating at Helena for two months, at the expiration of which he came to Kalispell, where he has since maintained his home. His first work in this place was as United States deputy surveyor and he has been engaged in government work continuously since his arrival here. In 1893 Mr. Jaqueth was appointed city engineer and street commissioner of Kalispell and he has been the popular and efficient incumbent of that position during the long intervening years to the present time, with the exception of the year 1910. He has accomplished wonders in the beautifying of the city's streets and has directed the laying of ten miles of macadam and gravel paving. He now has a mile and a half of the finest street-paving in the entire west. During his regime as city engineer he has also laid fourteen miles of sewers, seventeen miles of concrete walks, eight miles of parking and twelve miles of street paving.

In the year 1887 Mr. Jaqueth was united in marriage to Miss Nonnie Brown, of Wyandotte county, Ohio. They became the parents of nine children, as follows, Glen (deceased), Edna, Erford, Herbert, Fred, Florence, Gertrude, Irene (deceased), March.

Mr. Jaqueth was one of the organizers of the Kalispell Interurban Railway now under construction and he is the engineer. This road will cover the surrounding country in every direction from Kalispell. In a fraternal way Mr. Jaqueth is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and other representative organizations of a local nature. In politics he is a Republican and in his religious faith he is a devout Presbyterian. He is fond of all out-of-door sports and devotes considerable time to hunting and ishing. He has a large circle of friends throughout this section of the state and is recognized as one of Kalispell's most valued citizens.

WILLIAM JENNISON. An essentially prominent citizen in Libby, Montana, and one who gives freely of his aid and influence in support of all measures and enterprises projected for the good of the general welfare is William Jennison, whose birth occurred in Bay City, Michigan, October 9, 1856. He is a son of Henry W. and Josephine Watson, both of whom are deceased, the former having died in 1863, aged thirty-seven years, and the latter in 1862, aged thirty-five years. Henry W. Jennison was born in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, and there resided until 1852, when he emigrated as a pioneer to Michigan. In the Wolverine state he was engaged in the general merchandise business for a number of years and there he was likewise owner of numerous saw mills, lake boats and freight barges. He was a man of unusual executive ability and he figured very prominently in the commercial life of Bay county, Michigan, until his death, in 1863. Had he lived longer he would probably have ranked as one of the big financiers of Michigan. His wife, whose maiden name was Josephine Watson, was born and reared in Cincinnati, Ohio, and their marriage was solemnized in Bay City, Michigan, in 1854. They became the parents of five children, of whom three are living, in 1912.

Having been bereft of both parents at the early age of seven years, William Jennison was sent to boarding school in Michigan. He likewise attended Adams Academy, in Quincy, Massachusetts, and at the age of eighteen years left school and started out on his own account. The first business he engaged in was the manufacture of staves, his plant being located in the city of Detroit, Michigan. He followed that line of enterprise for a period of seven years, at the expiration of which, in 1891, he came to Montana and located in DeMarsville, where he resided for five years. In 1896 he established his home in Kalispell, where, for the ensuing seven years, he was connected with the Missoula Mercantile Company. The year 1902 marks his advent in Libby, where his business interests are extensive and numerous. Most of his attention is given to his work as secretary of the Libby Realty Company but in addition to that office he is a director and officer in fourteen other prominent mining and industrial concerns. He is an uncompromising Republican in politics and in religious matters is a devout member of the Presbyterian church.

Mr. Jennison married, in Bay City, Michigan, January 16, 1884, Miss Fannie M. Dolsen, a daughter of John F. Dolsen and a native of Chatham, province of Ontario, Canada. Mrs. Jennison was summoned to eternal rest in 1889, aged twenty-eight years. She was a woman of most lovable qualities and her entire life was characterized by good deeds and kind thoughtfulness for others. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Jennison but all are deceased. Mr. Jennison has lived a life of usefulness such as few men know. Self-made, he has great sympathy for all young men, who are trying to make their way in the world and is ever ready and willing to lend them a helping hand. His life has been exemplary in all respects and he is honored and esteemed by all with whom he has had dealings.

TIMOTHY E. HEALEY. The passing of Timothy E. Healey, mayor of Belt, in Great Falls, Montana, on the morning of September 24, 1910, robbed Belt and Cascade county of one of her ablest officials and a man who held the highest place in popular confidence and esteem. His career, in both private and public life, had been a most admirable and valuable one, and he had maintained his residence in Belt since 1895, when he established the Neihart Lumber Company, and from then until the time of his death was the proprietor of that successful concern. He was well known in lumbering circles throughout the state, and was one of the prominent business men of the state, or indeed of the northwest.

Born in Pottsdam, New York, on September 15, 1856, Timothy E. Healey was the son of James and Honorah Healey, natives of Ireland. While yet a small boy his parents moved to Canada and his boyhood days were passed in that country, and there he received his early education. He early began to do for himself, his first work being in the teaching of a country school when he was fifteen years old. Later he went into the lumber camps of his home region and soon advanced to the position of foreman in the camps. He thus acquired a splendid working knowledge of the business, which was the foundation for the generous success he achieved in that business in later years. In 1881 he left his Canadian home and went to Grafton, North Dakota, there remaining until January, 1891. He was for a time occupied in the hotel business in that place, but later formed a partnership, and what proved to be a life-long friendship, with one William Tierney, now a prominent railroad contractor of Vancouver, B. C. Their partnership was of several years' duration and they handled some of the big contracts for the Great Northern road, their line then being in course of construction. Early in 1891 Mr. Healey came to Montana, settling at Neihart, and there, with his old-time partner, Mr. Tierney, he formed the Neihart Lumber Company and the Neihart Realty Company. In 1895 Mr. Healey came to Belt, soon after which he became the sole owner of the business and in which he achieved a more than ordinary success, his business activities extending throughout the northwest and bringing him into prominence in lumbering circles through Montana and surrounding states.

Mr. Healey was a Democrat and he always took an active and whole-souled part in the political affairs of his city and county. He declined to accept any office, however, with the exception of those which were unremunerative. He served as alderman of the town on numerous occasions and was a school trustee of the Belt district for several years. He was mayor of Belt at the time of his death, having been elected to that office in the previous April without opposition.

In all these offices Mr. Healey served with a singleness of purpose and a straightforwardness that won him the admiration of all, and his civic loyalty was of an order that inspired similar sentiments on the part of his fellow citizens. His business interests were of a wide and varied nature, and besides being president and manager of his own company, he was manager of the Neihart Realty Company, vice-president of the State Bank of Belt, a director of the Ideal Lumber & Manufacturing Company, a director of the Lumbermen's Mutual Insurance Company, vice-president of the Montana Retail Lumbermen's Association, and a member of the executive committee for Montana for the National Irrigation Congress.

Mr. Healey's fraternal relations were numerous and he held membership in the Knights of Columbus, the Woodmen of the World, the Elks and the Concatenated Order of Hoo Hoos, the latter a lumberman's organization.

While a resident of Grafton, North Dakota, Mr. Healey was married in 1886 to Miss Julia Murphy, and to them were born two sons, Earl and John P. Earl Healey is now secretary of the Ideal Lumber & Manufacturing Company of Spokane, of which his father was a principal stockholder, and John P. lives in Belt, having been for some time the associate of his father in the lumber business there.

The death of Mr. Healey called forth many expressions of heartfelt sympathy, and in the Belt Valley Times of September 29, 1910, an editorial appearing therein appropriately sums up the sentiment of the city at large with regard to the place Mr. Healey held among them and his character as a man and a citizen. The article follows: "In the house of death is always the wish to say the things that will lighten the burden of sorrow, but to few is given the talent to speak the consoling word. To most of us, at best, comes to mind a few phrases of stilted English, utterly inadequate to convey the sympathy we would fain express toward a grief-stricken family, or to define our own poignant sorrow. In the death of Mayor Healey Belt has lost a friend. To each individual, not only of the city but to a wide scope of the country, limited only to the area of his acquaintance, the loss is a personal one. To analyze his character is but to express a definition of the ideal American citizen. Energetic, capable, strong and forceful, but withal a heart as tender as a child's and a charity that made allowances for the weaknesses of others. Eager and forceful in argument, yet always ready to acknowledge a mistake. A duty once undertaken carried through faithfully to the end. In short, a man in the very highest sense of the word. He had enemies, perhaps, but he lacked the respect of none. The most prominent trait of his character was an exquisite sense of justice. It characterized every action of his life, and it is not saying too much to assert that this trait alone has earned the respect and love of hundreds who perhaps at times might have disagreed with him. He will long be remembered as a kindly, compassionate and sympathetic Christian gentleman."

MARK S. DARLING. A great man has somewhere been described as one who is so short-sighted that he cannot see the obstacles that lie between him and his goal. Whether this be true of Mark S. Darling or not, certain it is that he has conquered all obstacles that have impeded his progress on the road to success, and now ranks as one of the leading business men in Conrad, or in Teton county, Montana. He is the president of a number of important business concerns in this section of the state and has met with such marvelous good fortune in his various undertakings that it would verily seem as though he possesses an "open sesame" to unlock the doors of success.

A native of Amesbury, Massachusetts, Mark S. Darling was born January 29, 1869, and he is a son of William E. and Cynthia Marie (Steere) Darling, both of whom were born and reared in Connecticut. During his active career the father was for many years manager of the Hamilton Woolen Company at Amesbury, Massachusetts. He passed away in 1891, at the age of sixty-seven years, and his faithful wife survived him until 1906, her death occurring at the age of eighty-three years.

The youngest in order of birth in a family of seven children, Mark S. Darling was reared to maturity in his native town of Amesbury, Massachusetts, and there was graduated from the high school in 1885. As the result of private instruction under George T. Baker, he was enabled to complete the civil engineering course in Cornell University in three years, when he was but nineteen years of age. Mr. Darling initiated the active practice of his profession in Illinois in the employ of the Santa Fe Railroad, and he was associated with that company for two years as civil engineer, his work covering the division between Chicago and Fort Madison. Subsequently he made surveys through the American desert and Utah for the Union Pacific Railroad. In 1891 he came to Montana, locating in the city of Helena, where he entered the offices of the United States surveying bureau, remaining in that department for a year, when he was appointed county surveyor for Chouteau county, with offices at Fort Benton. In due course of time he came to Conrad and accepted a position as chief engineer for the Conrad Investment Company. In that year he was likewise appointed United States Commissioner, an office of which he is still the incumbent, in 1912.

Mr. Darling is manager of the Conrad Electric Light

Company and is proprietor of the Conrad City Water Works. He is president of the Conrad Townsite Company and president of the Dutton Townsite Company, and holds a similar office with the Fowler Townsite Company of which H. W. Conrad is treasurer and J. E. Ritchey secretary. He is president of the Pondera Reservoir Company, and with his associates in that concern owns and controls thousands of acres of land in Montana. These people have fifty-five thousand acres of land under irrigation, their enterprise being known to be the largest private irrigation project ever undertaken in the United States. This area was originally devoted to grazing lands for sheep and cattle, but in recent years it has been cut up into one hundred and sixty acre farms. At the present time (1912) a tract of one hundred thousand acres of land is being opened for irrigation and the land with water is selling for forty and a half dollars per acre.

From 1898 to 1908 Mr. Darling was identified with W. G. Conrad of Great Falls in the building and construction of what is now known as the Teton County Canal and Reservoir Company, one of the largest irrigation projects in Montana, and they located the towns of Conrad, Valier, Williams and Fowler, all thriving towns holding splendid promise for the future.

No further comment is necessary to portray the prodigious undertakings of Mark S. Darling. In view of the fact that he started life with no assets beyond brains and energy, his success in life is most gratifying to contemplate. He is a member of the Masonic order at Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, and is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America at Great Falls. In politics he is a Democrat, but does not participate actively in public affairs.

At Fort Benton, Montana, on December 3, 1898, Mr. Darling married Miss Mary Conrad, a daughter of William Conrad, of Virginia. One child was born to this union, Gladys, whose birth occurred at Fort Benton in 1899.

CHARLES I. O'NEIL. A native of the great old Keystone commonwealth, Charles I. O'Neil was born in Wyoming county, Pennsylvania, the date of his birth being the 18th day of February, 1869. His father, D. W. C. O'Neil, was born in the state of New York and came west as a young man and located in Kansas, later removing to Missouri. In 1899, he came to Montana and is now engaged in agricultural operations in the vicinity of Kalispell. His wife, whose maiden name was Belle Frear, was born in Pennsylvania and there she resided at the time of her marriage to Mr. O'Neil in 1866. She is still living and resides in Kalispell. She and her husband are the parents of six children, of whom the subject of this review was the second in order of birth.

At the age of four years Charles I. O'Neil accompanied his parents to Kansas and his early educational discipline was obtained in the public schools of Osborne county, that state, and in those of Rich Hill, Missouri. At the age of fifteen years he left school and turned his attention to learning the lumber business. In 1891 he came to Montana and located at Monarch as manager of a retail lumber yard, for the Dubach Lumber Company, continuing the same occupation for this company at Barker, Neihart and Belt successively, until the sale of the business to other parties in January, 1896, when he came to Kalispell and took charge of the retail department of the Butte & Montana Commercial Company. Soon after he was permitted to purchase from his employers the lumber yard of which he had been in charge and thus commenced business for himself in a small way; the total consideration being less than twenty-five hundred dollars. This business developed with the growth of the town and was later incorporated as the O'Neil Lumber Company, which is one of the largest concerns of its kind in the state.

M. Driscoll,

The company has yards at Dayton, Elmo and Kalispell, the headquarters being in the last mentioned city. Mr. O'Neil is president of the company and Clinton D. O'Neil, secretary.

In addition to the O'Neil Lumber Company, Mr. O'Neil has been identified with the history of the lumber business in Montana in various ways, principally as one of the incorporators and officers of the Northwestern Lumber Company of Kalispell and the Dawson Lumber Company of Libby, both manufacturers, also one of the founders and continuing a partner in the Bryne & O'Neil Lumber Company of Great Falls. At this writing, Mr. O'Neil is not connected with the lumber manufacturing except in a small way. Being an ardent conservationist, and having also great faith in the future value of timber, he disposed of his saw mill interests and placed the proceeds in standing timber and now has large holdings of that rapidly diminishing commodity.

At Kalispell, Montana, January 21, 1904, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. O'Neil to Miss Kathryn Fingado, who was born and reared in Nebraska. Mr. and Mrs. O'Neil have three children, as follows: Sylva was born in 1905; Lawrence in 1907; and Charles, Jr., in 1909. In their religious faith Mr. O'Neil is a Methodist, while his wife is a Presbyterian, and they are well known as prominent church and anti-saloon workers. Mr. O'Neil was chairman of the Y. M. C. A. during the preliminary organization and canvass for funds to erect a building, and president of the board of trustees during the erection, by this organization, of the fine building which adorns the Main street of Kalispell. He was lay delegate to the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal church at Minneapolis in 1912. In politics he is a supporter of the principles and policies for which the Progressive party stands sponsor and in a fraternal way he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

FRANK C. BAILEY. One of the oldest settlers in the Flathead valley is Frank C. Bailey, one of the pioneer homesteaders at Big Fork and now United States commissioner and a well-known citizen at Polson. All his active career has been spent in the western country, and beginning a poor boy he has steadily advanced to prosperity and influence.

He was born in Trigg county, Kentucky, January 31, 1866. His parents were William and Sarah (Wilkinson) Bailey, both of whom were natives of Tennessee. The father, a substantial farmer, died in 1887 at the age of forty-nine, and the mother passed away in 1890. There were seven children, Frank being the third. The paternal ancestors came from Scotland, the present being the fifth generation in this country. The maternal side of the family emigrated from North Carolina into Tennessee during the early days, and the maternal grandfather of Mr. Bailey was a minister in the Christian church.

Mr. Bailey received his education in public and private schools of Tennessee up to the time he was twenty years of age, and the first twenty-two years of his life were spent on a farm. In 1888 he started west to seek his fortune, and spent several years in Missouri, Utah, Colorado, Nevada, Oregon and Dakota, and in July, 1891, permanently located in the state of Montana. He came up into the Flathead valley among the first settlers in this region, and in May, 1892, took up a homestead near Big Fork. Here he engaged in farming for eight years, and then became one of the first settlers in the town of Big Fork, which continued his home for seven years. He was notary public there and in October, 1904, was appointed by United States District Judge William Hunt to the office of United States commissioner. On Christmas day of 1908 he transferred his residence to Polson, with which town he has been identified as a citizen and official ever since. In 1909 the county commissioners of Flathead county appointed him justice of the peace, the first official of this kind for Polson. He is the owner of considerable real estate at Polson, and in this section of Montana has found a fair share of the material goods of life and has given much public-spirited service in official positions. In the intervals of a very busy career Mr. Bailey has taken up the study of law and is well read and equipped for the legal profession.

Mr. Bailey has for a number of years been influential in local Democratic circles, and in 1902 was the candidate on that ticket for representative of his district in the state legislature. He is a member of the Christian church, and is a bachelor.

MICHAEL DRISCOLL, of the firm known as the Kalispell Lumber Company, has been identified with the lumber business in Kalispell since 1899. The passing years have brought him a continued prosperity and this firm today is one of the principal ones in Kalispell and vicinity in the lumber manufacturing business. Mr. Driscoll is a New Yorker, born on February 27, 1862, at Lisle, that state, and is a son of Jeremiah and Ann (Ryan) Driscoll, both natives of Ireland.

Jeremiah Driscoll was born in Myrus, County Cork, in December, 1839, and was a boy of about eleven years when his mother brought him to America. His education was limited, and for some years after reaching years of independence he worked on the railroad and in the tanneries of that region. He served through the Civil war, as did six of his brothers, and then took up the occupation of a farmer, in which he still continues. He has prospered and is now the owner of a nice home with pleasant surroundings in which to pass his declining years. He married Ann Ryan, who was born in Limerick, Ireland, and who came to this country when she was a child of eleven years. Both were of the Roman Catholic faith, and have reared their family in that religion. They now reside in the vicinity of Whitneys Point, New York. Jeremiah Driscoll was one of the nine sons of his parents, Cornelius and Elizabeth (Burchell) Driscoll, both natives of Myrus, County Cork, Ireland. The father came to America in 1848 and worked on the New York & Erie Railroad for some time until he had made it possible to bring his family to this country. Two years later they joined him, arriving in New York City on July 4, 1850, and the little family located at Bath, in Steuben county, New York, where the father was employed. One year later they moved to Whitneys Point, and there the father engaged in farming, in which business he was very successful. He died in January, 1890, and his wife preceded him in September, 1888, aged seventy-seven years. Their children were John, Daniel, Patrick, Jeremiah, Michael, Cornelius, Timothy, Dennis and James. The two eldest died in childhood. Patrick, Jeremiah, Cornelius, Michael and Timothy served in the Civil war, all in the construction corps with the exception of Michael, who served in the Twenty-seventh New York Volunteers. On the close of the war all turned their attention to the business of farming, with the exception of Timothy who followed the trade of a bricklayer, and Dennis, who became a blacksmith. All are now deceased, with the exception of Jeremiah, who is the father of the subject, and Dennis.

Michael Driscoll is one of the nine children of his parents. He was born on the 27th of February, 1862, and received an education considerably in advance of what his father was privileged to attain. When he was seven years old he began to attend the district school, attending steadily for three years, after which his winters only were devoted to school work. His last three winters were spent in attendance at the Whitneys Point Academy and the high school. He was an ambitious youth, and when not occupied in study was employed in manual labor, such as farm work, driving team, peeling bark, carpenter work, or any honest employment that came to his hand. He continued at home in that way until he was twenty-two years old, when he went to Minnesota, and in May, 1884, located in Wabasha, that state. For a year he worked at various employments and then entered the employ for the North Western Lumber Company in their retail lumber yard at Wabasha. He remained thus employed until April, 1889, and then took the management of a yard for the same company at Mazeppa, Minnesota. The Mazeppa yard was sold in August of the same year in which he went there, consequently he was returned to Wabasha and remained with the company at that point, and at Hudson, Wisconsin, until August, 1891. It was then that he severed his connection with the Wabasha Lumber Company, and made for the West. He reached Great Falls, Montana, on August 14, 1891, and there entered the employ of the Butte & Montana Commercial Company's Lumber department, where he was placed in charge of the shipping, retailing, and the planing mill. He remained with the firm until they closed up their business in 1898. In January, 1899, Mr. Driscoll came to Kalispell and here formed a partnership with one H. G. Miller, who had already established a lumber business at this point, known as the Kalispell Lumber Company. This partnership existed until April 1, 1905, when the business was incorporated under the above name. Since then it has conducted a general lumber business, engaged in manufacturing and doing a wholesale and retail business. Mr. Driscoll and his partner are the principal stockholders in the corporation, and the business of overseeing the logging and manufacturing interests of the concern is left entirely to Mr. Driscoll, while his partner attends to the selling and financial end of the concern. They have worked together in accord during the years of their association, with the most pleasing results to all concerned, and are known to be capable and trustworthy business men, both of whom have an excellent standing in the community.

Mr. Driscoll is a Democrat, as is his father and all the family, and like them also is a devout Catholic, being a communicant of St. Matthew's church of Kalispell. He has never held office nor has he been an office seeker at any time, being well content to confine his energies to his own business affairs and leave politics to others who have an inclination for that life. During his residence in Minnesota he was for four years a member of the Minnesota National Guard, and he is now a member of the Knights of Columbus and of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On April 21, 1892, Mr. Driscoll married Catherine McDonald, the daughter of John and Mary (Cavanaugh) McDonald, of Wabasha, Minnesota. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Driscoll have been born:—Marie, Arthur, Helen, Maurice. Marie is a graduate of the Kalispell high school and is now in Detroit attending the Thomas Normal Training School.

FRANK H. COONEY. A successful and eminently progressive young man, whose career in the past few years has been intimately connected with the development of Butte, is Frank H. Cooney, president of the Cooney Brokerage Company, which was organized in 1894 as Cooney Bros. and incorporated in 1896 as Cooney Brokerage Company.

This company represents the leading manufacturers throughout the country and does an annual business of over $3,000,000.

Mr. Cooney was born in Norwood, Ontario, Canada, December, 31, 1872. His father, John W. Cooney, was a native of New York State. His mother, whose maiden name was Mary O'Callaghan, was born in Cork, Ireland, but is now deceased.

Frank H. Cooney received his education in the Catholic public schools of Ontario. Leaving school at the age of fourteen he accepted a position as delivery boy in the store of E. C. Armand, of Arnprior, Ontario, Canada, and for his services he received the remarkably modest salary of $4 a month. He became, however, thoroughly acquainted with the grocery business in its several departments. While still a youth, Mr. Cooney for a time assisted his father in the nursery business but only to find that this was not to his liking, and looking for a new field he came to Butte in July, 1891. When he first arrived in Butte he found employment in the grocery store of Thomas F. Courtney and afterwards entered the wholesale department of the Davidson Grocery Company.

In 1894 Mr. Cooney left the employ of the Davidson Grocery Company and with his brother, Howard C. Cooney, started the firm of Cooney Bros. It was afterwards incorporated under the name of the Cooney Brokerage Company as it stands today, and from the first the business has been a success.

Mr. Cooney was married December 27, 1899, to Miss Emma May Poindexter, daughter of P. H. Poindexter, of Dillon, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Cooney now reside in Missoula, Montana, and have six children—Francis H., John Phillip, Mary Margaret, Walter Poindexter, and twins, Tyler Thompson and Virginia Elizabeth.

In politics Mr. Cooney is a Democrat, and his religion Roman Catholic. He is a member of the Silver Bow Club, Butte, the Hibernians, Butte, and the Elks, of Missoula.

GEORGE H. GRUBB. The Hon. George H. Grubb, a leading lawyer of Kalispell and a member of the firm of Grubb & MacDonald, is a worthy successor of his military forebears; for the service given to the public in peace is no less commendable than that given in war. Mr. Grubb's parents were both natives of Pennsylvania. Charles Grubb was an Illinois pioneer of the forties, who during the Civil war, enlisted with Company C, of the One Hundred and Eighteenth Illinois Volunteer. He served first as a private, later as a lieutenant. His company, which was raised at Hamilton, Illinois, was, when the war closed, among the army's mounted infantry. Mrs. Charles Grubb, the mother of George Grubb, was of old Revolutionary stock, in earlier generations, besides which her family was represented in the War of 1812, her father having served in that conflict. She was in her girlhood Diana Davison and was still living in Pennsylvania at the time of her marriage. During the years of their life together, Charles and Diana Grubb became the parents of nine children, of whom George Grubb was the seventh; he is the youngest of the four sons. Both Mr. Grubb's parents are now deceased, his father having lived to the age of eighty-two and his mother until her sixty-first year.

It was while the Grubb family were living on their rural homestead which for so many years they occupied near Hamilton, Illinois, that the subject of this sketch was born, on October 31, 1861. His education was begun in the district schools of Hancock county, continued in the high school of Carthage, Illinois, and completed in the professional course of the law department of Iowa State University, where he was graduated with the degree of LL. B.

Mr. George H. Grubb began his practice as an attorney in Indianola, Nebraska, where he resided until 1889, giving his time to general practice. In the latter year, he removed to Evanston, Wyoming, where he remained for one year. At the end of that time, he had decided upon locating in Montana and in that state he settled first at Demarsville. The following autumn, however, he made his final location, coming to Kalispell, where he has since remained. Here Mr. Grubb was one of the first members of his profession to engage in its practice. He has ever since continued his legal work in this place, where he has been ranked as one of the leading attorneys. From the time of his settling in Kalispell, in 1891, he for ten years practiced law independently. In 1911 the present firm of Grubb & Macdonald was formed. Mr. Grubb is attorney for the Conrad National Bank, having held that office since the organization of the bank. He has also been special attorney for the Kalispell Town-Site Company.

Mr. Grubb has given much of his time to public work in various offices. He was Kalispell's first city attorney, serving in that capacity for one term. Flathead county has also claimed his services for its corresponding office for one term. He was the Republican candidate for justice of the supreme court in 1896 and 1898, receiving the nomination although absent from the meeting held for the purpose of nominating; the election, however, was carried by the combined Populists and Democrats. That Mr. Grubb is decidedly persona grata to his community is evinced by the facts that he is at present both a member of the city council and of the state legislature of Montana.

During the second year of his professional life Mr. Grubb was first married. The date of this union was June 15, 1890, and the place where it was solemnized was Vicksburg, Michigan, the girlhood home of Annie E. Fisher, daughter of R. E. Fisher. Her life as Mrs. George Grubb was but of three years' duration, her death occurring in Kalispell on January 24, 1894, when she was twenty-eight years of age. Thirteen years later Mr. Grubb was a second time married. The present Mrs. Grubb was formerly Miss Josephine Brink, of Wisconsin.

Numerous organizations, professional and social, claim Mr. Grubb's membership. He is a member of the Flathead County Bar Association, of which he was the first president. The Modern Woodmen of America, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and the blue lodge of the Masonic order are all honored by his connection with them. It is needless to say that he has ever been a loyal Republican and actively connected with all sub-organizations of the party which his judgment can endorse.

ALEXANDER D. MACDONALD, M. D. The personnel of the medical profession in Montana is a particularly strong one in the points of character and professional ability. In this group of men is Dr. Alexander D. Macdonald, of Kalispell, the oldest practitioner in that city in the point of service and one of the most prominent as well, who has twice ably represented his constituency in the Montana state legislature and who is also very prominently identified with the Masonic order in this state.

His surname indicates his Scotch lineage. Born October 17, 1861, at Wickham, New Brunswick, Dr. Macdonald is the youngest of seven children that came to the union of Thomas E. and Susan Macdonald, both of whom were natives of New Brunswick. The father became a prominent man in his community and was the eldest of six brothers, all of whom located permanently near Wickham, New Brunswick, and on adjoining farms. He served as a justice of the peace at Wickham for many years and died there in 1892 at the age of seventy-eight years. David Macdonald, the grandfather of Alexander D., emigrated from Scotland and settled at St. Johns, New Brunswick, in May of that year, there becoming a member of the United Empire Loyalists. Susan Macdonald was born in Cambridge, New Brunswick. Her grandfather was a native of Scotland and was an officer in a Scotch regiment stationed at St. Johns, New Brunswick, about the close of the eighteenth century.

After completing his preparatory education, which included the high school course at Wickham, Dr. Macdonald spent three years at Tabucintac, New Brunswick, learning the drug business and at the close of that period he matriculated at McGill University, Montreal, Canada, from which institution he was graduated in 1887 as a Doctor of Medicine. Upon receiving his degree, he began to practice his profession at St. Johns, New Brunswick, but failing health demanded a change to a milder climate and after one year there he removed to California. Two years later he returned to Montreal, Canada, where he gained twelve months of valuable experience in the Montreal General Hospital. Immediately following this, or in 1891, he came to Montana and located at Kalispell, the only other member of his profession there at that time being Dr. J. A. Ghent, now of Seattle, Washington. Until 1910, or for nearly twenty years, Dr. Macdonald attended to a large and ever increasing general practice, but since that date he has given the major portion of his time to gynaecology and to surgery. By experience he has gained a large knowledge of his profession, and what he has accomplished in life is wholly the outcome of his own efforts. The severest and most exacting critic of his progress has been himself and to satisfy his own desire for larger ability and greater proficiency he has taken post graduate work in Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, and at the Mayo Clinic, Rochester, Minnesota. As rightly may be inferred, Dr. Macdonald stands well to the fore among the best medical ability of Montana.

While deeply devoted to his profession, he has, nevertheless, found time to take a large interest in the public life of his adopted state and to contribute to its welfare. He served as a member of the Montana state legislature during two terms, the ninth and twelfth sessions, his election in each instance having been as a Democrat and without his having sought the nomination and without political activity on his part during the campaign. During the ninth session he introduced a bill providing for a pure food law and labored indefatigably for its passage, but without avail. In the twelfth session his efforts were better rewarded. This bill was passed as was another bill introduced by Dr. Macdonald regulating the sale of narcotic drugs. Both measures are of far reaching importance and have placed the name of Dr. Macdonald among the state's large benefactors. At home he has been no less active in promoting the general good. He has served as a member of the Kalispell board of education a number of years, a portion of that time as chairman of the board, and since January, 1912, he has been health officer of Flathead county, which office, together with that of city health officer, he has filled a number of times previous to this.

His greatest pleasure outside of his own home circle is found in his fraternal associations, especially in those of the Masonic order, which are of a prominent nature. He is a member of the blue lodge, chapter, council and commandery, and he also affiliates with the auxiliary branch, the Order of the Eastern Star. He has served as grand master of the Masonic grand lodge of Montana; as grand high priest of the grand chapter; as grand commander of the grand commandery; and at present is associate grand patron of the Order of the Eastern Star of Montana. He is a Knight of the Red Cross of Constantine and is also a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks at Kalispell. Since the organization of the Kalispell Club he has served as its president and as a member of its board of directors, and in the interests of his profession he sustains membership in the Flathead County Medical Society, the Montana State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He served as the first president of the first named medical organization. In 1910 Dr. Macdonald was solicited to become a member of the reserve corps of army surgeons, but he was compelled to decline on account of being beyond the age limit of forty-five years. He is a communicant of the Episcopal church.

The marriage of Dr. Macdonald took place in Kalispell, Montana, on April 13, 1892, and united him to Miss Jessee Swanly, a native of Pennsylvania and the daughter of Fullarton Swanly. Dr. and Mrs. Macdonald have four children: Donald Earle, born April 14, 1893; Jessee Louise, born February 4, 1897; Alexander D., born December 27, 1899; and Hugh Allen, born September 13, 1904.

HARRY W. TURNER, who has long been prominent in the field of electricity in different parts of Montana and who is now president of the Montana Electric Company at Butte and of the Washington Electric Supply Company at Spokane, is a business man of unusual ability and initiative. His early educational training was of the most meager order, but through persistency and a set determination to forge ahead he has gained a competency and won for himself an enviable position in the business world.

At Madison, Wisconsin, September 27, 1863, occurred the birth of the subject of this sketch, who is a son of Dr. Henry W. and Sarah (Noland) Turner, both of whom are now deceased. Dr. Henry W. Turner was born in New York, in 1836, and was a prominent physician and surgeon in Iowa prior to his demise, in 1876. At the time of the inception of the Civil war he became hospital steward in the Union ranks and for efficient service was subsequently promoted to the office of regimental surgeon. At the close of the hostilities he was mustered out of service with the brevet rank of major of the Sixteenth Wisconsin Infantry. The mother of the subject of this review was the adopted daughter of Simeon D. North, president of Hamilton College, of Clinton, New York, her parents having died in her infancy. She received an excellent literary education in her youth and was a lady of unusual refinement and accomplishments. She married Dr. Turner while at college in Wisconsin and they became the parents of two children, of whom the subject of this review was the first in order of birth. Mrs. Sarah Turner long survived her honored husband and she passed to the life eternal at Butte in 1900.

Mr. Turner, of this notice, received his early educational training in northern Iowa, whither he accompanied his parents in 1865. He was a child of but twelve years of age at the time of his father's death and at that tender age was obliged to leave school in order to help support his widowed mother. As a youth he drove a stage coach through the wild and rugged country of the west, later taught school and for a period read law, and at one time was storekeeper. In 1887, when twenty-four years of age, he decided to follow a profession and at that time went to St. Paul, Minnesota, where he secured employment with the Thomson-Houston Electric Company, Incorporated. He remained with the above concern until 1889, when he was sent west by that house to take charge of its business in Portland, Oregon. After putting that business on a firm business basis he took charge of the company's sales agency at Helena, Montana, remaining in that city for the ensuing two years. In 1892 he came to Butte, where he took charge of the predecessor's interest of what is now the Butte Electric and Power Company. At that time the business of this concern was of very modest proportions compared with its present magnitude and importance. Under Mr. Turner's management, however progress became marked and from a comparatively small concern it branched out, embracing a large part of the state. This expansion involved the investment of many millions of dollars, and with the passage of time the business continued to spread and prosper. Mr. Turner resigned from the general management in 1910, retaining his stock interests and representation on the board of directors. In 1895 he established the Montana Electric Company, which has since developed into a large wholesale business at Butte, and later established a similar business at Spokane, Washington, the latter being known as the Washington Electric Supply Company. He is president of the two above companies and gives them both his personal attention, in addition to which he is interested in a number of other business projects at Butte and elsewhere.

At St. Paul, Minnesota, September 7, 1891, Mr. Turner was united in marriage to Miss Mary N. LeBeau, a daughter of Josephine LeBeau. Mr. and Mrs. Turner have one daughter, Frances Marie, who was born at Helena in 1892. Miss Turner attended Mrs. Dows' School at Brian Cliff, New York, for two terms and later finished her education at the Marlborough School at Los Angeles, California, in 1912.

Mr. Turner is independent in his political convictions, giving his support to men and measures meeting with the approval of his judgment rather than to vote along strictly partisan lines. He has never had time for participation in public affairs but gives freely of his aid and influence in support of all projects forwarded for progress and improvement. Fraternally he is connected with the time-honored Masonic order, being a Knight Templar and Shriner. He is also affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Silver Bow Club, the Butte Country Club, the Montana Society of Engineers and the Rocky Mountain Club of New York City. He holds prestige as one of the representative business men of Butte and it may be said concerning him that the list of his personal friends is coincident with that of his acquaintances.

DR. WILLIAM C. GUTELIUS. As an early settler in Anaconda, Montana, and as one of the oldest practitioners of dentistry in that city, Dr. William C. Gutelius is well known there and is a representative of the best citizenship of Montana. He came to Anaconda in 1892, when the city was barely one-tenth of its present size, and, with a faith in its future and in his own ability to achieve a professional success there, decided to make it his permanent home. A score of years has passed since then and he remains today, one of the state's most loyal admirers, for Dr. Gutelius says of it: "After numerous and extended vacations I always return with the feeling that there is no place like Montana where are no annoying features in any way, no embarrassing conditions and no experimental methods. It is my honest opinion that Montana has been a success and is a state in which any one may settle with confidence."

Born July 22, 1868, at Mifflinburg, Pennsylvania, he grew to maturity in the old Keystone state and there received a good education, though one obtained largely through his own efforts. His preliminary studies were pursued in the public schools of Mifflinburg. At the age of twelve he became a wage earner by working in a carriage factory and continued to do so until seventeen years of age, by which time he had mastered the trade and by his aptitude and ability had advanced to the position of foreman of the shop. He earned money and saved it and virtually paid his own way through college. His public school education was supplemented by a course of study in Dickinson seminary at Williamsport, Pennsylvania, and when about twenty years of age he began his professional training at Penn College of Dental Surgery at Philadelphia, where at the conclusion of his studies he received the degree of Doctor of Dental Surgery. In 1892 he came to Montana and located at Anaconda, where he was one of the first to engage in his profession and where he has become firmly established in a large and lucrative practice.

Dr. Gutelius is a son of Jacob Gutelius, who also was born in Mifflinburg, Pennsylvania, and who lived there throughout life, engaged for forty-five years in the carriage business. He died in 1898 when sixty-eight years of age. His wife, who was Miss Mary A. Passmore prior to her marriage, died in 1889 at the age of fifty-six. They were married in Pennsylvania and there became the parents of six children, of whom William C. was fifth in order of birth. The father and mother are interred side by side in the cemetery at Mifflinburg. They were prominent members of the Methodist Episcopal church and were devout Christians.

At Anaconda, Montana, on January 16, 1895, Dr. Gutelius wedded Miss Flora E. Collins, whose parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Collins, are pioneer settlers of this city. Two sons have blessed this union—Robert, now a high school student at Anaconda, and Joseph, a pupil in the grades.

Dr. Gutelius, who is a Republican in politics and is now chairman of the Deerlodge county Republican central committee, has been zealous in his activity and devotion to party interests but is without political aspirations on his own part and has steadfastly refused to accept office. In the line of his professional interests he affiliates with the Montana State Dental Association of which organization he is now president, and his fraternal associations are with the blue lodge and chapter of the Masonic order. He is also a member of the Anaconda Club. His automobile and the sport of fishing provide him diversion from professional cares and he is always an interested and enthusiastic spectator of boxing contests, sometimes donning the gloves himself.

In every sense Dr. Gutelius has been of the progressive men in a progressive city and state. Such are the men who have made Montana what it is.

DANIEL J. MEAGHER. A man of versatile talents, energetic, enterprising and ambitious, Daniel J. Meagher has met with eminent success in many lines of occupation, by industrious effort and business ability having gained a place of prominence among the substantial and valued citizens of Helena, as a jeweler and optician being liberally patronized. A son of the late John Meagher, he was born, June 1, 1866, in Chicago, Illinois, of Irish ancestry.

A native of Ireland, John Meagher spent the first eighteen years of his life in the city of Cork, where he received an excellent education, obtaining some knowledge of civil engineering, and becoming an expert accountant. Immigrating to the United States at the age of eighteen years, he landed in New Orleans, and after surveying for a time in the south made his way to Chicago, where for many years he was accountant and bookkeeper for Bliss & Torrey, then the largest wholesale drug firm in the middle west. He continued with that firm until his retirement from active pursuits, at the age of sixty-three years, and subsequently enjoyed the comforts and pleasures of a leisure life for another twenty years, passing away in April, 1911, at the venerable age of eight-three years, his body being laid to rest in Calvary cemetery. During the disastrous conflagration of 1871, when at least one-fourth of Chicago was burned, he lost his property, but rebuilt, and again established a pleasant home. He married Ellen Hurley, who was also a native of Cork, Ireland, and of the seven children born of their union two died in childhood and five grew to years of maturity, as follows: Maria, who lost her life in the Iroquois theatre fire, December 30, 1903, in Chicago; John, of Helena, Montana, a well-known steam-fitter; Joseph, who was accidentally killed at Harvard, Illinois; Daniel J., the special subject of this brief sketch; and Ellen, who accompanied her sister Maria to the Iroquois theatre that fateful day, and by mere accident escaped death. The mother has also passed to the life beyond, her death having occurred in 1890.

After completing the course of study in the eighth grade of the Chicago schools, Daniel J. Meagher began life as a wage earner, for a short time serving as messenger boy for the Western Union Telegraph Company, and is still the proud possessor of the letter of reference given him by the manager of that company when he voluntarily left it to enter the employ of a Novelty Wire Works, where his salary was eight dollars a week. Desirous, however, of learning a trade, he soon resigned that position, and began an apprenticeship with a pattern maker, receiving but four dollars a week at first, but ere leaving the establishment had become such an adept that he commanded twenty-one dollars a week for his services. Continuing at that work nine years, Mr. Meagher made good, and would probably have continued it many years longer had not a large boil on his hand compelled him to lay idle for a time. During that period, he, quite accidentally, met a cousin who was an expert diamond cutter. Becoming intensely interested in that work, Mr. Meagher, with his cousin's consent, began learning that trade, receiving, however, but twelve dollars a week wages. A quick and ambitious scholar, he soon acquired proficiency in the art, and looked about for a favorable place in which to locate. Foreseeing the great possibilities awaiting development in Montana, Mr. Meagher, came west, in 1892 locating in Helena, and embarking in the lapidary business acquiring thus the distinction of being the first lapidary in Montana. Two years later, in 1894, with a partner, Mr. Meagher engaged in the jewelry business.

In 1908 Mr. Meagher sold out his share of the business to his partner, and, still ambitious to explore new fields of professional activity, went east to take a course on ophthalmology and watch making. Since returning to Helena, he has made a specialty of optical work, and has recently opened a large jewelry and optical store on the main street of the city. He is considered an expert in his profession, and is now enjoying an extensive and constantly increasing patronage, his pleasing address, genial courtesy, and unmistakable skill winning him a valuable patronage and hosts of warm friends.

Politically Mr. Meagher is a Democrat but not an aspirant for official honors, although once, against his will, he ran for alderman of his ward, but was defeated by nine votes only. Fraternally, he is a member of the Knights of Columbus, the Catholic Order of Foresters and the Woodmen of the World, and is a life member of the Carroll Club of Helena.

Mr. Meagher married, November 15, 1893, Elizabeth Winifred Ryan, who was born in Steward, Illinois, and was educated in Dixon, Illinois, being graduated from its high school and from the Dixon Normal School. After her graduation from the latter institution, she taught school two years in her native town, and then came to Helena, Montana, to visit friends. While with them, she was offered a position in the Helena schools at a larger salary than she had been receiving. Accepting the offered position, she taught here five years and while thus employed met and married. Three children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Meagher, namely: Helen, attending the high school, has become a popular vocalist, and has brilliant prospects for a future career as a singer, her voice being one of rare charm and sweetness; Katharine, attending the high school, is a promising violinist; and Alice, a school girl. The family are all lovers of music, and find much pleasure in the art. Mr.

Meagher owns one of the finest residences in Helena, it being the former home of ex-Governor Toole, of Montana, and has other city property of value. Mrs. Meagher is a woman of refinement and culture, social and hospitable, and is an ideal wife and mother, being a home-maker in every sense implied by the term.

JENS RIVENES. Well qualified both by nature and education to maintain a high place in his profession, Jens Rivenes, of Glendive, is recognized as one of the able lawyers of Dawson county, where he has carried on a general practice since 1898, and has also served efficiently in positions of public trust. He is a native of Norway, and was born November 16, 1864, receiving excellent educational advantages in his native land, and graduating from Christiana University with the class of 1884. For one year following his graduation he served in the Norwegian army, securing a valuable training in discipline, and in 1886 came to the United States, his first location being in the city of Nevada, Iowa. After about two months Mr. Rivenes removed to St. Paul, Minnesota, and accepted a position in the office of the chief engineer of the Northern Pacific Railroad, with which company he was connected until 1892. During this time Mr. Rivenes pursued his studies assiduously in the night classes of the University of Minnesota, preparing himself in every possible way for a useful and successful career. In 1892 he came to Glendive, Montana, as clerk for the Northern Pacific, but still continued his law studies and in 1898 was admitted to the bar. His advancement in the community was rapid, and at an early date he became recognized as one of the best posted men in his profession in this part of the county, his acumen and forensic ability winning him instant success before the bar. Always an ardent Republican, in 1900 he was elected clerk of the district court, in which capacity he served one term of four years, but since that time has confined his energies to his private practice, which has grown to large proportions. He maintains a well-appointed suite of offices in the Masonic Temple, practices in all the courts, and has the confidence of his large clientele and the esteem of his fellow members of the bar.

Mr. Rivenes was married at Bristol, South Dakota, August 11, 1899, to Miss Ragna Folkestad, also a native of Norway, and they have had six children, three sons and three daughters, namely: Valborg A., Alfred, Solveig, Lora, Herold and David Gerald. Mr. Rivenes has been much interested in fraternal work, and is now a member of the Independent Order of Foresters; Yellowstone Homestead No. 791, Yoemen; the Scandinavian Brotherhood of America; Camp No. 5979, Modern Woodmen of America; and Gate City Lodge No. 37, I. O. O. F.

THOMAS A. GRIGG, M. D. In the sciences of medicine and surgery there are definite branches which alone may properly challenge the entire thought and attention of any one man for the full period of his life, and thus it is that practitioners of marked ability in general lines have seen fit to direct their course to specialties, perfecting themselves in knowledge pertinent thereto and in the practical work implied. Among these may be mentioned Dr. Thomas A. Grigg, who has made a specialty of the study of the eye, ear, nose, throat and lungs, and in these lines finds ample scope for his endeavors. In his finely equipped offices in this city may be seen the most modern appliances and accessories utilized in the treatment of the diseases to which he devotes his attention, and from this headquarters his professional services have been requisitioned by patients from distant parts of Montana and contiguous states.

A native of Prince Edward Island, Dr. Grigg was born on February 11, 1861, the youngest child of Dr.

William and Willame (Daugherty) Grigg, the former of whom was born in England, and educated in London. In 1826 he immigrated to America, locating on Prince Edward Island, where in connection with his medical practice he became concerned in ship-building, a business in which he accumulated a fortune. He was twice married and had nine children by his first marriage and two by his second. He died in 1881, at the age of eighty-one, and his second wife passed away when fifty-six years of age.

Thomas A. Grigg, after a high school education, studied medicine under his father and other able physicians, continuing in technical reading until 1883, when he entered the University of Pennsylvania and after four years was graduated therefrom with honors. It has been said of this period of his life: "The doctor spared neither time nor money in acquiring a thorough knowledge of his profession, as is shown by letters of recommendation he has from Professors R. A. F. Penrose, D. Hayes Agnew, Provost William Pepper and others,—men of worldwide renown with whom he had the good fortune to be associated during his student and after life. In the fall of 1887 the doctor located in Mahanoy City, Pennsylvania, where he had a very extensive and successful practice as a physician and surgeon for over four years, during which time he kept up his studies at the Philadelphia hospitals, much of his time being spent in the Will Eye Hospital and that of the University of Pennsylvania. In 1891 he received a special diploma on his specialties, the eye, ear, throat, nose and lungs, from the Philadelphia Polyclinic. In 1892, at the suggestion of Dr. Pepper, on account of failing health as a result of overwork and study, he came west and spent six months on Lake Chelan, Washington. In October, 1892, the doctor located permanently in Butte. The people of this place, who are not slow to measure the worth, ability and integrity of strangers, soon found him to be a man well trained in his profession, possessed of skill, good judgment and ability. He soon built up a lucrative practice, having the confidence of both the profession and the laity. The doctor is now well known throughout this great state, as well as in the adjoining states, having successfully performed some of the most difficult operations in his branch of surgery."

Dr. Grigg is a member of the American Medical Association, the Rocky Mountain Interstate Medical Association and the state and county organizations, and is also identified with the State Medical Society of Pennsylvania and the alumni association of the university of that state. He is one of the collaborators of the Montana State Medical Association in contributions to the Medical Sentinel, published in Portland, Oregon. He is a close student, original and advanced in thought and action, giving much attention to individual investigation and research, keeping well in touch with the advances made in the sciences of medicine and surgery.

Dr. Grigg has valuable investments in mining properties and also owns real estate in Butte and in the state of Washington, his holdings being of unmistakable worth. He is interested in ranching in Silver Bow county and owns a large ranch south of Miles Crossing.

For some time Dr. Grigg did professional work for the government, and in 1900 he was appointed a member of the board of United States examining surgeons for the pension department in Silver Bow county, being president of the board now. He is also examining physician for the Des Moines Life Insurance Company of Des Moines, Iowa, and of the National Life Insurance Company of the United States, with headquarters in Chicago.

Dr. Grigg has ever been a supporter of the Republican party in his political activities, but he has repeatedly declined public office. In 1910, however, he was elected to the board of aldermen, to represent the Sixth ward, and was reelected in 1912. He is a prominent member of that body and is a strong advocate of the principle of conducting the affairs of the city on a strictly business basis, and in accordance with the methods required by the successful conduct of any up-to-date corporation or business enterprise.

Fraternally Dr. Grigg is identified with the Masonic order, and was made a Master Mason at Port Hill, Prince Edward Island. He also is a member of the Knights of Pythias, the Woodmen of the World and the Fraternal Union of America, being examining surgeon for the two latter named societies.

On August 20, 1888, Dr. Grigg was united in marriage with Miss Joanna S. Miller, who was born in the town of the doctor's nativity, she being the daughter of John Miller, a prominent shipbuilder. Mrs. Grigg is past president of the Woman's Club of Butte and is now serving as a member of the board of trustees of that organization. She is a woman of unusual artistic talent, and is a member of the Academy of Fine Arts of Chicago, and is an acknowledged connoisseur on the subjects of art, ceramics, etc. Three children have been born to Dr. and Mrs. Grigg: Elmer Roy is a graduate of the Butte high school and is now attending the Jefferson Medical School at Philadelphia; Leon Allison, also a graduate of the Butte high school, is now a student at the North Pacific Dental College, in Portland, Oregon; and Joanna Ethel, who graduated from the Butte high school in June, 1912. The family home is located at 915 West Galena street, and the doctor and Mrs. Grigg are active and prominent as leaders in the social life of the city.

NAT SIMON. The old pioneer is justly entitled to a prominent place in the history of Montana for it was that class that laid the foundation, but in writing of the class that are today making history in the "Treasure State" there will be found many men of middle age, the younger, whose push, energy, enterprise and business foresight have not only been important factors in Montana's development, but the stimulus from their operations is bound to play an important part in the state's future greatness. Probably no better type of this class of the younger business man, will be found in the state, than what is represented by Nat Simon of Butte, the well known ranchman, dairyman and mine owner.

Mr. Simon is a native of Switzerland, Canton of Ticino, and born December 25, 1875. He attended the Normal school in his native place completing its course of instruction by the time he was fourteen years old. He then remained at home three years longer, variously occupied, and in 1892, when he was but seventeen, came unattended to the United States to seek an ardently desired improvement in his estate in life.

On his arrival in this country he journeyed direct to Butte, where his uncle, Talby Simon, was conducting an extensive and active dairy business. He worked for his uncle until 1901, then bought the business and also a one-half interest the uncle owned in a large ranch near Brown's Gulch. With all his energy employed and all his faculties wide-awake and alert he then kept the business going on his own account, and is still conducting it, but on a much larger scale than his uncle had ever thought of. The milk, butter and other dairy products for the enterprise, The Western Creamery Co., come from his ranch and six wagons in Butte supply the trade, which is extensive, and its increase is steady and continued.

Knowing something of mines and mineral properties, also, Mr. Simon has been on the lookout for accretions to his resources from the mining industry from the time of his advent in the state, and has acquired some of the most valuable mining lands in this part of country. The most prominent of his mines are located in Deer Lodge county on Dry Cottonwood creek, and are rich in deposits of gold and sapphires. He spares no expense needed for their full development, and pushes the work in them with very commendable and profitable energy. Recently he installed a dredge in the sapphire mines which alone cost $85,000, and has found it a good investment.

Eastern syndicates, always on the lookout for good things in industrial production, have offered him large sums for his mineral properties, but he has declined all offers, and has gone on developing and working the mines himself with an earnestness and enterprise that show his settled determination to hold on to them. He is the sole proprietor of the properties, and through their wonderful output is fast becoming very wealthy, and sees no reason why he should not have their full yield for his own advantage, since they have passed beyond the domain of hope and expectation into that of actual present results, and he knows how to manage them as well as any other person so as to make them as profitable and enduring in value as possible, and at the same time enjoy all their benefits.

Mr. Simon is also extensively interested in ranching and farming. On his big ranch at Brown's Gulch, he raises all that is required for his large dairy business, including the feed for his live stock, and has a considerable surplus for the markets. He is a progressive rancher, and all his operations in the agricultural department of his business are carried on with the utmost system and with close attention to all the latest discoveries and improvements in the science of agriculture. At the Montana land show held in St. Paul, Minnesota, in the latter half of December, 1911, he had an exhibit of both his ranch and his mine products that made a great impression on the thousands who visited the display because of the marvels in Montana wealth which it revealed.

Mr. Simon is a son of Jerry and Kate (Brantine) Simon, natives of Switzerland, where the mother passed the whole of her life and died in 1879, when her son Nat was but four years old. She was born in 1842, and the father's life began in 1834. In 1899 he came to this country and to Butte to try to persuade his son to return to his native land. But he liked Montana so well that he did not go back himself, and is now managing the Brownsville ranch for his son, and is well pleased with the work.

Mr. Simon has never married, and has no family connections except his father and his three brothers: Aleck, who resides at Brown's Gulch in this state; Pasquel, who is also a resident of Brown's Gulch; and Edward, who is still living in Switzerland, where all the sons were born. Their grandfather, Anton Simon, was prominent in the early wars of Switzerland and died in that country at the advanced age of ninety-two years. The race is a hardy one, and the burden of years rests lightly on its members. Mr. Simon's father is now seventy-eight, and is one of the most vigorous and active men in the neighborhood of his home.

In the local affairs of his county and state Mr. Simon has always taken a very earnest and helpful interest, giving his cordial and stimulating support to all worthy undertakings for their advancement, and directing his efforts in this behalf with broad intelligence and excellent judgment. In fraternal circles he is connected with the order of Woodmen of the World, his religious affiliation is with the Catholic church, and in political faith and allegiance he belongs to the Republican party. All classes of the people regard him as an excellent citizen, and all esteem him highly. Incidentally, it is pleasant to state that Mr. Simon is very fond of hunting and is an expert shot. He never goes on a hunting expedition without bringing back with him trophies of his skill with the rifle, however badly other hunters may fare at the same time. He is wise as to where game is likely to be found and how to reach it, and his advice is much sought in reference to the requirements for success in the chase.

ALBERT J. WEDUM. The Norwegian type has found many representatives in the New World and has assuredly contributed its quota towards the onward movement of progress, its executive ability being great and its direction of affairs along safe and conservative lines. Among the Norwegian citizens who have taken up their residence in Montana none is more a credit to his country than Albert J. Wedum, proprietor of the A. J. Wedum Lumber Company at Dillon, one of the county's most prosperous and well-conducted industries.

Mr. Wedum was born in Norway, February 1, 1873, and there resided until about the age of seventeen years. He is the son of Anton J. and Bertha J. Wedum, who still reside in their native country, the father being engaged in the mercantile and summer resort business, which lines of endeavor he has followed throughout the greater part of his active career. They became the parents of five children, four being sons and Mr. Wedum, the immediate subject, is the third in order of birth. Two of his brothers and his sister are now in America. John A. Wedum has become a prosperous dealer in lumber, hardware and building materials; is married and resides at Alexandria, Minnesota. James W. Wedum is manager of the Lewis Wedum Company, of Glasgow, Montana. He is married. The sister, Carrie, became the wife of Olaf Soby and resides at Stady, North Dakota, her husband being an agriculturist of extensive property. The youngest brother, Theodore Wedum, is married and resides in Norway. He is associated with his father in the mercantile business.

When as a youth of seventeen years Mr. Wedum came to the Land of the Stars and Stripes, he settled in Kensington, Minnesota, where one of his older brothers had preceded him, and was engaged in the mercantile business. He remained there but a short time and then went to Wilmar, Minnesota, where he took a course in a business college, his liking for a commercial life having become apparent to him. His identification with Montana dates from April, 1892, when he located at Glasgow, and there remained six years in the employ of the Lewis Brothers, merchants and bankers. He proved faithful and efficient and was rapidly advanced. In the spring of 1898 he was seized with the gold fever and went to Alaska, landing first at Port Valdes and then going on into the Copper river country. He remained in Alaska only about a year, during which time he followed prospecting and mercantile business. At the end of the period mentioned he returned to Glasgow, and when the Lewis Wedum Company was organized he became a member of the firm and continued with the successful enterprise until 1909. In that year he came to Dillon and bought out the Dillon Lumber Company, now known as the A. J. Wedum Lumber Company and he has since maintained his residence here. Under his forceful and sagacious management the concern has grown to large proportions and has added greatly to the prosperity of the community in which it is located. Branch yards at Armsted and Grant have been opened since Mr. Wedum took charge of the business. In addition to his lumber business the subject has other interests, mercantile and otherwise, of wide scope and importance.

Mr. Wedum was happily married on April 27, 1905, at Waupun, Wisconsin, his chosen lady being Ella O. Bronson, daughter of Gustav and Carrie Bronson, of Waupun. They maintain an interesting and hospitable home in Dillon. Mr. and Mrs. Wedum are members of the Lutheran church. The former is a prominent Mason and has filled all the chairs in the blue lodge, being now past master. He is a member of the Beaverhead Social Club and the Beaverhead Commercial Club, being a member of the advisory board of the latter. He is an adherent of the Republican party, but is not active in politics, having in public affairs only the interest of every intelligent citizen. He is a devoted follower of Isaac Walton, and he is also fond of hunting, and his love of music amounts almost to a passion, no one finding greater pleasure with the "heavenly maid." Though one of the busiest of men, he finds time for the cultivation of the finer things of life. He is a bright and shining example of the man who has made his way absolutely alone, without pull or favoritism, and he is now one of the most prosperous and highly esteemed citizens of Beaverhead county. His business capacity was apparent even as a small boy, when he and his two brothers speculated in goats and sheep and Albert J. had a bank account before he was seventeen. In fact, it was in this manner that he earned the money to come to America. From childhood economy and good business judgment were instilled into him. He received his early education in the public schools of Norway.

HENRY HUBERT, JR. Switzerland is the native place of Mr. Hubert, Jr., although he has lived in America since he was a boy of twelve. His father, whose name is also Henry, was born in Switzerland, and there followed the profession of painter and decorator. Upon his removal to this country he continued to work in the same line, and still follows his calling in Missoula. In the province of Alsace-Lorraine he met Marie Truxler, and they were married in that place. Four children were born of their union, two boys and two girls. The latter two did not live to grow up, but both sons are now living in Montana. The younger, Ernest E. Hubert, is a student in the State University at Missoula, and the elder, the subject of this review, is in business in Butte. The mother died in Missoula, in 1904, and is buried there.

Henry Hubert, Junior, was born in the historic town of Basel, Switzerland, on May 15, 1879. He did not enjoy the advantages of the university training in the town of his birth, for when he was but one year old his parents moved into France, and there they remained until Henry was twelve years of age, when they immigrated to America, coming direct to Montana and taking up their residence in Missoula. This was in the disastrous year of 1892, when the panic paralyzed business everywhere, but in the west the blow fell heaviest, for the drop in silver deprived them of one of their chief sources of industrial enterprise, and therefore of revenue. The Hubert family shared in the general hard times and consequently Henry was obliged to begin at once to make his way for himself. He had received his early education in the schools of France, and he continued this in Missoula, afterwards spending one year in the high school of Philipsburg, Montana. He left home at the age of fifteen and went to Helena, where he secured employment in a drug store, remaining there four years while learning the business. This was not his first venture in the commercial world, for when a boy he had earned his first money at the thorny task of picking goose-berries for a Mr. Beckwith, at the rate of five cents a gallon.

After finishing his apprenticeship in Helena, Mr. Hubert went to Valparaiso, Indiana, where he took a course in pharmacy in the Valparaiso University. He was able to earn his way through this institution, and upon completing his studies he returned to the west and secured work in Butte, where he has been for the past twelve years. For the first six years after arriving here, Mr. Hubert worked as a clerk in one of the leading drug stores of the city, and then started in business for himself. The half dozen years in which he has been conducting his own establishment have proved him an excellent business man, as well as an able clerk, and the prosperity of his enterprise is witness of his ability. It has been entirely by his own efforts that he has been enabled to accomplish what he has done. He has been unaided by financial assistance from his parents, nor has he had influential friends to support him.

On October 5, 1908, Mr. Hubert was married to Miss Cora Meyer. The wedding took place in Helena, the birthplace of the bride, and the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Meyer. Mr. Meyer was for years in business in Helena, but is now retired. The acquaintance of Miss Meyer and Mr. Hubert began while the latter was working at learning his trade in Helena, as Mr. Meyer conducted one of the leading drug stores of Helena. Their union was of short duration, for Mrs. Hubert died in Butte on November 1, 1911. She is buried in Helena, the city of her birth. No children were born of their marriage.

Mr. Hubert is secretary of the Silver Bow Druggists' Association. His favorite diversions are horseback riding and reading, as he is a man who is fond of study and devoted to open air life. He is deeply interested in political conditions, but rather as a student than as a politician. He supports the Republican party in matters of national policy, but he is not active in the local organization. His qualities as an individual and as a man of business have made him recognized as one of the men who are making Butte so powerful a commercial city and the leader of the inland empire.

JOSEPH DAGENAIS. In naming the successful business enterprises of Stevensville which have been developed through the enterprise, sagacity and ability of men of energy and progressive ideas, prominent mention should be given the pharmacy of Wilson & Dagenais, now the leading establishment of its kind in the city. Joseph Dagenais, one of the proprietors of this venture, has been a resident of the city since 1892, and during this time has raised himself from a humble clerkship to a position among his community's leading business citizens. Mr. Dagenais is a native of Montreal, Canada, and was born September 8, 1872, a son of Joseph and Alice (Wills) Dagenais. His father, a native of Canada, followed the pursuits of carpenter and contractor in his native country, and a beautiful example of his skill may be found in the Cathedral at Montreal, the spiral staircase, built by him, being a masterpiece of architectural work. He died in 1899, while his wife, a native of Wisconsin, passed away not long after the birth of Joseph. They had nine children, of whom six still survive: Leopoldine, now Mrs. St. Denis, of Montreal; Jennie, twin of Leopoldine, now Mrs. Aime Beaubien, of Hamilton, Montana; Emma, who married Joseph Verdon, of Montreal; Joseph; William, living in Hamilton, and Sarah, who is married and resides in Montreal.

Joseph Dagenais received his preliminary education in the French language in Montreal College, and subsequently spent one year in the Catholic College, but not liking the religious training left home at the age of sixteen years and went to Winnipeg. After a short stay there he went to Lethbridge and on to British Columbia, and then returned by way of Lethbridge, and made his way to Great Falls, Montana. On arriving in that city, Mr. Dagenais found himself in circumstances that were far from encouraging. He had borrowed the money with which to make the trip, and was unable to speak the English language, but with characteristic zeal and perseverance he accepted whatever opportunities presented themselves and soon was receiving employment regularly as a scenic and fresco painter. During these years Mr. Dagenais worked hard, his spare time being devoted to gaining a knowledge of the language, and being temperate in all things was able to put by a goodly share of his earnings. He subsequently went to work in the planing mills of Hamilton, and after several months returned to scenic and fresco painting, and thus continued until 1897, which year saw his advent in Stevensville. Here he secured employment in the drug store of Frank Cyrwitch, continuing in his employ until 1905, in which year he formed a partnership with his brother-in-law, Fred W. Wilson, and purchased the establishment. This has been developed into the leading pharmacy in Stevensville, handling a full line of drugs, medicines and proprietary articles, and carrying all side lines that go to make up the stock of a first-class establishment. Each year has seen the trade advance, and progressive methods and modern ideas assure its future growth. Mr. Dagenais' urbanity and strict integrity have established for him an enviable reputation in business circles. He owns a very neat and pretty dwelling, which he had erected himself, an abode of complete domestic felicity, as well as of genuine hospitality. In addition to hunting and fishing, of which he is very fond, Mr. Dagenais has gained something more than a local reputation as an amateur photographer, and many of his well-chosen views have been copy-righted and form a handsome collection.

In 1902, Mr. Dagenais was married to Miss Myrtle Dobbins, of Stevensville, and they have one child, Thelma. Mr. Dagenais is a member of the Catholic church, while his wife is connected with the Methodist congregation, and is well and favorably known in religious and social circles of Stevensville.

George W. Dobbins, the father of Mrs. Dagenais, was born July 7, 1830, in Bourbon county, Kentucky, and as a child accompanied his parents, J. D. and Nancy (Smalley) Dobbins, to Marion county, Missouri, where his father was engaged in general merchandising, farming and stock raising until his death in 1842, his wife having passed away in Quincy, Illinois, in 1836. George W. Dobbins left Missouri at the age of twenty years, bound for California, and left DeKalb in an ox-team, with his brother, W. J., the latter's wife, and another pioneer. At the present site of Atchison, Kansas, they joined forces with others who were making the journey, and the whole party, consisting of twenty-one wagons and one hundred people, crossed the plains, the men walking practically all the way. Leaving Atchison May 1st, they arrived at Placerville, California, August 1st, and during those three months had passed fully forty thousand Sioux Indians, having considerable trouble with the redskins and being forced to kill one of an attacking party. On the journey they had purchased rockers and shovels and on their arrival at once engaged in placer mining. The first two days' work, however, resulted in only seventy-five cents worth of gold, and Mr. Dobbins moved on to Drytown, on Dry creek. Here he was almost immediately successful, and continued to carry on placer mining during the fall and winter, accumulating large sums and in one day clearing $1,000. With the usual prodigality of the miners of that day and locality, however, he was not careful in hoarding his earnings, the old English proverb that "money easily earned is easily spent," being true in his case, while food was held at almost prohibitive prices, one dollar a pound being paid for almost all food stuffs. As a consequence, when he left Dry Town, Mr. Dobbins had a capital of only $1200. At that time he went north on a trip to Sacramento City, to visit the new mining district, and settled about twenty miles east of that city, where he remained two years, making plenty of money. Subsequently he went to Sierra county, California, but after one month returned to the vicinity of Sacramento, locating in Brown's Ravine, where he remained for six years, leaving that locality in 1858, bound for Frazierville. After six months in that locality, Mr. Dobbins went to Butte county, but left there in 1859 at the time of the excitement over Pike's Peak, Colorado. The trip took three months, and when it was accomplished the prospects looked so bad that Mr. Dobbins became disgusted and started to leave for the Missouri river, but while making preparations met a party who induced him to remain, and as winter went on it appeared that the locality might prove valuable. Returning the following spring he began work in California Gulch, but his prospects did not encourage him and in 1862 he came to Montana and took up a claim on the present site of Stevensville.

Mr. Dobbins came to Fort Limki long before Alder Gulch was opened, the Florence excitement bringing him to Montana. He remained one month at Limki, and during his stay there assisted in the capture of eleven Indians who had stolen and killed a horse belonging to a member of the party. Ten of these were held while the other was sent away to bring another horse for the one that had been stolen, and eventually a party of Indians ransomed the prisoners by giving up two horses. On the recommendation of a pioneer named Joseph Blodgett, Mr. Dobbins and his wife traveled to the Bitter Root country, a distance of about two hundred miles, and on the way found miners at work in the Big Hole diggings badly in need of food. Mr. Dobbins went back to Fort Owen and purchased from Mr. Blodgett eighteen packloads of vegetables, which he brought back to the Big Hole diggings and sold to the miners for two hundred dollars in gold dust and a span of American horses and harness, all valued at about five hundred dollars, these being the first vegetables sold or taken out of the Bitter Root valley. That year the news was received that big diggings had been struck at Grasshopper Falls, and later came the Bannack City stampede, in both of which Mr. Dobbins participated, but in 1863, took charge of the blacksmith shop at Fort Owen, where he made enough to lay in a crop and raise six hundred bushels of potatoes. These he sold for three dollars per bushel, and during that year wheat brought fifteen dollars per bushel, other food stuffs being proportionate in price. For many years Mr. Dobbins was engaged in stock raising, but in 1902, platted his land and sold eighty acres to George May, losing forty acres to the Stevensville Townsite Company in a lawsuit.

Mr. and Mrs. Dobbins are now living in retirement, enjoying the fruits of their long years of labor. They experienced all the hardships and privations which are the lot of all early settlers, and have lived hard, rugged lives, but despite this are enjoying good health for those who have reached their years, Mr. Dobbins being eighty-two and his wife sixty-nine. They were married October 15, 1860, she having been Miss Louisa Salee, a native of Missouri, and they have had nine children, of whom three are deceased, the others being: Jefferson, residing in Stevensville; Jackson, of Phoenix, Arizona; Stelling, of Stevensville; Eva May, the wife of Fred W. Wilson, partner of Joseph Dagenais in the drug store business; James D., living at Victor, Colorado, and Myrtle, who married Joseph Dagenais. Mr. Dobbins is a Socialist in his political belief, and at one time was a candidate on that ticket for the office of mayor, but on account of political conditions met with defeat.

JOHN S. TOWERS. Among the leading men of Miles City, Montana, is John S. Towers, postmaster and a veteran of the Civil war, a man whose activities both in war and peace have led him into many parts of the United States. He was born November 6, 1841, on his father's farm in Chittenden county, Vermont, and is a son of Robert and Harriet (Bullard) Towers, and a grandson of Robert Towers. The latter came to the American colonies as a conscript soldier in the British army during the Revolutionary war, and afterward settled in Vermont and became an American citizen. The mother of Mr. Towers was born in Massachusetts, but the father was born, lived and died in Vermont. He was a man of consequence in Chittenden county and was twice elected a member of the Vermont legislature.

John S. Towers attended the public schools in the winter time and helped his father with the farm work during the summers, as was the general custom. He was twenty years of age when civil war between the North and South was proclaimed and patriotism ran high in his neighborhood. He was enrolled in the first company of volunteers organized at Richmond, Vermont, but was prostrated with typhoid fever before he was mustered into the regiment. It was almost a year later before he had recovered enough to think of assuming military duty, and then went to Washington, D. C., where he was assigned to hospital duty and then was made a sutler clerk and continued as such for two years. He was then removed to Brandy Station, on the Orange and Alexander Railroad, where he spent the winter of 1863-4. Mr. Towers was then made selling agent for Daniel Shaw, a sutler, and sold goods on the old plantation of General Lee, removing then to City Point, where he was sutler's clerk in the employ of Shaw & Morse. His business took him then to Hampton Roads and later to Fort Fisher, arriving at the latter place three days after the fort had surrendered. Mr. Towers and his companions slept for some three nights on the sand on the beach and then accompanied the fleet that sailed up the Cape Fear river to Wilmington, North Carolina, where Mr. Towers superintended the opening of a sutler's store. Three weeks later he loaded his goods on a schooner and followed the troops for about fourteen miles up the river, some three or four weeks later following to Raleigh, North Carolina, and it was during this time that the news reached Mr. Towers of the surrender of General Lee. He then returned to Vermont and spent about a year regaining his health.

When sufficiently recovered to re-enter business, Mr. Towers returned to the south and at Mobile, Alabama, entered the employ of the New Orleans, Mobile & Texas Railroad Company, as a passenger conductor on the run between Mobile and New Orleans, and continued in this position until the spring of 1879, when he resigned, on account of his wife's failing health, and returned to the north. For the following five years he was connected with street railway construction for the firm of Rexford & Company, afterward going into contracting on the New York & New England Railroad, under the firm name of Rexford & Towers, having formed a partnership with his former employer. This firm was later identified with a large amount of railroad contracting, including the Chicago, St. Louis & New York, known as the Nickle Plate road, and still later built the New Orleans & Shreveport Railroad. He had also operated for six years on street contracting at Long Island City. In the spring of 1892, after disposing of his railroad contracting business, Mr. Towers came to Miles City, Montana, and became interested here with his brother, Charles B. Towers, in a gentlemen's furnishings and boot and shoe business. In 1906 Mr. Towers was appointed postmaster of Miles City by President Roosevelt, and to this important public office he has given his attention ever since. He belongs to the Progressive branch of the Republican party.

Mr. Towers was married (first) to Miss Jennie S. White, who was born at Richmond, Chittenden county, Vermont, and died in 1881, leaving no issue. On January 18, 1882, he was married to Miss Edith L. Woodruff, who was born at Elizabeth, New Jersey. Mr. and Mrs. Towers have an adopted daughter, Lillian B. They are members of the Episcopal church, Mr. Towers being a member of the board of trustees. He is identified fraternally with North Star Lodge, A. F. & A. M., at Richmond, Vermont.

JOHN SURVANT, as president of the Malta Mercantile Company and one of the big ranch owners of this section of the state, is eminently deserving of some mention in this historical work. He is also the owner of the Hinsdale Mercantile Company of Hinsdale, Montana, and is state senator from his district. Mr. Survant was born in Linn county, Missouri, on January 11, 1864, and is the son of Joseph and Nancy (Barker) Survant. The father and mother were both natives of Kentucky, and the father served in the Civil war. He was a prisoner at Andersonville, and after being exchanged, was drowned on his way home when the steamer "Sultana" was destroyed in the Mississippi river opposite Memphis, Tennessee, in the spring of 1865. The mother is still living in Chillicothe, Missouri, at the age of seventy-six years. They were the parents of three children, all living. Richard Logan is a ranchman at Trinchera, Colorado; Jane Amanda, the wife of Richard G. Johnson, lives in Chillicothe, Missouri, and the third, and youngest member of the family, is John, of this review.

As a boy John Survant attended the public schools of Chillicothe, Missouri, and was graduated from the high school at the age of eighteen years. In 1883 he began for himself in New Mexico as a stock raiser and rancher, remaining there for a number of years, when he sold out and went to southern Colorado, where he accepted a position as manager for the Bloom Cattle Company, the largest cattle company in the northwest. Mr. Survant has been connected with this company since 1885, and as a result of his ability and success as its manager, he still retains an interest in the business. In 1892 he came to Malta and a few years later organized the Malta Mercantile Company, with L. C. Edwards and William McClellan as partners. Since that time Mr. Survant has bought out the interests of his partners and the firm is now incorporated, with Mr. Survant as president of the concern and principal owner. It is interesting to note that of Mr. Survant's original Montana homestead of one hundred sixty acres, eighty acres of it are now within the corporate limits of Malta. In addition to being the owner of several ranches in Valley county, he owns a handsome home in Malta. The Malta Mercantile Company, of which he is president, is one of the largest concerns of its kind in the city and county. The establishment requires the services of five clerks, with the same number in the Hinsdale store.

Senator Survant owns the Malta Enterprise, the leading newspaper of the place. He has also a large ranch near Malta and has been in the sheep business, but for years has made a specialty of cattle and horses. A number of his ranches are located along the government canal.

Senator Survant has been a prominent man in the public life of the county and state for some years. He is a Republican, and his first public office was that of clerk of the court in 1902. In 1906 he was defeated for the office of state senator, but was elected in 1910. He is a Mason and an Odd Fellow.

In 1894 Mr. Survant was married to Miss Mary Utley of Miami, Missouri. Three children have been born to them,—Burner Barker, Annie Lee and Jessie Marion. The son, Burner, is a student in Shattuck Military school at Faribault, Minnesota; Annie Lee is finishing her education in the Ursuline Academy at Great Falls, Montana; while Jessie is still attending the public school at home and will later finish her education at some California university.

CHARLES V. FULTON. Scholarly in his attainments, and possessing excellent business and executive ability, Charles V. Fulton, associate proprietor of the Butte Business College, is widely known in educational circles, while his abilities are respected and his reputation is highly regarded throughout the state. He was born May 18, 1865, in Bryan, Williams county, Ohio, of pioneer stock. His father, the late Joseph A. Fulton, was born in eastern Ohio, where his parents settled in pioneer days, and during his active career was there employed as a contractor. He died in Ohio in 1903, aged three score and ten years. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Mouday, spent her entire life in Ohio, passing away in 1869, at a comparatively early age.

Having completed the course of study in the public schools of Bryan, Charles V. Fulton entered the Tri-State Normal School at Angola, Indiana, from which he received his diploma with the class of 1888, and the following year, in 1889, was graduated from the Davis Business College in Toledo, Ohio. Thus equipped for a professional career, he taught for several years in the rural schools of his native state, during which time he was a member of the teachers' examining board for Williams county. Going from there to Bucyrus, Crawford county, Ohio, he had charge of the commercial department of the Bucyrus high school for two years, and while there was appointed a member of the city teachers' examining board. In 1892, desirous of broadening his field of action, and foreseeing the future development of the great northwest, Mr. Fulton came to Montana, and was soon enrolled as a teacher in the public schools of Butte. Being eminently successful in that capacity, he was subsequently appointed principal of the Garfield school, of which he had control for five years. Since that time, 1897, he has been actively associated with the Butte Business College, one of the best commercial schools of the northwest. It has the distinction of being the only business school in this section of the state that gives instructions to its pupils in the higher branches of learning, fitting them for positions of trust and responsibility.

Mr. Fulton married, June 19, 1893, in Bucyrus, Ohio, Naomi Feiring, a daughter of Henry Feiring, a prominent merchant of Bucyrus, and they have one child, Dudley H. Fulton, who was born in Butte, April 4, 1895, and is now attending the Butte Business College.

Politically Mr. Fulton is identified with the Republican party. Fraternally he is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and socially he belongs to the Silver Bow Club. Religiously he is an Episcopalian.

DOMINIC G. BERTOGLIO is another of Butte's capitalists who was born in Italy. His father, John Bertoglio, was born in the same country, in 1837, his family being farmers and for many generations the owners of the estate upon which Mary Bono Bertoglio, the widow of John and the mother of Dominic Bertoglio still lives. The father was a railroad builder and contractor, and retired when past middle life from active participation in business with a competence. Dominic G. Bertoglio was born at Pia Monte, on April 21, 1872, received his education in the public schools of Italy, and his father expected him to settle on the ancestral farm in his fatherland. But to the young boy the crude new country where everything was in the process of making, instead of being all complete, appealed much more strongly than the prospect of becoming a landholder in beautiful Italy, and so at the age of sixteen he sailed for America, and upon landing made his way to Ironwood, Michigan, and across the river to Hurley, Wisconsin, where he went to work in the mines, being the youngest miner in that entire section.

Mr. Bertoglio was employed in these camps until 1891, when the mines shut down, and there followed a panic, and consequently a cut in wages. At this juncture, Mr. Bertoglio decided to go west, and so left for Tombstone, Arizona, and until January, 1892, worked there and at Prescott and Bisbee. From Arizona he came to Butte, and for two years worked in the mines here. He was twenty-one years old when he had saved up a capital of $160, and he and another miner decided to open a general store in Meaderville, a suburb of Butte. They were successful from the very start, and a few months later A. C. Grosso became a partner, which continued ten years, when Mr. Bertoglio bought out Mr. Grosso's interests. The business continued to be not merely a paying concern, but a money making investment, which was a source of fortune to its owners. Mr. Bertoglio bought out his associate at the end of their decade of experience as partners, and since that time has conducted his store alone.

In the meantime he had been investing his surplus capital in enterprises of various sorts. In addition to his interests in the Bertoglio Mercantile Company and the firm of Bertoglio & Smith, he is one of the incorporators of the Spokane Telephone Company, holds stock in the National Life Insurance Company of Montana, in the Tivoli Brewing Association of Butte, in the Marconi Wireless Company, and the Patent Plow Point Company, whose foundry is located at Detroit, Michigan. In the last-mentioned corporation he is one of the directors and is vice-president of the company. These holdings, together with some valuable mining properties which he owns in Butte, bring his fortune into the hundreds of thousands.

In November, 1893, Mr. Bertoglio was married to Miss Mary Grosso of Butte. Two children have been born of this union, John, born in 1898, is a student at Gonzaga College, in Spokane, and is now in his senior year. James, born September 1, 1905, is attending school in Meaderville, where the family reside.

Mr. Bertoglio is a member of the Elks' lodge and also of the Odd Fellows. He belongs to the Roman Catholic church. His grandfather, James Bono, was influential in ecclesiastical circles in Italy. Politically Mr. Bertoglio supports the Republican party and was the candidate of that body for the legislature in 1903, but was defeated. His favorite diversions are hunting and fishing, and he devotes a great deal of time to these occupations. He enjoys a wide popularity in a varied circle of acquaintances, and is one of the best known of Butte's solid, financial citizens.

HENRY LOUIS SHAPARD. One of the most conspicuous figures in the recent history of Missoula is the popular gentleman whose name introduces this article, a man actively identified with the business and industrial interests of this section for some years. Equally noted as a citizen whose career has conferred credit upon the community and whose marked abilities and stirring qualities have won for him much more than local repute, he holds today distinctive precedence as one of the most progressive and successful men who ever inaugurated and carried to successful termination large and important undertakings in this section of the commonwealth. Strong mental powers, invincible courage and a determined purpose that hesitates at no opposition have so entered into his composition as to render him a dominant factor in the business world and leader of men in important enterprises. For a considerable period he has been interested in mining and is today president of the Carter Mining & Milling Company at Carter, Montana, and also owns the Shapard Hotel of this city.

Henry Louis Shapard was born April 26, 1866, in San Francisco, California, and with a very limited education and after various trying experiences, he has become one of the leading business men of Missoula. He has in truth encountered a series of hardships and adversities such as would have overwhelmed one not so well supplied with grit and determination to succeed. Born of poor parents, at the early age of twelve years he began his struggle with the world. His first work was in a tobacco factory where he acted as stripper and after a hard day's work he attended night school, for the spark of ambition burned brightly in this young fellow's breast. He soon entered the mines and worked as tool bearer, and proving faithful and efficient, was given more and more to do. Step by step he learned every detail of the mining business and also became familiarized with smelting and its processes, and for over eight years his energies were devoted to that work, which took him to various camps in the state of Arizona. At the age of twenty years he became identified with railroading and was employed in the locomotive department as fireman for the Southern Pacific, Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fe, Atlantic & Pacific, and Northern Pacific railroads, this work being pursued by him for a decade and bringing him to this thirtieth year.

In 1894 Mr. Shapard announced his candidacy for the office of sheriff of Missoula county on the Populist and Labor ticket, and quite without campaign funds he canvassed the entire county on foot, encountering all sorts of hardships and finally arriving at Thompson Falls ragged and shoeless, with a week's growth of beard on his face. He secured one hundred and six votes out of one hundred and sixty, and although running ahead of his ticket he was defeated for the office of sheriff by a small majority. In the fall of 1900 Mr. Shapard was nominated on the Democratic ticket for the legislature and was again defeated by a small majority. That settled his political aspirations and he determined to succeed in another way. And this he has abundantly done.

Shortly after his political adventures, Mr. Shapard opened a railroad house for the accommodation of railroad men, which proved a success, largely owing to his thrifty nature and knowledge of the needs of this class of men from past experience. He subsequently invested his accumulated capital in real estate and other enterprises and became a large stockholder in the Garden City Brewing Company, for a number of years being vice president of that thriving concern. He has also been engaged in mineral investments and is a heavy stockholder in the Hellgate coal mine, occupying the offices of secretary and treasurer of the same. This is a very valuable mine, having an eight-foot vein of fine coal and its output is largely consumed in Missoula, doing away with the necessity of long distance shipping. In 1904 he became the owner of what was known as the Kennedy hotel and renamed it the Shapard hotel and he has since made manifold improvements until the hostelry is the largest in the city. He has made additions and it now has one hundred and twenty-five rooms, which are all needed to accommodate his ever increasing patronage, which is the largest of any hotel in the city. He is president of the Carter Mining & Milling Company of Montana, a gold mine with a great future, and also owns city realty of first class order. In short, no man has contributed in more definite manner to the growth and development of Missoula than this self-made and progressive citizen.

Mr. Shapard was happily married in April, 1892, Mary Garrity, a native of Minnesota, becoming his wife. Fraternally the subject is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

CLAUDE FRANK MORRIS. In the remarkable development that has taken place in many sections of Montana, within the last decade, a main factor has been the interest shown by young men of education, initiative and enterprise, men who have been college bred and have come to this great state not with speculative intent but with the object of establishing here their permanent homes. At Havre, Montana, many of the leading and successful business undertakings are directed by men of the above class and a case in point is that of the cashier of the Security State Bank, Claude Frank Morris. Mr. Morris was born in Ralls county, Missouri, January 10, 1869, and is a son of Harrison F. and Nancy Catherine (Domigan) Morris.

Harrison F. Morris was born at Georgetown, Kentucky, but after marriage and prior to the birth of his son, Claude Frank, moved to Missouri. He lived for some years in Ralls county but subsequently moved to his farm in Audrain county, on which he still resides, living somewhat retired. He married Nancy Catherine Domigan, who was born in Bourbon county, Kentucky, and died in 1907, in Audrain county, Missouri. Of their family of eight children all survive with one exception, Claude Frank being the fifth in order of birth. William H. resides on his ranch in Hill county, Montana. James W. is a farmer in Audrain county, Missouri. Callie is the wife of Theodore Black and Sarah is married to Joseph Adkinson, both being residents of Audrain county, Missouri. The two remaining children, Fannie and Iva, both reside with their father on the family homestead in Audrain county.

Claude Frank Morris attended the public schools of Audrain county and afterward completed a commercial course in a business college at Sedalia, Missouri. In 1892, being then twenty-three years of age, he came to Montana, accepting a position as bookkeeper in the Stockton Bank, at Fort Benton, where he continued for four years and possibly would have remained longer had he not, at that time, received an appointment to a government position, a clerkship in the agricultural department at Washington, D. C., under Secretary James A. Wilson. During his five years of official life in the capital city, Mr. Morris made good use of the many cosmopolitan advantages offered there, and also became a student in literature and law at the Columbian University, giving as much attention to his classes as was consistent with the faithful performance of his official duties. He was graduated in the law class of 1902 and was also president of his law class during the graduating year, for many reasons the latter honor being a matter for justifiable pride.

After the termination of his official service and the completion of his college course, Mr. Morris returned to Montana with the expectation of engaging in the practice of law, but before his plans were fully matured, Mr. S. McKennan, who is one of the financial magnates of the northwest, brought to bear influences which led to his adopting banking as a career, and ever since then he has been a business associate of Mr. McKennan, his law business being confined to settling up and administering estates. Mr. Morris became secretary of the Union Bank & Trust Company, at Helena, and continued in that position for three and one-half years, with an interruption of ten months, during which he was engaged in straightening out the affairs of a bank at Malta, Montana. Since January, 1907, Mr. Morris has been cashier of the Security State Bank, at Havre, Montana, and has thoroughly identified himself with the various and prospering interests of the place. He owns valuable property there, including a handsome city residence and a ranch just outside the city limits, in managing which he finds a large amount of recreation and enjoyment. In politics he is a Democrat and represents his party as state central committeeman for Hill county.

Mr. Morris was married October 25, 1905, to Miss Alice Cary Manwaring, who is a daughter of T. P. and Mary (Griswold) Manwaring, the latter of whom was born at Binghampton, New York. The father of Mrs. Morris for many years was a prominent orchardist and now lives retired at Dayton, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Morris have one daughter, Catherine. He is a Presbyterian in religious faith, while Mrs. Morris was reared in the Methodist church. He is identified fraternally with Alexandria-Washington Lodge, No. 22, A. F. & A. M., at Alexandria, Virginia, and is a member and a trustee of the Elks, at Havre. In all that goes to make the highest type of American citizen, Mr. Morris stands preeminent.

GEORGE A. PACKARD. The large extent and immense richness of Montana's mines, and especially that portion of the mining country of which Butte is the center, has attracted to the professions dependent upon this industry men of the largest caliber and highest education, and it is but natural that many of these should select Butte as the headquarters for their field of operations. Among the men of this profession who enjoy a national reputation and have offices in Butte Mr. George A. Packard deserves conspicuous mention.

Mr. Packard is acquainted with and has worked in many of the richest mining sections of the United States in various localities, and his proficiency in his chosen profession is the result of natural aptitude, exhaustive special education and training and wide experience. He is a graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, which he entered immediately after graduation from the Wakefield, Massachusetts, high school in 1886, and received his degree of Mining Engineer from the institute with the class of 1890. His first professional employment took him to Arizona, where for two years he worked on properties owned by the Phelps, Dodge Company. In March, 1892, he came to Montana for the first time, and followed his profession in Cooke and Virginia City, among his employers there being the Eastern Pacific Company, Virginia City, and the Henderson Mountain Mining & Milling Company. Mr. Packard next went to southeastern Missouri and entered the employ of the DesLoges Lead Company. He subsequently represented one of the largest cyanide companies in Arizona and was for two years located at Mercur, Utah, as manager and consulting metallurgist for several large companies. From September, 1896, until May of the following year he was professionally engaged at Butte, Montana, and in 1899 went to Boston and established offices in that city, serving his clients there in the capacity of consulting engineer. He still maintains these offices in the eastern city, although he now spends the greater portion of his time in the offices which he opened in Butte a year and a half ago. Among his important connections here has been that of manager for the Raven Copper Company.

Mr. Packard keeps in touch with men and matters relative to his profession in all parts of the world through his membership in a number of the well known societies and organizations and technological and metallurgical character. He is a member of the Technology Club of Boston, the Mining and Metallurgical Society of America, the American Institute of Mining Engineers, the Montana Society of Engineers (of which he is a trustee), and also of the Chemical Metallurgical Society of South Africa. Through his membership in these distinguished societies he has been able to achieve an acquaintance and position among mining engineers of the world that is one of his most valuable and highly esteemed assets.

Mr. Packard was born in Wakefield, Massachusetts, April 17, 1869, a member of one of the earliest American families of which the country has record. His paternal ancestors came from England in 1638 and settled at Bridgewater, Massachusetts, the founder of the family in this country being Samuel Packard, who was a prominent man in those pioneer days and fought in the early Indian wars, while members of the family also participated in the Revolutionary conflict. The maternal line of the family of which Mr. Packard is a present day representative also sprang from English stock, the first member having come to America in 1642, settling in Charlestown, Massachusetts. One of the men of the family was an officer in the army and took part in the famous Boston Tea Party. Mr. Packard's father was George Packard, a native of Maine, who was born November 29, 1820, followed the business of contractor during his lifetime, and died at Wakefield, Massachusetts, January 17, 1884. His mother was Marietta Swain, daughter of Strong Swain and a native of Wakefield, Massachusetts. Her death occurred in September, 1879. Mr. Packard has one sister, Carrie E., born in 1874, at Wakefield, now the widow of E. W. Parker, and a resident of Seattle, Washington.

On April 12, 1899, at Readfield, Maine, was solemnized the marriage uniting George A. Packard and Miss Edythe R. Morrill in wedlock. Mrs. Packard was born in Maine, the daughter of Jacob P. Morrill. Of this union a son, Morrill, was born, but he died in infancy, leaving the parents without issue.

Mr. Packard is not only professionally prominent, as evidenced by his membership in the list of societies previously named, but he likewise belongs to clubs and fraternal organizations that make him well known in social circles. Since 1897 he has been affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, having joined at Virginia City, Montana, and is a member of the Silver Bow Club and the University Club. He is a gentleman of broad gauge and diversified interests, independent in thought and action, and enjoys a reputation for high personal qualities.

ROGERS W. BERRY. From earliest times all nations have attained greatness in such ratio as they have been controlled or governed by equitable and just laws with correspondingly capable exponents of their legal jurisprudence, and whether in savagery or civilization, that man who successfully performs the office of judge, advocate or pleader has always stood above his fellows, has been one who represented the strongest type and the highest intelligence of his people and who inspired in his fellow man a supreme confidence in his judgment and sincerity of purpose. This is the profession which Rogers W. Berry, of Great Falls, chose as his life work and his rank as one of the foremost legal advocates of the state of Montana attests his fitness for that profession.

He was born in Quincy, Michigan, November 12, 1858, is of English lineage, and on the paternal side is a scion of an old New England family. Through his great-grandmother Berry he is a direct descendant of John Rogers, an English martyr who was burned at the stake in England about 1600 on account of his religious belief and activity as a Puritan. Dr. Enos G. Berry, his father, was in his day one of the eminent men of Michigan and was widely known in politics. He was a native of New Hampshire but became a pioneer settler in Michigan, where he became prominent in the public life of that state, having served in both branches of the state legislature and having been an influential factor in causing the removal of the state capital from Detroit to Lansing, he having prepared the bill for that removal. He was identified with the Republican party from its foundation, having been one of the principal organizers of that party in Michigan and thereafter until his death having continued to take a very prominent part in the Republican national, state and local affairs. When the cloud of Civil war lowered threateningly over the country in 1861

Dr. Berry was the choice of the Republican party for war governor of Michigan, but owing to ill health he had to decline the nomination. He was also at one time general manager of internal affairs in Michigan. His death in 1879 at the age of sixty-three terminated a long and useful career and in all of his responsible distinctions his reputation was that of a statesman of sterling common sense, unstained personal character and staunch and devoted Republicanism. The mother of Rogers W. Berry was Lydia Ann Wilson prior to her marriage, a native of Detroit, Michigan, who died at Omaha, Nebraska in 1887 at the age of sixty-two and is buried beside her husband in Quincy, Michigan. She, too, was of English descent and her people were among the early settlers of Detroit. Dr. Berry and his wife were the parents of five children, of whom Rogers was the youngest.

In the public schools of his native city Mr. Berry received his common and high school education, which was supplemented by excellent advantages both in the arts and in law, having pursued his course in the liberal arts at Hillsdale College, and his course in law at the University of Michigan where he was graduated in 1875 at the age of seventeen with the degree of Bachelor of Laws and with the honor of salutatorian, having ranked as second in a class of one hundred and fifty students. Upon reaching his majority he was admitted to practice by the supreme court of Michigan and began at once the labors of his profession in his home town of Quincy. He remained there seven years, but ambitious for greater opportunities, he decided to go west and for several years followed mining in Colorado very successfully. His career has not been one continuous progress toward success and wealth, however, for adversity entered in more than once and what he has gained in Colorado was eventually lost again. From Colorado he went to Newton, Kansas, where he followed law eight years. Attracted by the possibilities of a successful career in law, in business and of citizenship in a new and rising state, he left Kansas for Montana and on September 4, 1892, cast his fortunes with what was then the village of Great Falls but which is now the second city in size in Montana. Gifted with legal talent of a high order and with that tenacity of purpose which makes him a formidable opponent at the bar, he rapidly forged to the front as one of the able and leading lawyers of the state, one whose briefs always show wide and provident research and who urges his contentions in a clear and forceful manner. During 1903 and 1904 he served as prosecuting attorney of Cascade county. He was called upon to sit as special judge in the noted case of Vaughn, Gallagher and Cornelius, involving a very important law point. The case, the trial of which covered twenty-one days, was tried without jury. It was subsequently taken to the supreme court where the decision which Judge Berry had rendered in the earlier trial was firmly sustained. Mr. Berry is the senior member of the present law firm of Berry & Bennett, with offices in the Phelps block, and continues his practice of law though he has not confined himself to his professional work, for he has also acquired extensive business connections. He is president of the Reid Mining, Milling & Smelting Company, is a director and secretary of the Great Falls and Judith Mining Company, and is secretary and treasurer of the Tenderfoot Copper Mining Company.

At Independence, Kansas, Mr. Berry was united in marriage to Miss Emma Alice Bowen, a daughter of George W. Bowen of that city. Mrs. Berry is a native of Ottumwa, Iowa, and is a graduate of the Iowa Wesleyan University. Of this marriage one son has been born, Rogers Wilson Berry, Jr., whose birth occurred at Great Falls on June 24, 1904.

Reginald A. May

In line with his profession Mr. Berry is identified with both the county and state law associations, and with the University Club. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Masonic order, and the Modern Woodmen of America, being also a trustee of the last named order. Both he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church at Great Falls, of which Mr. Berry is also a trustee.

Professional ability, the undaunted courage with which to rise above reverses, and good business discernment have been the capital with which Mr. Berry has gained a competence, social position and professional repute.

MORGAN P. GILCHRIST. The career of M. P. Gilchrist is a splendid example of what may be accomplished by young manhood that is consecrated to ambition and high purposes. He is a lawyer and a self-made one at that, but he is recognized throughout the city of Butte for his high order of ability and his conscientious dealings with his clients. His start in getting his education was particularly difficult and under similar circumstances many young men would have become discouraged and left the field, but the obstacles, instead of discouraging Mr. Gilchrist, spurred him onward, giving him a momentum and force which have resulted since the period of his first struggles in steady progress and success, and have brought him the esteem of both the judiciary and associate attorneys.

M. P. Gilchrist was born at Davenport, Iowa, on the third of May, 1862, and he is a son of Hugh and Elizabeth (Ray) Gilchrist, the former a native of Scotland and the latter a native of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, her parents having been of Scotch-Irish extraction. Hugh Gilchrist came to America as a young boy and settled in the city of Philadelphia, where was solemnized his marriage and whence he removed to the state of Iowa and later to Missouri about the year 1866. During the latter portion of his life he was a farmer of prominence and influence in Livingston county, Missouri, and he was summoned to the life eternal in November, 1892, at the age of 72 years. Mrs. Gilchrist, who survives her honored husband, is now living on the old homestead in Livingston county, Missouri; she has reached the venerable age of eighty-seven years.

M. P. Gilchrist passed his boyhood and youth on the old home farm, in the work and management of which he early became associated with his father. He attended the neighboring district schools as a boy and being of a studious nature was anxious to receive a good education. Accordingly, he saved what little money came his way and eventually was enabled to attend the Campbell Normal University, at Holton, Kansas. He taught school during the winter terms in his home county and when twenty-six years of age had completed the commercial and scientific courses in the Campbell Normal University. In 1888 he gave up teaching and for the ensuing three years was editor and owner of the Chillicothe Constitution, a daily paper, in the conduct of which he was eminently successful. He was county superintendent of schools in Livingston county from 1886 to 1889. In 1890 he gave up journalism in order to devote his attention to the life-insurance business, in which enterprise he was associated with the Mutual-Life Insurance Company of New York, representing that concern for a period of three years, during which time he traveled through all of the western states. He came to Montana in 1892 and first located in Helena, subsequently removing to Butte, where he took up the study of law. Mr. Gilchrist was admitted to the bar of Montana on the 5th of January, 1897. He initiated the active practice of his profession at Butte, where he has figured as counsel in many important litigations and where he is recognized as a lawyer of unusual skill and learning.

In 1901 he was honored by his fellow citizens with election to membership in the Montana legislature and he served with the utmost efficiency in that capacity until 1903. His offices are maintained at rooms No. 408 and 409, the Miners' Building, and he holds prestige as one of the leading lawyers in Montana. President of the Silver Bow County Bar Association and as the head of this organization he has worked for both progress and efficiency, endeavoring to broaden its influence and making it an instrument of public utility, as well as for the solution of strictly legal questions.

In politics Mr. Gilchrist is a stalwart supporter of the principles and policies of the Democratic party, in the local councils of which he is an active and zealous worker. In a fraternal way he is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and with the Silver Bow Club. His leisure time is devoted to the study of good literature and he is one of the best read men in Butte. Mr. Gilchrist is unmarried.

GIDEON E. BLACKBURN. Influential as one of Butte's leading citizens, conspicuous as her most skillful homeopathic physician, noted as the founder of Blackburn Hospital, popular in extensive social circles and distinguished as a state legislator, was the late Dr. Gideon E. Blackburn, who is remembered with deep respect and regretted with sincerity. A review of his distinguished ancestry, his military experience and his professional career is therefore of especial interest.

His ancestral record was a matter of especial pride to Dr. Blackburn. His paternal progenitors, the Blackburns, and those of the maternal line of the Hoxey name represented families founded in the colonial era in Virginia. Among the former he numbered a great-grandfather who was a soldier of distinction in the War of the Revolution, in which he served as an officer under General Washington, from whom he received letters indicating the close association and intimate friendship of the two. Dr. Blackburn had in his possession a number of these communications and it is needless to say that he regarded them as heirlooms of high value. His maternal great-grandfather was also a Continental soldier of the Revolutionary war, and records extant show that he served with special gallantry in the great struggle for independence. One of his grandfathers also was an officer of subordinate rank in the command of General Andrew Jackson in the Seminole Indian war and was on intimate terms with his commanding officer. The paternal grandfather of Dr. Blackburn was the Rev. Gideon Blackburn, who was a fine type of the old Virginian, a man of rare intellectual attainments and a distinguished clergyman of the Presbyterian church in Illinois. He it was who has endeared his name to posterity by the founding of Blackburn College, at Carlinville, Illinois.

Reverend Blackburn's son, Anderson M. Blackburn, married Miss Margaret Hoxey, thus mingling in his descendants the sterling traits of the latter Scotch family with the English characteristics of his own. On his farm near Jerseyville, Illinois, was born the son named Gideon, whose life has developed so much of worth and honor. His early education was that gathered from the public schools of the rural community which was then the Blackburn home. But his was the ability that goes hand in hand with ambition and he sought the superior advantages of Yale University when he had prepared himself for admission to that institution. But before he had quite completed his prescribed course the outbreak of the Civil war was imminent. Gideon Blackburn forthwith subordinated all other interests that he might offer his aid in defense of the Union and it was his to maintain thus the military prestige of the honored name he bore. Leaving the college he returned to Illinois, where he enlisted in Company E, Fourteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. He lived up to the full tension of the great struggle between the North and the South, and participated in many important engagements, his services having been rendered principally under the command of General Grant, with whose volunteers he took part in the battles of Shiloh, Fort Donelson and Corinth, besides other engagements, in two of which he was severely wounded. On one occasion, he was captured by a party of Confederate guerrillas and for a day was subjected to severe tortures. He was finally sentenced to death on the following morning, but in the night he contrived to effect his escape and succeeded in reaching the Union lines. At another time he was halted by thirty-five Confederate soldiers, two of whom he shot with his revolver, after which he severely injured another of the party by a swinging blow from his weapon. Then, by giving rein to his horse, he made good his escape, in the midst of a fusillade of bullets. While in the army he won five successive promotions, in recognition of gallantry and efficient service, finally receiving the brevet rank of lieutenant-colonel. He continued with his command until near the close of the war, when his health had become so seriously impaired that he was obliged to resign his commission and was accorded an honorable discharge. During his period of study before going to the front he had devoted considerable time to the study of medical science, and in addition to his field service he proved a valuable assistant in the performing of surgical operations and in caring for ill and wounded comrades.

Having recuperated his physical energies, Gideon Blackburn went to Pine Bluff, Arkansas, whence he later transferred his residence to Camden, in that state, engaging in the general merchandise business until 1870. In the meanwhile he had continued the study of medicine and in the year last mentioned he entered Pulte Medical College in Cincinnati, Ohio, one of the leading institutions of the Homeopathic school of practice. Here he was graduated with the class of 1871 and received his professional degree of Doctor of Medicine. He was valedictorian of his class and was always thereafter a popular member of the alumni association of his alma mater.

Dr. Blackburn then established himself at Shreveport, Louisiana, for the practice of his profession, later removing to Galveston, Texas, and subsequently to Evanston, Wyoming, eventually adopting Montana as his home state and locating permanently in the city of Butte. Here he has since maintained his home and built up a large and representative practice. Here he founded in 1892 the well-equipped hospital which bears his name and of which he was the executive head. Here too he identified himself with important capitalistic and civic interests and with representative social circles, as well as with broader affairs co-extensive with the state and of even greater extent.

He has been connected with various mining enterprises and other important investments. He was a member of the directorate of the Independent Telephone Company; was both a director and the treasurer of the Butte Extension Mining Company; was a director of the Globe Mines Exploration Company and held the same office in the Butte & Elliston Copper Mining Company.

He was furthermore a valued director of the Butte General Hospital. His affiliations with medical associations were naturally of the utmost importance to him in his connections with societies. The leading social organizations of Butte nevertheless claimed a part of his attention and he was therefore a prominent member of the Masonic order, of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and of the Silver Bow and University clubs.

These prominent and manifold interests, numerous and important as they were, did not crowd out of the doctor's life his interest in politics and public affairs of a practical nature. He gave loyal allegiance to the Democratic party and was ever alive to the legislative welfare of his adopted state. In November of 1910 he was elected to represent Silver Bow county in the state legislature. In this office his service was marked by broad-minded progressiveness and by an earnest desire to further the best interests of the commonwealth of Montana and its people. He was made chairman of the committee of appropriations and was also assigned to other important committees, in each of which his counsel and service proved valuable.

Dr. Blackburn was married in 1871 to Miss Cinderella E. Mahoney of Pine Bluff, and to their union were born four children, Daisy, Idaho, Charles and Flora. Domestic troubles resulted in a dissolution of this marriage in 1889 at Evanston, Wyoming. He was again married in 1893 at Butte, Montana, shortly after taking up his residence in that city, to Miss Hannah Aiton, formerly a resident of St. Peter, Minnesota. This marriage proved a very happy one and contributed much to the success of Dr. Blackburn's life in Montana. They established their home at Butte, Montana, and lived there continuously to the date of the doctor's death, and the widow still continues to reside there at the date of this writing.

It was not generally known among Dr. Blackburn's friends that he was in ill health. The shock of the news of his sudden death, on March 24, 1912, was therefore most keenly felt throughout the city of Butte. From the editorial comment of the Butte Miner we quote the estimate of his townsmen on the "long, honored and very useful career" of this "well-known physician, prominent citizen and active participant in state affairs," whose important capacities were therein reviewed just after his death. "Always genial, wide awake to all affairs of the day and of a disposition that made him many friends, the good doctor will be greatly missed by those who knew him. . . . In the twelfth legislative session of Montana, Dr. Blackburn worked hard, conscientiously and effectively. His years of residence in Butte made him personally known to many of his fellow townsmen. His demise takes from Butte's citizenship a most estimable man."

JOHN L. HURZELER. Butte, Montana, figures as one of the most progressive and prosperous divisions of the state, justly claiming a high order of citizenship and a spirit of enterprise which is certain to conserve consecutive development and marked advancement in the material upbuilding of this section of the Northwest. The city is and has been signally favored in the class of men who have contributed to its development along commercial and manufacturing lines and in the latter connection the subject of this review demands recognition, as he has been actively engaged in the manufacture of carriages here for fully a score of years.

John L. Hurzeler, vice president of the Butte Carriage Works, was born in Wayland, New York, on the 6th of May, 1861. He is a son of John and Elizabeth (Houri) Hurzeler, both of whom were born and reared in Switzerland, where was solemnized their marriage and whence they immigrated to America in about the year 1855. The father was a shoemaker by trade and for a time after his arrival in the United States he lived at Rochester, New York, later in Wayland, New York, then lived in the state of Wisconsin. During the Civil war he enlisted as a soldier in a Wisconsin company of Volunteer Infantry, serving with all gallantry and faithfulness for a period of nine months. During the latter years of his life he resided at Wayland, New York, where his death occurred in 1900, aged 65. His widow survived till 1902, died at Wayland, New York. Ten children were born to Mr. and Mrs. John Hurlzeler and of the number John L. was the sixth in order of birth and Charles, who is president of the Butte Carriage Works, was the third in line. Charles Hurlzeler was born at Rochester, New York, in July, 1856. John L. and his brother Charles received their rudimentary educational training in the public schools of Wayland, New York, but at the age of about twelve years were obliged to quit school in order to help support the large family.

John L. Hurlzeler initiated his active career as a farm hand when a mere youth and at the age of eighteen years he was earning fourteen dollars per month. About that time he entered upon an apprenticeship to learn the blacksmith's trade at Mendon Center, New York. He completed his apprenticeship at Hornell, that state, in 1883, and for the ensuing six years he was a journeyman blacksmith. In 1884 he located in the Black Hills, in South Dakota, starting in business for himself at Rapid City, where he remained for a period of eight years and where he met with fair success. He came to Butte in the fall of 1892 and here formed partnership with W. J. Christie, which firm of Christie & Hurlzeler, in general blacksmithing, existed eight years.

Mr. Hurlzeler disposed of his interest in firm of Christie & Hurlzeler, and went to Honeoye Falls, New York, and purchased the business of his late father-in-law, John Druschel, in wagon manufacturing business. He also acquired in the meantime an interest in the cattle business, with his brother Charles, in South Dakota. About 1892, he disposed of his eastern interests and returned to Butte, where he purchased an interest in the Butte Carriage Works,—which was incorporated in 1904, under laws of Montana, with Mr. J. L. Hurlzeler as treasurer. He has taken an important part in the management of the business ever since, at present being vice president.

The Butte Carriage Works is the largest carriage manufacturing business in the entire state and it employs a force of from twelve to twenty men. The plant is located at 112-14-16 East Galena street, Butte. In addition to his interest in the above company, Mr. Hurlzeler is a member of the board of directors of the Big Hole Commercial Company, and is vice president of the Wisdom Live Stock Company.

In politics John L. Hurlzeler is a stalwart Republican. He was the efficient incumbent of the office of alderman of the Sixth ward of Butte from 1908 to 1910 and is an active worker in the local councils of his party. He is affiliated with the various departments of Masonry at Butte, belonging to the Scottish Rite and also to the Shrine. He is likewise a valued and appreciative member of the local lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Mr. Hurlzeler had a capital of thirty-five dollars when he came to Butte and as he received no financial backing from anyone his success as a business man and citizen is most gratifying to contemplate. He is possessed of fine ambition and sterling integrity of character and all his business dealings have been characterized by fair and honorable methods.

In March, 1895, at Honeoye Falls, New York, Mr. Hurlzeler wedded Miss Elizabeth Druschel, a native of the Empire state, daughter of John and Margaret. Mr. and Mrs. Hurlzeler have one child, Gladys Lillian, born September 22, 1898, and at the present time a pupil in the public schools at Butte. The Hurlzeler home is maintained at 817 West Galena street.

FRANK B. TOLHURST. One cannot be a master of the art of taxidermy unless he has the artistic faculty in a high degree, and before the taxidermist can stuff or mount well, he requires some training in anatomy and modeling, and a knowledge of the external forms of animals, as well as some acquaintance with their habits. That birds, mammals and other animals can be made beautiful, instructive, and even of real value to science in the mounted state is clearly seen in the work of the best taxidermists, and this is true as expressed in the art of Frank B. Tolhurst, dean of the taxidermists of Montana, a man whose nature, inclination, experience and training have eminently fitted him for his vocation. Mr. Tolhurst was born at Gravesend, County Kent, England, twenty-two miles from the city of London, on the Thames river, March 22, 1856, and is a son of Spencer and Elizabeth (King) Tolhurst. His father, who was born at Maidstone, County Kent, in 1824, was for thirteen years a customs officer, until he was disabled during the performance of his duty, and then received a pension until his death in 1868. Mrs. Tolhurst, born in London in 1828, died in 1886, and to them a large family was born, of whom four children survive: Richard, living in Nebraska; Frank B.; Corunna, the wife of M. Reed, living in New York City; and Thomas K., of Sweet Grass county, Montana.

Frank B. Tolhurst received his education in the common schools of England, and as a lad of sixteen years decided to try his fortunes in America. He accordingly boarded the ship Helvetia, which made New York harbor April 25, 1872, after a stormy passage of twenty-one days, during which it encountered numerous icebergs, and subsequently made his way to Newark, New Jersey, where he remained one year. He then went to Sandwich, LaSalle county, Illinois, and for four years spent his winters as a farm hand and during the winter months prosecuted his studies in the district schools. Leaving Sandwich, he journeyed by rail to Sidney, Nebraska, where he took the stage to Deadwood, Dakota, and there was engaged in prospecting and mining up to 1882. The party of which he was a member then pushed on overland to Bozeman, Montana, and later located in Clark City (now Livingston). During the trip overland from Sidney, Nebraska, to Deadwood in February, 1877, they reached the Red Cloud Indian reservation, but during the night word was received that Chief Spotted Horse had been killed and they were advised to proceed at once, which they did by leaving the agency at one o'clock at night in a bad blizzard. From 1882 to 1892 Mr. Tolhurst was engaged in piloting pack trains through the National Park and surrounding country, and conducting hunting parties from England, Ireland and Germany, including Lord Littleton and other noted personages. In the latter year he came to Livingston and established himself in business as a taxidermist, and now has a place of business at No. 305 West Park street, where may be found many interesting examples of his art and various relics and trophies of the chase. He is the oldest man in his line of business in the state and ranks among the most skilled devotees of the taxidermist's science. Fraternally, he is connected with Livingston Lodge No. 32, A. F. & A. M., and was the thirty-sixth man made a member of Livingston Lodge No. 246, B. P. O. E. In political matters he is a Republican, but he has never cared to enter public life.

Among his fellow citizens Mr. Tolhurst is known as a man who is ready at all times to support movements for the benefit of his adopted city, and his business reputation is without stain or blemish. On October 10, 1889, he was married to Maud B. Boright, who was born in Canada, daughter of Nelson and Azubah Boright, natives of the dominion, the former of whom is deceased. Mr. Boright was a prominent merchant and farmer and held numerous public offices. Mr. and Mrs. Tolhurst have one daughter, Bessie, who is attending Washington University at Seattle.

JAMES E. LANE. One of the liveliest of Montana's live citizens is Mr. James Lane, whose career is one of achievement noteworthy even in this country where attainment is the rule instead of the exception. He is the only son of James E. Lane, who was born in Oshkosh, Wisconsin, and married in Illinois to Nancy J. Baker, a Kentuckian. The elder Lane was a farmer, but he died before his son was two years of age, so the boy had to assume responsibilities at an age when the sons of the well-to-do are care-free children. Whitehall, Illinois, was the place of his birth and September 8, 1871, the date. At the age of eleven James Lane left Whitehall with his mother and for three years they resided in Virden, Illinois, where James attended school, entering the high school, but not finishing his course. At the close of his first year in Virden he began to work in the harvest field and received fifty cents a day as wages. This money he expended for clothing and the experience he gained as a farm worker stood him in good stead when in the year of 1885 he went alone to Edgar, Nebraska, where he first obtained employment at the same sort of labor. From farming he branched out into carpenter work and from that into contracting.

Mr. Lane did not come to Montana until 1892. He had come to the national park of the Yellowstone and worked as a carpenter there during the summer. He made the trip from Newcastle, Wyoming, to Livingston, Montana, overland with a mule team. His first work in this state was with the construction department of the Northern Pacific Railway and he remained with this corporation until 1896 when he went to Nelson, British Columbia. After a year there, Mr. Lane came back to Montana and resumed his work with the Northern Pacific. During his stay in Canada he had been following the trade of a millwright, but he preferred the railroad work and his services in this great branch of industry received prompt recognition. When he left the Northern Pacific it was to become the superintendent of bridges and buildings for the Montana Railroad. This was in 1897, and before he left the railroad work two years later, he was made assistant superintendent of the system.

The Midland Coal & Lumber Company was organized in 1899 under the direction of Mr. Lane. Its headquarters were at Harlowtown and here for three years the concern was successfully operated. In 1902 Mr. Lane sold out his holdings in Harlowtown and moved to the adjacent city of Lewistown, which has since been his home and the headquarters of his many commercial enterprises. The first of these to be put into operation was the Montana Lumber Company. This concern began with one yard, but in its decade of existence the one has multiplied to eighteen, situated in different towns of the state and all under the general supervision of Mr. Lane at Lewistown. It is largely due to his wise business policy that this great extension has been feasible. Since the company began its operations it has from time to time developed other projects, the one of which is the Montana Elevator Company.

When Mr. Lane arrived in Montana his capital was nothing, and his other assets footed up to the same figure. Now, in a score of years, he is director of the Empire Bank & Trust Company, director of the Bank of Fergus County, president of the Lewistown Automobile Company, and treasurer and general manager of the Lewistown Brick Company. Nor do these complete the list of his enterprises, for he holds stock in several large ranch properties. Comment upon the initiative and acumen which has brought about this commercial ascendancy is superfluous. Adjectives seem inadequate.

Mrs. Lane is a native of La Grande, Oregon, in which city she entered upon this changing scene as Miss Rose Hensley. Her marriage to Mr. Lane took place at Helena in 1899 on May 17. There are two daughters in the Lane home, Edith, born in Bozeman, and Newell, born in Helena. Both are attending school in Boston. Mrs. Lane is an active member of the Presbyterian church which has in her husband one of its most generous supporters.

Mr. Lane's favorite amusements are theatricals, music and reading. He believes in shutting business up in the office in the evening and enjoying life at home. The Masonic lodge is the only fraternal body of which he is a member, and in that he has taken all degrees from the blue lodge to the Shrine. In the commercial organizations he is one of the most energetic workers and is director in the Lewistown commercial club in addition to being president of the Judith club. Politics is an interest with Mr. Lane rather than an activity, though he is reckoned one of the strong men in the Democratic party. His enthusiasm for Montana is of the superlative degree, and while that is in no sense a distinguishing mark of Mr. Lane, by which he might be picked out from several thousand other successful residents of the state, it is not one who he would wish to be omitted from his biography. Indeed, he goes so far as to say that he would rather be a poor man in Montana than a millionaire any place else, from which one may deduce his sentiments on being affluent in the land of heart's desire.

LEE DENNIS. Cascade county's recorder is a typical western man, which means that either he was born in the east, and was of the energetic class which goes west, or that he is the son of one of that class. Mr. Dennis belongs to the latter company. His birthplace was Sioux Falls, South Dakota, a town which his father, True Dennis helped to plot. The father was from the farthest "down east" state of the Union, being a native of Augusta, Maine. Here he was born in 1829, and when he grew to young manhood, he made the journey across the plains, and in 1861 settled in Sioux Falls. He prospered in the new home, and was accounted a wealthy man until the panic of 1893, which fell with such particular disaster upon the western portion of the country. In 1900, he came to Fergus county, and there engaged in the real estate business. He passed away in April, 1911, leaving five sons and a widow to survive him. One son, Grant Logan Dennis had died as a young man; the others live either in Fergus county or in Great Falls. Arthur, Lincoln and George Dennis are engaged in ranching in Fergus, and Curtis is a deputy sheriff in Great Falls. The mother is living in Fergus county, and is sixty-five years of age. She was born in Sweden and came to this country at the age of three. Her father, John Sells, was a Baptist minister, who located first at Moline, Illinois. He was one of the prominent men of his denomination in his lifetime, and was a preacher of great power and eloquence. The marriage of his daughter Anna to True Dennis occurred at Sioux City, Iowa in 1869.

Lee Dennis was born on November 2, 1874, the second of the six sons. From the public schools of Sioux Falls he entered business college in the same city, and for a time after completing his studies worked in his native town. In 1892, he came to Great Falls, but did not remain there, as he was drawn to the settlement at Sand Coulee, then the center of great mining activity. Mr. Dennis went into this pursuit and in the three years of his stay in Sand Coulee, there was no branch of it at which he did not work. In 1895, he went to Belt but subsequently returned to Sand Coulee, and resumed his former occupation. A year or so later, the Knights of Pythias elected him grand chancellor, and in this capacity he traveled over the entire state. In 1906, Mr. Dennis came to Great Falls, and worked as deputy county assessor, holding this position until the completion of the term. He was next employed as special deputy treasurer of the county, and then served two and a half years as deputy county auditor. In 1908, he was elected to the office of auditor, and two years later, he was selected to fill the position of clerk and recorder. He entered upon his service on January 1, 1911, and is now on the second year of his term. There are five deputies under him, and the post is a most important one, and most ably filled by the present incumbent, who was elevated to the position by the Republican party.

In the lodge of the Odd Fellows, Mr. Dennis has taken all degrees, and was within two chairs of the grand master of the state. In the Knights of Pythias, he is a past grand chancellor, having held that position in 1905. For five years he has been the grand keeper of seals. He is also a member of the Elks lodge of Great Falls, and is affiliated with the D. O. K. K. and with the Pythian Sisters.

Mrs. Dennis was before her marriage, Miss Nellie Syme. Her parents, David and Ellen Syme, live in Sand Coulee, where they have long been well known. The marriage of Miss Syme and Mr. Dennis was solemnized at Great Falls, on November 28, 1896. A daughter and two sons have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Dennis. Helen A. Dennis is now a pupil in the eighth grade, and is studying music. Both boys, Lee and Grant are also in school. The former was ten years old on November 10, 1910, and the latter is something over two years younger. All the children were born at Sand Coulee. They were christened in the Presbyterian church, of which their parents are members.

Although no longer actually engaged in mining, Mr. Dennis is still interested in it, both financially and intellectually. He is a director of the Great Falls and Judith Mining Company, and has other interests in less known properties. His acquaintance is large, not only throughout the county, but throughout the state. His repeated election to office testifies to his popularity in his county, and his constituents are persuaded that he is only at the beginning of his political career.

FREDERICK SUNDERMEIER. Among those citizens of German nationality who have found business opportunity in Montana and have improved it, is Frederick Sundermeier, owner and proprietor of the Troy laundry in Belt, who also has accumulated other valuable property holdings in that city. He began life in a business way as a retail grocer in Waverly, Bremer county, Iowa, where he continued very successfully ten years. Ambitious to avail himself of the greater opportunities for which the far West was famed, in 1892 came to Montana, locating at Great Falls in May of that year. He immediately entered the wholesale produce and commission business there but continued in it only one year and then removed to Sand Coulee to establish a laundry, the first in the town. Two years later he removed to Belt where he opened the Troy laundry, there being two other laundries there at that time. After a time, however, his competitors gave up the struggle and left Mr. Sundermeier as the only representative of that business in Belt. He has now been in the business eighteen years, is well established and has been successful. It is a hand laundry and is conducted in a building at the northeast corner of Main street which was erected by Mr. Sundermeier expressly for that purpose. Steady, persistent effort counts, whatever the line of endeavor. By his enterprise and stability of purpose, Mr. Sundermeier has not only developed a profitable business but has also become the owner of considerable real estate in Belt and is recognized as a business man of worth and ability.

Mr. Sundermeier was born in Germany, February 19, 1855, and immigrated to America in 1865 with his parents, Henry and Wilhelmina (Clausing) Sundermeier, who settled in Bremer county, Iowa. There the father spent the remainder of his days as a farmer, passing to life eternal in 1890 when seventy-one years of age. The mother also was a native of the Fatherland and died in 1898 at the age of sixty-eight. Frederick was the first born of their three children who grew to maturity. His education begun in Germany was continued in the public schools of Bremer county, Iowa for two years. His life was spent on the farm until twenty-six years of age, when he began his business career at Waverly as previously mentioned.

On May 19, 1887 at Waverly, Iowa, he was united in marriage to Amelia Koehler, a daughter of Frederick Koehler, a native of Germany. Mr. and Mrs. Sundermeier have one son, Edward H., born in Waverly on March 20, 1890. In politics Mr. Sundermeier is an Independent, supporting the men and measures most nearly meeting his approval. In fraternal membership he affiliates with the Knights of Pythias, and in church faith and membership he is a Lutheran.

EDWIN COLLINS is a member of the Collins Plumbing and Heating Company, the best known establishment of its kind in Great Falls, Montana. Mr. Collins is the junior partner having come to Montana from Canada in 1892. He was born in Ontario, Canada, on the ninth day of March, 1871. His father, William Collins is still a resident of Kincardine, Ontario, being a retired farmer of some property. The mother, Mary Ann Jewis Collins, is a Canadian by birth. Although the mother of eleven children she is spending her declining years in much comfort on the home place near Kincardine, Ontario. Edward, the fourth of these eleven children attended the excellent rural schools of Ontario until his thirteenth year when it was his turn to become a real worker on the farm of his father that the younger brothers and sisters might continue in school. Until his majority was reached, in 1892, he worked without wages, as was the English custom, on the home farm. In his twenty-first year he left Canada to join his older brother, John, in Great Falls, Montana. John Collins had established a plumbing establishment in this city and here Edwin learned his trade, serving four years as apprentice and two years as journeyman before his brother considered him competent to become a member of the firm of the Collins Plumbing and Heating Company.

Young Mr. Collins has been very successful financially. Aside from the stock in the plumbing corporation he owns ranch lands in Cascade County. Four years after coming to Great Falls he found "the one woman" in the person of Miss Anna Coats whose father, Mr. William Coats is one of the pioneer settlers of whom Montana is justly so proud. Mr. Coats is a Canadian by birth but the daughter is proud of being a Montanian born and bred. Mr. and Mrs. Collins were married on the twenty-second day of April, 1896. Their residence is located at 615 Sixth street, in one of the most pleasant residence districts of the city.

Mr. Collins is an active worker in the ranks of the Republican party. Although he has no desire to become an office holder himself he enjoys the sport of the game and is interested to see triumph the principles that have carried the country through many a crisis.

In lodge circles, he is well known, being a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In this latter organization, he has held all of the chairs. It is to it that he has devoted most of his time and energy.

The Collins Plumbing and Heating Company is located in a large building in the business portion of Great Falls, the number being 306 First avenue, South.

Edwin Collins, although a comparative newcomer in the city of his choice and still little more than a youth in years, is among the best known of the younger business men of Great Falls.

HIRAM H. BLACK was born in Green county, northern Pennsylvania, on the tenth of October, 1860. He is the son of Henry Black and Sarah McCollough Black, both natives of Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Black came west in 1865 and settled in Mt. Pleasant, Henry county, Iowa. At this time their son Hiram was a child of five. He grew to manhood in Iowa remembering little of the eastern home. His boyhood school days were spent in the district schools of southeastern Iowa where he lived until the death of his mother in 1881, farming in the summer and working on the railroad in the winter. There were eight children in the family of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Black of whom Hiram was next to the youngest. After reaching his majority he left Iowa for Missouri remaining but a few years. In 1892, he pushed on to Montana, settling in Montana Falls where for seven years he filled various positions on the railroads and in the smelters meeting with no particular success. In the autumn of 1899 he established the firm of H. H. Black & Son, Wholesale Feed and Fuel Business. He started in a small way as his limited means at the time necessitated but now conducts a large and flourishing business. The best test of its growth and prosperity is shown by the books of the firm which credited in 1912 an increase of three hundred per cent profit over the income from the first year's business.

Shortly after the death of his mother in Chariton, Iowa, Mr. Black was united in marriage to Miss Luella Scott, the daughter of Simon Scott a prosperous Iowa farmer. They were married on the fourteenth day of August, 1881, Miss Scott having celebrated her eighteenth birthday the month previous. Although young in years she was hardy of spirit and more than willing to go forth at her husband's side in search of their joint fortune. The two older of their three children, however, were born in their mother's home village of Russell, Lucas county, Iowa. Their first born son, Lyle P. Black, is now a resident of Great Falls and an employee of the street railway company of that city. He seems to have inherited his father's fondness for and understanding of complicated machinery. Leo Black, the younger brother born in Iowa on the first day of June, 1886, is associated with his father in the feed and fuel business as the firm name indicates. He was married in Forest City, Missouri, on the twenty-sixth day of November, 1908, to Lulu Wilson, a native daughter of the state. Mrs. Lyle Black was Barbara Cameron of Great Falls who belongs to one of the oldest families of the state, her father being a pioneer miner. Miss Agnes Black, the only daughter of the household, was born in Great Falls on June 8, 1889. She is now one of the attractive young women of Montana of whom so much is said. The family reside at 1315 Sixth avenue, north.

Mr. Black has never taken any active interest in politics nor in any way sought office. He votes the Progressive Republican ticket. In lodge circles he belongs only to the Knights of Pythias.

Perhaps the perseverance and keen business judgment that has made it possible for him to attain success without means or so-called learning, comes from his Scotch-Irish ancestry. His father's people were canny Scots with their share of the Celtic caution, while the ancestors on the maternal side came to America from Ireland, in an early day bringing with them their optimism and fearless initiative.

Be that as it may, Mr. Black has become one of the well-known merchants of Great Falls and is deserving of the repute in which he is held by his fellow-men of the Treasure state.

WILLIAM MOSER. In the list of men to whom the state of Montana has looked for the preservation of law and order ever since the wild, free days of frontier life, are to be found representatives of nearly every other state in the Union, courageous spirits who have shouldered the responsibilities inseparable from their dangerous offices and fearlessly discharged their arduous duties. The day of the professional "bad man" has passed, and it is no longer necessary that such organizations as the famous Vigilantes should exist, but in every rapidly growing community, where large fortunes are being accumulated, more or less of the lawless spirit will still be found, and Montana has been singularly fortunate in that it possesses so many men of dauntless courage to keep this element under control. In this connection no history of Montana would be complete without a record of the career of William Moser, the efficient and popular sheriff of Sanders county, and a man whose present position has been gained through the exercise of his own grit and persistence. Mr. Moser is a native of Wisconsin, having been born at Alma, July 29, 1873, a son of John and Pauline (Moeckle) Moser. The former, a native of Switzerland, came to the United States as a boy, settling in Wisconsin, where he was engaged in the implement business during the remainder of his life, with the exception of five years spent in Minnesota. His death occurred in 1897, when he was about fifty-one years of age, while his widow survives and makes her home in Wisconsin. Five children were born to them, William being the second child and oldest son, and the only member of the family in Montana.

The early education of William Moser was secured in the public schools of Crookston, Minnesota, and he subsequently attended Ashland (Wis.) high school. When he was twelve years of age he earned his first money as a newsboy in Ashland, and since that time has been self supporting. His first salaried position was in the office of the Ashland Daily News, where he learned the printer's trade, but was compelled to go to Colorado on account of the failure of his health and for two years was engaged in printing and ranching. In 1892 he came to Montana, settling first in Plains, where for four years he was an employee of the McGowan Commercial Company, and then resigned his position to establish a newspaper at that point. After one year he gave up the newspaper business and re-entered the mercantile line, with which he was connected until being appointed constable. He subsequently became stock inspector, city marshal, and deputy sheriff under-sheriff, and while holding the latter position the sheriff died and he was appointed to the office, which he has since filled to the entire satisfaction of the community being re-elected in November, 1912. During his term of office he has had many trying and thrilling experiences, and won a wide reputation for his excellent work in connection with trouble with the Flathead Indians. In his political views Mr. Moser is a staunch Democrat, and is known as one of his party's strong and influential workers in this part of the state. He fraternizes with the Elks, is fond of hunting, fishing and good horses, and as a former ball player is an enthusiast in regard to the national game. Western Montana finds in him a loyal supporter, and he misses no opportunity to praise its soil, climate and resources, it being his declaration and belief that the full development of the state will make it the richest and best in the Union.

Sheriff Moser is a married man and his three bright and interesting children, whom he has named after his favorite jewels, Ruby, Pearl and Opal, are attending school.

PROF. E. C. REITZ. "He is a fighter and does things!" These words have almost passed into a proverb in their frequent application to Prof. E. C. Reitz of Missoula, the interesting subject of this brief review. And they have sprung, in their reference to him, out of his well-known habit of acting on conviction in every case, and putting all his forces at work to accomplish the end he aims at. He is not whimsical or fanatical, but a man with a high and stern sense of duty, guided by integrity and the most earnest desire to do all he can for the benefit of his fellow men of every class and condition; and as his ideals are lofty, and his springs of action intense, he leaves no stone unturned in his efforts to carry out his views. Men have reviled him and called him unsavory names, but no opposition, and especially no abuse, has ever deterred him from his purposes, and that is one thing even his bitterest opponents always give him credit for. They know he is honest and consistent in his efforts to make the community around him as clean and pure as possible, and they esteem him for the inflexible determination with which he continues his work in this behalf, even though he sometimes runs against a pet desire of their own.

Professor Reitz was born in Dixon, Lee county, Illinois, on August 3, 1864, and is a son of Conrad and Elizabeth (Keller) Reitz, natives of Pennsylvania, early emigrants to Illinois and pioneers in Iowa. They are now living at Maxwell, Story county, in that state, retired from active pursuits, the former aged seventy-one and the latter seventy-two years of age. On November 29, 1911, they celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding, and the celebration was a "golden wedding" in fact for their hosts of friends who had the pleasure of attending it.

Conrad Reitz, the professor's father, the place of whose nativity is Somerset county, Pennsylvania, has been, in many respects, a remarkable man. He has tried his hand in various lines of productive enterprise and succeeded well in them all. For many years he was a mechanic and wrought laboriously and faithfully at his trade. Then he turned his attention to farming, and in this he was a leader in his locality and one of the most prosperous men engaged in the industry there. After that he became a merchant, and his triumphs in merchandising were no less signal and substantial than those he won in other departments of work. He moved to Illinois when he was a young man, and in 1870, when the pioneer days were still lingering in some parts of Iowa, he located in Boone county in that state, where frontier conditions still largely obtained. His high character, great energy and foresight and other masterful natural attributes made him successful in all his undertakings in spite of the fact that he had but a limited education from the schools.

Professor Reitz was educated in the public schools of Iowa and at Keokuk College in that state. He afterward pursued a course of special training for business and in penmanship at the Gem City Commercial College in Quincy, Illinois, from which he was graduated in 1890. While attending this school he was also actively engaged in managing his father's farm. It is easy to conclude that his duties in his dual engagements at this time were burdensome, but that was a matter of no special consequence to him, as, even at his age at that time, he was a person of prodigious energy, with capacity for carrying on several lines of work at once.

In 1891 the professor formed a partnership with one of his schoolmates, and together they taught penmanship in Illinois and Iowa for several months. In September of the same year he entered Zanerian Art College in Columbus, Ohio, the only pen-art school in the world, and at the same time began special studies in English in the Thompson English Training School in Columbus. The next year he became a teacher in that school and also gave instructions in the army barracks in the city. This year, 1892, he completed his course in the Zanerian Art College and received his diploma from it as a graduate in all its departments.

Professor Reitz then came to Montana and located in Anaconda. He conducted a private school there for a few months, during which he visited Missoula to look over the field with a view to finding a suitable place for a permanent residence and the establishment of his business. In 1893 he returned to Boone, Iowa, and was married to Miss Laura B. Thompson, who was a school teacher in that city, having gone there from her native state, Indiana. He brought his bride to Anaconda, and continued teaching his private school there until June, the end of the term, when he moved to Missoula.

Some weeks after his arrival in this city to remain, he opened a private school here with no capital but ability, both natural and acquired, energy that stopped at no obstacle, and honesty of purpose that has never wavered in the slightest degree. In October, 1903, he started the Garden City Commercial College, and conducted it on the third floor of the First National Bank building until sometime in 1904, when he moved it into the building it now occupies, which he had erected for the purpose. The building is an imposing and attractive one, a credit to Missoula in its architectural features, and as completely equipped as a commercial college as any in the country, if it does not surpass them all in this respect. Here is a manifestation of progress from a humble start to a splendid and far-famed institution, and its achievement is altogether due to the arduous and self-denying labor of Professor Reitz and his highly accomplished wife. She has been the teacher of the shorthand department in the school since they started life together, and deserves fully one-half of the credit for their success in their useful undertaking. They have two children, their son Zaner Walter, now aged eighteen years, and their daughter Edith Alpha, aged twelve at the time of this writing (1912).

Professor Reitz has been an active and helpful factor in the progress and development of the city and county of Missoula. He has stood for a clean town, believing that he was in some measure responsible for the moral as well as the educational welfare of his pupils. Missoula, like most other western cities, has at times been wide open, and many and bitter have been the contests over this feature of its life. Professor Reitz has always clamored for the strict enforcement of the law, and has fought for it through peace and through turbulence, continuing his efforts in the face of the most violent opposition, and when failure seemed inevitable. For he is one of the men who never give up, and only unlimbers his full battery at such critical times as would drive weaker men from the field, and he has done much to make the city orderly and law-abiding.

He is a fighter and does things. When the bridge from the north to the south side of the river was swept away, on the 7th day of June, 1908, and the people were obliged to go three miles around to get across, the city had no money to build even a temporary structure. The city council could do nothing, as it had no funds. He took the matter up, and in a few hours raised $1,100 for the erection of a new bridge, which he swelled to $6,000 within the next few weeks. He then received bids, awarded the contract for the building of the bridge, gave bonds as guarantees of good faith and supervised the work of construction. The bridge was completed and opened for traffic and turned over to the city council free from debt. More than to any other one man is Missoula indebted to him for speedy relief from a great inconvenience at the time, and for a permanent improvement of great value in this matter.

Professor Reitz yielded to the importunities of his friends sometime ago and started an enterprise in the coal trade. The Garden City Commercial College Coal Company is the result, and from it the people are always sure to get full weight, the exact quality promised and prompt deliveries at the most reasonable cost to them. Professor Reitz believes firmly that honesty in business will be as successful, not only in the long run, but all the time, as any other course in mercantile dealings, and he conducts the affairs of this coal company on that basis.

He applies the same rule to every thing connected with his school, and parents have always felt that their children were in safe hands when under his control. For they know him to be a man of the strictest integrity and uprightness in every relation of life, and zealous in inculcating his principles in all who receive his tuition. Missoula has no better or more useful citizen, and none whom the people of every grade and class hold in higher or more deserved esteem. Mr. and Mrs. Reitz are ultra religious and for many years have been members of the Brethren church, always doing all in their power to further the cause of Christianity.

JOHN G. JACKSON was but a youth of eighteen years when in 1892 he accompanied relatives from his native England to America and settled with them in Montana, arriving in this state on July 10th of that year. All of this world's goods he possessed at that time was the suit of clothes he wore, but he had a large capital in the way of health and pluck. Twenty years have passed since then and the whole of that period has been spent in Montana. Today he is the proprietor of the Teton Steam Laundry at Choteau and owns 80 acres of good land near the town. Mr. Jackson started life absolutely at the bottom of the ladder and the rungs by which he has climbed to a competence have been work, self-confidence, energy, but principally work.

Born in England on October 23, 1874, to Joseph and Anna (Borrow) Jackson, he is the eldest of their ten children, whose names and dates of birth are as follows: John G. of this review; Margaret Ann, born March 13, 1876; Joseph, born March 13, 1877; William, born February 6, 1880; Elizabeth Sarah, born January 18, 1882; Robert, born March 16, 1884; Stephen, born October 28, 1886; Hannah Mary, born June 10, 1889; Thomas, born October 3, 1891; and Alice Annie, born February 10, 1894. John G. Jackson is the only member of this family that has come to America. Joseph Jackson, the father, who is a machinist, was born in England about 1842 and is still actively following his trade. England was also the mother's nativity and she too is still living.

After attending the schools of his native shire to the age of about fourteen, Mr. Jackson began to learn the machinist's trade but had only followed it a year when he availed himself of the opportunity to come to America with relatives. He began to earn his way by his own exertions by accepting employment on the farm of his uncle, John Borrow, who settled ten miles south of Choteau and who there also engaged in stock-raising. After three and a half years spent on the ranch and in other duties as a farm hand, he took up a homestead for himself and followed farming long enough to prove up on his claim. Selling his property, he purchased a residence in Choteau and for the following seven years was engaged in stationary engineering. His training in England, though of a short period, had been thorough, and without difficulty he passed the Montana examination to practice engineering, receiving his license on March 31, 1905. Four years later, or on March 15, 1909, he purchased the Teton Steam Laundry, which was the first steam laundry in that county and was established by C. P. Crane about 1900. Since Mr. Jackson has had charge of it the business has more than doubled and withal it has proved a profitable venture. In addition to this he also owns a farm of 80 acres lying near Choteau.

On January 1, 1897, at Valparaiso, Nebraska, were pronounced the solemn marriage rites that united him to Miss Maria Jane Petch, a daughter of John William Petch. Mr. and Mrs. Jackson have three children: Lawrence P., born May 9, 1898; George Vincent, born December 25, 1902; and Margareth Mary, born August 11, 1904.

In politics Mr. Jackson is a Republican, and fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World at Choteau. He and his family are members of the Episcopal church.

CHARLES A. McCARTER. In the town Galata, that is now about five years old and is one of the flourishing trading centers of northwestern Montana, Charles A. McCarter was the first inhabitant to erect a building, and at different times he has owned the most important business enterprises of the town. In the future history of this region he will be written of as one of the prominent pioneers, and his work and influence have been very important factors in the development of this locality.

Mr. McCarter was born at Diamond Dale, Michigan, January 29, 1877, and during his boyhood attended the public schools. His school days ending when he was fifteen, he came out to Montana in 1892, and became connected with the cattle business which was then the principal industry of the northern part of the state. His headquarters were at Augusta, and three years later he moved to Choteau, where he acquired large interests in cattle and lands. It was in 1907 that he moved to the townsite of Galata and erected the building in which was opened the C. A. McCarter store. There were only three houses in Galata at the time, and his store was a small affair and its trade was drawn mostly from the surrounding stock and farming country. He has since built up his business into the largest concern of the kind in this vicinity, and his other interests here include a livery barn and extensive land holdings in this section. Mrs. C. A. McCarter has the postoffice, having been appointed postmistress in 1907, and has just been reappointed.

Mr. McCarter's parents were James and Margaret (Kirkendall) McCarter. The father, who died in Michigan in 1910 at the age of seventy-three, was a native of Scotland, coming to America when a young man, and was a continuous resident of Diamond Dale, Michigan, for forty-five years. He was a successful contractor and builder, and a prominent and respected citizen of his home locality. The mother, who was born in Charlesworth, Michigan, is still living in Diamond Dale, at the age of sixty-seven. Charles A. was the third in their family of six children, the others being: John, who is a resident of Montana; William, who is still in Diamond Dale; Mary, resides in Diamond Dale; and Cora and Cynthia, live in California.

At Havre, Montana, on February 15, 1906, Mr. McCarter was married to Miss Minnie Olsen. Four children have been born into their home. James was the first child born in the town of Galata. He was born in December, 1907, and died the following year. Jennie was born in Galata, May 27, 1909, Charles was born on April 25, 1911; and William J., was born October 15, 1912.

In politics Mr. McCarter is Republican. He affiliates with the Modern Woodmen of America, and his wife is a member of the Lutheran church. He is one of the representative men and vigorous, public-spirited citizens of this new country of northwestern Montana, in whose modern development he has had an important share.

JOHN LYNES, now the owner and manager of a large and profitable plumbing establishment in Great Falls, Montana, has been absolutely self supporting since he was a child of ten years.* His father, Samuel Lynes, came to America from England, his native land, during the fifties. He was a carpenter by trade, but after moving to Milwaukee, Wisconsin, he took up horticulture and at the time of his death was running a florist shop. His wife, Lizzie (Egan) Lynes, of English birth like her husband, lived only a few years after the birth of her son, John Lynes, of this review.

The boy attended school in a somewhat desultory fashion until his tenth year, selling papers on the streets during the morning and evening hours. He found no pleasure in the shell of a home made desolate by the death of his mother; and in the spring of 1870 he ran away, and in some manner managed to earn enough to sustain life. On August 24, 1874, when he was fourteen years old, he secured a position with John C. Stevens, a Milwaukee plumber, and here he remained for six years, first as an apprentice and later as a paid assistant. It was during these years that he learned in a most thorough manner, the trade which has since spelled success for him. In 1880 he left Milwaukee, the city of his birth, and went to St. Paul, Minnesota, where he followed his trade for eight years, earning a more than comfortable living. It was in St. Paul that he met and married on November 19, 1884, Julia McCarrick, the daughter of Thomas McCarrick of that city. She was born on the 25th of November, 1864. Four years after their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Lynes pushed on westward, locating first at Helena, Montana, but eight months later went to Butte, where they made their home for a number of years. Missoula at about that time began to show great promise for the future, and Mr. Lynes moved to this city, leaving it in 1889 for Great Falls, their present home. For seventeen years after settling in Great Falls, Mr. Lynes was an employee of the Collins Heating & Plumbing Company, and was a most valuable assistant to this firm. On September 1, 1909, he severed his connections with that firm to establish a business in his own right at No. 309 Second avenue, South. Here Mr. Lynes has been most prosperous, and handles the lion's share of the plumbing and pipe fitting business of Great Falls. He owns, in addition to his rapidly increasing business, the residence property where they make their home, at No. 710 Fifth avenue, South.

In Great Falls, on the thirteenth of May, 1898, a son and heir was born to Mr. and Mrs. Lynes,—Francis E. Lynes, now (1912) a lad of about thirteen years, who is about ready to enter the high school of the city. He will receive every possible educational advantage, for his father knows only too well the handicap of a limited school training.

Mr. Lynes is one of the highly esteemed citizens of Great Falls, where he is appreciated at his full worth. He is a Republican as to national politics, but he does not recognize the wisdom of injecting partisanship into city government. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which he has taken all the degrees, and is also a member of the Woodmen of the World. Mr. Lynes is a devout member of the Roman Catholic church.

HON. WILLIAM R. C. STEWART. Prominent among Montana's judiciary stands the name of Hon. William R. C. Stewart, of Bozeman. In 1902 he was appointed judge of the district court of the ninth judicial district, and today, after more than a decade spent in his high office, retains in an eminent degree the confidence and esteem of all classes and holds a foremost position among the distinguished members of the Montana bench. Judge Stewart has become equally well known in financial circles, and his activities in promoting the cause of education in Gallatin county place him among those who have rendered valuable service to his community. He was born March 21, 1866, in Monroe county, Ohio, and is a son of John Wilson and Marie A. (Carle) Stewart.

John Wilson Stewart was born in Virginia (now West Virginia) in April, 1833, and until some years prior to the breaking out of the Civil war resided on his father's farm in his native state. Removing at that time to a town near Springfield, Illinois, he engaged in farming. On the breaking out of the Civil war he enlisted in a West Virginia infantry regiment, and served with distinction in the War of the Rebellion, participating in the capture of General Morgan. When he had completed his service he again engaged in agricultural pursuits in Ohio, but in 1883 removed to eastern Kansas, and there followed farming and stock raising until his death, which occurred February 28, 1911. He was a Democrat in his political views, a consistent member of the Christian church, and was fraternally connected with Belleville (Ohio) Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of which he was master for twelve years. Mr. Stewart married Miss Marie A. Carle, who was born in February, 1835, and she died April 8, 1908, having been the mother of five children: William R. C.; Sallie W.; Samuel V., a resident of Virginia City, Montana; Hal H., a prominent attorney of Bozeman; and one who died in infancy.

William R. C. Stewart secured his education in the schools of his native county, and when the family removed to Kansas, in 1883, the youth decided to turn his attention to school teaching. The district of which he was given charge lay in an outlaw section, and four teachers before Mr. Stewart had given up the post, being unable to maintain discipline over the lawless students. Although not much more than a boy himself, the new master soon brought about order and succeeded in finishing his term. At this time he decided to continue his studies and for a time attended the Normal College, at Fort Scott, Kansas, but after a period spent in that institution went to Kansas City, Missouri, and secured employment in a hardware store. Mr. Stewart's advent in Bozeman occurred May 5, 1892, at which time he entered the offices of Luce & Luce, with whom he prosecuted his law studies for about two years, being admitted to the bar May 1, 1894. Associating himself with R. D. Steel, he began the practice of law, and in the fall of 1895, when the Gallatin Abstract Company was formed, became its president. Three years later, in 1898, he was elected county attorney, in which office he served one term. On November 5, 1895, Mr. Stewart was admitted to the firm of Hartman Brothers, the style at that time being changed to Hartman Brothers & Stewart, and with this legal firm he was connected until his election as county attorney in November, 1898, serving as same in the years 1899 and 1900, and was in private practice until December 13, 1902, when Gov. J. K. Toole appointed him to the position of judge of the District court of the ninth judicial district. He received the election to this office in 1904 and again in 1908, and throughout the term of his incumbency has displayed signal ability, preserving the dignity of the bench and fully vindicating the faith placed in him by the citizens of his section. For seven years Judge Stewart was a member of the school board, and during four years of this time acted as chairman. He was active in the organization of the Salesville State Bank and Belgrade State Bank, and for some time was active in the management of these substantial financial institutions. Fraternally Judge Stewart belongs to Gallatin Lodge No. 6, A. F. & A. M., of which he is past master, and other higher Masonic bodies, being a member of Bagdad Temple, Mystic Shrine and Bozeman Lodge of Elks. Judge Stewart and family are members of the Baptist church at Bozeman.

On May 17, 1894, Judge Stewart was married to Miss Ethel M. Armstrong, in Kansas City, Missouri. Mrs. Stewart is a native of Missouri, and the fourth in order of birth of the seven children of Judson and Virginia (Neff) Armstrong, the former a stock raiser and farmer of Missouri. Mr. Armstrong served as an officer in General Price's army during the Civil war, one of his comrades in arms being the late Mark Twain. Judge and Mrs. Stewart have had two children: Mildred Virginia and Harold W.

A man of vast legal knowledge and wealth of information on general subjects, Judge Stewart has brought to his high office a profound comprehension of human nature, which, coupled with a conscientious devotion to duty, has served to make his administration a notable one. Having the welfare of his community at heart he has taken a foremost place in the various movements which have served to develop Gallatin county, and both as public official and private citizen he well merits the esteem in which he is universally held.

JUDGE CONRAD R. HOFFMAN. One of the best known and most influential citizens of Libby, Montana, who, during a residence covering a period of twenty years, identified himself with various business enterprises was Judge Conrad R. Hoffman, who at various times had been engaged in stock raising, farming, butchering, mining and the real estate business, and served eleven years consecutively as justice of the peace and later three years more, being justice of the peace and police magistrate at the time of his death. During his long and active career he so conducted his affairs as to win the respect and esteem of his fellow citizens in whatever locality he has found himself, and until his death was considered one of his community's most representative men.

Judge Hoffman was a native of the fatherland, having been born at Gera, Saxony, Germany, July 4, 1837. In his native country he received a good common school education and learned the butchering business, but could see no future for himself in Germany, and accordingly, at the age of seventeen years, embarked on a sailing vessel at Bremen, and after a voyage of three months made port at New Orleans. There for a short time he was employed at his trade, but in 1857 went to Illinois, and about the time of the Mountain Meadow massacre started across the plains from Milton, Illinois, for California, his party reaching their destination after a trip of six months, during which they met with many hardships and privations. Upon arriving in the Treasure State, Mr. Hoffman at once engaged in mining, a business which he followed with some measure of success for several years, and while there, in 1861, at the first call for volunteers for the Union army, attempted to enlist, but defective eyesight caused his rejection. From California he went to Carson City, Nevada, and after a varied experience in mining at that and other places, he went to Boise, Idaho, and from there to Umatilla, and subsequently to Portland, Oregon, where he remained for twenty-two years, and where all his children were born. In 1887 Mr. Hoffman went to Spokane, Washington, and established himself in the butchering business. In this business he met with well-merited success, building up one of the finest enterprises in eastern Washington, but the great fire which destroyed Spokane in 1889, wiped out his business, and he was deprived of the fortune he had so laboriously accumulated and was obliged to make a fresh start. In 1892 he came to Libby, his rare foresight enabling him to perceive that this was to become the center of a great commercial and industrial community, and here engaged in the butchering business. He was also for a number of years engaged in farming on Libby creek, about three miles south of Libby, where he developed one of the finest ranches along the creek, but up to the time of his demise he devoted all his energies to the real estate business, mining and the justice work. Alert, progressive and industrious, Mr. Hoffman succeeded in making a place for himself among the substantial men of Libby, and his integrity and fair dealing made his name synonymous with legitimate business methods throughout Lincoln county. In political matters a progressive Republican, he was twice elected justice of the peace, and later, on the resignation of A. C. Sheldon, he was appointed to complete the unexpired term of office by the county commissioners. Fraternally, he was connected with the Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Ancient Order of United Workmen, in all of which he was immensely popular. September 24, 1867, Mr. Hoffman was united in marriage with Miss Medora C. Barkwell, of Portland, and they had a family of eight children, of whom four are living: Mrs. Paey; Archie; Louis and Robert, the last-named being master mechanic in the Standard mine, and the father of two children: Robert and Ruth. The family is widely known and highly respected throughout Lincoln county. Judge Hoffman died in Libby, August 27, 1912 and was buried in the Libby cemetery, Libby, Montana.

ROBERT PAULINE was born in Greenock, Scotland, in October, 1871, but coming to America with his parents at the early age of two years, he has imbibed the spirit of Americanism until he is in sympathy and education a true American. He is the son of Thomas and Agnes Pauline. The father after coming to America settled in St. Paul, Minnesota, and was employed for years as an engineer in the service of the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railroad, giving thirty years of service to that company, and being one of the oldest engineers in the employ of the road at the time of his retirement. He died at the age of sixty, in 1903. The wife and mother still lives in St. Paul. She is now sixty-five years of age, and is strong and active. They became the parents of six children,—Alex D. Pauline is an engineer in the employ of the Great Northern Railroad, located at Whitefish, Montana; George T. is a roundhouse foreman in the service of the Great Northern at Lamont, Washington; Mrs. H. T. Fifield of St. Paul; Mrs. R. H. Glennon, of Three Forks, Montana; Mrs. S. E. Johns, of Somers, Montana, and Robert, of this review.

As a youth, Robert Pauline received the educational privileges afforded by the schools of St. Paul, and at an early age went to work in the machine shops of the Great Northern Railroad Company at that city, where he learned the machinists' trade. He continued to work first as a fireman and later as an engineer for that road, and was with the construction train when the Great Northern built their line through to Montana. He reached Kalispell in 1892, and continued in the employ of the Great Northern as an engineer until 1902, and in that year he entered into the laundry business in Kalispell. The business at first was conducted on a small scale, being the first venture of the kind that Mr. Pauline had ever become connected with, but subsequent development of the concern has shown him to be a man of no little business enterprise and ability. The present flourishing establishment known as the Kalispell Laundry is the direct outcome of his small investment of ten years ago, and is one of the solid business concerns of the city today.

Mr. Pauline is a member of various fraternal societies, among them being the Masons, in which he is a member of the Shriners, the chapter, the commandery and the blue lodge of Spokane. He is likewise a member of the Kalispell and Leiderkrong clubs. Mr. Pauline was elected in April, 1912, to the office of alderman from the Third ward, and it is anticipated that his wholesome influence and character will reflect a generous measure of good in that capacity, as well as in his daily life as a citizen. He is a Republican.

On June 30, 1897, Mr. Pauline was united in marriage with Miss Alcie Gates of Kalispell. Three children have been born to them,—Agnes, born October 6, 1898; Donald, born February 22, 1900; and Lorna, born April 1, 1909. The two older children are in attendance at the Kalispell schools.

FRED M. PLUMMER. The activity and enterprise of a growing center of population is most clearly indicated by the class of its business men. Fred M. Plummer, who is self-made in the most significant sense of the term, has been a resident of Libby, Montana, since 1892, and here he holds distinctive prestige as a banker and merchant. He likewise is the owner of extensive farming and timber lands in different sections of the state.

Fred M. Plummer was born in Clifton, Wisconsin, August 15, 1860. His father, Josiah Plummer, was a native of Maine, whence he removed to Wisconsin in the early '50s, there becoming a pioneer settler. In Maine he was engaged in the timber business for a number of years and in Wisconsin he followed general merchandising and conducted a lime kiln. He met his death by accident with a horse at Menasha, Wisconsin, in 1892, at the age of eighty-seven years. His wife passed away in 1871. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Josiah Plummer, Fred M. having been the youngest in order of birth. Two sons, Charles and Jefferson, were gallant soldiers in the Union army during the Civil war. They were both taken prisoners and confined in Andersonville prison, where they contracted a certain disease which resulted in their respective deaths soon after they had been released.

To the public schools of Menasha, Wisconsin, Fred M. Plummer is indebted for his primary educational training. At the age of sixteen years he secured a position as a clerk in a general store in Menasha and for his services received a salary of twelve dollars per month. He followed clerical work for one year and at the age of seventeen years came west, locating in the Black Hills, where he was engaged in the freighting business for a short period. Thence he went to Great Falls, Montana, and in September, 1892, he came to Libby, then in Missoula county. Here he immediately engaged in the general merchandise business, having associated with him as a partner, J. B. Neff. In the beginning things were conducted on a very small scale, but with the passage of time the business has developed until the Plummer Store now ranks as one of the leading general stores in Lincoln county. In addition to his mercantile interests, Mr. Plummer is financially interested in the First National Bank in Libby, being vice-president of that substantial institution. He also has extensive farming and timber lands in this section of the state and is reputed as one of the wealthiest men in Lincoln county.

In politics Mr. Plummer gives a staunch allegiance to the principles and policies for which the Republican party stands sponsor and while he is deeply and sincerely interested in community affairs he has never been prevailed upon to run for public office of any description, although frequently urged to do so. He is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Libby Chamber of Commerce.

In the city of Spokane, Washington, January 15, 1902, Mr. Plummer was united in marriage to Miss Sivoli Neff, a daughter of John Neff, who was born in Virginia, whence he came west in 1880, locating in Kansas. Mr. and Mrs. Plummer have no children. They are devout Universalists in their religious faith and are generous contributors to various charitable organizations. They are decidedly popular in connection with the best social affairs of Libby and are everywhere honored and esteemed for their exemplary lives and innate kindness of spirit.

FRANK P. BROWNE. Opportunity and enterprise are the two elements that have spelt success in the career of Frank P. Browne, Polson's wealthy merchant and property owner. To his Celtic inheritance is doubtless due the aptness that is one of his conspicuous characteristics. He was born in Wheatland, Minnesota, on St. Patrick's day in 1870. His father, Richard Browne, was a native of the Emerald Isle, from which he emigrated while yet a boy. After a series of adventurous experiences as a miner in California, he settled in Minnesota, being one of the early pioneers of that state. It was there in 1854 that he took an active part in quelling the Indian uprisings of that period, and from time to time he exercised an important influence in preserving order in that state in its formative years. In 1892 he adopted as his home the developing commonwealth of Montana, locating at Columbia Flats. After a season of prosperous farming there, he removed to Polson, where he and his wife now reside with their son. At the age of seventy-six he looks back with satisfaction on a long life of varied fortunes. His wife, who as a girl was Julia Maloney of New Brunswick, is a comely woman, who, because of her fine health and spirits, may well be said to be "sixty-six years young." Of the family of twelve children, Mr. Frank Browne is the eldest. One brother, David, is a well-known Alaska miner, located at Dawson. Another brother, James, is a Chicago architect. John Browne is a merchant in Oregon. Miss Katharine, a sister, and T. C. Browne, who live in Polson, are connected with the business owned by the subject of our sketch.

Frank Browne's educational life was begun in the country schools near Wheatland and was continued in the high school of St. Paul. Completing this era of his life, he spent a year in the capital city of Minnesota learning and practicing the mercantile business, losing no opportunity of fully understanding all the features of the business. Then, yielding to an impulse to see more of the glorious West and its possibilities, he sought the Yellowstone, viewing the profitable aspects of Wyoming and Montana. Being particularly interested in the Flathead valley, Mr. Browne proceeded to Columbia Flats and near there began developing a ranch, which pursuit has until the present time constituted one of his vocations. He has at the same time prosecuted mining operations as far as British Columbia, becoming so well known through these and other operations that in 1898 he was appointed deputy clerk and recorder for Flathead county. He thereupon changed his residence to Kalispell. His office continuing until 1902 he presently made use of the business experience gained in St. Paul, by opening a general store at Jennings, Montana, in February of 1903. In 1911 he sold his interest in this successful business, and, in partnership with F. L. Gray, bought out the trading post at Polson, which they remodeled and developed into a general store. The hotel and other properties of the post were also purchased and improved by this enterprising firm. Their expansion of the store, however, is the most effective work of improvement which they have accomplished; from a small supply house in a crude unsightly building has been evolved a large modern establishment, complete in all departments. A full line of dry goods, an adequate grocery and meat market and an extensive stock of all varieties of farm implements are among its features. In 1912 Mr. Browne bought out all his partner's interests and is now sole proprietor of the store and accessory business. His affairs are flourishing in every line and his prospects as owner of the Grandview subdivision are also most gratifying.

On January 4, 1912, Mr. Browne was united in marriage to Miss Nan E. Stafford, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Stafford of Omaha, Nebraska. His energetic personality attracts to him a large circle of friends. A member of the B. P. O. E., a faithful son of the Catholic church, a determined and enthusiastic Democrat, a participant in the out-door sports so much in vogue in this region, Mr. Browne's individuality is pronounced and his popularity wide throughout this region.

GEORGE F. BROWN. A man of excellent business ability and judgment, George F. Brown, a well-known merchant tailor of Helena, holds a position of note among the useful and substantial residents of the city. He was born, January 4, 1855, in Norfolk, England, where he was reared and educated. His father, George F. Brown, Sr., a native of Norfolk, England, spent his ninety-four years of earthly life in the vicinity of his birthplace, passing away in January, 1910. A farmer by occupation, he was engaged in agricultural pursuits during his active career. He married Jane Calver, of Norfolk, whose death occurred shortly after his decease, in 1910. Ten children were born of their union.

After completing his studies in the common schools of Norfolk, George F. Brown there served an apprenticeship of five years at the tailor's trade. Then, on account of poor health, he secured temporary employment in the Norfolk post office, serving as rural mail carrier for a year. Immigrating to Quebec, Canada, in the fall of 1874, he followed his trade there a year. Going then to Denver, Colorado, Mr. Brown worked as a journeyman tailor for about seven years, after which he was in business for himself as a merchant tailor until 1891, in the meantime having made three trips back to his old home in Norfolk, England. Disposing of his interests in Denver in 1891, Mr. Brown traveled for two years in the northwest, visiting important points in Colorado, Wyoming and Montana. Locating at Helena, Montana, in 1893, he became associated with C. M. Batch, a merchant tailor, working for him for two years, and for two years being in partnership with him under the firm name of Brown & Batch. The partnership being then dissolved, Mr. Brown has since continued the business alone, and is meeting with well deserved success, having the patronage of the better class of Helena's residents. His establishment, advantageously located on Main street, is well equipped and well stocked, being one of the best of the kind in the city.

Politically Mr. Brown is Independent in politics, voting for the best man and measures without regard to party preference. Fraternally he is a member of Excelsior Lodge, No. 5, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which he has held all of the offices and of which he has been treasurer for the past sixteen terms; has also membership in the Royal Highlanders and the Woodmen of the World. Mr. Brown is domestic in his tastes, being strictly a home man and is very fond of reading, his favorite study being history.

Mr. Brown has been twice married. He married, first, Mary Boice, a native of Michigan. She died in Denver, Colorado, and the two children born of their union are also dead. Mr. Brown married for his second wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Swendemann, widow of Xavier Swendemann, of Helena, Montana.

ROBERT L. LOWREY. Some men seem destined by nature to succeed; no matter what obstacles appear in their path they are able to overcome them, if for no other reason than that of a persistent determination. Montana's best citizenship is made up of men who were handicapped in their earlier years, and whose latent abilities have been brought forth through the necessity to labor hard and faithfully, thus being developed a full measure of success that under different conditions might never have attended their efforts. Robert L. Lowrey, ranchman and cattle raiser of Dawson county, belongs to the class of men who have gained enviable positions through constant and praiseworthy endeavor. He is a native of Webster county, Georgia, and was born May 29, 1868, a son of Robert H. and Sarah E. (Harrell) Lowrey, both born in the Empire state of the south, the former January 9, 1842, and the latter January 17, 1846. Robert H. Lowrey has been a farmer and stock raiser throughout his life. In December, 1868, he moved to Texas, and at this time resides at Lubbock, Lubbock county, Texas. He and his wife had four sons and two daughters, Robert L. being the second in order of birth.

Robert L. Lowrey received his education in the common schools of Texas, to which state he had been taken in infancy, and remained on his father's ranch until he was twenty-two years of age. At that time he went up the cattle trail to Indian Territory, and after remaining there about two years, in 1893 came to Montana, settling first in Miles City, where he went to work for the Capital Syndicate Cattle Company, the "X. I. T." brand. After remaining with this concern for five years and thoroughly learning the cattle business, he removed to Glendive and engaged in a butcher business, but two years later became a full-fledged rancher, on a property seventeen miles southeast of Glendive, where he has a homestead of 350 acres and leases two extra sections of land. The greater part of Mr. Lowrey's attention has been given to the raising of horses and cattle, in which he has been eminently successful, but he also carries on farming to some extent, and in 1912 had over 100 acres in oats and feed. At all times he has maintained a reputation for integrity and fair dealing, and no man in his part of the county is held in higher esteem. Each year has found him adding to the improvements on his property, and he has continually broadened the scope of his operations and extended his activities. His improvements are of the most modern kind and his methods and ideas progressive, this giving him a well-earned reputation as a man of enterprise and energy.

On September 15, 1903, Mr. Lowrey was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Mitchell, of Cayuga, Ontario, Canada, daughter of Alexander Mitchell. They have had no children of their own, but have an adopted son, Alcimus Lowrey, who is an interesting lad of five years. Fraternally Mr. Lowrey is connected with Glendive Lodge of Odd Fellows. His politics are those of the Democratic party, but he has not been active in public matters, taking only a good citizen's interest in matters affecting his community or its people.

FRANK MARSHALL SMITH. At present the manager of the East Helena plant of the American Smelting & Refining Company, has been identified with the smelting industry of Montana for nearly twenty years.

Frank Marshall Smith was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, on August 16, 1866, being the eldest son of William Marshall and Mary (Beath) Smith, both of whom were born in Boothbay Harbor, Maine. Mr. Smith's boyhood days were spent in Buffalo, New York, where he attended the public schools. In 1881 he moved with his parents to Brooklyn, New York, where he entered the high school, graduating in 1884. In 1885 he matriculated at the School of Mines of Columbia University, New York City, from which institution he was graduated in June, 1889, with the degree of Engineer of Mines. Immediately after graduation Mr. Smith entered the employ of the federal government, doing geologic work in Virginia and Maryland in the service of the United States geological survey, being later (in 1890) assigned to hydrographic work in southern Idaho and eastern Oregon. During the latter part of 1890 he was in charge of the primary triangulation of the Boise City (Idaho) sheet, the work of which had just been undertaken by the topographic branch of the United States geological survey.

Mr. Smith severed his connection with the government survey in December, 1890, to accept a position as assayer with the Colorado Smelting Company, at Pueblo, Colorado. Beginning his duties on January 1, 1891, he was advanced to the position of assistant superintendent in October, 1892, which he held for a year, when he resigned to accept the position of superintendent of the United Smelting & Refining Company, at Great Falls, Montana, in October, 1893. This plant was known locally as the "Silver Smelter," due to the fact that its ore supply was largely obtained from the then booming silver camps of Neihart and Barker. In 1898 Mr. Smith was promoted to manager of this plant, and he continued in this position until April, 1901, when the plant was permanently closed down on account of the decadence of the silver camps of Neihart and Barker—due to the decline in the price of silver.

In the meantime, in April, 1899, the old silver smelter had passed into the hands of the American Smelting & Refining Company, and with the closing down of the Great Falls Plant, Mr. Smith was transferred to Salt Lake City, as assistant manager of the Utah department of that company, where he remained for one year. In September, 1902, he was again transferred to Montana, being sent to Helena as assistant manager of the East Helena plant of the American Smelting & Refining Company. In July, 1905, he was appointed manager of the East Helena plant, which position he has occupied up to the present time.

Mr. Smith has been a member of the American Institute of Mining Engineers since 1892, and a member of the Montana Society of Engineers since 1897, being elected president of the latter society in 1910. He has taken an active part in the social and business life of Helena, being a member of the Montana Club and of the Helena Commercial Club.

In June, 1893, Mr. Smith was married to Clara Thatcher Everhart, of Martinsburg, Pennsylvania, the daughter of Marshall H. and Mary T. Everhart. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Smith, one son, Aldridge Everhart, and two daughters, Dorothy Alice and Marjorie Helen.

WILLIAM B. SHEPHERD, manager of the C. A. Thurston Horse Ranch, on the north fork of Bad Route, has been identified with his present line of business for upwards of twenty years in Montana, and in addition to ably conducting the activities of this well-known enterprise, has carried on operations on his own account in the same business, and is well known to stockmen all over this part of the state. Mr. Shepherd was born in Lincolnshire, England, January 9, 1864, and is a son of Thomas and Elizabeth Shepherd, who spent their lives in England, both being now deceased.

The ninth in order of birth of a family of ten children, William B. Shepherd received a public school education, and grew to manhood in his native country, where he remained until he was twenty-three years of age. At that time, having decided to try his fortunes in the United States, he embarked for this country, and after landing at New York made his way to Michigan and spent six years at Greenville. He came to Dawson county, Montana, in 1893, as manager for the C. A. Thurston Horse Ranch, and has been the active directing head of this great industry to the present time, extending its operations materially and adding to its holdings. Some time after coming to this locality Mr. Shepherd homesteaded a claim of 320 acres, adjoining the Thurston property, and here raises horses and cattle of his own, in addition to leasing a section of land. Like all other active ranchers of a few years ago, Mr. Shepherd is now devoting a part of his time to agricultural pursuits, and has shown himself to be quite as able and successful a farmer as he is a stockman. He is known as a shrewd, capable business man, whose connection with enterprises of a strictly legitimate nature has given him a high standing among his business associates, and during his long residence in Dawson county he has made and retained a number of warm friendships.

On October 7, 1911, Mr. Shepherd was united in marriage with Miss Nellie Nickerbocker, daughter of David Nickerbocker, an early settler of Michigan. Both of Mrs. Shepherd's parents are deceased. Mr. Shepherd's political views are those of the Democratic party, but he has never entered the public arena, having preferred to give his entire time and attention to his numerous business interests. The pleasant family home is located on the ranch, and Mr. Shepherd's postoffice address is Terry.

ARCHIBALD MAHON. Among the more influential men of Valley county, Archibald Mahon takes prominent rank as one who has been connected with public affairs since he first came to Montana in 1893. As state engineer, to which office he was appointed in March, 1911, he has added to an already state-wide acquaintance, gained a state senator for a period of eight years between 1898 and 1906. He was county surveyor for five years, and has ever been a foremost figure in the political life of his community.

Born in Monroe county, New York, in 1869, Archibald Mahon is the son of A. D. and Jeannette S. (Janes) Mahon. The former was born in Indiana in 1844, but in his young manhood removed to New York where he remained until the time of his death, which occurred in 1906. He was a veteran of the Civil war, enlisting with an Indiana Regiment and serving with honor and distinction throughout the entire struggle. He was a printer by occupation. The mother was born in Michigan state in 1846; she is still living and resides happily with her son at Glasgow, Valley county, Montana, where he makes his home.

Following his early training in the common schools in the town in which he was raised in New York, Mr. Mahon took up a course of study in engineering in that state, coming to Montana in 1893, and locating at Glasgow, Valley county, Montana, where he carried on a private practice. His natural ability in the line of his profession was great, and he has prosecuted his engineering labors with an enthusiasm born of a genuine love for the work, as a result of which he has realized an almost phenomenal success. He has prospered materially, as well as in the more abstract things of life. Always active in public affairs, he has been an important factor in the political life of his district, and has been, as stated, the representative of his district in the state senate between 1898 and 1906. He was county surveyor from 1893 to 1898, always serving with the fullest efficiency in the offices to which he was called by the people. At present, Mr. Mahon is occupying the office of state engineer, his appointment taking effect in March, 1911. He is of the Democratic persuasion, and is an ardent supporter of the party and its principles. He is a director of the Glasgow National Bank and is a prominent stockholder in that institution.

Mr. Mahon was made a master Mason in North Star Lodge, No. 46, F. & A. M., at Glasgow. He is a charter member of Glasgow Chapter, No. 17, R. A. M. in which he has been through the chairs; also is a charter member of Glasgow Commandery, No. 13, Knights Templar, at Glasgow, of which he is past eminent commander, and is an officer in the Grand Commandery, of Montana. He is now serving (1912) as illustrious potentate of Algeria Temple, Mystic Shrine at Helena. In Scottish Rite Masonry he has attained the thirty-second degree in Helena Consistory No. 3. He is also a member of the Montana Club.

Mr. Mahon was married (first) March 1, 1904, to Frances G. Hoyt, of St. Paul, Minnesota. She died August 22, 1907. Two children were born to them: Archie W., born January 10, 1906, and Hobart, born August 8, 1907, both at Glasgow.

On January 12, 1909, Mr. Mahon was married (second) to Miss Osie M. Hagzard of St. Paul, Minnesota.

JUDGE WILLIAM CLANCY. A distinguished jurist, now living retired at Butte, whose career in public and professional work reflects great credit upon his intellect and his character, is Judge William Clancy, who has recently served for eight years on the bench of the Second judicial district of Montana. In military and legal life, in political journalism, as well as in his legal capacity, Mr. Clancy has an enviable record, which it is of special interest to peruse.

Judge Clancy's keenness of mind may be in part attributed to his Irish ancestry, for both his parents, David Clancy and Ellen (Hennessey) Clancy were born in Ireland, the father in County Cork. The father was sixteen years of age and the mother fifteen, at the time of immigration to America, and their marriage took place in Somerset, Perry county, Ohio, and there William Clancy was born, May 30, 1842. His father was a canal and railway contractor for many years and later occupied himself in agricultural pursuits in Knox county, Missouri, where his death occurred in 1878. Mrs. Clancy lived to a rather wonderful old age, having very nearly reached her ninety-sixth birthday at the time of her death in 1898. Of the five sons and one daughter of David and Ellen Hennessey, all are deceased except one or two, at the present date.

The public schools of the state of Ohio provided the earliest educational opportunities of William Clancy. He was yet a young boy when he mastered the three years' course of Carey College, at Sidney, Ohio. When he was but fifteen years three months of age, his parents with their children moved to Missouri, where the young sons joined their father in the clearing of their farm of three hundred and ninety-one acres. From a wilderness they transformed it into a beautiful and fertile farm, and the experience was one not without its value to the future barrister and jurist in its development, even in a manual way, of his executive ability. It was not long, however, before his pursuit of either industrial or educational success was overshadowed in importance by his duty to the nation.

When the imminence of a bitter struggle for the unity of this country became an assured fact, William Clancy was one of the first to enlist as a volunteer in her service. In August, 1862, he enlisted as a private in Company E, Fiftieth Regiment, Missouri Cavalry, for nine months' service, and at the end of that time he enlisted in Company K, Second Missouri Cavalry, with which he was engaged until November 15, 1863, when he was discharged at Hannibal, Missouri. He participated in scouting duty through Missouri and Arkansas for that length of time.

Still determined to complete his general education and to pursue a professional course, young Clancy found means of doing so, despite the need of depending on his own endeavors for support in the interim. He presently entered St. Paul's College at Palmyra, Missouri, from which he was graduated two years later. Thus equipped, he prepared to read law. In the office of M. C. Hawkins, a prominent attorney of Canton, Missouri, he spent two years of study mastering the multiplicity of legal technicalities, situations and methods of procedure, which every successful lawyer must thoroughly know. At Monticello, Missouri, he was admitted to the bar of that state on November 8, 1868.

In Edina, Knox county, of the same state he began the practice of his profession. Here his superior ability, his convincing sincerity and his deeply personal loyalty to his clients soon won him a large and important clientele and it was not long before he was recognized as a leading attorney in Edina and the surrounding country. One of the honors which came to him here was his tenure of the office of judge of special court. Not long after, he was elected by popular vote to the office of county attorney. The large majority conceded him in this election clearly demonstrated the fact that William Clancy was persona grata in his own right, rather than as a party representative. The people at large recognized his unflinching honesty in interpreting conditions not always clear to others or of a nature to cause them to fear any action toward exposing or interfering with public abuses on the part of officials. He has long been remembered for his splendid service in dauntlessly bringing to public view a cabal of corrupt officials in Knox county, who were improperly using school and county funds entrusted to their care. Their private and unlawful enrichment ceased as a result of the Judge's fearlessness and public appreciation of his service in this regard was made known in an unmistakable manner.

The political affiliations of Judge Clancy was for many years Democratic and his party journalism during his residence in Edina was of a very effective sort. At that time he was editor and originator of the Knox County Democrat and in his hands it was an influence of not a little importance in political affairs. It is still published as the organ of county Democracy in that locality of Missouri. Mr. Clancy's political alliance has ever been a matter of rational conviction. He does not believe that truth, political or otherwise, is necessarily fixed and unchanging. In the year 1892, therefore, he adopted the tenets of the Populist party, the theories and motives of which he strongly espoused.

On July fourteenth, 1893, Judge Clancy became a resident of Butte, where he has ever since been a citizen of importance and a man of public worth. He opened a law office in this city and was speedily recognized as one of the ablest members of the Silver Bow county bar. His popularity grew rapidly and after three years of residence and legal practice in the city he was asked to accept the Populist nomination for judge of the district—the second. At the election, in 1896, he was the successful candidate. At the conclusion of his term he had been a second time elected, this time with the large plurality of 1,388 votes. After eight years of distinguished service in this capacity, the judge retired, having won the highest regard of the people for his wise litigation in all cases, some of these being among the most important mining cases ever brought before the courts of the United States. His impartiality, his fairness, his intuitive grasp of the necessary and leading points of any given case, his strong handling of every situation, all have contributed to the high estimate accorded his judicial talent and his judicial conscience. The judge is unmarried and in spite of the absence of domestic ties he is the recipient nevertheless of a warm regard on the part of all who know him and understand his rare personality, that lacks no quality of affection as well as pride. He is a member of Lincoln Post No. 2, of the Grand Army of the Republic. Judge Clancy is a devout churchman, being a faithful member of the Roman Catholic church.

BERNARD KOPALD. A man whose industry, thrift and energy combined with superior business and executive talents have enabled him to attain an enviable position in the business world is Mr. Bernard Kopald, who came to Butte, Montana, in 1893, and commencing with a small furniture store that contained a stock of no more than a thousand dollars in value, now conducts an emporium that foots up sales to the amount of $40,000 in value annually, necessitating the employment of a full corps of salesmen. Mr. Kopald has a complete stock of furniture of all kinds at his establishment on West Broadway which is admirably displayed and the place attracts the best trade of the city to its doors.

Born in Austria July 14, 1868, of native Austrian parentage, Bernard Kopald spent the first fifteen years of his life on his father's farm. He was the second oldest of a family of six children and in his boyhood days helped diligently with the work at home, and attended school as opportunity permitted until fifteen years old. At that age he was started out to perfect himself in a trade, as is required of all young men in that country, and for four years worked as a grocer's apprentice. His parents remained in Austria the remainder of their lives, the father, Israel Kopald, dying there in 1893 at the age of seventy-seven, and his mother's demise occurring in 1897 when she was fifty-four years old. After completing his apprenticeship Bernard bid good-bye to his home people and went out to seek his fortune in the new world. Upon his arrival in America he started at once for Omaha, Nebraska, and there secured employment as a clerk in the European Hotel. The next four years he worked faithfully at the hotel, saving his earnings carefully, and at the end of that time had a nice little sum laid by. This amount he thought would enable him to start modestly in some line of mercantile business and he decided to go further west to find a location for his venture. It was in April, 1893, that he located at Butte and established his present business and it has kept pace with that city's phenomenal growth until it is now one of the largest furniture stores here and its proprietor is counted as among the most substantial commercial elements of this section of the state.

Before coming to Butte Mr. Kopald was married at Lincoln, Nebraska, March 26, 1893, to Miss Lea Lewkowtz, a daughter of Bernard Lewkowtz, and a native of Germany. Four children were born of this union, two of whom died in infancy, Sadie and Pearl being the surviving members. Mrs. Kopald died June 4, 1901, and on October 10, 1906, Mr. Kopald was again married, his second wife being Sarah, daughter of Julius Silverman, an old settler in Montana and a resident of Helena. She died June 11, 1908, leaving Mr. Kopald again a widower. On February 22, 1911, Mr. Kopald and Miss Sarah Alderman, a native Russian, were united in marriage, and they now occupy their comfortable residence at 611 West Park street.

While Mr. Kopald is a Republican he takes no active part in political affairs. He is a member of the orthodox Jewish church and is liberal in his support of that religious institution. In the fraternal world he is well known. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, Woodmen of the World, Bnai Brith, and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and has been through all the chairs of the latter order.

Mr. Kopald is a man of strict moral rectitude, is strictly honest in all his dealings with his fellow-men, and is a citizen of the highest type, performing his public duties as a voter, and a man interested in the civic welfare of the community, in a manner highly creditable to himself. He has an enviable standing in the city, socially and commercially, and enjoys the esteem and respect of a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

DAVID M. WOOD. The county treasurer of Cascade county is a Scot by birth and also by descent, and the other surviving male members of the Wood family are still living in the land of their birth. David Wood was one of the eight children born to Hugh and Mary Moffat Wood. Of these only three are now alive. Robert Douglass Wood lives at Kilmarnock, Scotland, and a sister, Mary Wood McMasters, has her home still further from that of her ancestors, and under stars even, which they never beheld, for she lives in Christchurch, New Zealand. David Moffat, the maternal grandfather of David Wood, was a sea captain who commanded a mail boat plying between Liverpool and the Scottish ports. He was drowned at sea in 1832, when the packet and all aboard were lost. This was the year of the birth of his daughter, Mary, who later became Mrs. Hugh Wood. She died in 1884 and is buried in Scotland. The paternal grandfather, Robert Wood, was born at Scotch Grace, where his father was a surgeon. Robert fought in the battle of Waterloo, and at his death in 1877 was buried with military honors. He had been a drummer boy in the battle on whose issue had hinged the fate of Europe. His son, Hugh Wood followed the mercantile business for some years, and died May 8, 1912, at the age of seventy-nine, was born February 21, 1834.

David Wood was the sixth child in his family and was born September 9, 1869. He received his education in his native country, attending the public schools and also the academy. Shortly after leaving school, he emigrated to America going first to Canada. Here he worked for the Alberta Railway, being stationed at Lethbridge. From 1889 until 1893 he was with this corporation, and then came to Sand Coulee, Montana. His business here was in the same nature as that in which he had been engaged in Canada. He began as timekeeper for the Sand Coulee Coal Company, and was promoted to the position of paymaster. For thirteen years Mr. Wood was with this company, and then in 1906, he was elected to the office of county clerk. Four years later, he was the candidate of the Democratic party for county treasurer, and in 1912 he is still holding that office.

Mr. Wood was married at Sand Coulee on September 18, 1896. His wife, formerly Miss Elizabeth Young, is the daughter of John M. and Elizabeth Young. Her father has now retired from business and makes his home in Seattle, Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Wood are the parents of two daughters. Margaret, born July 1, 1897, will enter high school in the fall of 1912. Her birthplace was Sand Coulee. Mary was born February 19, 1900, at Stocket, Montana, and is in the seventh grade.

The lodges of which Mr. Wood is a member are the Elks, the Knights of Pythias, the Odd Fellows, and the Modern Woodmen. In both the Odd Fellows and the K. P. he has been through all the chairs and has sat in the grand lodge of the order. Mr. Wood belongs to the church which is associated with the history of the Scottish people, and which has given so many thinkers and reformers to the world: the Presbyterian. While possessing the characteristic virtues of his race, Mr. Wood is a thorough American, and a most efficient public official. He has a wide acquaintance in this section of the state and an equally wide popularity.

JOHN MIEYR, a well-established tea merchant of Great Falls, and one of the prominent and highly esteemed men of his city, is a native of the Wolverine state and claims Ontonogan, Ontonogan county as the place of his birth. He is the son of John and Lena (Kirtchen) Mier, both natives of Germany. The father came to America in his young manhood in the late thirties and settled in the copper region of the northern part of Michigan, and was prominent in the mining industry of that district for many years, prospering most happily, in like manner with many another of the early settlers in that abundantly rich and opportune country. The elder Mier offered his services to the nation when the Civil war broke out, but was rejected because of his deficient eyesight, and he was thus unprivileged to serve his adopted country beyond that service which every good citizen gives in the fulfillment of the everyday duties of civic life. He died in Michigan in 1903, having reached the advanced age of seventy-four years. His wife, who came to America with her parents in her girlhood and with them settled in northern Michigan, died in 1901, aged sixty years. They became the parents of a goodly family of sixteen children, of which family John Mieyr of this review was one of twins.

Educated in the schools of Calumet, until the age of thirteen years. Following his school days he was employed as a clerk for the Calumet Store Company, where he continued for some years. In 1893 he first came to Montana, and he was first employed in the smelters at Great Falls. In 1897 he became the agent of the Grand Union Tea Company in Great Falls Territory and continued in this capacity for nine years or until 1906. He then entered the business on his own responsibility. He started in a small way, but the result of his efforts was soon apparent in the growth of the trade he controlled, and today the business which he conducts is one of the largest and most prosperous of its kind in the city. In January, 1912 he opened as an annex to his tea store, a variety or bargain store, which is rapidly coming to the front as the most popular shopping place of the city.

Mr. Mieyr is prominent in business circles in Great Falls and popular in all circles in which he moves. He was a member of the school board from 1897 to 1900, and is a member of the board of directors of the Fair Association, and treasurer of the association. He is a director in the Great Falls Baseball Association, which is a member of the Inter-Montana League, and is one of the best known fans in the city. He is a Democrat, and takes a reasonable activity in political matters of his city and county.

On August 29, 1888, Mr. Mieyr was united in marriage with Miss Mayme Ryan of Calumet, Michigan, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Ryan of Calumet. Seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Mieyr. They are: George Mieyr, born July 11, 1889, in Calumet, Michigan. He was engaged in business with his father in Great Falls, was accidentally killed at Biben, Wisconsin, September 18, 1912. Myrtle, born in November, 1891, in Calumet, died in Great Falls in 1902. Richard and John, born in Calumet, both died there. Clarence, born July, 1899, is attending the Great Falls high school. Alice, born in June, 1903, is also a student in the schools of the home city, and Theodore, born in August, 1906, is the youngest member of this fine family.

Mr. Mieyr is a member of the Woodmen of the World, the Catholic Order of Foresters and the Knights of Columbus, and is well known and popular in these orders throughout the state, in which he has many devoted and influential friends.

T. A. PRICE. Among the well-known citizens of Missoula, Montana, whose business, social and official career has been marked throughout with success and distinctiveness proclaiming a talent for leadership and initiative in various affairs of life is Mr. T. A. Price, a prominent real estate dealer and one of the members of the commission which governs Missoula under the new system. Mr. Price is a scion of a distinguished Welsh family, members of which have for generations been effective workers in fields of endeavor that have brought the name into good repute in various parts of the world. He was born at Waukesha, Wisconsin, April 26, 1868, the son of Thomas J. and Margaret Jones Price, both of whom were natives of Brecon, Wales, came to this country when young, and while they first became acquainted in their native land, were married in the United States. The elder Price followed the occupation of agriculturist for forty years in Wisconsin, then retired from active farming and removed to Waukesha, where he died at the advanced age of eighty years on October 26, 1911, his wife having preceded him to the better land a few months previous. He was a man of quiet, conservative disposition and was highly respected throughout the community in which he resided.

T. A. Price was educated in the district schools of the community in which he was born in Wisconsin, and later attended for a time Carroll College. When sixteen years old it became necessary for him to assist in the conduct of the farm and he early learned the value of industry and economy. He remained at farm work until twenty-two years of age then decided to abandon that occupation as life work, and proceeded to learn telegraphy. After acquiring proficiency in operating in 1893 Mr. Price went west and came to Missoula and being pleased with the situation and outlook established a permanent residence here and has ever since maintained it, without at any time experiencing any regret over his decision, but on the contrary, often pausing to congratulate himself on the wisdom of his choice of a home.

At the time of his arrival here times were hard and one was not always able to choose the kind of work he would like to do and Mr. Price accepted the first employment that offered this being a job as driver on a delivery wagon. He worked hard for two years, lived frugally and saved his earnings carefully and at the end of that time found himself in possession of sufficient resources to enable him to purchase a half interest in the Bonner & Woodford grocery firm, he coming into possession of the stock of Mr. Woodford. The new firm became Bonner & Price and for twelve years the store was conducted with marked success and profit by these gentlemen. At the end of that period Mr. Price purchased Mr. Bonner's interest in the store then formed a partnership with J. B. Henley and the new firm was known as Price & Henley. In 1908 Mr. Price decided to retire from the grocery business and accordingly disposed of his share of the store to Mr. John Eigeman. The business had always been conducted with profit to its owners, and grew to many times its original proportions during the years that Mr. Price was engaged in its executive management.

After retiring from the mercantile business Mr. Price then engaged in operations as a real estate dealer and has since continued to be prominently identified with that line of commercial endeavor in this city. The success that he has achieved in financial and other respects has been solely the result of his own persevering endeavor and his determination to win his way and win it honestly. He has lived here long and has had transactions with a large number of people, but all agree that whether or not one may acquiesce with him in his views on any given subject they cannot fail to be impressed with the conscientiousness and inherent honesty of the man.

A record of Mr. Price's connection with public and official life in important capacities shows him to have accomplished much work of beneficial character to the community at large. He has always been deeply interested in educational affairs and facilities and was for several years a member of the city school board, a portion of the time serving as chairman of that body. He served on the old city council for a considerable time and so efficient did he prove in that capacity that when the first election under the commission form of city government was held he was elected one of the first two commissioners receiving the highest vote of any of the twenty candidates who were making the race. The department of the city's business which is under his special executive management is that of streets, public improvements and parks. Mr. Price believes in administering public office with the same painstaking care and strict honesty that he would apply to his own private business and his acts are at all times an earnest of this principle. He has high ideals for civic improvement and wants to see Missoula a model city, in so far as it can be made so, and all his influence and power are bent toward achieving this end.

The home life of Mr. Price and his family is ideal. The marriage of Mr. Price and Miss Belle Hardy occurred at Groveland, Massachusetts, June 23, 1898. Mrs. Price is a native of that state, and hers is an old New England family, long identified with the history of this country. Three children have been born of this union, Gladys, aged seven years; Margaret, two, and Baby Helen. Both Mr. and Mrs. Price are accomplished musicians and generous in the use of their talents for the enjoyment of their friends and the public, especially the church-going public. Mrs. Price is leader of the choir of the Congregational church of which the family are members and Mr. Price also is a member of that body of singers. Their leadership in the most cultivated social life of the city is well earned and deserved and Missoula is fortunate in having people of this character so active in all lines of highest endeavor. Mr. Price is a member of several fraternal orders, including the Masonic lodge, and is personally popular among all classes of people with whom he comes in contact.

ANDREW MADSEN, who owns and conducts the Overland Hotel at Dixon, Montana, has been a resident of this place since 1903 and in addition to his hotel interests he is the owner of considerable realty at Dixon and he also has extensive mining properties in this section of the state. Inasmuch as he came to this country a foreigner with no assets except energy and a determination to forge ahead the admirable success in life achieved by Mr. Madsen is the more gratifying to contemplate.

A native of Denmark, Andrew Madsen was born March 28, 1872, and he is a son of Absolom and Karen Christina (Peterson) Madsen, both of whom are now deceased, the former having died in 1904, at the age of seventy-one years, and the latter in 1900, at the age of seventy-five years. The father was a granite-cutter by trade and resided in Denmark during his entire lifetime. He was a soldier in the Danish army and saw active service in the war between Germany and Denmark, which lasted from 1848 to 1864; he was captain of the Jagers. Nine children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Absolom Madsen, the subject of this review having been the youngest in order of birth. One son, James Madsen is a rancher in the Flathead country, Montana, and Charles Madsen is a resident of Omaha, Nebraska.

To the public schools of his native land Andrew Madsen is indebted for his rudimentary educational training and this discipline was supplemented with a commercial course in night school while learning the trade as carpenter. As a youth Mr. Madsen was a very willing errand boy and as he was often remunerated for his services he saved his money and at the age of fourteen years had one hundred dollars deposited in the Postal Savings Bank in Denmark. After leaving school he served a three-years' apprenticeship and learned the carpenter's trade. In 1889, at the age of seventeen years, he came to the United States and for the ensuing four years was a resident of Omaha, Nebraska, where he found work as a carpenter. In 1893 he came to Montana and for the next decade was engaged in farming in the Flathead country. In 1903 he disposed of his ranch and came to Dixon, where he erected the Overland Hotel, which he is now conducting and which is the first hostelry in Dixon. He owns a great deal of valuable real estate in Dixon and is likewise interested in mining operations. He is a member of the Dixon Commercial Club and is an enthusiastic and active booster of the town. Prior to coming to Dixon Mr. Madsen traveled extensively through various states and came to the conclusion that Montana was superior in every way. He insists that the past has been more than satisfactory and that the future will be far greater and much more glorious than the past. In politics he is an independent Democrat and he is a valued member of the school board at Dixon.

At Kalispell, Montana, June 8, 1897, Mr. Madsen was united in marriage to Miss Ida Oldenburg, a daughter of Carl and Dora Oldenburg, of Holt, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Madsen are the parents of four children, all daughters,—Karen Dora, Ruth Annie, Margaret Freda and Helen Elizabeth, all of whom are attending school at Dixon. Mr. and Mrs. Madsen are devout members of the Union church at Dixon and he is a trustee of the church. Mr. Madsen is very fond of athletics in general and in his younger days was an amateur runner and wrestler. He is exceedingly fond of music. Recreation with the Madsen family consists mostly in driving. Mr. and Mrs. Madsen are admired and respected for their exemplary lives and they are popular factors in connection with the best social affairs at Dixon.

ARTHUR E. CHAMBERLAIN, M. D. A worthy representative of the medical profession of Montana is Dr. Arthur E. Chamberlain, of Belt, the first physician to practice in that city, who, through nearly twenty years of successful professional work there, has dignified his calling by his earnest life and labors and has won a prestige by which he well merits recognition in this history of Montana and its representative men.

Dr. Chamberlain is by nativity an Ohio man, born in the village of Twinsburg, Summit county, of that great commonwealth, on the 23d of July, 1860. His father was William Chamberlain and his mother was Victoria Southworth, both natives of Ohio. William Chamberlain was a farmer by occupation. He passed away at Solon, Cuyahoga county, Ohio, at the age of sixty-one and in 1892 was followed in death by his wife, who died at Bedford in the same state and county when sixty-five years of age. Both parents are interred at Solon. Of the two children born to them, Dr. Chamberlain is the eldest, the other being a son, Pearl P. Chamberlain.

The youthful days of Dr. Chamberlain were spent on the farm. His preliminary educational studies were conducted in the public schools of Solon, and following this he was for two years a student in the well-known college at Oberlin, Ohio. At the age of eighteen he entered professional life as a teacher and for ten years taught in the schools of his native state. Afterward one year was spent in a similar capacity at Crisfield, Kansas. This preparation and experience served as a broadening foundation for professional work of another nature and with the means he had acquired by his own efforts as a teacher he defrayed his expenses while receiving his medical training. He entered the Homeopathic Hospital College of Cleveland, Ohio, in 1887, and after four years of diligent and thorough study was graduated from that institution in 1891 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. The year following his graduation he remained at the college as demonstrator of anatomy and also took a post graduate course, but in 1893, desiring to take up the active practice of his profession and having decided that the field of his endeavor should be in the west, he came direct to Montana, locating first at Great Falls. After eight months of practice there he removed to Belt, where he has since been established and where his acquirements put into skillful use have won him a large practice and a prestige as the oldest physician of the city in point of service and one of the ablest as well. Dr. Chamberlain has made his own way in life and what he has accomplished discloses among his traits of character a strong determination and the power of steady perseverance in the pursuit of any aim. In politics he gives allegiance to the Republican party but takes no active part in political affairs. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World and with the Modern Brotherhood of America. Both as a physician and as a citizen he stands high in the esteem of his fellow men and is in hearty accord with all that makes for the advancement of Montana.

At Cleveland, Ohio, in 1892, Dr. Chamberlain wedded Miss Maude Cann, a daughter of George Cann, a native of Canada and a prominent merchant of Cleveland. Three children have come to this union, Arthur, Mabel and Gladys, but Mabel died at the age of four years of membranous croup.

WILLIAM WIMAN ANDRUS, M. D. Among the many eminent names to be found in Montana's roll of professional men, none is more worthy of mention than that of William Wiman Andrus, M. D., a physician and surgeon of deservedly high reputation and a citizen whose worth as a public official was unquestionably demonstrated during the ten years in which he held the chief executive office in Miles City. Prominent in professional, public, fraternal and social life, he has actively identified himself with all matters of importance bearing on the city's welfare, and he is universally regarded as one of his community's most representative men. Dr. Andrus is descended from two old and honored families of the Empire state, but is himself a native of Orono, Ontario, Canada, where he was born October 14, 1858, a son of Edson and Mary Ann (Wiman) Andrus. His father was engaged in the saw-mill and lumbering business in New York until 1845, in which year he moved to Ontario, and there continued in the manufacture of lumber up to the time of his death, while his mother is still a resident of Bowmanville, Ontario. Three children were born to them, of whom two are living: Weatha, the wife of James Gilfillian; and Dr. William W.

After completing his preliminary education in the common schools of Ontario, Dr. Andrus was for four years successfully engaged in teaching, but in 1883 gave up the profession of educator for that of professional baseball player. He had always been skilled in all outdoor sports, and while playing as an amateur attracted the attention of a "scout" for a professional team, who saw promising material in the youth and secured his services for the Indianapolis team. In 1884 he played with St. Louis and Minneapolis; in 1885 and 1886 with the Hamilton, Ontario, team in the International League; in 1887 was with the Portland team, in Maine, and during the next year was again with the Hamilton organization. In 1889 and 1890 he was on the roster of the Buffalo club, in 1891 was with Manchester, New Hampshire, and in 1892 was with Kansas City in the Western League. A clever and versatile player, Dr. Andrus at various times played second base, short-stop and right field, and was a great favorite with the patrons of the game in whatever city he was playing. During the time he was engaged in the "National Game," Dr. Andrus carefully saved his salary and used it in pursuing his studies in the medical department of Trinity College, Toronto, attending school winters and playing ball during the regular seasons. In 1893 he was duly graduated from Trinity, receiving the degree of M. D., and the same year came to Montana, being for eight months associated in practice with Dr. Henry Chappel, of Billings. In October of that year he came to Miles City and established himself in practice, and this city has been his field of endeavor to the present time. A man of scholarly tastes and able to throw light on almost any subject connected with his profession, yet drawing from a fund of rich experience and ripened knowledge, Dr. Andrus is also a man of rare sympathy, great kindness of heart and magnetic personality. He is a close and careful student, keeping fully abreast of the advances in his profession and taking a great interest in the work of the American Medical Association. Fraternally he is a prominent Mason, belonging to the lodge, chapter and commandery, and is also a member of the Knights of Pythias, the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Woodmen of the World, the Knights of the Maccabees and the American Order of Protection. In 1899 he was grand medical examiner of the Ancient Order of United Workmen of Montana, and socially he is identified with the Miles City Club.

Dr. Andrus has been an active and influential factor in Republican politics for a number of years, and the high esteem in which he is held has been made evident by his election to various positions of public trust. He served one term as alderman of the First ward, and in 1899 was elected to the mayoralty chair. The administration which followed was such an admirable one that he was chosen to succeed himself in 1901, and he continued to hold office for four terms, leaving office in 1909 with an unblemished record for conscientious performance of duty. He has also served two terms as county physician, and is now acting for the third time as county health officer. Dr. Andrus has lost none of his love for outdoor sports and each summer finds him on a fishing or hunting trip to Canada, where for a time he is able to lay aside the cares and responsibilities which are the portion of a man of his prominence and abilities.

On November 20, 1895, Dr. Andrus was married to Miss Corma Ireland, who was born in Illinois and reared in Montana, the daughter of Allen Ireland, deceased, a former resident of Miles City. Dr. and Mrs. Andrus have two children: Edson, born November 28, 1899; and Kathleen.

JOHN C. HUNTOON, one of Lewistown's leading attorneys, was born at Peterboro, Ontario, on May 13, 1865. His father, Josiah Huntoon, was a New Yorker by birth, and when his son John was five years of age, returned to that state, but after two years again took up his residence in Ontario. On this occasion he settled at Collingwood, where the boy received his elementary training in the public schools. His mother, Betsey (Kathan) Huntoon, was also born in New York, and lived there until after her marriage. Of the five children that came to these parents, John C., of this review, is the only one now living. The mother died in their Canadian home and her body is interred at Collingwood, Ontario. Josiah Huntoon retired from business upon the death of his wife and has since made his home in California. He was engaged in the wholesale manufacture of lumber all his life.

After finishing the public school course in Collingwood, John Huntoon attended the Collegiate Institute of Collingwood, Ontario, and afterward, in 1884, moved to Hamilton. He next took a course in the British-American Business College of Toronto, where he resided for four years. It was at this juncture that he returned to Collingwood, but not to settle there; only to bring away the lady whom he had chosen to preside over his home—Miss Maud Towler, the daughter of James and Julia Towler, of Collingwood.

From Toronto, Mr. Huntoon went to Ann Arbor, Michigan, where he took the law course, graduating in June, 1891, with the degree of L. L. B.; he then went to Detroit, Michigan, in September, 1891, and there he began the practice of law. In Detroit it was his rare good fortune to be associated for two years with Colonel Atkinson, one of the famous members of the Michigan bar. This practical training, supplementing as it did the thorough instruction he had received in the Canadian institutions and at Ann Arbor, was one of the most incalculable benefit to Mr. Huntoon, and when in October, 1893, he came to Great Falls, this state, he at once took his place in the forefront of the profession.

From 1893 to 1900, Mr. Huntoon remained in Great Falls and devoted himself to the practice of law. He had become greatly interested in the sheep industry in the meantime, and he decided to give up his legal work for a time and devote himself to this business. For about three years he gave his attention to this department of the stock industry, but he could not content himself away from the work for which he had spent so much time in the preparation, and which he had found so interesting and absorbing as a profession. In 1904, he came to Lewistown and resumed his legal practice and during the eight years of his stay here, he has acquired a clientele of the most desirable order. Mr. Huntoon is an ardent Republican and early became a leader in the party organization. In 1904 he was chairman of the county central committee and he is always in demand when important political business is on hand. In 1908, Mr. Huntoon was elected county attorney and served for two years, since which time he has devoted himself to private practice.

Mr. and Mrs. Huntoon have only one child, Clarence Huntoon, born in Toronto, Canada, and now a citizen of Great Falls, where he is engaged in the automobile business.

Fraternally, Mr. Huntoon is connected with the A. F. & A. M., Cascade Lodge No. 34, of Great Falls, the Knights of Pythias and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, while his membership in the Judith Club bears witness to his interest in the commercial progress of the city. There is little to be found in Montana and still less in Fergus county which Mr. Huntoon does not regard with approbation and look upon as a promise of a future which shall transcend the best in the prosperous past.

DR. ARTHUR MORROW, since 1900 engaged in general medical practice in Kalispell, is a physician of unusually wide experience and a man of exceptional erudition. A student in some of the greatest medical universities in the world, including those of Edinburgh and Leipsic, he has been favored far beyond the average representative of his profession, and the results of his studies have ever been apparent in his work.

Dr. Arthur Morrow was born in Halifax, Nova Scotia, on March 16, 1864, the son of James B. and Mathilda (Richey) Morrow, both natives of England. James B. Morrow came to Halifax as a boy and there passed the remainder of his life, dying in 1882 when he was fifty-five years old. He was identified for years with the steamship business and was agent for some of the leading lines on the seas, among them being the Allan, White Star and Cunard lines, and being a member of the firm of S. Cunard & Company. He was for many years the president of the board of trade in Halifax and a director of a leading commercial banking and industrial company of that city. The mother came to Nova Scotia in her girlhood days and in Halifax met and married her husband. Seven children were born to them, Arthur Morrow being the sixth born.

Until he was fourteen years of age, Arthur Morrow attended the public schools of Halifax, then entering Mount Allison University, where he remained for two years. He next entered upon the study of medicine in the University of Edinburgh (Scotland), from which famous old institution he was duly graduated in 1886; he also spent two years in the University of Dalhousie in Halifax. Following his graduation Doctor Morrow served for three months as surgeon for the Cunard Steamship Company, and then entered private practice, first spending three months in the hospitals of Leipsic, Germany. He began the practice of his profession in Halifax, continuing there until 1893, that year marking his first connection with the state of Montana. He first located in Columbus Falls, Montana, remaining there but a few months, from there going to Sand Coulee and Stockett, where he had a contract as physician to the mines. In 1900, Doctor Morrow came to Kalispell, and here he has since remained in general practice.

In addition to his regular practice, Doctor Morrow is examining physician for the Central Life Insurance Company of Des Moines, Iowa, and the New York Life Insurance Company, and others. He is a member of the County and State Medical associations, and in a fraternal way is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen, Tamarack Camp No. 5401, and the Independent Order of Foresters.

While Doctor Morrow was in Halifax he occupied the post of pathologist to the Victoria Hospital and was professor of histology and physiology in Halifax Medical College, as well as examiner in those subjects in the University of Dalhousie, in Halifax. When he left that city he was presented by the students of the college with a handsome silver-mounted binocular glass, and the University of Dalhousie conferred upon him the honorary degree of M.D. While in Halifax he founded, edited and conducted the Maritime Medical News which became the accepted medical organ for the eastern Maritime provinces, as well as the official organ for the Maritime Medical Association. At various times during his practice in Canada, Doctor Morrow visited the East and spent considerable time in leading hospitals, chiefly in Montreal.

Doctor Morrow has taken an active part in the civic life of Kalispell since locating here, and has proved himself a citizen of merit and of value to the community. He has been a member of the high school board, and for two years was president of the chamber of commerce, and during the opening of the Flathead reservation he served in that capacity.

On August 20, 1900, Doctor Morrow was married in Bamberg, Germany, to Miss Franziska M. A. Prier de Saone of French and German parentage and a native of England. She is a daughter of Adolph Prier de Saone. Five children have been born to Dr. and Mrs. Morrow: Edith, James, Anthony, William and Francis. The first two were born in Halifax, the others in Montana.

The family home is maintained at No. 335 Third avenue East.

HON. JOHN E. ERICKSON. Now that the recall of judges is agitating the whole county, people are beginning to regard the men who are sitting on the bench with more attention, with eyes sharpened by the undoubted graft that has been carried on in some sections of the country. To meet the test of this rigid examination by the awakened public means that a man must not only be capable and fair minded but that he must be honest, and the Hon. John E. Erickson of the eleventh judicial district has successfully met this test. He has been a practicing lawyer for twenty years and during eight of these has served in a judicial capacity. Being naturally an observant man, his years at the bar have developed his powers of judging men to a remarkable degree and have aided him to become much more than an expositor of the law. Few men in Kalispell, Montana, and in the surrounding country, are held in higher regard than is Judge Erickson. He is a man who is recognized as one who would never flinch in the face of duty, and though this attitude has won him the enemies that a strong man always has, yet his friends are legion and the silent example of a man of so upright a personality is of untold importance to the community.

John E. Erickson was born in Dane county, Wisconsin, on the 14th of March, 1863. John E. Erickson is the son of Eric Erickson, who was a native of Norway. He came to America in 1861, and settled in Dane county, Wisconsin. Two years later he moved to Kansas and located a homestead in Greenwood county near Eureka, cleared the land and went to farming. He was a pioneer in this section of the state, and still resides on the original farm. He married Lena Amble, who was likewise born in Norway. She came to America with her brother and sisters in 1861, the same year that her husband arrived. They were married in Wisconsin, and she is still living. Seven children were born to this union, the judge being the eldest of the family. He was educated in the district school of Greenwood county, Kansas, leaving school at the age of eighteen. He later took a course in Washburn College in Topeka, Kansas, graduating in 1890 with the degree of B. A.

The first venture that Mr. Erickson took in the business world was in the newspaper business. After a year and a half spent in this work he determined to devote himself exclusively to the law work which he had taken up in the meantime. Soon after taking his degree he had entered the office of Clagston & Fuller, and had been diligently studying under the able tutelage of these two lawyers. He spent two years in their offices and was then admitted to practice in all of the courts of the state of Kansas. He began to practice in 1892 in Kansas, but a short time later removed to Montana. He located in Choteau in the spring of 1893 and began practice; it was not long before he was one of the best known lawyers in the county and had a flourishing practice. He was elected to the office of county attorney, strong evidence of the confidence in which he was held by the people of the county. He held this office for three terms, remaining in Teton county until 1904, when he was elected judge of the eleventh judicial district, which at that time comprised the counties of Flathead and Teton. In April, 1905, he removed to Kalispell, for there was more judicial work for him at this point. How satisfactory was his service as a judge may be surmised by the fact that he was re-elected to the bench in 1908 and again in 1912, serving a third term.

Politically Judge Erickson is a Democrat, but since he has been on the bench he has preferred to take no active part in politics, believing that anyone serving in a judicial capacity should hold himself free from any connection that might interfere with his fair mindedness. In his fraternal relations the judge is a member and active worker in the Masonic order. He belongs to the blue lodge, the chapter and the commandery of this order in Kalispell and has gone through all of the chairs of the blue lodge. He is also a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, of the Woodmen of the World and of the Modern Woodmen of America. The judge is a Lutheran in his religious beliefs and is a loyal adherent to this church.

On the 27th of June, 1898, John E. Erickson and Miss Grace Vance were married at Salt Lake City, Utah. Mrs. Erickson was born in Iowa, the daughter of A. M. Vance, of Des Moines, Iowa. Three children have been born to this union. The eldest, Vance Erickson, was born on the 16th of March, 1901; Elene was born December 21, 1904, and the youngest, John Cooper Erickson, was born on the 18th of December, 1908. The two eldest children were born in Choteau, and the youngest in Kalispell.

The judge is now in the prime of life and is reaping the results of a life of hard work. Compelled to work his way through college and to fight for every inch of ground that he has gained he is closely in sympathy with the strugglers in life and is eminently of that type who believes in letting "mercy season justice." The people of a busy civilization such as exists in the live state of Montana do not often realize the true value of a man like Judge Erickson, but in this case they have been unable to remain blind, and in the future will no doubt continue to heap honors and recognition upon him.

JAMES WILTSE WALKER. Kalispell has in J. W. Walker one of her leading merchants, as well as one of her most influential citizens and valuable public officials. His life in this section of the country has been one of the greatest activity, resulting in much good to the community and it has been thus far a worthy example of the qualities of enterprise and progressiveness which count for so much in the upward trend of the life of the country. Mr. Walker has been located in Kalispell something like eighteen years, in all of which time he has carried on active business enterprises. For fourteen years he conducted a drug business in the city, which, in 1909, he disposed of and entered the shoe business, a change which proved most successful from a business standpoint. He is today the proprietor of the most flourishing shoe business in Kalispell or vicinity. His public record has been one of greatest service to the city, and his unusual business capacity has played an important part in his labors for communal welfare, resulting in measures which have been of the greatest benefit to the city.

Mr. Walker was born in Oshkosh, Wisconsin, on February 5, 1867, and is the son of James H. and Harriet A. (Lee) Walker. The father was born in New Jersey, where he was reared, and he came to Wisconsin in his early life, locating there in the pioneer days of 1854. He died on March 6, 1912, while on a visit to his son, J. W., in Kalispell. He was seventy-six years of age at the time of his demise. The mother was a native of New Jersey also, born there in 1838. In 1851 her parents moved to Illinois, locating in Sycamore, where she met and married her husband on January 27, 1856. She died in North Dakota in September, 1906, and is there buried, as is also the husband and father. They became the parents of five children, J. W. being the third born. He attended the public schools of his home town, and after his graduation from the high school of Oshkosh was a student in the Wisconsin State Normal, graduating therefrom in 1886. From there he entered the Northwestern University at Evanston, Illinois, and was graduated from the department of pharmaceuticals in 1889. His first work was in the employ of his brother in Powers, in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan, where he remained for three years, after which he came to Montana, locating first at Columbia Falls, and there he opened up a drug store which he conducted for three years. His next move took him to Kalispell, where he saw the possibilities of success in the drug business here, and he accordingly opened a drug store, which he continued to conduct for fourteen years. In 1909 Mr. Walker sold out his interests in that business and became identified with the shoe business in the following year, since which time he has been the proprietor and owner of the finest shoe business in this section of the country.

With reference to his public service, mentioned in a previous paragraph, he has served as clerk and recorder of Flathead county, his election to the office coming in 1902, and succeeding himself to the office in 1904. He discharged the duties of the office in a manner highly creditable to himself during both terms, and proved himself as efficient in the matter of conducting the business of the county as in his personal interests. In 1910 he was elected alderman of the First ward in Kalispell, an office which expired on May 1, 1912. After assuming the duties of that office, he was elected a president of the city council, a position which he demonstrated his fitness for in a manner most unquestionable. During his service on the board of aldermen and as its president, many important changes were wrought in the civic life. He was directly instrumental in putting through the bill calling for the appropriation for the new city park, a movement which, from the splendid start already made, bids fair to give to Kalispell one of the fairest parks in the country.

J. L. Nines

He was the author of the bills which provided for street improvement, the direct result of which has been a mile and a half of asphalt pavement of the finest kind and a more modern system of street lighting, both of which were long felt wants in the city. In these, and many another way, has Mr. Walker demonstrated his high order of citizenship, and proved himself to be in every respect worthy of the confidence of his fellow men.

Mr. Walker is a prominent fraternalist, and holds membership in various orders, among them being the Masonic fraternity, in which he affiliates with the blue lodge of Kalispell; the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, in which he is past exalted ruler, and which he represented in the grand lodge at Baltimore in July, 1903, and in Philadelphia in 1906; and at the Elks' State Convention held in Kalispell in July, 1912, he was elected president of the "Montana State Association of Elks Lodges," for the ensuing year; the Royal Highlanders; the Modern Woodmen of America, of which he was ten years presiding officer of the local lodge, and a delegate to the grand lodge in St. Paul in 1900, and in Milwaukee in 1904. He is also a member of the Mystic Tilers, and holds membership in the Kalispell Club. He is a Republican in his political convictions and takes a leading part in the politics of this district, where his many excellent qualities and his ability in executive matters make him indispensable in party circles.

On December 30, 1891, Mr. Walker was united in marriage with Miss Blanche D. McNeely at Menominee, Michigan. Two children have been born to them, Darrell W., born March 10, 1893, at Columbia Falls, Montana, and Phyllis H., born February 5, 1897, in Kalispell. Both are at present attending high school.

JOSIAH L. WINES. Whatever may be the facts in favor of greater efficiency shown by youth in many lines of activity, it certainly cannot apply to the profession of law, for here experience is demanded, ripened judgment required and a knowledge that practically covers everything. No tyro can succeed to any degree and no text-books cover every case. In this profession, where a man of trained understanding and natural ability must meet on equal ground another no less well prepared for battle, it is reasonable to suppose that the experienced lawyer, the one who has given his best years to solving the perplexing problems often entangling fortunes, rights and reputations, and even endangering lives, might be far better equipped than one whose career may be not more than begun. The bar at Butte, Montana, is made up of able men, and one of its notable members is Josiah L. Wines, who for almost fifty years has been actively engaged in the practice of law. He was born in Wabash county, Indiana, November 25, 1838, and is a son of J. L. and Rebecca (Little) Wines. The father of Mr. Wines was born in Vermont and moved to Indiana in early manhood, engaged there in farming, and he died in 1840. After reaching Indiana he married Rebecca Little, who survived until 1906.

Josiah L. Wines was afforded excellent school advantages and after completing his course at Asbury University, Indiana, began his law studies, and later became a student in the law department of the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, and was there graduated in 1865. He established himself in the practice of his profession at Olathe, Kansas, where he remained for nine years, moving then to Nevada, and for five more years practiced at Elko, removing then to Eureka and later to Reno, where he continued in successful law practice until 1894, when he became a resident of Butte and here handles a practice that might well tax a much younger man. Mr. Wines, however, has been kindly treated by Nature, and it is difficult to credit the fact, in regarding his fine physical condition and considering his continuous professional success, that he has passed his seventy-third birthday. He declares himself no politician, nevertheless he is keenly interested in all public measures, especially in those which will affect the welfare of the city and state in which he has chosen to make his home. He has been identified, on one side or the other, with much important litigation in this section, and as an able lawyer enjoys the esteem and respect of his fellow members of the bar. He has been for six years the regularly retained attorney for the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company in Montana.

In 1860 Mr. Wines was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Jackson, who was born in Indiana, and they have one daughter, Eva L., who married first James B. Gallagher, a well known mining man of Butte, now deceased. She has one son, Frank M. Gallagher, of Butte. After the death of Mr. Gallagher she married Nat H. Wood, and they reside in San Francisco. For many years Mr. Wines has belonged to Masonic bodies and is well known in the fraternity in several states.

ARTHUR P. HEYWOOD. Energetic and able men, whether they elect to be identified with the professions or choose as their field of endeavor the industrial and commercial world, are welcomed to citizenship in any community, but are especially valued in a young and growing commonwealth. One of the successful members of the bar of Montana is Arthur P. Heywood, of Helena, the present county attorney of Lewis and Clark county, whose professional activities in Montana have been directed both toward gaining a personal success and toward advancing the prestige and welfare of that state.

Mr. Heywood is a native of Nebraska and obtained his literary education in that state, first in the public schools and later at the Wesleyan University at Centennial City. For some time after leaving college he gave himself to the profession of teaching, for the most part in rural schools, but his last year in that work was in the city schools of Ponca, Nebraska. In 1889, a young man of twenty, he engaged in the jewelry business at St. Paul, Minnesota, but a year later he decided to seek his fortunes in the new state of Montana and came to Helena, and thence went to Augusta. For four years he taught school and rode the range. At that time through the kindness and courtesy of D. J. Hogan, of Augusta, a graduate of a Chicago law school, he obtained the necessary books and set about assiduously to master by self-study the essentials of the profession of law. In 1894 he returned to Helena and continued his studies and that city has since been his home. His delvings into Blackstone and Kent were pursued with so much diligence and intelligence that after a comparatively short period of preparation he was admitted to the bar, and on December 31, 1896, was admitted to practice in the supreme court of the state. Possessing all the qualities of an able lawyer, Mr. Heywood has from the time of his admission to the bar continued in practice in Helena, his labors attended with a success that has gained for him a place of high professional standing in his adopted state. In November, 1906, he was elected county attorney of Lewis and Clark county for a term of two years, and in November, 1910, he was reelected to that office, his present position and one he has filled with ability and efficiency. As a part of his private practice, he is retained as the legal counsel of different corporations and is a director in several of them.

Mr. Heywood was born in southeastern Nebraska, April 28, 1869, a son of Hon. C. F. Heywood, of Nebraska. The father is a native of England and immigrated to the United States at the age of nineteen to seek the advantages of the new world. He became a pioneer of Nebraska, where he gave his attention to farming and cattle raising and entered actively into the public life of that state, having served as a member of the Nebraska legislature during both territorial days and after the admission of the state to the Union. There he was married to Miss Susan J. Starr, who was a native of Nebraska and died there in 1886. The elder Mr. Heywood has reached the advanced age of seventy-nine years and is now living retired near the scene of his long years of useful activity.

On July 7, 1908, at Centre City, Minnesota, Arthur J. Heywood was united in marriage to Miss Genevieve Thompson, of Le Roy, Minnesota. They have two children: Charlotte Maxine, born July 21, 1909, and Arthur P. Heywood, Jr., born August 5, 1911, Helena being the birthplace of both.

In the line of his profession Mr. Heywood sustains membership in the Montana State Bar Association. Fraternally, he affiliates with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Ability as a lawyer and a pleasing personality are qualities that have made him prominent and popular in both professional and social circles, and have won him many and influential friends. As a necessary balancing of work and recreation and because he really enjoys it, he gives a due portion of his time to outdoor sports, being especially fond of hunting and fishing. His interests in this direction are evidenced by his position as secretary of the Montana Fish and Game Protection Association, and in this capacity he devotes considerable attention to the stocking of the streams of the state with the various kinds of game fish. In this and in other ways he has made the interests of Montana his own and he well deserves recognition as one of the representative and public-spirited men of the state.

HERMAN FREYLER, SR. It is safe to say that Helena has few citizens more widely known for their charities than is Herman Freyler, Sr., who is also one of the men who help to maintain Helena's commercial standing at its enviably high mark. He has successfully passed through all the vicissitudes of frontier life, as he crossed the plains to the mining camps of Montana by ox train and did not find the journey an unalloyed pleasure trip. Indeed, it was only after many hardships that he settled in Jefferson county and began his mining operations. Before very long his success in the undertaking made all the discomforts and privations of his pioneer experience seem as nothing, for the rivers literally ran gold for him and he was one of the leading placer miners of his time. Mr. Freyler sold out his claim after a while and went into the general merchandise business at Wickes, Montana, opening his store there in 1894 and continuing to operate it until 1909. In that year he disposed of the establishment at Wickes and came to Helena, where he opened the first five, ten and twenty-five cent store in the city. In this, as in everything to which he set his hand, Mr. Freyler was signally successful.

At the time of beginning his business in Helena, Mr. Freyler became associated with his son, Herman Freyler, Junior. Both he and his wife, Stephanie (Liene-man) Freyler were born in Germany, but they were married in America. There were two sons and four daughters in the family and both of the sons are in business in Helena. Herman Freyler, Jr., was born in 1875, and in September, 1900 was married to Miss Daisy Waymire of Boulder, Montana. Three children were born of their union, Herman in 1902, James in 1904, and Daisy in 1905. The eldest child's birthplace was Elkhorn, Montana, and that of the two younger ones, Wickes. In June of 1906, the mother of the young family was removed from its midst by death.

Mr. Freyler, Jr., is a member of the Brotherhood of American Yeomen, and in politics is independent, being one of that number who do not require a party platform to determine their own principles and who believe rather in efficient office holders as bulwarks of the government than in any shibboleth of party name. He is a man who is always counted upon to support any movement for the betterment of his kind, and he is never counted on in vain.

CLAIR W. ROBISON. Prominent among those brilliant young lawyers in whom Dillon and the Beaverhead valley take just pride in Clair W. Robison. He has resided here since 1900 and two years after his arrival his splendid standing as a lawyer was stamped with public approval by his election as county attorney and during his incumbency of that office he made an unparalleled record, losing but two criminal cases. He has indeed a most excellent legal mind; gets at the gist of the question; discovers quickly the underlying principles of law; and states his conclusion in clear, terse English. His oratory is of high order and, combined with logic of unusual soundness, is sure of bringing conviction to the average mind. Mr. Robison specializes in criminal law.

He was born in Madison county, Iowa, January 22, 1875. He resided in that state until twenty-four years of age and then came to Montana, locating first at Livingston and remaining there until 1900, when he came to Dillon, where he has ever since resided. He received his early education in the public schools of Iowa and subsequently entered Drake University at Des Moines, Iowa, from which institution he was graduated. He had the unusual advantage of pursuing his first year's study of the law in the office of United States Senator Cummins, and at the same time attended Drake University, law department. He finished his preparation for the profession which he now adorns in the Chicago Law School; from which he received the degree of LL. B. He began his practice in Livingston and has been successful almost from the first, not sharing the sad experience of the Hon. Peter Sterling, of romance, who stared so many years at a blank wall before the arrival of clients. He is one of the most ardent of Republicans and from the first has taken an active interest in politics. As previously mentioned, he was here but two years when elected to the office of county attorney and his success has been a marvel to the entire profession. His reputation as an orator extends beyond the boundaries of Beaverhead county. He believes in the merit of kindly argument rather than abuse and is renowned as a diplomat at the bar. His practice has grown by leaps and bounds.

Mr. Robison was married on January 13, 1907, in Seattle, Washington, the young woman to become his wife and the mistress of his household being Rella Egbert, daughter of Cortland and Ellen Egbert, of Des Moines, Iowa. This charming young woman was the subject's classmate at Drake College. She is a member of the Baptist church and is a very enthusiastic Sunday-school worker.

Previous to entering the law, Mr. Robison was engaged in theatrical work for one year, his dramatic gifts and magnetic personality fitting him especially for acting. During his stage experience he appeared only in the legitimate drama. He still retains his interest in the drama. He loves nothing better than a quiet hour with his favorite authors, and is wonderfully "keen" about baseball, being a celebrated fan in Dillon. He also enjoys a good football game and during his college course was for four years half back on the "Varsity" team. He takes annual fishing and hunting trips, being an expert with rod and gun. His social proclivities are sufficient to make him take enjoyment in his fraternal relations. He is a member of the Redmen and is national representative of Montana to the Great Council of the United States, this being the fourth year of his incumbency of this office. He is also past great sachem of the state. The Knights of Pythias claims his membership and he has held all the chairs in the order; is representative in the Grand Lodge of the state of Montana and past chancellor commander of Occident Lodge, No. 8.

W. H. Johnson

Mr. Robison's first boyhood adventures as a capitalist were when living on the farm in Iowa when he speculated in horses as the pony trader, and made a tidy sum thereby. His parents, W. S. and Sarah Robison, still reside upon the Iowa homestead, the father following farming and stock raising and being a much respected member of the community in which his interests are centered. The subject is the eldest member in a family consisting of two boys and two girls.

CHARLES R. ST. CLAIR. Among the prominent business men of Glasgow, Charles R. St. Clair takes a leading rank as a jeweler and watchmaker of exceptional ability, and as one who has from a small beginning built up a thriving and prosperous business in the eighteen years of his residence here. Not alone has he won popularity in a business way, but Mr. St. Clair has been prominent in the official life of the city, and had the distinction of being the first treasurer of the city of Glasgow, a position which he handled successfully for six consecutive years.

Mr. St. Clair was born in Pottsville, Pennsylvania, on the 20th of December, 1871, and is the son of John A. and Anna M. (Caldwell) St. Clair. The father was a native of Pennsylvania; he was a carriage maker by trade and followed that business all his life. He died in Minneapolis in 1894. The mother, a native of New Jersey, born at Burlington, that state, is now a member of the household of her son, Charles, of this review.

When Charles St. Clair was seven years of age his parents moved from the Pennsylvania home to Ames, Iowa, in which place he began his schooling. In 1883, the family again moved, locating on this occasion in Beadle county, South Dakota, where he attended school until he was seventeen years of age. His first work after leaving school was in an office of the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad in a clerical capacity, where he remained for two years, then removed with his parents to Minneapolis, Minnesota, and there he clerked in a dry goods store for a year. He was determined to become conversant with some business or profession that would enable him to rise from the ranks of the employed, and after some thought decided to enter the Winona Horological School, and in due time he completed a thorough course of training, after which he took employment with the J. S. Allen Jewelry Company at Minneapolis. Mr. St. Clair remained with that firm for six months, in which time he gained much of practical business experience, and at the end of the time, felt himself competent to conduct a similar business for himself. He established a business in Minneapolis, but only remained there a short time, when he decided to go west. He first came to Glasgow on May 10, 1894, and from a necessarily modest beginning he has evolved his present thriving and successful business, which is unquestionably one of the leading places of its kind in Glasgow.

The facts of Mr. St. Clair's political service have already been touched upon in a foregoing paragraph. He is prominent in fraternal circles among other societies holding membership in the Masonic order and the Knights of Pythias, in which latter named organization he has held all offices in the local lodge. Mr. St. Clair owns considerable Glasgow property, which includes his own pleasant residence.

Mr. St. Clair has been twice married. His first wife was Miss Anna L. Kent, a native of Wisconsin, who died in 1902. She left two children, Ward K. and Nina M., who share the family home. In 1908 Mr. St. Clair married Miss Grace Jones of Minneapolis, a daughter of Edward Albert Jones of that city. One child has been born of their union, Russell E. St. Clair.

The mother of Mr. St. Clair makes her home with him, he being the only surviving one of her three children. Madame St. Clair is a gentle and refined lady, and is a great social favorite in Glasgow, as is also Mrs. St. Clair, her daughter-in-law. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

HIRAM FREDERICK JOHNSON. Prominent among the younger set of rising business men in Helena is Hiram Fred Johnson, one of the proprietors and owners of the Helena Business College. He, together with J. Lee Rice, took over the ownership of that institution of learning in 1910, and by their united efforts and as a result of their progressive, careful and attractive qualities, have placed the Helena Business College on a basis of such firmness and solidity that its future is amply assured.

Hiram Fred Johnson was born on his father's ranch at Race Track, Montana, on July 16, 1886. The father, Peter Johnson, is a native of Denmark, who came to this country at the age of eighteen years. He journeyed to Council Bluffs, Iowa, where he remained for some little time, and being attracted by the possibilities of the far west he moved on to Montana, making the trip by wagon train, the then prevalent mode of travel. He settled at a point which later became known and still bears the name of Race Track, and choosing land suited to his purpose, set about to establish himself in the ranching business. For thirty-eight years Peter Johnson has been engaged in the sheep and cattle raising business, and during that time he has been a prominent figure in live-stock circles of his state. Until four years ago he was active in every branch of the ranching industry, at which time the responsibilities of the business were lifted from his shoulders by one of his sons, and at the age of sixty-three he is practically retired, although he still participates to a certain extent in the direction and management of the business. Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, namely: William, a resident of Anaconda, Montana, and engaged in the transfer business. He is married and has three children. George is a resident of Deer Lodge, Montana, and is interested in the meat business. He is married and has one child. Elmer lives in Butte and is connected with the railroad and mining industry. He has one child. Walter, his father's successor in the ranch business, lives in Race Track. Edward, a resident of Helena, is connected with the Conrad Bank of Helena. Annie is married to Max Kramer, a prominent rancher of Race Track. Eva resides with her parents at the family home. Hiram Frederick is a resident of Helena. The mother, who was Hannah (Jensen) Johnson, born in Denmark in 1850, still lives, and is actively engaged as mistress of the Johnson home in Race Track.

Hiram Frederick received the advantages of the public schools of his locality, and after finishing there was sent to the Butte Business College. He was duly graduated from the commercial and shorthand departments of that school in 1903, and so well did he improve his opportunities while a student in that institution that he was regarded by Mr. Rice as being the most proficient student ever turned out by the college. Mr. Rice, proprietor of the college, was so impressed by his peculiar aptness and ability in those particular lines that he offered Mr. Johnson a position as instructor to a large class in the commercial and shorthand departments, which he accepted and filled acceptably until in 1910, when, with Mr. J. Lee Rice, they bought the interests of S. A. D. Hahn in the Helena Business College, and have since conducted the school in a manner that has won from its patrons the highest encomiums, and has placed them in the leading ranks of instructors of those especial branches of learning. They have enlarged the scope of the institution in every department, and now have an actual membership of about two hundred day students and about half that number in the night classes, as compared with a few dozens of enrollments, which constituted the entire membership or attendance at the time when they became proprietors of the college. The students of the Helena Business College are properly equipped to fill positions of trust and responsibility when they are graduated from that institution, and the proprietors assist them in becoming suitably located in paying positions when they leave the school. The corps of teachers is chosen with a view to entire competency and efficiency, and in every detail of management the school is kept up to an unusual standard of perfection. It is the object of the school to properly train young people for business life, and the ever-growing numbers of well-placed graduates is sufficient evidence of the success of their project.

Mr. Johnson, consistent with his ranch training in early life, is an expert horseman, and is especially interested in athletics of every branch. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, being active in the Helena lodge of that order. Politically he is an independent voter, acting always for what he believes to be the best interests of the civic welfare. He is a well known man in Montana, with an ever-widening acquaintance, and his strict attention to business has been a large factor in his success.

JOSEPH LEE RICE. The Helena Business College is a particularly well officered affair, and to Joseph Lee Rice, associate proprietor of the college, no little credit is due for the brilliant record made since the organization of the school on a new basis in 1910. The educational equipment of Professor Rice for his present position is especially good and his natural ability as an instructor is of an unusually high order. The training he received in the exacting details of management while associated with his brother, Professor Alonzo F. Rice, president and manager of the Butte Business College, was eminently calculated to fit him for similar duties of a more expansive nature, and as one of the proprietors of the Helena Business College he is thoroughly competent to conduct the affairs of that school in a manner that will redound to the lasting benefit of the institution.

Joseph Lee Rice was born in Chilhowee, Missouri, October 23, 1872. He is the son of Franklin J. and Mary A. (Sanders) Rice, both natives of Nashville, Tennessee. Franklin J. Rice, a veteran of the Civil war and in later life a prominent and successful farmer, was the father of two sons, Alonzo F. and Joseph Lee. both sons received liberal educations. Joseph Lee attended the grammar and high schools of Kansas City, Missouri, and was graduated from the high school of that city in 1890. Following his graduating therefrom he entered the Gem City Business College at Quincy, Illinois, where he took a complete course in business training, and in due time was graduated from the college. This course of training he supplemented with a course in higher accounting and received, in November, 1909, the degree of certified public accountant, granted by the University of Montana, and holds the distinction of being the only certified public accountant teaching in the state.

In 1894 Mr. Rice came to Montana, whither his brother Alonzo had preceded him some time since and was then conducting the Butte Business College. He became associated with his brother and they worked together for some time, the elder brother's experience and wisdom being of inestimable value to the younger man in training him for independent action in the same field a little later on.

In 1910 Mr. Rice learned that the Helena Business College was for sale, and he immediately took steps to secure the business. He, together with his friend and associate in the same line of endeavor, Mr. H. F.

Johnson, united forces and purchased the Helena Business College, which was the oldest college in the state of Montana, having been organized in 1883 by Mr. Englehorn. When the school came into their possession it was in a deplorable condition. It had been permitted to run down in efficiency, both as to its corps of instructors and in its general equipment, and when Messrs. Rice and Johnson became the owners it became immediately necessary for them to institute a course of remodeling and reconstructing in every branch of the school. They were entirely equal to the exigencies of the occasion, however, and here the splendid training of Professor Rice in the college of which his brother was president proved itself to be of great intrinsic value to the proprietors of the reorganized Helena Business College. In matters pertaining to proper equipment, and in the installing of new lines of study, as well as in bringing the corps of instructors up to the high standard of excellence which they demanded for the college of which they were to be the heads, the excellent practical experience of Professor Rice proved invaluable. In a comparatively brief space of time the enrollment from a mere handful of students increased to more than two hundred, with an attendance at the night classes of half that number. The school is enjoying an enviable reputation for efficiency and success in Helena, and its graduates experience no difficulty in securing valuable positions on leaving the schoolroom for the business world, for which they have been prepared by practical, common-sense and altogether efficient methods. Although the Helena Business College is in the hands of young men who are for the first time engaged in business on their own responsibility, their sterling character, combined with their great inherent ability in the field which they have entered, precludes any slight possibility of failure on their part.

Professor Rice is a member of the Helena Commercial Club, and is active and enthusiastic in his labors for the advancement of the general welfare of the city. He is a Republican, but not particularly active in a political way, the heavy demands of his business upon his time and energies making it manifestly impossible for him to devote much time to matters of that ilk. He is fond of outdoor sports, and is an athlete of considerable ability.

On July 17, 1899, Professor Rice was married to Miss Lulie Evans, the daughter of Mrs. Maria Evans, an old resident of Butte, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Rice are the parents of one child, J. Lee, Jr., who is now an attendant of the public schools of Butte, and whose birth occurred on August 31, 1902.

NEMUEL E. GOURLEY. Now the proprietor of the largest bakery business of Montana, Mr. Gourley has attained prominence in one line of business and in citizenship entirely as a result of his own enterprise and efforts. He began his career without any advantages or resources outside of his own character and energy, and is now one of the well known business men of Havre and Montana.

Nemuel E. Gourley was born in eastern Ontario, April 15, 1875, the third of six children born to Thomas and Margaret Gourley, both of whom were natives of Canada. The father was a photographer, and his death occurred in North Dakota in 1903 at the age of sixty-four. The mother passed away in 1878 when fifty years old.

Mr. Gourley was reared in that portion of Canada where he was born, attended the public schools there, and was nineteen years old when he came out to Montana and identified himself permanently with this great state of the Northwest. His first position in Havre was that of messenger for the Great Northern Express Company, and he continued one of the faithful employes of that company until 1903. During his boyhood years he had worked as apprentice and learned the trade of baker, and he now decided to make this the basis of an independent business career. Havre was at that time without any first-class bakery and confectionery, and his establishment proved a profitable enterprise from the very start. He bought the property where his business was located and has also acquired much other valuable real estate. At the time Havre received its second great visitation from fire, in 1904, his place of business was destroyed. He was one of the enterprising group of business men who had determined to rebuild before the fire had ceased burning, and almost out of the ashes he caused to rise a fine business structure known as the Gourley block. This is the home of the Gourley bakery, a plant whose ovens have a daily capacity of thirty thousand loaves of bread, which has a distribution and lasting popularity among many outside towns in the state. Taking one of the most staple of domestic industries, Mr. Gourley has not been content with an ordinary and local success, but has developed a business which supplies thousands of families with the most substantial article of daily existence.

Mr. Gourley has an attractive home in Havre and is one of the citizens of influence and standing among his associates and a large circle of friends. He was married at Helena, on December 8, 1909, to Miss Viola Raymond. They are members of the Presbyterian church, and fraternally he is prominent in Masonry, being a chapter Mason and Shriner and member of the Eastern Star. His politics is Republican. His principal diversion is hunting and fishing, and he devotes considerable time during the summer to the delights of forest and stream.

JOHN HALLER. There is no one nation that has contributed more to the complex composition of our American social fabric than has Germany, or has been of greater value in fostering and supporting our national institutions. Germany has given us men of sturdy integrity, indomitable perseverance, high intelligence and much business sagacity, and the country is generally recognized as supplying our most valuable type of immigrant. Of this nationality is one of Butte's most substantial business men, John Haller, organizer and secretary-treasurer of the Home Baking Company, one of largest concerns of its kind in the west and the only machine bakery in the state of Montana, its product being sent over the entire state and its excellence forming its own best advertisement. The other officers of the Home Baking Company are: Jacob Osenbrug, president, and J. H. Rathelmiller, vice-president. In addition to this extensive business Mr. Haller has large realty holdings and is interested in mining properties. He is of that most admirable type of citizenship, the self made man, having arrived a stranger in a strange land with a capital of only twenty-three dollars in his possession.

John Haller was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, the son of John and Christina (Eppler) Haller, the former born in August, 1829, and died in September, 1881, and the mother born in 1830 and died in November, 1899. Their son received his education in the excellent schools of his native land, attending school until he reached the age of fourteen years, when he turned his attention to the more practical affairs of life and set about learning the bakery and confectionery business. After serving his apprenticeship he went to Switzerland, where he remained for a year, and then becoming impressed with the reports of American opportunity, concluded to try his fortunes beneath the stars and stripes. He arrived in the new world in July, 1886, and located at Cleveland, Ohio, where for two years he followed his trade. He then decided to go west and he chose as his location Butte, Montana, here finding employment with the American Bakery and remaining with that concern for several years, after which he entered the employ of Jacob Osenbrug, his present business associate.

In February, 1894, being then equipped with sufficient capital and confidence, Mr. Haller began business on his own responsibility and established the Montana Bakery, of which he was the sole proprietor. He conducted this with remarkable success until 1904, when he admitted to partnership with him two other gentlemen, namely: Jacob Osenbrug and H. J. Rathelmiller, and the three established the large and thriving plant partially described above. The business is located at 107 Olympian avenue and employs on an average twenty-one persons, the daily output being about thirty thousands loaves. The Home Baking Company does a wholesale business, their bread being delivered far and wide throughout the state of Montana. Mr. Haller, as previously mentioned, has other interests of large scope and importance.

He made secure the possibilities of a happy home life and congenial life companionship by his marriage on March 18, 1893, to Anna Waldert, daughter of Joseph Waldert, a native of German Bohemia. Mrs. Haller, who is an admirable wife and helpmeet, came to this country in 1889 in company with her father and sisters, her mother having died before the departure of the family to America. The union of John Haller and his wife has been blessed by the coming of three children, namely: Beulah Christina, born in Butte, August 1, 1895, now a student in the Butte high school, and exceptionally fond of her studies, John William Christian, born June 6, 1898, and Thelma Elenora Maria, born in Butte, December 31, 1901. Mr. and Mrs. Haller maintain a handsome and commodious home at 603 West Park street, this residence being their own property. Here they entertain their friends, of which they possess large numbers. In politics Mr. Haller is a loyal Republican, but although he gives to public matters the consideration of the intelligent voter, he takes no active part in political affairs.

HELEN C. ROBERTS, M. D. To Mrs. Roberts belongs the honor of being the only woman physician of Great Falls. Few women are found in the professions of law and medicine in this state, but that is not because Montana does not offer equal opportunities to women, but because of the small proportion of the female population. Probably if a comparison were made on such a basis, it would be found that there are relatively as many women so engaged in the west as in the greater centers of population further east.

Dr. Roberts was born in the town of Gilmenton, Wisconsin. This little city was named in honor of her father, Frank Gilman, who had come west from Vermont and settled on a farm in Wisconsin. Mr. Gilman was born in New Hampshire in 1825. He went first to Vermont and then to Wisconsin. The township of Gilmanton was also named in his honor, and besides being a prosperous farmer, he was active in public affairs, and at the time of his death in 1880 a member of the Wisconsin legislature. Mr. Gilman was a typical New Englander of the type whose industry and high ideals played such a part in the development of the middle west. His four children all took up a profession and all attained success and honor in their callings. The mother, too, was a New Englander. Her maiden name was Calista Rathbun, and she was born in Connecticut. She died at Great Falls in October, 1905, while here on a visit to her only daughter, Dr. Roberts. Mrs. Gilman was eighty-three at the time of her death. All of her sons entered the law and are now engaged in the practice of that profession. Burton Gilman is one of the best known members of the bar at Alliance, Nebraska. Schuyler Gilman and Charles W. are successfully following that same calling at Mondovia, Wisconsin. Dr. Roberts is next to the youngest in point of age.

When Dr. Roberts was ready to begin her collegiate work, she first entered the academic department of the Northwestern University, but after she had been in college for a time, decided to study medicine, and to that end went into the medical department of the Northwestern University, and in 1888 graduated from the institution. Upon receiving her diploma she was appointed interne of the Cook County Hospital, an honor greatly coveted by all medical graduates, in the city of Chicago, both because of the experience to be gained in this large institution, and because the appointment is made as a result of a stiff examination. At the expiration of her year as interne, Dr. Gilman practiced for one year in Wisconsin and then went to Hermansford, Nebraska. In this place she remained three years and had a most satisfactory practice. It was while in Nebraska that Miss Gilman became Mrs. Roberts. James W. Roberts was born in Chadron, Nebraska, and married to Miss Gilman there on November 19, 1891. They removed to Great Falls in 1894, and here Mr. Roberts has been engaged in the insurance business. Dr. Roberts' large practice bears witness that Montana has no prejudice against women in professions—when they are successful at all events. No woman physician in the state has a higher standing than has Great Falls' one representative of women in the field of medicine.

Dr. Roberts belongs to the State, the American and the National Medical Associations. In addition to her work in her profession, Dr. Roberts takes quite an active part in lodge councils. She is a member of the Eastern Star, of the Rebeccas, the Ladies of the Macca-bees and of the Women of Woodcraft.

Dr. Roberts has considerable property of value in the city, notably the beautiful home on First avenue, North. By wise investments, she has put her financial affairs on a firm basis. Her only child, Llewellyn F. Roberts, was born in Great Falls on March 7, 1896, and is now attending high school.

As has been said, Dr. Roberts' paternal ancestors were of old New England stock, and in the affairs of New Hampshire, Samuel Gilman, the grandfather of Dr. Roberts, took a prominent part. His wife, Nancy, too was a person of strong character and well known during her lifetime.

HENRY HAGEN. Prominent among those whose activities have benefited the city of his adoption stands Henry Hagen of Fort Benton, where for a number of years he has been engaged in building and contracting. It may be said not inappropriately that he was born to the business, the male members of the family having been engaged to a large extent in this line for something over three hundred years, and he also comes of a long line of freedom-loving Germans, his grandfather, Hartwig Hagen, having been exiled from the Fatherland in 1882 on account of his Socialistic tendencies and speeches. He was a contractor by occupation, and died in 1896, at the age of seventy-nine years, while his wife passed away in Germany in 1882, aged sixty-three years. Jorgan Hagen, father of Henry, was born in Germany, followed the trade of contractor in Holstein all of his life, was an officer in the German army during the Franco-Prussian war, and died in 1893, at the age of fifty-two years. He married Maria Spreckel-son, also a native of Germany, who was forty years of age at the time of her death, in 1875.

Henry Hagen attended the public schools of Germany until he was sixteen years of age, at which time he began to learn the carpenter trade with his father. He also had a three-years course in a mechanical school in Germany. After following the carpenter's trade for three years in Germany, in 1894 he came to the United States, settling first at Big Sandy, Montana. At first he engaged as sheep herder in the employ of C. H. Heavers and subsequently for John Feldt, but in 1896 returned to the carpenter business, which he has followed at Fort Benton ever since. He has erected some of the finest buildings in the city, among which may be mentioned the Chouteau House, and the list of valuable dwellings he has built is a formidable one. He owns a comfortable home of modern architecture in Fort Benton, is well and favorably known in social circles, and his family has many friends in this section. Mr. Hagen is especially fond of all out-door sports, and has some local reputation as a hunter and fisherman. Like many of the successful business men of Fort Benton, he owns a well-kept ranch in Chouteau county. In political matters Mr. Hagen has followed the example of his forefathers by his adherence to the Socialist party. He belongs to no particular church, but has contributed to movements of the various denominations. He has taken a prominent part in fraternal work, being chief patriot of the Odd Fellows and treasurer of the local lodge of the Modern Woodmen of America.

On August 1, 1897, Mr. Hagen was married at Fort Benton, to Miss Johanna Sommer, daughter of John Sommer, of Germany, and they have had two children: Rosie, born February 17, 1899; and Anna, born in 1903, bright, interesting young ladies who are attending the Fort Benton schools.

GEORGE M. WOODS. A leading citizen of Cascade county, with whose stock raising and ranching interests he was closely identified for a long period of years, is George M. Woods, of Cascade, now serving capably in the office of justice of the peace. Mr. Woods is a man of intelligence and learning, his early training having been for a profession, but circumstances over which he had no control caused him to abandon his early vocation and devote himself to the same occupation that had been followed by his father, and his success in that field demonstrated the fact that he would have probably achieved a high position in any of the various walks of life to which he had given his attention. He has been a resident of Montana since pioneer days, and wherever he has resided has had the full confidence and esteem of his fellow-citizens. Judge Woods was born in Lafayette county, Missouri, December 25, 1854, and is a son of Patrick and Elizabeth (Terrille) Woods.

The Woods family is an old-established one in the South, Patrick Woods, the great-grandfather of George M., coming to this country from England and settling in Kentucky, where he acted as royal surveyor for King George III. The father of Judge Woods was born in Missouri and his wife was also a native of that state, she likewise belonging to an old and honored family. Her maternal great-grandfather Humes was among the first settlers of that state. Mrs. Woods died in 1859, at the age of thirty-four years, and not long thereafter her husband with the eight children joined a party of eighty persons that were traveling overland from St. Joseph, Missouri, by ox-team to Montana, the destination being Virginia City. The trip, which was attended by considerable hardships, took four months and four days. On their arrival in camp in Virginia City, provisions were very scarce and they were compelled to pay $100 per sack for flour, and when the provisions finally arrived, other trains also came in and flour dropped to $25 per sack. On settling in the Prickly Pear valley, some few miles from the city of Helena, Patrick Woods decided to plant several acres in potatoes, but was obliged to pay $800 for a two-horse wagon-load of tubers, which were very scarce at the time. He eventually found a way of saving his money, however, as he and his children cut the eyes from the potatoes for planting and the bulk were sold to the settlers for table use at the rate of seventy-five cents per pound. The land thus taken up was secured under a government grant, and was the first to be broken by the plow in that section. Patrick Woods was a man of retiring disposition and never sought nor cared for public office. However, he was a man of high ideals and fearless in supporting what he considered justice, being a member of the Vigilantes and a staunch adherent of law and order. His death occurred February 27, 1904, when he was eighty-four years of age, at which time his community lost one of its best and most public-spirited citizens.

The next to the youngest of his parents' children, George M. Woods was educated in the public schools of Helena, which he attended until he was twenty-two years of age. His early life was spent on the home ranch, but it was his ambition to follow a professional career, and accordingly he entered the law offices of Norfolk & Bullard, the leading legal firm of Helena at that time. He read and studied law for about three years, but when he was about ready to begin practice became afflicted with an impediment in his speech, which necessitated his seeking another vocation. For four years he was connected with the United States Government mail service, and in 1894 removed to Cascade county, settling in township 17, range 2 West, where he engaged in farming, gardening and stock raising, in which he met with well-merited success. In 1910 he sold his ranch and moved to Cascade, having been elected to the office of justice of the peace during the preceding fall. Efficient and wise administration of affairs has caused his election each succeeding year, and at present he maintains the high dignity of his office, causing universal satisfaction among the people of his district. In political matters, Mr. Woods is a Democrat, and he has always taken an active interest in all public matters, especially those that effect the welfare of his adopted community. During the past quarter of a century he has interested himself in Oddfellowship, and at present belongs to Helena Lodge No. 1, in which he is very popular. He is a member and trustee of the Christian church.

Judge Woods was married, September 21, 1901, at Great Falls, Montana, to Miss Annie V. Wright, a native of Missouri. They have no children.

ELMER L. VINEYARD, representative of the state of Montana of the Aultman & Taylor Machinery Company, of Mansfield, Ohio, dealers in all kinds of farming machinery, has illustrated in his career what may be accomplished by the man of industry, perseverance and energy, even though in his youth he does not have the advantages of wealth and influence. Reared to the life of an agriculturist, he early decided that the mercantile field offered better opportunities for his abilities, and, depending on his own resources, started out to gain success in business and prominence in his chosen field. That he has succeeded in accomplishing his purpose will be cheerfully testified to by his numerous friends and business acquaintances in Great Falls. Mr. Vineyard was born in Jefferson county, Missouri, December 25, 1876, and is a son of Stephen and Sarah (McDonald) Vineyard.

Mr. Vineyard's paternal ancestors came from Holland in colonial days, and members of the family served with distinction during the Revolutionary war as soldiers. His maternal ancestors were of Scotch birth, and the original family homestead, secured from the government in Missouri, before that commonwealth secured statehood, is still in the Vineyard name. Stephen Vineyard was born in Roanoke county, Virginia, and for many years was engaged in agricultural pursuits in Jefferson county, Missouri, whence he removed when a young man, and where he still makes his home, as does his wife, who was born in that state. They had a family consisting of one daughter and seven sons, Elmer L. being the second oldest.

The early life of Mr. Vineyard was spent on the old family homestead in Jefferson county, and during the winter months, when his services were not needed in cultivating the farm he attended the district schools of the vicinity. When eighteen years of age he left home to accept a position with F. E. Meyers & Brothers, of Ashland, Ohio, manufacturers of pumps and hay tools, and for this concern he soon became sales representative for Missouri and southern Illinois. After spending three years with this firm, Mr. Vineyard resigned his position to enter the service of Fairbanks, Morse & Company, in engineering and irrigation work, and after spending some time in erecting engines came to Montana as representative of the company in 1894. From that year until 1900 he was with the Great Northern Railroad, being engaged in the water supply department and in the erection of pumps and kindred work, and in the latter year returned to the employ of Fairbanks, Morse & Company and continued with that firm until 1904. In 1905 he formed a partnership with T. E. Lowery and established the irrigation and machinery business of the Lowery Engineering Company, at Great Falls, this association continuing until 1909, at which time Mr. Vineyard severed his connection with that enterprise to become state representative for the Aultman & Taylor Machinery Company. Since accepting this position Mr. Vineyard has increased the business in his territory by 200 per cent, and the concern does one of the largest trades in the Northwest. The long and thorough experience of its local representative has stood him in good stead, and there is no better informed man in this line in the state. As a business man he has won the confidence and esteem of a wide circle of acquaintances, and is very popular in social affairs. His political views are those of the Democratic party, although he has taken no active part in matters of a public nature; and he was reared in the faith of the Methodist church.

ALBERT J. FOUSEK. The correct definition of public service is that every department of public life shall be conducted in the best possible manner for the welfare of the largest number. It is given to all citizens, even in private life, in some measure to influence society and in some degree to affect the tone of political morality, but those who take an active part have the fuller opportunity given them; they can impress their ideas more emphatically and more immediately bring pressure to bear on public tendencies. One of Great Falls' progressive and public-spirited citizens, whose name has been associated with the work of public reform, and a stalwart adherent of municipal ownership, is Albert J. Fousek, alderman of the Third ward for the last six years, and well known in business circles of the city. Mr. Fousek is a native of Bohemia, and was born November 27, 1869, a son of John and Anna E. Fousek. The family came to the United States in about 1877, settling in Renville county, Minnesota, where John Fousek spent the latter years of his life in farming, and died at Olivia. His widow survives him and still makes her home on the old property. Of their children, Albert J. is the youngest.

Albert J. Fousek was about eight years of age when he accompanied his parents to this country, and until he was fourteen years of age attended the public schools of New York City. At that time the family removed to the Minnesota farm, and there he continued until he attained his majority. As a boy, during his residence in New York, he had learned the trade of cigar maker, and after leaving the farm followed that vocation as a journeyman until November 25, 1894. At that time Mr. Fousek came to Great Falls, where he secured employment in the cigar factory of Emmet R. Race, in whose service he continued for three years, and then embarked in business on his own account. Starting in a small way and manufacturing his own product, the excellence of his goods and the able manner in which he has directed his affairs have caused the business to grow steadily and it now has assumed large proportions, the monthly output being about 17,500 cigars, and a number of skilled workmen being employed. Mr. Fousek is a Democrat, and at all times has stood for good government and honesty in politics, a friend of education, morality and public-spirited citizenship. His aldermanic services have been of great value to his city, and he has been able to get through some good measures and to help defeat some bad ones. He has been the indefatigable champion of municipal ownership, and is now engaged in gathering data along this line with the idea in view of eventually seeing numerous measures now in preparation advocated. His business ventures have been successful and he has given evidence of his faith in the future of Great Falls by investing much of his capital in realty in the city, where he also owns his own home, a modern residence. Fraternally, Mr. Fousek is connected with the Knights of Pythias, the Modern Woodmen and the Fraternal Order of Eagles, and also holds membership in the Commercial, Electric City and Taxpayers' Clubs and the Cigar Makers' Union.

On November 20, 1892, Mr. Fousek was married at Montgomery, Minnesota, to Miss Anna Havelick, daughter of F. J. Havelick, a native of that state. Mr. and Mrs. Fousek have had six children: Mary and Lydia, born in St. Paul; and Bert, Louis, Benjamin and Blanche, born in Great Falls. The family residence is situated at No. 721 Second avenue, South.

JOHN A. ARTHURS. The history of the city of Chester will always give distinction to the name of its first mayor, Mr. J. A. Arthurs, who was the first official chosen to fill this post when the city was incorporated, and is also the present mayor, having been re-elected.

Mr. Arthurs, who has been identified with northern Montana throughout his active career, was born in St. Joseph, Michigan, March 18, 1880, and was educated in the local schools of that city. He was at an early age thrown upon his own responsibilities, and has won success in business and public honors through the force of his own character and resources. In 1894 he came west and entered the employment of the Benton Cattle Company as a cowboy, his work and headquarters being eighteen miles south of the site of Chester. After eight years with this company, he spent about nine months in Chicago, after which he returned to Montana and started in business for himself at Chester. As a representative business man, his fellow citizens chose him as the first mayor of the new city in 1909, and in May, 1911, again elected him by a large majority. His politics is Republican, and his church is the Methodist.

Mr. Arthurs was married in Chicago, March 6, 1905, to Miss Beatrice Barnes. They have a comfortable home in Chester, and have a large circle of friends in the city and vicinity.

Mr. Arthurs' father was James A. Arthurs, who was born in Ontario, Canada, in early life moved to St. Joseph, Michigan, and was a prospering farmer, but died when his son was about five years old. His wife was Rosa (Des Broe) Arthurs, a native of Michigan, and now living in Kalispell, Montana, at the age of forty-nine.

CHARLES A. LENHART. Standing conspicuous among the live, energetic and prosperous business men of Townsend is Charles A. Lenhart, who holds a position of importance and responsibility, being secretary and manager of the Townsend Hardware Company, of which he is a stockholder and a director. A native of Ohio, he was born, April 3, 1876, in London, Madison county.

Mr. Lenhart's father, Samuel Lenhart, was born in York county, Pennsylvania in 1837. At the age of nineteen years, wishing to try the hazard of new fortunes, he trekked across the plains with a wagon train to Montana, and at Last Chance opened a blacksmith's shop, which he managed to such good purpose that he accumulated a sufficient sum of this world's goods to enable him to return east, and commence life in a more civilized community. Locating in Ohio, he resided in London until the outbreak of the Civil war, when he enlisted as a soldier in the Ohio Volunteer Infantry. Going to the front with his command, he took part in many engagements, at the Battle of Antietam being severely wounded through the body and arm. Being taken to the hospital, he remained there a year, and then returned to London, Ohio, where for ten years he was engaged in the manufacture of wagons and carriages. Then, owing to ill health, he was forced to sell out his business and seek a change of climate. Going with his family to South Dakota, he was for four years engaged in the lumber business at Hill City. His health again failing, he came to Montana, and after spending a year in Helena, he went, in 1895, to Townsend, where he was engaged in blacksmithing five years. He then returned to Helena, and was there a resident until his death, March 28, 1911. His wife, whose maiden name was Isabelle Crawford, was born in Madison county, Ohio, and is now living in Dayton, Ohio. Four children were born to them, one of whom has passed to the life beyond, and three are living, namely: Charles A., the special subject of this brief sketch; Glenn, who is in the employ of the International Harvester Company, at Helena; and Grace Mabel, a stenographer and bookkeeper, living with her mother in Dayton, Ohio.

Charles A. Lenhart obtained his high school education in London, Ohio, and at Hill City, South Dakota. Soon after leaving school, in 1894, he came to Townsend, Montana, and was here fortunate enough to find employment with the Berg Hardware Company, with which he was connected for twelve years, gaining a thorough knowledge of the business in all its details. Going then to Lewistown, Montana, he was there employed by the Montana Hardware Company for a year, and the following three years was in the employ of the Anaconda Hardware Company, at Anaconda, Montana. Returning to Townsend in 1910, Mr. Lenhart became one of the incorporators of the Broadwater County Hardware Company, and is now not only one of its stockholders, but is manager and secretary of the firm, a position for which he is amply qualified, not only on account of his natural abilities, but by reason of his long and valuable experience in this branch of trade, his extended acquaintance throughout northern Montana, and through the fact that the firm to which he belongs is the successor of the oldest established hardware company in Townsend.

Mr. Lenhart married, November 3, 1899, Isabelle Norton, who was born in Montana, where her father, George A. Norton, was a pioneer settler. Mr. and Mrs. Lenhart are the parents of six children, namely: Auburn Earl, Samuel Arthur, Donald Vaughn, Algernon Norton, Paul Leighton, and Elizabeth Crawford. Mr. Lenhart is a member of North Star Lodge No. 19, I. O. O. F. at Townsend.

HARRY C. NEFFNER. An essentially prominent and influential citizen of Montana, who thinks the Flat-head region of this state in every way comparable to the Garden of Eden, is Harry C. Neffner, who has been a resident of Dixon for the past three years. Mr. Neffner is most successfully engaged in the lumber business in this place and he is a citizen whose loyalty and public spirit have ever been of the most insistent order.

Harry C. Neffner was born in Clinton county, Ohio, April 7, 1869, and he is a son of Henry Neffner, whose birth occurred in the city of Columbus, Ohio, and who has lived in the Buckeye state during his entire lifetime. In his younger days the father was engaged in the flour-milling business but later in life he turned his attention to lumbering and the operation of a sawmill. He was a gallant soldier in the Union ranks during the Civil war and was one of the valiant defenders of

John A. Withers.

Cincinnati during Morgan's raid. He is now a resident of Martinsville, Ohio, and has reached the age of seventy-four years. His wife, whose maiden name was Anna Cole, was born in New York, whence she went to Ohio as a young girl, there meeting and marrying Mr. Neffner. She was summoned to the life eternal in 1904, at the age of sixty-four years. Mr. and Mrs. Neffner became the parents of four children, all of whom are still living in Ohio except Harry C., the oldest in order of birth.

In the public schools of Clinton, Ohio, Harry C. Neffner received his educational training and he resided there until he had reached his twenty-first year, in 1890, when he went to Tacoma, Washington, where he was engaged in the lumber business for the ensuing five years. In 1894 he came to Montana and settled at Columbia Falls, where he looked after the late Marcus Daly's lumbering interests for a period of five years, at the expiration of which he went to Sedan, this state, there engaging in the lumber business on his own account. He was a resident of Sedan for twelve years and met his first reverses when his entire business saw-mill and lumber was destroyed by fire. Undaunted, however, and with renewed courage, he took what could be gathered from the wreckage and came to Dixon, where he established a lumber yard and where he is now recognized as one of the leading business men of this section. In addition to lumber he handles building material of all kinds, including cement, and also deals in the various kinds of coal in demand in this part of the state. The scope of his operations has increased wonderfully within the last few years and he controls an extensive and lucrative business. As a boy he earned his first money unloading lumber on Saturdays, attending school during the week days. After finishing high school he became a teacher and was engaged in that profession in Ohio for some three years prior to coming west.

In politics Mr. Neffner is a staunch supporter of the principles and policies for which the Progressive party stands sponsor and while he is deeply and sincerely interested in all matters affecting the good of the general welfare he is not an office seeker and contents himself with voting for men and measures that will benefit the town and state at large. In a fraternal way he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Order of Hoo Hoo. In religious matters he and his wife are active and devout members of the Congregational church and she is a valued member of the Ladies' Aid Society. Mr. Neffner has traveled a great deal and is well posted on the western country. He says: "Nothing has ever been put in print that exaggerates the merits of Montana and the Flathead country. Before settling in Dixon I traveled by team and tent through the Palouse, the Big Bend and Nez Perce country, looking for a location—also through the Flathead reservation. I decided on Dixon and do you know why? Because I found it to be the land of plenty. It is the gateway to the Flathead Indian reservation. The climate is as glorious as the gates of Heaven; the water as pure as the morning dew, the soil is as fertile as the Garden of Eden—and only twenty-six miles to Paradise."

At Kalispell, Montana, in September, 1906, Mr. Neffner was united in marriage to Miss Emma Palmer, daughter of William and Mary Palmer, of Big Fork, Montana, where Mrs. Palmer, a widow, has a fine ranch. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Neffner, namely,—Mary Ann and Emmy Lou.

JOHN F. FERGUSON is editor of the Conrad Observer and has been identified with local journalism at Conrad, Montana, since 1905. The dissemination of news, the discussion of public questions and the promotion of the general welfare of his community through the columns of his paper constitute life's object with him as a private citizen. In addition to his interests in journalism Mr. Ferguson is the owner of a fine farm of 440 acres in Teton county, the same being in a high state of cultivation.

At Watertown, in Herkimer county, New York, December 19, 1859, occurred the birth of Mr. Ferguson, who is a son of Oliver A. Ferguson. The father was born in the Empire state of the Union in 1819 and during his active career was a millwright by trade. He was summoned to the life eternal in 1873, at the age of fifty-four years. His wife, whose maiden name was Katherine Kincaid, was likewise a native of New York and she died at Belleville, province of Ontario, Canada, at the age of eighty-six years, her demise having occurred June 10, 1911. Ten children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Ferguson and of the number six are living, in 1912.

In the early '60s the Ferguson family removed from New York to Ontario, Canada, and there the young John F. received his educational training, which included a course in the high school at Belleville, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1874. After leaving school he entered upon an apprenticeship to learn the printer's trade. During the first year of his apprenticeship he received a salary of five dollars per month and during the last three years his salary amounted to five dollars per week. After becoming a full-fledged printer, Mr. Ferguson worked as a journeyman for two years in Canada and then went to Chicago, Illinois, where he worked in the offices of a number of the leading newspapers of that metropolis. He was in the employ of the Inter Ocean before that paper had linotype machines. He remained in Chicago for five years, at the end of which he came to Montana. This was in 1894 and he first located at Great Falls, where he entered the employ of the Great Northern Railroad Company as fireman. Three and a half years later he was made engineer on the Great Northern line and he continued as such until the outbreak of the Spanish-American war, in 1898, when he enlisted as a soldier in Company A, First Montana Volunteers. He was in the service of the United States army for eighteen months and was a non-commissioned officer and wagoner of his company in the Philippine Islands until he received his honorable discharge, in November, 1900, at San Francisco. He participated in a number of important engagements marking the progress of the war and acquitted himself with all of honor and distinction as a soldier.

After the close of his military career Mr. Ferguson returned to Great Falls, where he became a member of the city fire department. This position was not to his liking, however, and on April 25, 1901, he accepted a position as editor and publisher of the Shelby Independent. He remained at Shelby until November, 1904, when he came to Conrad, where he has been editor and proprietor of the Conrad Observer since April, 1905. At the time of his advent in this place there were but nine buildings in the entire town. Mr. Ferguson owns the lot and building in which his newspaper offices are located and his plant is equipped with all the latest equipment in the way of printing presses. The Observer is a weekly paper and has a circulation of seven hundred and fifty; it boasts a large list of advertisers. In politics the paper favors the Republican party and Mr. Ferguson himself is a stalwart in the ranks of that organization. While he does not take an active part in local politics he exerts considerable influence for the good of the public welfare through the medium of his paper. In a fraternal way he is affiliated with Conrad Lodge No. 80, Free and Accepted Masons, and he is likewise a member of the Modern Woodmen of America at Conrad.

September 5, 1911, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Ferguson to Miss Gertrude M. Shoemaker, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Adam Shoemaker, a native of Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Ferguson have no children. They are popular in connection with the best social affairs of Conrad and are honored and esteemed by all with whom they have come in contact. Their home is the scene of attractive gatherings and is renowned for its generous hospitality.

SAMUEL H. BAUMAN. A recent educator has said that "the true business college aims to fit men to live, and to make a living, too. It not only inculcates truth, honest dealing, industry, enterprise, thrift, temperance—the foundation of correct living—but also gives an occupation in which these virtues may be practically applied." This statement appearing as the foreword in the catalogue issued by the proprietors of the Great Falls Commercial College, of whom Samuel H. Bauman, the special subject of this brief personal review, is one, shows that this educational institution was established for a wise and useful purpose, and its large number of ex-students now numbered among the most successful young business men and women of the state, and its present body of wide-awake students, prove that its founding was not in vain.

Samuel H. Bauman was born in Lansing, Iowa, January 18, 1864, and grew to manhood on the parental farm. His father, the late Samuel A. Bauman, was born and bred in Switzerland. Inheriting the industry and thrift of his ancestors, he was anxious to begin life for himself under the best possible conditions, and as a youth bade good-bye to home and friends, and crossed the broad Atlantic in search of fame and fortune. He located in Iowa in pioneer days, and subsequently, having accumulated some money as a farm laborer, bought a tract of land in Lansing, Allamakee county, and on the homestead which he improved carried on general farming until his death in 1908, at the advanced age of seventy-eight years. His wife was born in New York state, and is still living on the home farm, in Lansing.

The third child in a family of nine children, Samuel H. Bauman was educated in the Lansing schools, being graduated from the high school with the class of 1881. Scholarly in his tastes and ambitions, he was allowed to continue his studies, and attended first the Buffalo Business College in Buffalo, New York, and the Davenport Business College, in Davenport, Iowa. Being graduated from the latter institution, Mr. Bauman, in 1885, accepted a position as instructor in the Helena Business College, at Helena, Montana, where he taught for eight years. Coming to Great Falls, Montana, in 1894, Mr. Bauman, in partnership with Mr. Robert Deardorf, established the Great Falls Commercial College, which under their wise management has grown and flourished, being now the leading institution of the kind in northern Montana, if not in the entire state. This college aims to give to young men and young women a practical training in business affairs, the business course embracing bookkeeping, rapid calculations, banking, correspondence, business arithmetic, commercial law, spelling, and business writing. The shorthand course includes shorthand, touch typewriting, manifolding, letter copying, business writing, correspondence and spelling. The English course, with which it is necessary all should have a familiar acquaintance, comprises a course in reading, writing, spelling, grammar, arithmetic, history, geography, and letter writing. A rapid, legible and easy style of penmanship is taught with each course, and daily drills are given in spelling and the study of words, the ability to spell and use words correctly being of vital importance in every walk of life. To accommodate pupils who work during the daytime, a night school is in session three evenings each week for seven months, beginning in October, individual instruction in chosen studies being given to each student. The school has been successful from the start, at the present time, in 1912, one hundred pupils being enrolled.

Politically Mr. Bauman is a Republican, and fraternally he belongs to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, at Great Falls. Religiously he is a member of the Presbyterian church.

Mr. Bauman married, at Helena, Montana, in April, 1893, Elizabeth Steinberner, who was born in Ohio. She passed to the higher life in April, 1900, in early womanhood, leaving no children.

ERNEST A. SOUTHWICK, who has resided in Libby since 1909 and who has maintained his home in Montana since 1894, is here most successfully engaged in the newspaper business, being editor and part owner of the Western News, a prominent weekly paper with a circulation of one thousand. The dissemination of news, the discussion of public questions and the promotion of the general welfare through the columns of his paper constitute life's object with him as a private citizen for he has been interested in journalism during practically his entire active career thus far.

November 24, 1875, in Riley, Kansas, occurred the birth of Ernest A. Southwick, a son of Aaron and Annette (Fairbanks) Southwick, the former of whom was born in the state of Vermont and the latter in Michigan. Aaron Southwick removed to Kansas about 1866 and there was actively engaged in agricultural operations for a number of years. He was a teacher and writer of note and was a man of distinctive prominence and influence in his home community prior to his demise, which occurred in 1909, at the age of seventy-seven years. He was a Republican in his political convictions and during the latter years of his life was a devout Christian Scientist in his religious belief. Mrs. Southwick preceded her honored husband to the life eternal and passed away in 1901, aged fifty-seven years.

The youngest in order of birth in a family of five children, Ernest A. Southwick was reared to adult age in Riley, Kansas, where he attended the public schools until he had reached his thirteenth year, when he entered upon an apprenticeship to learn the trade of printer. During a short period when he was printer's devil he received no pay for his services but later was paid fifty cents a day for his labor. His apprenticeship covered a period of six years and at the end of that time, in 1894, he came to Montana, locating first in Butte, where he worked on the Butte Miner for a number of years. His first editorial connection was at Whitefish, whither he went in 1905 and where he owned and edited the Whitefish Pilot, a weekly paper, which he conducted for the ensuing four years. In 1909 he sold that paper and came to Libby, where he purchased a half interest in the Western News, originally established in 1900 by C. R. Leonard and L. H. Faust. This publication is a weekly and has a circulation of one thousand. It favors the Republican party in politics and is known as the leading newspaper in Lincoln county.

In addition to his newspaper work, Mr. Southwick is a heavy stockholder and a director in the First National Bank at Libby. He is aligned as a staunch Republican in his political faith and while he is no office seeker he is ever on the qui vive to do all in his power to forward all measures and enterprises advanced for progress and improvement. He is affiliated with the time-honored Masonic order at Libby and is likewise a valued and appreciative member of the Modern Woodmen of America, the Woodmen of the World and the Order of the Eastern Star. He is connected with the Libby Chamber of Commerce, the Montana National Guards and the Libby Volunteer Fire Department. In religious matters he and his wife are Baptists.

In the city of Butte, Montana, September 16, 1900, Mr. Southwick was united in marriage to Miss Alice MacDonald, a native of New Hampshire and a daughter of E. A. MacDonald. Mr. and Mrs. Southwick have two children, Alice and Ernest, Jr.

Mr. Southwick has been self sustaining since the age of fourteen years and inasmuch as his success is due entirely to his own well-directed efforts it is the more gratifying to contemplate. He writes for a number of magazines and represents eight daily papers, five trade magazines and several special publications.

REV. JAMES H. DURAND. There is no profession or occupation affording a wider field for usefulness than the ministry. Not in the cultured centers of the east but in the heart of the mining district of Montana has Rev. James H. Durand, an earnest and able representative of this profession, chosen as his field in which to labor with the best of his ability and energies for the uplift and welfare of his fellow man. He is a splendid example of the modern manly, aggressive and wide-awake Christian, one who does things instead of spending the better part of his energies in the pursuit of abstractions and the expounding of theories.

Reverend Durand was born in New York state on November 16, 1877, and received his early education in Kansas, whither his parents had removed while he was still a child. Later he was a student at Leavenworth, Kansas, and subsequently pursued a theological course at Chicago, where he was graduated in 1894. From that time until 1910 he was engaged in mission work in various parts of the country and in that year came from California to become pastor of the Methodist Episcopal charge at Stockett, Montana. This charge also includes the churches of that denomination at Sand Coulee and Red Butte. The Methodist church at Stockett was established when the town was opened in 1902, and prior to the coming of Reverend Durand had had as its pastors first Reverend Stone and then Reverend Ross. With zeal and earnestness Reverend Durand entered upon his duties at Stockett, where with a warm heart and a genuine human sympathy he has come into close touch not only with members of his own large congregation but with all classes of citizens who, judging him by his life and his kindly acts, accord him the highest respect and esteem. He is himself of stalwart moral character and in the short time that he has mingled with the people there he has become recognized as a potent and persuasive force for purer and more noble living. The distress of the poor comes especially close to his heart and with cheering words and helpful deeds he has labored indefatigably to assist them. He is genial and sociable and has won the respect, admiration and regard of the people among whom he has chosen to labor. He sustains fraternal membership in the Knights of Pythias and the Royal Arcanum, and in politics is an independent and votes for men of high character irrespective of party.

Anderson K. Durand, the father of Reverend Durand, was an official in the Kansas state prison for the last two years before his death, which occurred at the home of his son in August, 1911, when sixty-four years of age and which was caused by a stroke of paralysis. In New York state he had wedded Miss Adaline Shook, a native of New York City who is still living, being now sixty-five years of age, and resides at Stockett, Montana. They were the parents of two sons: Rev. James H. Durand of this review and Harry A. Durand, of Mount Vernon near New York City.

On April 3, 1901, at New York City was solemnized the marriage of Reverend Durand and Miss Norma B. Thompson. They have three children: Herbert Durand, born in New York state on January 16, 1902, who is now attending school in Stockett; Edward Walla Durand, born June 1, 1905, in Chicago, Illinois, who also is a pupil in the Stockett schools; and Norma Helena Durand, born in November, 1906, at Chicago, Illinois.

LEWIS A. SMITH. In the sixteen years of his practice as a lawyer in Butte, Lewis A. Smith has risen to a high rank at the bar, won the confidence and regard of the courts, built up an extensive and lucrative business and firmly established himself in the esteem and good will of the people of the city. He has not been ostentatious or self-assertive in his practice, or made any special efforts to secure business. The people saw his merit and evidence of his ability soon after he located in the city, and they have sought his service because they believed in him. He has justified their faith by his knowledge of the law, his wisdom and safety as a counselor, his tact and shrewdness as a trial lawyer, and by his real manhood.

Mr. Smith was born at Blandinsville, Illinois, on the twenty-seventh of February, 1871, and he is the son of Peter A. and Sarah J. (Stinson) Smith, the former a native of Indiana, born on June 24, 1842, and the latter of Michigan, born on October 11, 1847. They are still living and are residents of Burlington, Iowa. At an early age the father moved from his native state to Illinois with his parents, and there grew to manhood. He was the son of Ambrose B. Smith, who was born on September 22, 1810, and died on July 22, 1859, in Indiana. Peter A. Smith took an active part in the Civil war, enlisting at the beginning of the contest in the artillery service, his regiment being assigned to General Sherman's division of the army. He remained in the service throughout the war, taking part in many of its notable engagements, but escaping without injury and never being taken prisoner, although he suffered many of the hardships incidental to all army life and any state of war. Upon the close of that momentous conflict, Mr. Smith returned to his Illinois home and resumed his former business there. In 1877 he moved his family to Burlington, Iowa, where he started an enterprise in blacksmithing and carriage manufacturing on a large scale. In this he enjoyed a most liberal success, and he is now one of the most prominent and substantial residents of that city. His marriage with Sarah J. Stimson took place on January 23, 1864, and they became the parents of three children, as follows: Cora C., born April 22, 1866, and who died in Illinois in 1874; Frank A., born in Illinois on September 13, 1868, and who is now a prominent contractor in Burlington, Iowa; and Lewis A. of this review.

Lewis A. Smith began his education in the public schools of Burlington, Iowa, and completed it at the State University of Iowa, in Iowa City, Iowa. He was graduated from the law department of that institution in June, 1895, with the degree of LL. B., and at once located at Peoria, Illinois, where he began the practice of his profession. In the latter part of that year he came to Montana, and he was admitted to practice in the supreme court of the state on March 11, 1896. Since then he has been especially successful in his professional work, and has been connected with a number of cases of prominence in the state. He located in Butte as a lawyer in 1896.

Mr. Smith's life has been somewhat eventful in one respect at least. He left Iowa in 1888 and traveled extensively, making the west his field of journeyings and working for short periods in Denver, Omaha, San Francisco, Portland, Spokane and many other western cities. He first located in Butte in 1891, and in this city worked until 1893, when he returned to Iowa to enter the law school in which he received his professional training. He was pleased with the city, and as soon as he had a fair opportunity returned to it to make it his home, and he has never had occasion to regret his choice.

Mr. Smith has been married twice. By his first marriage he became the father of two children: Walter Allen, who was born on January 25, 1902, in Butte, and died in July, 1910, the victim of a wound from a toy pistol which brought on lockjaw; and Lillian, born in Butte on December 13, 1896, and died on July 31, 1897. The death of Mr. Smith's son in so tragic a manner caused the father to draft a law prohibiting the sale of toy pistols in Montana, and it became a law at the next session of the legislature. On December 25, 1909, Mr. Smith was married to Miss Lillian De Mordaunt, in Butte, who died on December 11, 1911, after a brief illness.

Mr. Smith has ever taken an active interest in the fraternal life of the community. He is a Scottish Rite Mason and a member of Bagdad Temple of the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He holds the rank of past master of Mount Moriah Lodge, No. 24, A. F. & A. M., of Butte, of which he was worshipful master in 1906. He is also a member of the Grand Lodge of the state of Montana in this fraternity, being at present the right worshipful senior grand warden. In addition to his Masonic affiliations he holds membership in the Modern Woodmen of America and the Fraternal Brotherhood. He has served as secretary of the Silver Bow County Bar Association from its organization in January, 1905. His religious connection is with the Episcopal church, and in politics he is a Republican. In 1908 he was a candidate for district judge, but was defeated by a small majority at the election. A member of the city council, he was elected alderman of the Fourth ward on April 1, 1912, by a majority over two other candidates.

Mr. Smith is a great lover of outdoor sports and indulges his fondness for them whenever he can do so without neglecting his business. He is fond of hunting and is an enthusiastic autoist and takes a warm interest in all forms of athletic performances. He is recognized as one of the leading lawyers and most prominent and influential citizens of Butte, popular in social life, and a public-spirited and progressive man in regard to public movements, devoted to the general weal in every way.

CHARLES A. BANKER. When a man has been the incumbent of an important public office for ten consecutive years, and during that time has held in the fullest degree the confidence and esteem of his fellow citizens throughout the county, it may be said without fear of contradiction that his has been an unusual record for faithful and efficient service, and that he has fully earned the right to be numbered among the representative men of his community. Add to this a connection with one of the leading financial institutions of the state covering a like period of time, and a record of the career of Charles A. Banker, cashier of the Exchange State Bank, of Glendive, has been sketched. Mr. Banker was born at Fond du Lac, Fond du Lac county, Wisconsin, July 11, 1870, and is a son of Albert and Florence (Comer) Banker.

Mr. Banker's father was born in Picton, Ontario, Canada, in 1826, and there was engaged in the lumber business for a number of years. In 1866 he removed to Fond du Lac county, Wisconsin, with his wife and four children, and engaged in farming up to 1871, in which year he moved to Cass county, Iowa. He continued to carry on agricultural pursuits in that county until 1879, then removing to Russell, Kansas, and until 1902 was engaged in farming and conducting a hotel, but since that time has lived retired. Mr. Banker married Florence Comer, who was born in 1834, in Ontario, and they had a family of eleven children, of whom eight are still living: Eugenia, the wife of Emery Lewis, living in Gering, Nebraska; John, of Russell, Kansas, one of the firm of The L. Banker Mercantile Company; Louis, also a member of that firm; Willard, who makes his home in Los Angeles, California; James, a member of the mercantile firm at Russell, Kansas; Edwin, of the United States Marine Band, living at Washington, D. C.; Charles A.; and Maud, the wife of S. J. Wills, living at Wibaux, Montana.

Charles A. Banker attended the public schools of Russell, Kansas, until he was fifteen years of age, at which time he began his business career as a clerk in a general merchandise store. He first came to Montana in 1895, at which time he located in Wibaux, Dawson county, and until 1900 continued to be employed as a clerk, in that year returning to the home of his father in Russell, Kansas. After spending two years at home he returned to Montana in 1902, locating in Glendive, where he became cashier of the old Exchange Bank, which on July 1, 1911, was incorporated as the Exchange State Bank, of which he has since been cashier. He is also president of the First State Bank of Wibaux, and is widely known in banking circles of Dawson county as a capable, far-seeing financier. Following in the foot-steps of his father, Mr. Banker is a stalwart Republican, and in the fall of 1902 was elected city treasurer, the city of Glendive having then just been incorporated. He was reelected in the spring of 1903, and again in 1905, 1907 and 1909, and his shrewdness, far-sightedness and exactness have enabled him to engineer successfully the city's finances and to safeguard them from waste and loss. He is connected fraternally with Glendive Lodge No. 31, A. F. & A. M., in which he has numerous friends, as he has, in fact, in every walk of life.

On November 22, 1906, Mr. Banker was united in marriage with Miss Mary E. Kelly, who was born in Minnesota, daughter of William and Harriet (Murphy) Kelly. Mr. Kelly was born in Richland county, Illinois, September 7, 1843, moved to Minnesota, in 1856, and was married in Freeborn county, that state, to Harriet Murphy, a native of Jackson county, Wisconsin. They came to Custer county, Montana, in 1883, Mr. Kelly becoming one of the pioneer stockmen of this part of the state, and both are now living in Glendive. Mr. and Mrs. Banker have had one child, a bright lad, Llewellyn William.

ALBERT M. BIEN. The popular and efficient incumbent of the office of county treasurer of Deer Lodge county, Montana, Albert M. Bien is a prominent and influential citizen at Deer Lodge, where he conducts a strictly up-to-date undertaking establishment. He is unusually loyal and public-spirited in his civic attitude and is ever on the qui vive to do all in his power to advance progress and improvement and to forward all movements projected for the good of humanity.

Albert M. Bien was born at Black Foot City (now Ophir) Montana, February 4, 1870, and he is a son of Moritz and Johanna (Boehl) Bien, both of whom were born in Germany, the former at Nuremberg. The father's birth occurred December 24, 1830, and he was reared to maturity at Nuremberg, where he attended the public schools until he had reached his fourteenth year, at which time he was apprenticed to learn the trades of harness-maker, saddler and upholsterer. He served an apprenticeship of three and a half years, at the expiration of which he travelled as a journeyman for five years throughout Germany. He came to the United States as a young man, landing in New York City, where he was identified with the work of his trade for the ensuing three years, at the expiration of which he went to San Francisco, California, and in the latter place formed a partnership with a Mr. Goldberg and opened a furniture and upholsterer's shop. Three years later he disposed of his interests in San Francisco and came to Montana, locating at Virginia City, where he secured work as foreman of a furniture factory. He removed to Black Foot City, where he remained four months, at the expiration of which he went to Washington Gulch. A few months later he went to Helena and there opened a harness shop, which he conducted for one season. He then returned to Black Foot City and for the ensuing three years conducted a brewery. Eventually disposing of his stock in that place, he came to Deer Lodge and here formed a partnership with a Mr. Whaley to engage in the brewery business. One year later the brewery which they conducted burned down and Mr. Bien rebuilt and continued the business for another year. In 1873 he engaged in the furniture business in this city and in 1894 was joined in that enterprise by his son, Albert M., the subject of this sketch. Moritz Bien was summoned to the life eternal September 3, 1909. Mrs. Bien is still living and resides in Deer Lodge. They became the parents of five children, of whom Frank and Julius are deceased; Annie is the wife of Dennis Challoran, of Mica, Washington; Clara is Mrs. B. F. Jordan and resides in Spokane, Washington; and Albert M. is the immediate subject of this review.

To the public schools of Deer Lodge Albert M. Bien is indebted for his preliminary educational training and subsequently he was a student for several years in the College of Montana, at Deer Lodge. At the age of sixteen years he entered upon an apprenticeship to learn the blacksmith's trade, devoting his attention to that line of work for two years at Helena, and for one year at Butte. In 1889 he learned stationary engineering, following that work at Butte for the ensuing eight years. During a portion of the time he resided at Butte he was street-car conductor and motorman. In 1895 he returned to Deer Lodge and became a partner in the furniture business with his father. He now conducts an undertaking establishment at Deer Lodge.

In politics Mr. Bien is a Progressive Republican. He was thrice elected coroner for Powell county. In 1910 he was further honored by his fellow citizens with election to the office of county treasurer and in discharging the duties thereof he is acquitting himself with the utmost honor and distinction. Mr. Bien advocates progressive theories, is liberal-minded and is willing to do anything in his power for the benefit of humanity as a whole. He is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which he is a past grand of the local lodge and has also held offices in the Grand Lodge. He is likewise connected with the Woodmen of the World. He has made a thorough study of political economy and is deeply interested in that subject. He is honesty itself and is generous to a fault.

On November 24, 1897, at Deer Lodge, Mr. Bien was united in marriage to Miss Clara Wilson, a daughter of William Wilson, a pioneer in Montana and a resident of Kalispel, this state. Mr. and Mrs. Bien are the parents of four children, whose names are here entered in respective order of birth,—Albert Ferris, Mabel Eleanor, Clara Margaret and Virginia.

THOMAS PRENDERGAST. It would be hard to find a better illustration of the facility with which, under the liberal institutions of this great country, a man of ability and integrity, whether native-born or of foreign birth and impressions, may rise to any station, perhaps among the most exalted, than is afforded in the history of Thomas Prendergast, of Butte. In his career may be found also a lesson for the youth of any land, something that should prove encouraging to those who are struggling to attain recognition and position, for Mr. Prendergast has demonstrated that it is necessary to have neither financial backing nor influential friends to attain success, but that industry, perseverance and integrity, followed along the proper channels, will invariably end in satisfactory results.

Thomas Prendergast was born at Dunmore, County Galway, Ireland, December 25, 1875, his parents being John and Katherine (Coan) Prendergast. He secured his education in the national schools of his native place, and when twenty years of age immigrated to the United States. After spending a short time in New York City, he came to Butte, and during that year engaged in mining at the St. Lawrence Mine, where he was employed for four years. At that time

Mr. Prendergast gave up mining to engage in business on his own account, and for a number of years successfully conducted a liquor business and later a grocery store. He became immensely popular in his community, and has declared that it was due to his friends that he met with subsequent success, while his friends claim that it has been due to his own grit and energy. Taking an active and healthy interest in Democratic politics, in 1906 he was the nominee of that party for the office of county auditor, but lost the election by one vote, after a strenuous campaign. In 1908, nominated in a field of ten, he was elected by a large majority, and in 1910 succeeded himself in office. A painstaking, conscientious and obliging official, Mr. Prendergast has won the respect and esteem of all who have had business to do at his office. By attending strictly to business, and using all his leisure time to advantage, he has succeeded in attaining his present position and securing a well-earned popularity with all classes. He has also at various times leased and engaged in mining for himself, and when the McIntosh Brothers were building the new railroad, he was appointed deputy sheriff and had the supervision of the district extending from Butte to Whitehall.

In 1905 Mr. Prendergast was united in marriage with Miss Joanna O'Grady, who was for several years a popular teacher in the public schools of Butte. She is a native of Nebraska, and a daughter of Patrick and Kate (Thornton) O'Grady. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Prendergast: Thomas, Mary and John. Mr. Prendergast belongs to the Ancient Order of Hibernians, the Robert Emmet Literary Association and the Knights of Columbus, taking a very active part in these societies and Irish affairs and is popular in business, public and social circles.

ALFRED K. WERTHEIMER. Almost all of the time since he left school at the age of sixteen, this enterprising and progressive man, whose natural ability and studious course of preparation have fitted him well for affairs of magnitude, has been engaged in mercantile pursuits, and it is a logical result of his well applied industry and ambition that he is now one of the leading and most far-seeing and successful merchants of Butte. He is closely attentive to every detail of his extensive and active trade, studying the wants of the community in order that he may provide for them intelligently, and also keeping his keen eye on the markets for the purpose of supplying his customers to the best advantage in every particular.

Mr. Wertheimer was born in Walla Walla, state of Washington, on April 7, 1870, and was sent to school in San Francisco, where he continued his academic studies until he reached the age of sixteen. He then worked at a variety of occupations until he was able to establish himself in the mercantile business in Portland, Oregon. He remained there profitably engaged in trade until 1895, when he came to Butte, arriving in the city on May 19. He at once secured a position in the gentlemen's furnishings department of the Segel Clothing Company, which he filled to the satisfaction of the company and its patrons for a full period of nine years.

At the end of that time he determined to start in business again for himself and chose the real estate trade as the field of his operations. He opened an office for the purpose, and continued in the business until 1905, when he sold his interests in it and founded the Hub Clothing Company, of which he has ever since been the head and source of inspiration and enterprise. The business has been very successful from the start, and the store has risen to the first rank among the mercantile institutions of Butte and the northwest generally. It is strictly modern in every respect, and wins universal admiration by the completeness of its equipment, the convenience of its arrangement, the extent and variety of its stock and the promptness and courtesy of its service, in which the most responsive energy and quickness of apprehension are blended with all the bland amenities of life.

In starting and conducting this enterprise Mr. Wertheimer has found full scope for his talents and congenial employment for all his faculties. He entered upon the undertaking with the determination to make it popular and profitable, knowing that he had within him and at his command the resources requisite for the purpose, and he has not failed in his design in any respect. He has accumulated considerable real estate in Butte and valuable property of other kinds, and is one of the substantial men of the city financially.

In civic, social and fraternal circles he is also prominent and influential. Every worthy project for the promotion of the best interests of his home city, county and state has his earnest and effective support, and his efforts in behalf of all are directed by intelligence, breadth of view and excellent judgment. Fraternally he is an active member of Mount Moriah Lodge of Freemasons. His genius for organization in business finds expression and a good field for operation through his zealous membership in the Business Men's Association of the city, and in religious affiliation he is connected with the Jewish Temple in Butte, in whose service he is always a capable and willing worker. In political affairs he is strictly independent, casting his ballot at all elections for the candidates he believes best fitted for the offices they seek and most likely to render the people good service in administering them.

It is inevitable that with his abounding energy, great activity and comprehensive sweep of vision Mr. Wertheimer's business cares should be serious and weighty. But he finds relief from them on all suitable occasions in hunting and fishing, of which he is an ardent devotee. No disciple of Nimrod, the "mighty hunter before the Lord" in the early history of our race, or genial old Izaak Walton, the historical angler of a later period, was ever more devoted to these manly and exhilarating sports, and he enjoys them in full measure whenever he has opportunity. Social amusements also greatly please him, and he is an adept in conducting them and aiding in giving them the highest standard in the entertainment of those who take part in them.

Mr. Wertheimer's father, David Wertheimer, who is now living retired on a competency he has accumulated by his unaided efforts, and is one of the patriarchs of Walla Walla, Washington, his age being seventy-five years, was born and reared in Heidelberg, Germany, and came to the United States when he was but fourteen years old. Soon after his arrival, boy as he was, he traveled by way of the Isthmus of Panama during the early gold excitement in that state. He there engaged in mining with great success, and at one time was very wealthy. But older men in the business with greater resources than he possessed euchered him out of his holdings.

He then turned his attention to freighting across the plains, and was one of the first settlers in Diamond City, Montana, which was then a promising mining camp. He rebuilt his fortunes to some extent, and is now comfortably fixed for the remainder of his life. He was twice married, first to Miss Regina Stein, also a native of Germany, and brought to this country in her childhood by her parents. They located in Vicksburg, Mississippi, but later removed to San Francisco, where she met and was married to Mr. Wertheimer. She died in Walla Walla, Washington, in 1900, at the age of fifty-seven years, and on January 15, 1901, Mr. Wertheimer contracted a second marriage, in which he was united with Miss Belle Felberg, of Helena, Montana, a daughter of Jacob and Emma Felberg, pioneers in Montana, and well known residents of its capital city in its early days. No children have been born of the second marriage, but there were three by the first: Alfred K., of Butte, his sister Julia, who lives with her father in Walla Walla, and his brother Simeon, who is also a resident of Walla Walla. All the members of the family are enterprising and progressive, exemplifying in their daily lives and all their undertakings the daring and adventurous spirit of their father, and making good at everything they put their hands to. They are all highly esteemed as excellent citizens wherever their worth is known and their uprightness and usefulness are exhibited.

ARTHUR T. PORTER. The city of Stevensville has developed rapidly as a center of commercial industry during the past few years, and its importance in the business world is being constantly advanced by earnest and hard-working citizens who have realized that to advance their own interests they must contribute to the city's welfare. Prominent among this class stands Arthur T. Porter, one of the members of the Porter-Buck Mercantile Company, an establishment that caters to the best trade in Stevensville and has gained a wide reputation as a thoroughly reliable and progressive enterprise. Mr. Porter, like many of the successful men in the business field in Montana, is a product of the farm and was reared to the life of an agriculturist. He was born in the state of Georgia, May 13, 1874, son of G. K. and Nellie (Sanford) Porter, residents of Doe Run, Georgia. His father, a real estate man and local preacher, fought throughout the Civil war as a Confederate soldier, participating in such bloody contests as Bull Run and Manassas and being wounded in the latter engagement. There were seven children in his family: Carrie, who married Dr. Will Mathews, of Hawkinsville, Georgia; Janie, who is deceased; Arthur T.; Raymond, who is a partner in the company and also interested in a ranch with his brother, Arthur T.; Anna, who married C. B. Taylor, and lives at Burnt Fork, Montana; Andrew, in the United States Civil Service department at Doe Run, Georgia, and Rudolph, also connected with that service, one of the seventy-four successful applicants in a field of 1600.

Arthur T. Porter secured a public high school education, and after his graduation in 1892, returned to the home farm and assisted his father until he reached his majority. At that time he came to Stevensville, where he secured employment, and during the next four years worked on farms and ranches. In 1899, he became clerk in the store of Amos Buck Company, where he remained one year, and then identified himself with the Stevensville Mercantile Company, being an employee thereof for eleven years, seven years of which were spent as manager of the grocery and implement department. The Porter-Buck Mercantile Company was organized in December, 1910, by Arthur T. and Raymond Porter, and Will W. and Abe Buck, as a co-partnership, and this has developed into one of the leading stores in the city. The firm has a modern structure, and carries a full line of up-to-date goods, having gained a representative patronage and retaining the full confidence of the buying public. Mr. Porter is recognized by his associates to be a shrewd, alert business man, quick to recognize opportunities and able in bringing them to a successful conclusion. Courtesy and a desire to please have gained his business many customers, and his business record is spotless. With his brother he owns one of the finest ranches in Bitter Root valley, and takes his recreation in looking after its interests. His present modern residence was built of the first boards made in Stevensville, the contractor being George Wade, and was erected after he had lost his old home by fire. Mr. Porter has discharged his duties of citizenship by serving his adopted city as treasurer for two terms. Fraternally, he is connected with the Modern Woodmen of America, in which he has twice passed through the chairs.

Mr. Porter was married to Miss Maggie Buck, a native of Stevensville, and they have had four children: Gilbert, Marie and Nellie, who are attending school, and the baby.

VINCENT TRUZZOLINO. Engaged in the unique but highly lucrative business of manufacturing "hot tomares" at Butte, Montana, Vincent Truzzolino controls an extensive wholesale trade in that particular line of enterprise. He ships his product to different points throughout Montana and in addition to his "hot tomale" business is financially interested in various mining projects of broad scope and importance in Butte, besides which he is also the owner of extensive tracts of valuable real estate in this city.

Vincent Truzzolino was born at Palermo, on the Island of Sicily, in the Mediterranean sea, the date of his nativity being the 20th of February, 1871. He is a son of Giovanne and Vita (Bearbaria) Truzzolino, both of whom were born in Italy, the former in 1821 and the latter in 1828. The father was a farmer by occupation during the greater portion of his active career and he was summoned to the life eternal on the 30th of July, 1895. Mrs. Truzzolino is still a resident of Italy, and while she has reached the venerable age of eighty-three years, is still hale and hearty.

Under the invigorating influences of the old homestead farm, Vincent Truzzolino was reared to maturity and he received his preliminary education in the neighboring country schools. At the age of twenty-one years, he bade farewell to home and friends and immigrated to America, settling first in the city of New Orleans and going thence to San Francisco, remaining in the latter place for two and a half years. On December 31, 1895, Mr. Truzzolino came to Butte, where he has since resided and where he is recognized as a prominent and influential citizen. He began in a small way to manufacture hot tomares and today practically monopolizes that business in Montana. He does a strictly wholesale business and ships to various points throughout the state. He employs a number of men in his factory and his business amounts annually to about twenty thousand dollars. He holds stock in a number of important mining corporations and is the owner of considerable valuable real estate in Butte.

At Butte, August 21, 1899, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Truzzolino to Miss Jennie Wallchse, who was born in Germany on the 5th of September, 1872. Mr. and Mrs. Truzzolino became the parents of two children, one of whom, Henry, died on the 19th of February, 1909. The elder son, Giovanne, was born on the 6th of May, 1901, and is a pupil in the public schools of Butte. The family home is maintained at No. 516 West Mercury street.

In politics Mr. Truzzolino is an uncompromising supporter of the principles and policies for which the Republican party stands sponsor and in religious matters he and his wife are devout communicants of the Roman Catholic church. In a fraternal way he is affiliated with the Christopher Columbus Society. Mr. Truzzolino is exceedingly fond of hunting and makes many trips into the mountains every season in pursuit of big game. That he has been fortunate on his various expeditions is evident from the number of fine deer heads he has mounted. The life history of Mr. Truzzolino is certainly worthy of commendation and emulation, for along honorable and straightforward lines he has won the success which crowns his efforts and which makes him one of the substantial residents of Butte.

HENRY GILLENWATERS RODGERS was born in Coles county, Illinois, July 5, 1871, and had his home there until he was fifteen years of age. During this period he attended the public schools of his native county. At fifteen he went to Lincoln (Ill.), to college and remained there for two years. After that, for seven years he traveled extensively in Illinois, Missouri, and Iowa, following various occupations.

He earned his first money as a boy at the age of about nine, as watch boy on a farm, receiving ten cents a day. While attending school at Lincoln, he earned his own way by working at various jobs. At ten years of age he worked with a team on his father's farm. At twelve years of age, he and another boy put in sixty acres of wheat without outside help. He never was afraid of work.

In November, 1895, Mr. Rodgers came to Montana, settling first at Deer Lodge. He remained there until the spring of 1898, at which time he accepted a position as clerk to the United States attorney in Helena. It was while in this office that he studied law and was admitted to the bar at Helena. He held his clerical position until 1908 and then came to Dillon where he began the practice of the law. Two years later, in the fall of 1910, he was elected county attorney of Beaverhead county, and is now filling that office.

Mr. Rodgers is a Republican and is active in politics. He is a member of the Christian church. He belongs to the Masonic order, to the Modern Woodmen of America and the Eagles. He has been through all chairs in the Woodmen's order and at present is past consul; has passed the chairs of the Eagles and is now past worthy president, as well as a member of the Independent Order of Redmen, and of the Beaverhead Social Club. He is fond of baseball and is an enthusiastic rooter. He is also a devotee of good books. He has worked his way upward, absolutely through his own efforts.

Mr. Rodgers was married August 13, 1909, at Livingston, Montana, to Miss L. Brittanma Adams, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Adams, of Livingston. There is one child in this household, a boy, Henry Rodgers, who was born May 20, 1907.

Mr. Rodgers' father was John Rodgers, who was born in Illinois, and lived there all his life, where he followed farming. He died in 1883, at the age of fifty-three. The mother was Margaret Elizabeth Gillenwaters Rodgers, who was born in Illinois and died in 1884, aged fifty. The father and mother are buried side by side. There were six children in the family of the elder Rodgers, five boys and one girl, the subject of this sketch being the youngest child. Mr. Rodgers has two brothers in Montana, as follows: William B. Rodgers, and Hiram W. Rodgers, both practicing law at Anaconda. The latter is now a member of the Montana legislature for Deer Lodge county.

JOHN K. O'ROURKE. There are many successful men of today in the United States who have won their own way from the bottom of the ladder through making opportunities for themselves instead of standing idle awaiting a special call. Naturally these are practical, resourceful and efficient men and their advice, founded on their own experiences, is something worth listening to. Reduced to its lowest terms, it usually is hard work and fidelity, honest effort and steady persistence. One of the well known men of Silver Bow county, Montana, and one of its public officials, is illustrative of the above statement. He was born in county Limerick, Ireland, March 31, 1867, and is a son of Michael and Catherine (Kennedy) O'Rourke, both parents spending their entire lives in Ireland.

John K. O'Rourke remained in his own country until he was twenty-one years of age and attended the Limerick schools as opportunity offered. He was more ambitious than other members of the family and decided to seek his fortune in America and came to the United States in 1888. On his way to the far west from the eastern coast he stopped at Chicago, where he found employment and for four and one-half years served as storage clerk in the baggage department at the Dearborn station, a great railroad centering point, also spent a year at Collinswood, Louisiana, and worked on a stock farm belonging to C. C. Collins, of Chicago.

In 1895 Mr. O'Rourke came to Montana and for four years was employed in different capacities at the great Anaconda mines. For one and one-half years he served as time-keeper, for some time was boss of the mat house and through his agency the last mat, the alloy of copper, tin and iron designated by this name, was shipped from Anaconda to Baltimore, Maryland. By this time Mr. O'Rourke had made himself a very valuable mine man and in 1899 he came to Butte in order to accept the position of time-keeper at the Mountain Consolidated Mine, where he continued to be engaged until 1905, when he took charge of the Mullins House and operated it for two years. After taking out his first citizenship papers, Mr. O'Rourke identified himself with the Democratic party and has given it his hearty support ever since and on several occasions has been honored by this organization with election to office. In November, 1906, he was first elected sheriff of Silver Bow county, was reelected in 1909 and is the present incumbent. He has proved his efficiency in this important public office, which he administers fearlessly, and the records show a notable disappearance of the lawless element since he took charge. Personally he is a pleasant man to deal with, being friendly and genial, but to the breakers of the law he is unrelenting and can be swayed from duty neither by fear nor favor.

In 1899, at Anaconda, Montana, Mr. O'Rourke was married to Miss Katherine Josephine O'Rourke, who was born at Denver, Colorado. They are members of the Roman Catholic church. Sheriff O'Rourke is identified with a number of fraternal organizations, including the Ancient Order of Hibernians, the Woodmen of the World, the Eagles, the Elks, the Fraternal Brotherhood, and the Catholic Order of Foresters. He is also a member of the Robert Emmett Literary Association, the Silver Bow Club and Butte Chamber of Commerce.

CHARLES E. SMITH. Regarded as one of the enterprising and progressive citizens of Billings and as a business man of distinct sagacity and executive ability, Charles E. Smith, of No. 2605 Montana avenue, also deserves more than passing mention in a work of this kind, as a man who has materially contributed to the upbuilding of the city and as a patriotic soldier who fought in defense of his country during the Civil war. Mr. Smith is a native of Mount Morris, Livingston county, New York, and was born December 29, 1844, a son of Charles and Sarah J. (Parker) Smith, also natives of the Empire state.

Charles Smith was born in 1811, and resided in his native locality until 1845, at which time he removed to Kalamazoo county, Michigan, and there took his place among the pioneers of that section and developed himself a farm from the wilderness. In 1852 he sold his Michigan property to remove to Iroquois county, Illinois, purchasing land from the Illinois Central Railway Company, and residing there until 1860, when he became a resident of Monroe county, Indiana, and continued to follow agricultural pursuits. In August, 1861, Mr. Smith enlisted in Company F, Twenty-seventh Regiment, Indiana Volunteer Infantry, for three years or during the war, and participated in all the battles, skirmishes and marches of that organization up to the battle of Chancellorsville, in which he was seriously wounded. He was subsequently removed to a hospital and was then taken to Indianapolis, Indiana, where he was chief steward of the Soldiers' Home until the expiration of his term of enlistment, at which time he received an honorable discharge. At that time he removed to Newman, Edgar county, Illinois, and there his death occurred from the effect of his wound in 1871. His widow survived him until 1887.

They had three sons; Charles E., Edward P., who lives at Mount Vernon, Missouri; and Daniel, who lives in Memphis, Tennessee. In politics Charles Smith was a staunch Republican, and he was known as an upright and public-spirited citizen and was highly esteemed in the localities at various times he made his home.

Charles E. Smith received his education in the common schools of Iroquois county, Illinois, and remained at home assisting his father until he was fifteen years of age, at which time he secured work as a farm hand in Illinois, and received eight dollars per month. In the fall of 1859 he went to Indiana, and during the time his father was in the army he remained at home and helped to support his mother and brothers, but in 1864 he became imbued with patriotic enthusiasm and enlisted in Company H, One Hundred and Forty-Eighth Regiment, Indiana Volunteer Infantry, for three years or during the war. At the close of hostilities he returned to his home, being mustered out of the service at Indianapolis, and in 1866 accompanied the family to Newman, Illinois, where he again took up farming and continued to be so engaged until 1868. In that year he went to Sedalia, Missouri, and until 1870 was engaged in the express and teaming business, subsequently returning to Edgar county, Illinois, and engaging in farming until 1875. In that year he again came west, locating near Lincoln, Nebraska, where he took up a homestead and followed farming and stockraising until 1888, after which for a short time he interested himself in locating settlers in Oklahoma. For some time he was also engaged in the newspaper business at Lamar, Nebraska, where he established the Lamar Leader, and during the next several years was interested in various lines in Denver, Colorado, and Ogden, Utah. Returning to Lincoln, he carried on real estate dealing until 1895, and that year saw his advent in Billings, where he has since been engaged in mercantile pursuits. He now has a well-established business at No. 2605 Montana avenue, stocked with an excellent line of goods, deals in new and second-hand goods, and maintains a storage warehouse. His business dealings have been of a strictly legitimate order and his reputation is that of a man of absolute honesty and integrity. In political matters he is a Republican, and the high esteem in which he is universally held has been demonstrated by his election to various offices. While in Harland county, Nebraska, he served two terms as county commissioner, was justice of the peace in Lamar for one term, and in 1908 was elected to the same office in Billings and re-elected in 1910. He has discharged the duties of his official position with the same conscientious thoroughness that has played such a large part in winning him success in his business ventures. Mr. Smith's public and private interests have kept him very busy, but he has managed to find time for recreation, and is a popular member of Billings Star Lodge, No. 41, I. O. O. F.; Billings Lodge, No. 394, B. P. O. E.; and the Woodmen of the World, and he also has many friends among the comrades of William McKinley Post, No. 28, Grand Army of the Republic, of which he is a member.

In 1866 Mr. Smith was married to Miss Zurelda Conley, who died in 1871, leaving two children: Mary G., who was the wife of Robert Huckelberry and died in January, 1909, and Charles A., who is residing in Billings. In 1875 Mr. Smith was married a second time, his wife bearing the maiden name of Phoebe C. Agard. They have one son, Louis S., who is living in Billings.

JOHN G. HERD. It has been aptly said that a man will eventually find that vocation in life for which he is best fitted by nature and inclination if he will but cast about with the purpose in mind of finding out what that vocation may be. The experience of John G. Herd is a striking illustration and example of that saying. Many and varied were the occupations which he followed between the ages of eighteen and twenty-eight, but the phenomenal success of which he has been capable in the ten years of his affiliation with the sheep raising business in Montana is sufficient evidence of the fitness of his occupation to his particular qualifications.

John G. Herd is the son of John R. and Mary J. (Monks) Herd. The father, John R. Herd, was born in 1842, in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and the mother was a native of Wales. She is yet living and resides in Philadelphia where she has spent the best part of her life, but her husband passed away in the year 1904. They were the parents of ten children, seven of whom are living at this writing. They are: John G., our subject; Charles, now living in Montana; William, a resident of Chester, Pennsylvania; Walter, who resides in Philadelphia; Mary, who is the wife of Joseph McCarron, and living in Philadelphia also, he being a designer in the Cramp ship yards; Albert, living in Pittsburgh; and Emanuel, a resident of Philadelphia.

John R. Herd was educated in the city of his birth, Philadelphia. At an early age he became connected with the Bullock-Moir Manufacturing Company, of Philadelphia, and he was twenty-five years in their service as head carder. When the Civil war broke out he promptly enlisted and served three years and six months in Company I, Fifty-first Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, participating in practically every skirmish and battle in which his regiment figured throughout the term of his service. He was seriously wounded on the field of Antietam, and after a long and trying period of inactivity in the United States Hospital at Washington, D. C., he was honorably discharged from the service on account of disability.

Following his discharge he returned to Philadelphia, where he continued his service with the Bullock-Moir Manufacturing Company, as before mentioned. He bought a farm about eight miles from Broad street, Philadelphia, and on this place he spent the greater part of his life and reared his family.

The son, John G. Herd, was educated, like his father, in the public schools of the city of Philadelphia. He lived at home on their country place until the age of eighteen, when his ardent desire to see the country, which is the heritage of most American youths, caused him to make his way to Colorado, and he was employed in Denver by the firm of Mallery & Van Fossen, contractors, until 1888. He then set out for San Francisco, and spent three years in that city in the service of William Diamond & Company, importers and exporters of merchandise, in the capacity of a clerk. From there he went to Hillsboro, North Dakota, where he was engaged as the foreman for R. T. Kingman, the owner of a large grain ranch of four thousand acres. He was thus occupied for a space of three years, after which he returned to visit his old home in Philadelphia, in the year 1894. He spent the winter amid the pleasant surroundings of his boyhood home and in the companionship of friends and family, and in the spring of 1895, he returned to the west, making directly for Butte, Montana, where he took a position with the Butte city fire department, and where he remained employed for a period of four years. Resigning his position there, he launched out into business on his own responsibility, and engaged in the project of sheep raising in Valley county, Montana, north and south of the Milk river. The business prospered, but circumstances made it desirable and expedient for him to change his location in 1905, and he thereupon removed to Yellowstone and Rosebud counties, Montana, where he is now located and where he is busy with the cares and multitudinous duties attendant upon the successful management of a sheep ranch controlling fifteen thousand head of sheep. At the present writing his herd does not outnumber fifteen thousand, but there have been times when his herds aggregated forty thousand head of sheep.

On May 20, 1897, Mr. Herd was wedded to Miss Sarah E. Keeler, who was a resident of Hastings, Minnesota, being the daughter of John and Elizabeth Keeler. The father, John Keeler, was a native of Canada, for many years a resident of Hastings, Minnesota, and now in Faribault, that state. Four children were born of this union, Sarah E. Herd being the second child. Mr. and Mrs. Herd reside at the family home in Billings, Montana, which they established there in 1896. They have no children.

Mr. Herd, like his father before him is an adherent to the principles of Republicanism, and while not a politician in any remote sense, has a good citizen's interest in the affairs of his municipality.

MILTON S. BENNETT. The name of Bennett is prominently identified in Montana with extensive business interests, including the raising of sheep and cattle and gold and silver mining. The family is of English extraction and its present representatives in this section of the United States came from the great and productive country along its northern border. Milton S. Bennett, who is one of the leading shippers of sheep from Custer county, Montana, to the Chicago and Omaha markets and whose ranch covers many acres near Hardin, Montana, was born at Sutton, Ontario, Canada, August 20, 1875, and is a son of Willard and Elizabeth (Tomlinson) Bennett.

Willard Bennett and wife were both born in Canada, he in 1847 and she ten years later, were married there and now are valued residents of Helena, Montana. Five children were born to them, namely: Milton S.; Ethel, who is the wife of Hon. Albert J. Galen, attorney-general of Montana; Anson B., who is a merchant and contractor living at Toston, Montana; George, who is a resident of Helena, Montana; and one that died in infancy. While living in Canada, Willard Bennett engaged in farming. In the spring of 1882 he came to Deer Lodge, Montana, and in partnership with his brother, Nelson Bennett, under the firm name of Bennett Brothers, went into the agricultural implement business at Deer Lodge, Butte, Townsend, Montana and Salt Lake City. Nelson Bennett was already known as a successful contractor and had completed the Cascade tunnel, a great engineering feat at that time. The Bennett brothers, with W. A. Clark, built the first street railroad in the city of Butte and at that time closed out their agricultural implement business. Willard Bennett soon afterward became interested in mines and mining and became president of the Royal Gold and Silver Mining Company, whose properties lay between Philipsburg and Deer Lodge, at the head of Boulder creek, Montana. He continues his interest in mines and at the present time is president of the Black Friday Gold and Silver Mining Company. For about twelve years he was in the sheep business in Custer and Broadwater counties, his undertakings in this direction proving extremely profitable. His ability as a business man brought him recognition also in the field of politics and he served one term in the state legislature with marked efficiency. He is a Republican in politics and for more than thirty years has been a member of the Masonic fraternity.

Milton S. Bennett attended the public schools of Deer Lodge and Deer Lodge College, later the Northwestern University at Chicago, then took a commercial course in the Bryant & Stratton College in that city and supplemented it with a course in the Helena Business College. Following these years of study he attended two military colleges, one at Louisville, Kentucky, and the other at Ogden, Utah. For two and one-half years the young man was then in the employ of the Royal Gold & Silver Mining Company, with his father, and in partnership with the latter in 1895 went into the sheep business south of Miles City, Montana. In the fall of 1899 he embarked in the same business on his own account in the same region, continuing for two years and then removed to Dickinson county, North Dakota, for two years more, then to Toston, Broadwater county, Montana, where he continued in business for six years, in 1909 coming to Billings, the educating of his children becoming a matter of large moment. He is a Republican in politics but so far business has claimed his attention to the extent that it has left little time for the performance of public duties other than those of ordinary good citizenship.

On June 28, 1898, Mr. Bennett was married to Miss Izolia G. Willson, a daughter of John and Priscilla Willson, all of whom were born in Canada. Mrs. Bennett was the sixth born in a family of eleven children, ten of whom survive. Early in the 'eighties Mr. Wilson came to Minnesota and in 1891 to Custer county, Montana, where he engaged in the sheep and cattle business until 1906, when he returned to Canada, where he now lives retired. Mr. and Mrs. Bennett have five children: Myrtle, Violet, Paul, Leo and Natalie. Mr. Bennett is identified with Helena Lodge, No. 193, B. P. O. E.

ARTHUR JORDAN, M. D., a prominent physician, member of the state legislature and mayor of the city of Twin Bridges, is of necessity one of the busiest men in his city. He has been a resident of the state since 1895 and of Twin Bridges since 1905, having passed the first ten years engaged in practice in Marysville, Montana.

Born in Atlantic, Iowa, on September 17, 1869, Dr. Jordan is the son of James and Agnes (Dungan) Jordan. The father was born in Indiana and settled in Iowa in 1865, where he engaged in farming. He was a veteran of the Civil war, having served in the Union army. He was always an active politician and took a prominent part in the political affairs of his locality. In 1907 he removed to Oregon, where he now resides. His wife still lives, and shares his fortunes in their Oregon home. They were the parents of eight children, Dr. Jordan being the third born and the eldest son of the family.

Until he was in his twenty-second year Dr. Jordan remained at home in Atlantic, where he attended the high school, followed by a normal course, part of which he took in Atlantic and a part in Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Following his normal course he went to Iowa City and took a four years' course at the state university there, graduating in 1895 and receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine. He located immediately after his graduation in Coon Rapids, Iowa, there conducting a practice for a short time, the year 1895 marking his location in Montana. The first ten years of his life in this state were spent in practice in Marysville, after which, in 1905, he came to Twin Bridges, which has since represented the center of his professional activities.

Dr. Jordan takes a hearty interest in political affairs as a Republican of well fortified party opinions, and is regarded as one of the strong men of the party in his county, and a fighter of formidable qualities. His interest in local politics is no less keen than in state affairs, and he is now mayor of the city. In 1911 he was chairman of the school board, and was re-elected as a member in 1912. He was a member of the board of aldermen, which office he resigned to assume the duties of the mayorality. In 1910 Dr. Jordan was elected to the state legislature, at that time there being but one other Republican elected in the county.

Dr. Jordan keeps up his medical studies and research work and is a member of the State and American Medical Associations, as well as the Madison County Medical Society. Fraternally he is identified by membership with the Masons and has served as master of the blue lodge, the Elks and the Maccabees.

On October 20, 1897, at Marysville, Montana, was solemnized the marriage of Dr. Jordan with Adele M. Dillon, the daughter of Patrick B. and Mary Dillon, of Marysville, old pioneer residents of the state. Two children have been born to them, Arthur and Elizabeth, both in school.

HON. GEORGE W. BURT. The ability which is developed in an active business life, in great commercial transactions and the rapid changes and fluctuations of trade and finance, have proved in practice as valuable in the management of the public affairs of the state as that which comes from the exclusive study of law. The accomplished merchant, banker or financier is more likely to take a plain, common sense view of the questions of state, and to be unembarrassed by the quibbles, chicanery and superfine distinctions and definitions of the lawyer, than the man who has been trained in the school of precedent, authorities and legal hairsplitting. To this class of business men belongs George W. Burt, of Miles City, and the signal services he has rendered his state are due, in perhaps equal measures, to the eminently practical and sensible constitution of his mind and to the thoroughness of his business training.

George W. Burt was born in Armington, Tazewell county, Illinois, February 22, 1868, and is a son of William and Emma (Tenney) Burt, and grandson of William and Elizabeth Burt, natives of Kentucky. The latter founded the family in 1827 in Tazewell county, Illinois, the grandparents taking up land from the government, and spent their lives in establishing a home there for their six children. William Burt was born on the old homestead, the youngest of his parents' children, grew to manhood thereon, and spent his active life in farming and stockraising, becoming one of the prominent and influential agriculturists of his community. He died when sixty-three years of age, in 1908, in the faith of the Christian church, of which he had been a member all his days. In political matters he was a Whig and later a Republican, and held various township offices, serving for a number of years as a member of the school board. His widow, a native of Atlanta, Logan county, Illinois, still resides on the old homestead, and has been the mother of two children, George W. and Jessie, the latter being the wife of George Hunter, who now operates the Burt homestead.

George W. Burt was educated in the schools of Tazewell county, Illinois, and Michigan University, Ann Arbor. Reared to the life of an agriculturist, he followed farming and stockraising on the home place until 1895, then coming to Terry, Custer county, Montana, being here engaged in the sheep business until 1911. In 1909 he located at Ismay, on the line of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, and sold to that line the land on which the present town of Ismay is located. In 1911 he located in Miles City, where he now resides, although he still superintends the operations of his 2,000-acre ranch, all of which is under irrigation. Mr. Burt was one of those whose foresight caused them to purchase Northern Pacific land, purchasing ninety-three sections on O'Fallon creek, of which he has disposed at a handsome profit. He is president of the State Bank at Terry, and of the Erling-Burt Mercantile Company at Ismay. In his political proclivities he is a Republican, served as a member of the school board at Terry for several terms, and was elected a member of the Eighth, Ninth and Twelfth sessions of the Montana state legislature. Fraternally he is connected with Yellowstone Lodge, No. 26, A. F. & A. M., Miles City Chapter, No. 14, R. A. M., Miles City Commandery, No. 11, K. T.; Nona Lodge, I. O. O. F., and Terry Lodge, M. W. A.

On March 25, 1894, Mr. Burt was married to Miss

Geo W. Burt

Della Fluss, who was born in Armington, Tazewell county, Illinois, daughter of Frederick and Melissa (Henline) Fluss, natives of Kentucky, both of whom are deceased. They had a family of six children, Mrs. Burt being the fourth in order of birth. Mr. Fluss was a pioneer farmer in Tazewell county, where he spent all of his life in agricultural pursuits. Mr. and Mrs. Burt have three children: Lucille, Paul and Jessie. Mr. Burt's shrewd business acumen has frequently been highly commended, and his record as a progressive and far-seeing judge of land values has served to advance the interests of Custer county materially. Notwithstanding his wide business interests, he has found time to serve his city, county and state, and has well proven that not alone in business matters is he a preeminently capable man; but rather, as hinted in the commencement of this sketch, has he been all the better qualified for public office because of his consummated business efficiency. He is a gentleman of refinement, and has many friends throughout Custer county.

SAMUEL G. REYNOLDS. The Crow Indians of Montana, now one of the most highly civilized tribes of the country, were but a decade ago practically savages, clinging to their ancient tribal customs, indifferent to or rebelling against the white man's way, preferring to move along in their old-established rut, with no ambition to educate themselves or to better their condition in any way. The task of civilizing these wards of the government was a hard and not altogether agreeable one, but it was accomplished in such a manner as to leave no doubt as to its success, and the credit for the happy conclusion of this gigantic undertaking must be given almost unreservedly to one man, Samuel G. Reynolds, of Billings, who during the eight years that he held the position of Indian agent showed himself a man of exceptional ability and perseverance. His success seems all the more remarkable when it is considered that up to the time of his appointment, his experiences had been chiefly in office work, principally with financial institutions, with which he has been connected for a number of years. Mr. Reynolds was born in Branch county, Michigan, October, 31, 1868, and is a son of Lorenzo D. and Elizabeth (Keeler) Reynolds, and a grandson of Lorenzo and Christina (McMurdy) Reynolds, natives of New York state and Ireland, respectively.

Lorenzo D. Reynolds was born in the Empire state and was educated in the public schools and under the tuition of his father, who was an educator by profession. In 1848 he moved west to Michigan territory, first locating in Branch county where he worked in the lumber woods until he had accumulated sufficient capital to secure himself a homestead in the wilderness. There he was engaged in clearing himself a farm when the Civil war broke out, and he became a member of the Eleventh Regiment, Michigan Volunteer Infantry, with which he served faithfully for three years, participating in all the engagements of that organization, including the battles of Stone River and Murfreesboro. After securing his honorable discharge he returned to Branch county, Michigan, and continued to clear and cultivate his land, becoming one of the substantial agriculturists of his section. His wife died in 1875, but he still survives, at the age of seventy-seven years, making his residence in the town of Quincy. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and in politics a staunch Republican, and has served as justice of the peace for a quarter of a century, as a member of the school board for forty years, and in other public capacities. He is a popular comrade of the Grand Army of the Republic, and is prominent in Masonic circles, having taken his first degree in Masonry prior to going to the war. He and his wife had four children, three of whom are living, and Samuel G., was the second in order of birth.

Samuel G. Reynolds secured his education in the Branch county district schools, after leaving which he became a newsboy on the railroad for one summer in order to earn enough money to continue his studies. Subsequently he worked as a driver of a delivery wagon and at whatever occupations presented themselves, for a time being a schoolteacher, and in this way managed to put himself through Ferris Institute, Big Rapids, Michigan. During 1887 and 1888 he was employed by the Emmons Brick & Tile Company, a concern which also dealt in lumber, near Muskegon, Michigan, and he then secured a position as bookkeeper with the Big Rapids National Bank, with which he was connected until 1895. In that year Mr. Reynolds came to Billings and accepted the office of assistant cashier with the Yellowstone National Bank, but in 1898 went with the First National Bank in the same capacity. In 1902 he was appointed government agent of the Crow Indians, and the manner in which he discharged his duties and the success with which he handled affairs caused his reappointment by President Roosevelt in 1906, and he continued to serve in the same capacity until handing in his resignation July 1, 1910. On July 14, 1910, he was appointed receiver of the First Trust and Savings Bank, of Billings, the duties of which position he took up on the same date. The success which attended Mr. Reynolds' work as Indian agent was almost phenomenal. From half-savage blanket Indians, living in tepees, they became industrious, enterprising farmers, and during the first year he was in office he took rations from all able-bodied Indians, and from all of them during his second year, thus making them self-supporting and saving the government from $50,000 to $75,000 a year. At the outset this task seemed almost impossible and attended by nearly insurmountable obstacles. Of course, there had been a number who had already adopted the ways of civilization, but the majority displayed a natural repugnance to the entire program proposed by Mr. Reynolds, objecting to the disruption of the old tribal ties, to the distribution of their lands and to the demands that they should work. The greatest difficulty was encountered in making the members of the bands take up their allotments, and in some cases outright refusal was made, notably among the White River Utes, who decamped bag and baggage to the reservation of the Sioux, in South Dakota. The work, under Mr. Reynolds' supervision, went steadily forward, however, and that he succeeded may be seen by the fact that the tribe built 165 houses, and that the greater part have improved their lands and acquired good buildings, stock and implements. One of Mr. Reynolds' ideas to stimulate interest was the establishment of the Crow Annual Fair, which has become one of the unique celebrations of the tribe. The "Wild West" features, which were allowed at first to predominate as an inducement have gradually become almost eliminated, and the agricultural exhibits of these people would now do credit to agriculturists of almost any section in the country. The work accomplished by Mr. Reynolds was of inestimable value, not only to the Indians themselves, but to the resources of the state and to the United States government. In Indian Commissioner Leupp's report for 1906 special mention is made at length regarding the educational benefit to the Indians. He was first elected alderman of the Second ward in 1900 and was re-elected without opposition in 1902, but gave up the office to accept the government position. In fraternal work he has also been prominent, belonging to Big Rapids Lodge, No. 171, A. F. & A. M.; Big Rapids Chapter, No. 52, R. A. M.; Pilgrim Commandery, No. 23, Big Rapids, Michigan, of which he is past eminent commander; and Saladin Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Grand Rapids, Michigan. In 1901 he attended the organization of the Mystic Shrine in Honolulu, and was an active participant in the ceremonies. He also holds membership in Billings Lodge, No. 394, B. P. O. E., of which he is past exalted ruler; and McCosta Lodge, No. 26, K. of P., being past chancellor of the latter.

On May 20, 1896, Mr. Reynolds was married to Miss Carrie Brown, who was born in Big Rapids, Michigan, daughter of Judge Michael Brown, of Billings. Four children have been born to this union, namely: Michael B., Carolyn, Rosalind and Mary Alice. Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds have a pleasant home in Billings, where western hospitality is ever displayed to their many friends.

ALONZO ELLIS has led a life of agricultural activity in various sections of the country, his operations having been carried on in his native state and county, in Illinois, in Indian Territory, again in Kansas, and lastly in Montana, where he has been located since 1895. His operations in this state have been of a wide and comprehensive scope and he has prospered in a manner wholly consistent with his experience and ability. In addition to his ranching business he conducts a lumber business in Harlem, where he also owns a planing mill, a blacksmith shop, and a general hardware and implement store. Altogether, it would be difficult to find a man with more irons in the fire, and withal, more successful in each venture, than Mr. Ellis. He has won to himself a position of prominence and importance in the business life of Harlem, and is known for one of the most prosperous men of the place, as well as one of her most valuable citizens from the standpoint of his civic pride and willingness to aid in the advancement of the community.

Mr. Ellis was born in Fulton county, Illinois, on September 5, 1855, and is the son of Joseph and Laura M. (Jacobus) Ellis, natives of Ohio and New York, respectively. Joseph Ellis was a prominent river man in the early days of flat-boating on the Mississippi river and he did an enormous trading business in those days. Later he became established in Fulton county, Illinois, and passed many years in that place as a prosperous farmer. He died there in 1873, at the age of sixty-three years, and was buried in Oneida, Illinois. The mother lived to the age of seventy-seven years. They were the parents of two children,—Alonzo of this review, and Mary, who became the wife of Frank Murdock. Both husband and wife are now deceased, leaving Alonzo Ellis the sole remaining member of the family.

The early education of Mr. Ellis was received in the public schools of Farmington, Illinois, which he finished when he was seventeen years of age. He thereafter applied himself to the business of farming at home and elsewhere in the county, until he had reached the age of twenty-eight years, when he went to Eldorado, Butler county, Kansas. There he purchased a ranch and began stock-raising. For five years he continued thus, when he sold out and went to Norcatur, Kansas, and there engaged in a similar venture. There he remained for three years; then went to Indian Territory and carried on general farming until the year 1895. In that year he came to Montana, settling first in Chouteau county, as it was then called, but now known as Blaine county, and he purchased a fine ranch near to Harlem, now about a quarter of a mile from the city limits. After three years of ranching he went into the lumber business in Harlem. He erected a planing mill which he operates very successfully, and, as stated, conducts a blacksmith shop, as well as owning and operating a general hardware and implement store in the city. Mr. Ellis is naturally of a mechanical turn of mind, and he is thus able to oversee the details of the mill and smith work, as well as the store. He carries a large stock of hardware, and his lumber yard is one of the most modern and complete to be found in the county. Since he has been in Harlem Mr. Ellis has added another quarter section of land to his ranch, and has built for himself one of the finest residences in the city, a notable feature of which is the fact that he personally oversaw every detail of its construction. It is as perfect in plan and construction as the most costly residence in Montana, although built on a modest scale.

Although Mr. Ellis did not come to Montana empty handed, he regards his greatest successes in a financial way as having come from his operations in this state. He is today one of the leading citizens of Harlem, and is regarded as one of the progressive and solid men of the community. Mr. Ellis is an ardent sportsman and his annual hunting trips in the mountains are events to which he looks forward with much pleasure and anticipation. He never fails to return with the two deer which the law permits each hunter to bring down, if he be sufficiently skilful.

In 1888 Mr. Ellis married Miss Anna E. Everett, and four children have been born to them. The eldest, Mabel, is a bookkeeper in her father's offices, and is a most capable and valuable assistant. Joseph B. is nineteen years old, Ernest sixteen, and Karl, eleven years of age.

JOHN STRASSER. At No. 117 West Galena street, Butte, Montana, John Strasser is most successfully engaged in the repair and manufacture of all kinds of metal articles, in addition to which he also conducts an automobile supply store. In connection with the latter line of enterprise he employs a number of skilled workers in automobile repairs and he conducts a splendid business, which he has himself, unaided, built up and which is now proving very remunerative. Mr. Strasser is unusually loyal and public-spirited in all matters tending to advance the welfare of Butte and that he is also intrinsically loyal to his adopted country is evident when it is stated that he was one of the valiant volunteers in the Montana regiment that figured prominently in the Spanish-American war.

John Strasser was born in Austria, the date of his nativity being the 11th of October, 1875. He is a son of John and Mary (Dorf) Strasser, both of whom were natives of Austria, where they spent their entire lives and where they passed to the life eternal in 1907, the latter on March 13 and the former just three days later, March 16. The father was engaged in the manufacture of house heaters in Austria for a number of years prior to his death. He and his wife were the parents of two children, of whom John was the second in order of birth and both of whom are living at the present time, in 1912.

After receiving a fair rudimentary educational training in the public schools of his native land, John Strasser, at the age of fourteen years, was apprenticed to learn the metal-workers trade. His apprenticeship covered a period of three and a half years and at the expiration of that time he was a journeyman metal worker. He was repair machinist on ocean going vessels engaged in carrying oil, and made four full trips between Hamburg and New York, and on October 31, 1894, when his vessel put in at New York, he concluded to remain in this country. He remained in New York until January 17, 1895, when he went to Ogden, Utah, and was employed as a blacksmith on the Ogden reservoir, which was just started. After three weeks he went to Corinne, Utah, and was employed by the Bear River Canal Company at his trade, but after three weeks there he came to Butte, arriving here May 27, 1895. His first business location was at No. 60 West Broadway, in an old log cabin, the former home of Simon Hauswirth, an old pioneer in this city. He was so successful in his operations in Butte that he was soon obliged to seek more commodious quarters, going to 42 West Broadway, later to 20 West Broadway, and December 10, 1910, located at 117 West Galena street, where he repairs and manufactures all kinds of metal articles and where he also conducts an automobile supply store. He employs a large force of skilled workmen for auto repairs and for other mechanical work and his admirable success as a business man in Butte has been on a parity with his well directed efforts.

At the time of the inception of the Spanish-American war, in 1898, Mr. Strasser was one of the foremost to volunteer his services as a soldier. He enlisted in Company F, of the First Montana regiment, and for eighteen months was in the Philippine Islands, where he participated in a number of important engagements marking the progress of that conflict. While absent from Butte his business was cared for by a couple of trusted employees. Mr. Strasser was mustered out of service October 17, 1899, at San Francisco, and he immediately returned to Butte, where he has since resided.

In politics of a national character Mr. Strasser is a stalwart Republican, but in local matters he maintains an independent attitude, preferring to give his support to men and measures meeting with the approval of his judgment rather than to vote along strictly partisan lines. He takes an active interest in all civic affairs and is ever in readiness to respond to any call wherein the city, state or nation may be benefited. In a fraternal way he is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and he is also a valued member of Lawton Camp of the Spanish-American War Veterans. Mr. Strasser is unmarried, but this fact in no way detracts from his social popularity. He is genial in his associations, courteous and kindly, and is everywhere accorded the unalloyed confidence and esteem of his fellow citizens.

ELLSWORTH F. KILMER, one of the leading real estate and insurance men of Butte, is a native of Jackson, Michigan, where his life began on September 28, 1862. He is a son of George M. and Orrisa N. (Hull) Kilmer, the former born in Auburn, New York, and the latter in Jackson county, Michigan. The father was taken by his parents from his native place to Michigan in 1847, when he was about fourteen years old. He grew to manhood in the latter state and became a prosperous contractor and builder. In the later years of his life he turned his attention to farming, and made as great a success of that as he did of his former occupation, for he was highly endowed and used all his powers in everything he undertook and carried on. When the Civil war began he enlisted in Company K, Seventeenth Michigan Volunteer Infantry, in which he served sixteen months, and was then discharged on account of disabilities incurred in the service. While in the army he took part in several of the great battles of the war, among them that of Antietam.

Ellsworth F. Kilmer obtained his education in the public schools of Lansing in his native state, the family having moved to that city in 1868. After leaving school he entered the dry goods trade as a clerk in Lansing, and later followed the same pursuit in Kansas City, Missouri. While his employment was in the service of others, and its range of thought and requirement was limited, it nevertheless embodied experience of value, giving him knowledge of men and of himself, and sharpened his faculties for the subsequent independent business career.

In the spring of 1895 he came to Butte and took employment with the M. J. Connell Company, with which he remained four years. In 1899 he turned his attention to the real estate and insurance business, and until 1907 he worked in that for others, then embarked in the same line for himself. In December, 1908, he formed a partnership with Robert C. Ross under the firm name of Ross & Kilmer, for carrying on the business he was engaged in, and from the start the firm has been steadily successful. Its dealings have become very extensive and its name has gone to the front rank in real estate and insurance circles. Both members of the firm are gentlemen of fine business capacity and have studied the requirements of their enterprise with close attention. They know the city and the country around it far and wide and have a keen and analytical knowledge of realty values. Each is, in fact, a specialist in his department. Mr. Kilmer has in charge the insurance department of the business and Mr. Ross, the real estate department, and each has an intimate knowledge of his own branch and of the other one also. In April, 1912, Mr. Kilmer became secretary of the Montana Orchard Land Company.

He is public-spirited and progressive in reference to the affairs of Butte, and sedulous in his efforts to promote the city's development and improvement. In the Masonic fraternity he holds membership in Mount Moriah Lodge in Butte.

ROBERT W. ELLIS. A man of artistic tastes and talents, skilled in his profession, Robert W. Ellis is widely known as one of the most expert and successful photographers of Silver Bow county, his well-equipped studio in Butte being one of the busiest places in the city. He was born June 27, 1877, in Rosita, Colorado, but was reared and educated in Missouri.

His father, James T. Ellis, spent his early life in Illinois. He was for a few years employed as a mining man in Colorado, subsequently locating in Missouri. Coming to Montana soon after the work of developing the mineral resources of the state began, he took up his residence in Butte, where he became known as an expert stationary engineer, and was an important factor in promoting the mining interests of this part of the state. Since his retirement from active pursuits he has lived at his old home in Windsor, Missouri, an esteemed and highly respected citizen of that place. He married Susan M. Hughes, who was born in Windsor, Missouri in 1855, her birth having occurred nine years later than his. Three children blessed their union, as follows: Robert W., the special subject of this brief personal record; Emma H., born in Windsor, Missouri; and Mattie E., who was born in Windsor, Missouri, and is now the wife of Dr. M. E. Bradley, of St. Louis, Missouri.

After completion of his studies in the Windsor, Missouri, high school, Robert W. Ellis came, in 1895, to Montana in search of congenial employment, and for two years worked in a quartz mill at Bannack. Beginning then the study of photography under professional tutelage, he traveled extensively in the northwest, taking views of the country on both sides of the Rockies, from Winnipeg, Manitoba, to Minneapolis, Minnesota, being on the road the greater part of the time from 1897 until 1902. Deciding then to locate permanently, he purchased from the George Morse estate the property which he now owns and occupies, it being in the very heart of the business district of Butte, assuming its possession in 1903. As a photographer Mr. Ellis has won a fine reputation for excellence in execution, posing and effect, his work bearing the inspection of both amateurs and connoisseurs, and winning for him an extended and remunerative patronage.

In Butte, Montana, October 5, 1905, Mr. Ellis was united in marriage with Bertha B. Davis, who was born at Barry, Illinois, a daughter of Douglas and Jessie (McTucker) Davis. Her father, who was for many years a prosperous merchant in Barry, Illinois, was born in 1856, and died in 1904, while her mother is still living, being a resident of Great Falls, Montana. Mr. Ellis is an active member of the Butte Kennel Club, and is very fond of all outdoor amusements, including hunting and fishing, and, being a sociable and congenial companion, is exceedingly popular in the social life of the city. Politically, on national issues he is a Republican, but in local affairs votes for the best man.

ANTON J. KNieVEL. Those discouraging pessimists who persist in declaring that the best opportunities for success in business and industry are past and that the young man of today has not as good a chance to create for himself position and fortune as had those of previous decades need but look about them and see the many examples of influential and prosperous young men in every community to find the error of their claims. Especially is this true in the west, which has proven the magic land of opportunity to so large a number of men who came here without financial resources and have made good in all particulars in every avenue of trade and industry. A conspicuous example of the successful and prosperous business man who owes all that he has achieved and possesses to his own indomitable will and pluck, unaided by money or influence, is Mr. Anton J. Knievel, the well-known president and general manager of the Butte Potato & Produce Company, rated as the largest wholesale produce firm in the state of Montana.

Mr. Knievel arrived in this city January 10, 1895, with the magnificent capital of two dollars in his pockets, but he did not long remain in that condition of limited resources. For three years after coming to the city he was employed by his brother Conrad, who did a wholesale produce business here at that time, and after severing his connection with him held the responsible position of general manager of the Merchants Produce Company. After holding that office for four years, during which time he proved himself to be a thorough master of the produce business in all its connections and competent to handle big deals successfully, in 1903 he formed a partnership with H. E. Morier and for two years they carried on a produce and commission business in Butte. In 1905 Mr. Knievel organized the Butte Potato & Produce Company, Incorporated, which has ever since continued to carry on an extensive business as wholesale dealer in produce, fruit, vegetables, confectionery, fountain supplies, etc., the trade increasing by leaps and bounds.

The Butte Potato & Produce Company began business at the present location in a small tenement building which then occupied the site. When one sees the magnificent five-story and basement building which Mr. Knievel himself erected to give an adequate capacity for storage and correct handling of the immense volume of produce the firm secures from this and other parts of the United States and supplies its trade therewith, some idea of the phenomenal growth the business has enjoyed will be gained. The building, which is located at the corner of Iron and Utah avenue, is equipped to enable its owners to most expeditiously handle the lines of produce they deal in and has every convenience necessary to insure prompt shipments, including a switch paralleling the building and connecting with the main line of the railway.

Mr. Knievel, as his name indicates, is of German descent, and he possesses the sturdy characteristics of which that nationality is proud to claim,—thrift, industry and thorough business capacity, combined with strict integrity and high moral principles. He was born in Colfax county, Nebraska, April 15, 1876, a member of a family of eight children. His parents, Anton Edward and Elizabeth (Spenner) Knievel, were natives of Germany and came to the United States immediately after their marriage, in 1866, the trip to this country thus becoming their wedding journey. They went directly to Nebraska, then a wild, unsettled cattle country, and located on a ranch which was situated eighty miles from a railroad, and were obliged to do their marketing in Omaha, covering that great distance with the slow, tedious ox team. The elder Knievel was a man of prominence in his section during his lifetime, and at the time of his death, February 17, 1906, held the office of county commissioner. In addition to his operations as a ranchman he conducted a store at Clearwater, Nebraska, and after the son, Anton, had graduated from the schools of that city in 1893, he worked for his father, assisting him in his merchandising business. He remained at home only two years after completing his education, however, and then came to Butte, where he has ever since continued to reside.

The marriage of Mr. Knievel to Miss Anna Ione McCarthy, a native of Michigan and a daughter of D. J. McCarthy, occurred at Calumet, Michigan, July 24, 1901. Mr. and Mrs. Knievel are the parents of two children, Anton J., Jr., born in this city May 14, 1903, and Margaret Ione, also a native of Butte, born December 12, 1907.

Mr. Knievel is a man of diversified interests and occupies a position of honor in leading social, religious and fraternal circles of the city in which he is so prominent a commercial factor. Politically he is an advocate of Republican principles, though he does not take part in partisan affairs to any extent. He holds membership in the Silver Bow Club, belongs to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Modern Woodmen of America, and the Knights of Columbus, and is a devout communicant of the Roman Catholic church. All affairs in which he is interested receive his earnest and enthusiastic support, and he invariably exerts his influence to the promotion of all projects that have for their object the improvement of conditions and development of the interests and industries of this city and state.

HARRY W. JOHNSON. Among the enterprising citizens of Butte, Montana, Harry W. Johnson holds prestige as one who has gained his admirable success in life solely through his own well directed endeavors. He has been a resident of Butte since 1906 and during this time has been secretary and treasurer of the well known Brophy Grocery Company. He is a man of broad mind and great public spirit and in every possible way has done his share in forwarding the progress and development of the community in which he lives.

A native of the fine old Keystone state of the Union, Harry W. Johnson was born in Chester county, Pennsylvania, on the 10th of March, 1870. He is a son of John R. and Margaretta (Worrest) Johnson, both of whom were likewise born in Chester county, Pennsylvania, the former in 1831 and the latter in 1830. During the early portion of his active career John R. Johnson was engaged in farming operations, but later in life he turned his attention to the manufacture of paints and oils at Downingtown, Pennsylvania. He was summoned to the life eternal in 1892, at the age of sixty-one years, and his noble wife, who still survives him, is now residing at Lancaster, Pennsylvania.

Harry W. Johnson was the youngest in order of birth in a family of three children, and he received his preliminary educational training in the public schools of Downingtown. Subsequently he attended a school in the city of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, but at the age of seventeen years he entered the employ of George B. Woodman, who conducted a grocery store at West Philadelphia. Mr. Johnson has continued to devote his entire active career to the grocery business and in 1895 he came to Montana, settling first in the attractive city of Helena, later removing to Hamilton, in Ravalli county. He remained at Hamilton for a period of thirteen years, and while there was associated with the Amalgamated Copper Mining Company. In 1906 he severed his connections at Hamilton and came to Butte, where he has since been a member of the Brophy Grocery Company, serving that important concern in the capacity of treasurer and secretary.

At Hamilton, Montana, on the 5th of April, 1899, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Johnson to Miss Florence Nicol, a daughter of Robert Nicol and a representative of the old pioneer family of that name at

Arthur J. Knier

Hamilton. Mrs. Johnson was born at Hamilton, Montana, on the 28th of July, 1880. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Johnson and their names and respective dates of birth are here recorded.—Robert, November 14, 1900; Margaretta, August 25, 1904; and Wayne, born December 28, 1906. The two elder children were born at Hamilton and the youngest is a native of Butte.

In politics Mr. Johnson is a stalwart supporter of the cause of the Republican party and in a fraternal way he is affiliated with the time-honored Masonic order and with Silver Bow Club. He is a man of fine, clean-cut personality, fair and honorable in his business dealings and loyal and public-spirited in his civic attitude.

JOHN V. DWYER, a well-known and representative member of the bar of the metropolis of Montana, controls a substantial professional business in the city of Butte, and is also the incumbent of the office of deputy county attorney of Silver Bow county. As a youth he worked with pick and shovel in the mines of Montana and in the meanwhile his ambition was of the most vital and insistent order, as shown in his determined application to study and his conserving of his earnings for the purpose of securing an adequate education to fit him for a higher station in life. He has felt the lash of necessity and has found it a benignant spur to definite effort.

John V. Dwyer was born at Atlantic, a small mining town in Houghton county, on the upper peninsula of Michigan, and the date of his birth was August 18, 1878. He is a son of Timothy F. and Mary (Harrington) Dwyer, both of whom were born in Ireland. Timothy F. Dwyer was born in the year 1832, and was but a lad of thirteen when he came to America in 1845. He became a resident of the state of Michigan and was one of the pioneers in connection with mining operations on the upper peninsula of that state. He held the position of master mechanic of the Atlantic mine for some time and finally removed with his family to O'Neil, Holt county, Nebraska, where he was identified with extensive farming interests during the major portion of his active career thereafter and where his death occurred on the 26th of September, 1905. He was a man of sterling character and his life was one of consecutive industry.

Though it was not his to attain to wealth or prominence, he accounted well to the world as one of its earnest and worthy workers and was a citizen who merited and received the fullest measure of popular confidence and regard. His wife was nine years of age when she came with her mother to America, where they joined the husband and father, who had here established his home about the year 1841. He settled in Massachusetts, and there his family joined him. He met a tragic death while serving as superintendent of railroad construction, having been killed by an explosion while at work, about the year 1843. Timothy F. Dwyer was a devout communicant of the Catholic church, as is also his widow, who now maintains her home in O'Neill, Nebraska, and of their children three sons and two daughters are living.

John V. Dwyer, the immediate subject of this review gained his early educational discipline in the public schools of the town of O'Neill, Nebraska, where he remained until he had attained to the age of seventeen years. He then came to Montana and located in the city of Butte, where he found employment in the Anaconda mines. Though devoting his days to arduous toil, his ambitious spirit conquered physical fatigue, as is shown by the fact that he attended the evening classes first in the Silver Bow Commercial College and later in the Butte Business College, in each of which he applied himself earnestly and effectively to the general courses provided. Later he went to Great Falls, this state, where he secured employment in the smelters and where he was for a time a student in the Great Falls Commercial College. From this time onward his course was one of consecutive advancement, and this progress was won in the face of obstacles that would have thwarted one of less determination and singleness of purpose. He finally found his savings sufficient to enable him to enter the academic department of Creighton University, at Omaha, Nebraska, and in this institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1904, with the well-earned degree of Bachelor of Arts. While attending college he passed his vacations as a worker in the mines at Butte, and after his graduation he put his scholastic attainments to practical test and utilization by assuming the position of superintendent of the public schools in his old home town of O'Neill, Nebraska, where he served in this capacity, with marked acceptability, from 1904 to 1906, inclusive. In the meanwhile he had continued to follow his customary plan of making every moment count, as in the midst of the cares and exactions of his pedagogic work he devoted himself to the study of law, under effective preceptorship. In the autumn of 1906 he attended a course of lectures in the law department of his alma mater, Creighton University, and in 1907-8 he was a successful and popular teacher in the public schools of Butte, where he was admitted to the Montana bar in 1909. In the spring of that year Mr. Dwyer engaged in the active practice of his profession in this city, and it was practically a matter assured that to one who had proved his powers through such discipline as had been his in gaining academic and technical education, success must come as a logical result. It is gratifying to note that his position as a representative of the legal profession is one of secure and unequivocal prestige and that he controls a substantial and representative general practice, in connection with which he has proved himself a skilled and versatile trial lawyer and admirably fortified counselor. Soon after initiating practice he was appointed deputy attorney of Silver Bow county, and in this office he has given most effective service, his term expiring on the 31st of December, 1912.

In politics Mr. Dwyer accords a staunch allegiance to the Democratic party and he has been a valued worker in its ranks as well as an admirable exponent of its principles and policies. He is a communicant of the Catholic church, as is also Mrs. Dwyer, and is affiliated with the local organizations of the Knights of Columbus, the Fraternal Order of Eagles and the Ancient Order of Hibernians, in which last mentioned he was president of the Butte lodge in 1909-10. He is also identified with the University Club and the Robert Emmet Literary Society. Mr. Dwyer has shown distinctive literary ability and is the author of a very appreciable number of stories and poems, many of which have been published in leading magazines and all of which show deep appreciation of the scheme of human life, a gentle spirit of idealism, a broad outlook and marked versatility and beauty of diction. He has recently written a short story entitled "A Miner's Apprenticeship: A Story of the Butte Mines," and the same gives an effective exposition of his own experiences while he was thus employed.

In the city of Butte, on the 6th of July, 1908, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Dwyer to Miss Grace Gordon, daughter of William Gordon, a well-known citizen of O'Neill, Nebraska. Mr. Gordon comes of staunch Puritan stock and is a native of the city of Providence, Rhode Island. Mr. and Mrs. Dwyer became the parents of two children, John Robert, who was born August 4, 1909, and who died four days later, and Mary, who was born on the 12th of January, 1911, and whose winsome presence adds to the attractions of the pleasant home.

CHARLES J. KELLY. President and manager of the Hennessy Mercantile Company of Butte, as well as president of the Daly Bank Trust Company of that city, Charles J. Kelly is one of the foremost men in the financial, commercial and industrial life not only of Montana, but of the great Northwest. Although a man of but middle age, Mr. Kelly has long since established himself among that class of shrewd, capable and aggressive business men whose presence in any community is always an important factor in its progress and development.

A native of St. Paul, Minnesota, Mr. Kelly was born on the 7th of September, 1868. Charles J. Kelly received his education principally at St. Mary's parochial school in St. Paul, attending school until he was about fifteen years old. At this time being thrown upon his own resources to a large extent, he left school to become a wage earner. His first position was that of a page in the Minnesota state senate, and following the adjournment of that body, he secured a place as office boy in the office of James J. Hill, the well-known railway magnate. Mr. Hill took special notice of the lad who gave such quick, cheerful and courteous service to his employers at all times, and advanced him from time to time as the rapidly developing ability of Mr. Kelly warranted. Mr. Kelly remained in the employ of the railway, under Mr. Hill, for eleven and a half years. Desiring to make a change of location, he then severed his connections in St. Paul and in 1895 went to Anaconda, Montana, and for the subsequent four years was employed on the clerical staff of the Copper City Commercial Company.

It was in 1899 that he became connected with the Hennessy Mercantile Company at Butte, at that time assuming the duties of secretary and treasurer of the company. With characteristic adaptability, Mr. Kelly soon fitted himself for the peculiar requirements of one in his position and soon began to take an active part in the affairs of the corporation. Mr. D. J. Hennessy, the founder of the business, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work, died in 1908, and Mr. Kelly was made president, a position that he has since held.

As the head of the largest mercantile establishment in the state, and one of the great department stores of the Northwest, Mr. Kelly's interests are extensive and diversified. As the result of constant and intelligent industry, as well as judicious and careful investment, he has accumulated valuable property interests, while his recognized ability and business acumen have been utilized in the directorates of several large corporations of which he is a member. In January, 1912, he was elected president of the Daly Bank & Trust Company of Butte, one of the oldest and strongest financial institutions in the state.

Mr. Kelly is not only known as one of the foremost men in the commercial life of the city of Butte, but is equally well known throughout the state as a man of influence and power in the commercial life of the Northwest. He is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Silver Bow Club and the Country Club. The weight of his influence is always exerted on the side of growth and progress in all enterprises of public character and he enjoys the respect and esteem of a wide circle of friends and acquaintances in all walks of life.

The marriage of Mr. Kelly to Miss Mary Peters occurred at Anaconda, on the 14th of October, 1897. Mrs. Kelly is the daughter of Joseph Peters, and the family, which originally came from Boston, Massachusetts, was one of the first to settle at Anaconda thirty years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Kelly are the parents of two children, both of whom were born in Butte. Charles Joseph, the eldest, was born on the 8th of December, 1901, and Mary Frances, was born on the 3rd of June, 1905.

FRANK W. HASKINS. Among the well-known lawyers of the state of Montana is Frank W. Haskins, who maintains his home and business headquarters at Butte. Throughout his career as an attorney and counsellor he has, by reason of unimpeachable conduct and close observance of the unwritten code of professional ethics, gained the admiration and respect of his fellow members of the bar, in addition to which he commands a high place in the confidence and esteem of his fellow citizens. Mr. Haskins is referee in bankruptcy at Butte and he has figured in a number of important matters of litigations in the state and federal courts.

Frank W. Haskins was born at Woodstock, Illinois, in 1870, and he is a son of Orville and Emily (Mantle) Haskins, both of whom died in the early seventies. The father was a native of Vermont and was a well-known hotel man at Pueblo and other Colorado towns about the time of his demise and the mother was born and reared in Birmingham, England. Orville Haskins was a Union soldier in the Civil war and took part in a number of important engagements marking the progress of that struggle.

The youngest in order of birth in a family of three children, Frank W. Haskins received his early education in the public schools of Colorado, in which state the family home was established. In 1889 he was matriculated as a student in the University of Colorado, at Boulder. He was admitted to practice at the Colorado bar in 1893. Subsequently he was admitted to the Montana bar and he located in Butte during the year 1895. For three or four years John F. Davies was associated with Mr. Haskins in the practice of law but since 1907 the latter has conducted an individual practice. Since 1905 he has been referee in bankruptcy.

Mr. Haskins spent his earliest life as a cowboy, and on a ranch down in Colorado. In a fraternal way Mr. Haskins has passed through the circle of York Rite Masonry, being a valued member of the lodge, chapter, council and commandery. He is also a member of the Bagdad Temple, of the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, in addition to which he is connected with the Woodmen of the World. In politics he gives an unswerving allegiance to the principles and policies for which the Republican party stands sponsor and in religious matters he attends and gives his support to the Protestant Episcopal church, of which his wife is a devout communicant. Mr. Haskins is fond of hunting and fishing and is a thoroughbred sportsman.

At Butte, in 1903, he was married to Mrs. Frances Dedrich.

GEORGE W. MERKLE. It is the purpose of this work to take account of those men who have been contributors to the progress and development of Montana, one of whom is George W. Merkle, of Belt, for sixteen years one of the most trusted employes of the Anaconda Coal Mining Company and well known in that section for his interest and energy in pushing the development of his city. Not by luck or the assistance of capital or influential friends, but by pluck and the exercise of those traits of character which have inspired confidence in his ability and integrity has he waged his battle for success and proved victorious. He furthermore has the distinction of being a native westerner, born in Virginia City, Nevada, on the 21st of February, 1875, and reared amid the environment of western energy and genius. Thomas Merkle, his father, a Kentuckian by birth and born in 1842 of German descent, in the early '60s came to Nevada, where he followed butchering for a number of years. He is now a retired resident of Butte and has mining interests in the vicinity of Missoula, Montana. During his residence in Virginia City, Nevada, he was for many years chief of the volunteer fire department there. In Virginia City he met and married Mary Ann Dempsey, a native of

G. V. W. W. W. W.

Ireland who had come to America and settled in Virginia City in early girlhood. Thomas and Mary Ann (Dempsey) Merkle became the parents of nine children, of whom George was the fifth in order of birth and is one of eight now living (1912).

He was educated in the schools of Virginia City, Nevada, and at Butte Business College to the age of eighteen, when he took up the study of law in the office of Judge F. P. Langan, now district judge of Storey county, Nevada. He was compelled to abandon his studies after a year, however, and in the fall of 1895 began work as a miner in Butte, Montana. Thus fourteen months were spent; then he became timekeeper for the Anaconda Coal Mining Company and after serving six months in that capacity was transferred to Belt as assistant bookkeeper. His ability and fidelity to the company's interests won another promotion on February 1, 1904, when he was made head bookkeeper and cashier for that company, in whose continuous service he has now remained sixteen years.

Since his residence in Belt he has been one of the most enthusiastic and energetic workers in behalf of the city's progress. He was one of the organizers of the Commercial Club, of which he is president, and he also organized the Belt Amusement Association. In fact any movement that has for its purpose the material advancement and the welfare of Belt receives his hearty support. He is a Democrat in politics and an active worker in his party's behalf but has himself always declined political honors. In fraternal affiliations he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, the Ancient Order of Hibernians of America, and of the Knights of Columbus. He is a communicant of the Roman Catholic church. While a resident of Virginia City, Nevada, he served as a member of the Emmett Guard of the Nevada state militia.

On June 17, 1902, at Belt, Montana, was celebrated his marriage to Miss Catherine Mary Murphy and to their union has been born one daughter, Catherine Mary Merkle, born May 17, 1903.

CARL B. SNYDER, postmaster and a prominent merchant and druggist at Stockett, is one of a large number of young men of sterling worth who came from the middle west to Montana when it was an infant state allured by the possibilities of citizenship and business opportunities. Those of staying qualities, energetic and industrious, and not afraid to grapple with fortune, have with very few exceptions, been rewarded with a due measure of success.

Carl B. Snyder was born at Madison, Wisconsin, February 17, 1868, and attended the public schools of that city until he had completed the work in the eighth grade. What knowledge he gained from books thereafter he gained by lamplight, oftentimes burning midnight oil in his efforts to secure a better education. He received his first position with the Hollisters' Pharmacy of Madison, Wisconsin while still a boy and remained with that firm until he had learned the profession of pharmacy. From Madison he went to Racine, Wisconsin, where for three years and a half he was in the employ of W. R. Kirkby, a leading druggist of that city. Then branching out for himself he opened up a drug store in Evansville, Wisconsin, but within a year lost everything he had. It was then that he decided to come to Montana and begin anew. On March 5, 1895, he entered the employ of the Driver Bradley Drug Company at Great Falls, there having charge of the retail department of their business. He soon won recognition for his efficiency and to his charge was entrusted the business of a branch house at Stockett. The firm went out of business in 1899 while Mr. Snyder was at Stockett and he thereupon bought their interest at that point. From this small beginning he has gradually branched out making many additions to his business until it has become well equipped in every department and he has become one of the leading druggists in the northwestern part of the state. His is the only drug store in Stockett. Mr. Snyder is also manager of the central station of the Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone Company at Stockett and to his other duties are now added those of postmaster of Stockett, to which position he was appointed on February 16, 1912.

Mr. Snyder is of German descent. Carl B. Snyder, his father, was born in Germany and while still a youth emigrated to America with his parents who settled in Wisconsin and were numbered among the early pioneers of that state. He died there in 1868 when thirty-three years of age. The mother of our subject was Miss Emily Blass prior to her marriage. She was born in New York City but became a resident of Wisconsin at the age of twenty and there was married to Carl B. Snyder. She is still living, being now seventy-four years of age, and is numbered among the very early pioneers of Madison, of which city she has now been a continuous resident fifty-four years.

At Stockett, Montana, in 1900, Mr. Snyder married Miss Elizabeth Hetherington, a daughter of John Hetherington, who is a well-known resident of Stockett and has there served as a justice of the peace for some time. The three children of Mr. and Mrs. Snyder are Louise, born in August, 1901, at Stockett, who is now attending school there; Carl J., born in May, 1906, who also is in school; and Stanley, born July 31, 1909.

Mr. Snyder is prominently affiliated with the Masonic order as a member of the Knights Templars and the Ancient Arabic Order, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He is also a member and a past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias and a member of the Pythian Sisters. In political views he is a Republican and at the present time represents his party as district committeeman at Stockett. His church associations are by membership in the Methodist Congregational denomination. He has been successful in his business ventures in Montana and besides his property at Stockett is the owner of a fruit farm at Spokane, Washington. He is fond of out door sports and indulges in them when time from business will permit. He is social, energetic and well known in his section of the state, where he is highly esteemed by his fellow citizens as a man of honor and usefulness.

E. FRANK SAYRE. In the performance of his official duties in the capacity of county auditor, E. Frank Sayre, of Fort Benton, has shown himself to be a thoroughly efficient and conscientious official, while in the field of business he has gained prestige by the application of methods of fair dealing and integrity. Chouteau county is fortunate in that it possesses so many men of public spirit to fill its offices, and among these Mr. Sayre has been prominent since 1895. He was born in New Jersey, July 10, 1857, and is a son of William and Amelia (Fitch) Sayre, the former of whom spent his life in his native New Jersey, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits and died in 1892, at the age of eighty years. Mrs. Sayre was born in New Haven, Connecticut, and died in 1878 in New Jersey, when sixty-three years old.

E. Frank Sayre was the seventh child born to his parents, and secured his education in the public schools of New Jersey. He first came to Montana as a youth, but subsequently went to St. Paul, Minnesota, to complete his studies, then returning to Montana to accept a position on a sheep ranch in Chouteau county. Continuing in that business until January 1, 1895, Mr. Sayre then came to Fort Benton, where he was elected clerk and recorder of Chouteau county, and filled that office for ten years, being elected for five consecutive terms. In 1905 he entered the abstract business, with which he was connected until 1910, and in that year was elected auditor, a position which he held till

January 1, 1913. As an able and faithful official he vindicated the faith of the voters of this section, and gave the county a businesslike administration, bringing to his duties the same careful, conscientious regard for detail that has characterized his business dealings. Mr. Sayre has opened an abstract of title office on Franklin street, opposite the court house, where he has a complete set of abstract books. He has made a specialty of the abstract business for eight years. His political belief is that of the Republican party, in the ranks of which he is known as one of the most dependable and influential workers in the county.

Mr. Sayre was married October 23, 1901, to Mrs. Ida R. Tirrell, of Chinook, Montana. They have numerous friends in Fort Benton, and their comfortable home is a center of culture and social refinement.

DR. E. W. SPOTTSWOOD is one of the best known physicians of Missoula county. He was born in Minnesota on the second day of January, 1866, the son of C. C. Spottswood, who came from Carlisle, Pennsylvania, to Minnesota in 1856. The elder Mr. Spottswood was born in Pennsylvania and there took his legal training, coming to Minnesota that he might begin his practice of law in a new country. Hardly did he realize, until his arrival, how few people of his race and color inhabited this country where he had chosen to locate. The Indians who had been driven north from Iowa and Nebraska by the early settlers were making almost the last stand for their rights in Minnesota. The tribes were mostly branches of the Sioux nation, those powerful redmen, the remnant of whom stood forth against Custer some twenty years later.

In the early fifties, Bishop Whipple, that saintly and godfearing man of the church whose efforts brought peace to the settlers of the northwest for years at a time, was laboring as a missionary in their midst. Mr. Spottswood, on his arrival from the east, not only saw and appreciated the great work of the bishop but joined in his efforts and worked at his side—worked for the redemption and civilization of the real American.

As the country became more thickly settled his law practice flourished. Here, ten years after his arrival, his son was born. His wife, Nancy J. Lilly, a frail daughter of Lewiston, Pennsylvania, had come with him to the new land and like the Pilgrim mothers had borne, not only the hardships themselves but had borne with the pioneer fathers as well. Like many another woman, she labored and strove throughout the early years of deprivation, then when success became theirs, when the son grew to young manhood, and the road was smoother, she slipped into the other life. Her passing was in 1883, in the seventeenth year of her son's life.

Her husband had practiced his profession until the failure of his health shortly after the birth of his son. They then removed to a farm where, in a few years, his health so improved that he engaged in the hotel business in Wilmer, Minnesota. Here he remained until he retired from active life. During his last years he made his home in Minneapolis. On December 12, 1910, he died very suddenly while visiting relatives in North Dakota. He had been spared for eighty-seven years of useful life, having been born in November, 1823.

His son, after attending school in a number of Minnesota towns, entered the Minnesota State University in Minneapolis and was graduated from the medical department of that institution in the class of 1893. One year he spent as interne in the city and county hospital, St. Paul, and another was devoted to general practice in the same city.

At the instigation of the Northern Pacific Railway he moved to Missoula, Montana, on the twenty-eighth of May, 1895, and became assistant surgeon for the company. On the retirement of Dr. J. J. Buckley, who for a number of years had served as chief surgeon for the Northern Pacific, Dr. Spottswood was appointed to fill the latter position. In January, 1909, he withdrew his services to enter general practice, having been with the company as chief surgeon for almost six years. Since devoting himself to a broader practice, he has been of great service to the community and has established an enviable reputation in the profession. He is a member of the county, state and national medical associations and was for years connected with the National Association of Railway Surgeons.

On the twenty-ninth of September, 1903, Miss Lenita Bonner became Mrs. E. W. Spottswood. Miss Bonner, now Mrs. Spottswood, is the daughter of E. L. Bonner, one of the pioneer citizens of Missoula, and one who has gained prominence for himself. His daughter was born in San Francisco, California, and came to Montana when very young, first residing at Deer Lodge, and later at Missoula, which is still her home.

Dr. and Mrs. Spottswood are the parents of two children, Lenita A. and Edward Bonner Spottswood. The son is so called in honor of his maternal grandfather.

The doctor, though feeling a deep interest in sociological subjects and the welfare of humanity about him, is not a strong partisan politically. He is, however, active in civic affairs and lodge circles. He was one of the charter members of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks in Montana and is a Mason, a Knight Templar and a member of the Mystic Shrine.

WALTER L. VERGE is a young member of the legal profession who cast his fortunes with the state of Montana in 1895, and though his residence there covers but a few years he has demonstrated to its people that he is of them and with them in all that makes for progress and good and true citizenship. Well prepared in his educational qualifications and well fortified in his personal traits of character, he has already proved a good lawyer and a good citizen and the beginning he has made presages for him a most successful future career.

Mr. Verge was born in Nova Scotia, January 24, 1880, and on the paternal side is descended from an old Virginia family of English lineage that was established on this side of the water prior to the Revolution. His mother's people, the Murrays, also are of English extraction and have most of them remained on British soil, in Canada and Nova Scotia. Levi H. Verge, the father of Walter L. and a native of Canada, was a shoe manufacturer and died on April 10, 1904, at the age of seventy-two years in Minneapolis, Minnesota, whither he had removed in 1882. His wife, Caroline Murray, was born in Canada and their marriage took place there. She now resides at Vancouver, British Columbia. Walter L. Verge is the youngest of their six children.

He graduated from the Minneapolis high school in 1896 and next entered the University of Minnesota, where he completed his studies in 1905 and was graduated with the degree of LL. B. In the fall of that same year he came to Great Falls, Montana, and for the practice of law formed a co-partnership with Attorney General Donovan, the firm style being Donovan & Verge. Mr. Verge continued his professional work there until May, 1909, when he removed to Choteau and became a partner of J. G. Bair, the present United States collector of customs at Great Falls. The firm of Bair & Verge is engaged in a general legal practice and enjoys a very satisfactory and representative clientele. Between his high school and his college days Mr. Verge gathered a soldier's experience in the Spanish-American war as a member of Company A, First Montana Volunteers, his regiment having been sent to the Philippine Islands where he saw service in nineteen engagements and numerous skirmishes. He was mustered out with his regiment at San Francisco on October 17, 1899. He is now lieutenant-colonel of the Montana National Guards and is a member of the general staff commission decreed by Governor Norris on April 1, 1911.

C. C. Jeffrey

At Superior, Wisconsin, on July 10, 1908, occurred the marriage of Mr. Verge and Miss Margaret Wallace, of Anniston, Alabama, whose parents, Samuel and Christine Wallace are residents of Anniston. A son Bruce, born to Mr. and Mrs. Verge on July 9, 1911, was spared to them but for a day.

Besides his law interests Mr. Vergé is also identified with the Golden Rock Creamery and is its treasurer.

Politically he is a Democrat and is an active worker in behalf of his party. His fraternal associations are with Lodge No. 204 Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks at Great Falls and he keeps in touch with college life and college associates as a member of the Zeta Psi fraternity. He is a member and a vestryman in the Episcopal church at Choteau.

CHRISTOPHER C. JEFFREY is the son of Robert Jeffrey who was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, and grew to young manhood in his native land. Before leaving home in search of larger opportunities he was united in marriage to Mary Carruthers, a bonnie Scotch lass who feared not the unknown dangers of the new world. Together they came to America. Together they came to the United States but soon decided that they might feel more at home if still on English soil, so they shortly moved to Canada where they remained British subjects to the end of their lives. In Canada they purchased them a small farm where they passed the remainder of their days in comparative comfort. Mr. Jeffrey cared for his farm in person almost until the last. He passed away in 1892 at the good old age of seventy-six. His wife, although the mother of ten children, outlived her husband by almost thirteen years. In 1905 she was laid to rest at his side. A long deserved rest was hers. She had endured hardship and privation smilingly and reared her ten children in wholesome fear of her Scotch Presbyterian God. For eighty years was she spared to labor for her family on this earth. Mr. and Mrs. Jeffrey, with their native caution, progressed slowly, but every step of their lives was toward progress.

Of their ten sturdy offsprings—and where can there be found better stock for the building of a new land—of these children Christopher C. Jeffrey was the second from the youngest. He was born in New York City shortly after the arrival of his parents from Scotland, the date of his birth being July the eighth, 1838. Scarcely was he a year of age, however, when his parents moved to Canada, their future home. Here their son lived upon the home farm until his twenty-first year, when, desiring to set out for himself, he went to Nebraska. When only thirteen years of age, his father, with the old world valuation of a good trade, had apprenticed him to a harness maker so that he did not start out in life altogether empty handed. Through his four years' apprenticeship at Mount Forest, Canada, he had received for his labors the total sum of $160. This to a youth of American parents would have seemed ridiculously small, but an American young man, on the other hand, would probably have started out with neither the good trade to depend upon nor the $160 of his own earnings to carry him to his journey's end. For nearly fifteen years Mr. Jeffrey labored at his trade in Nebraska. In 1895, having accumulated a competence, he left Nebraska for Lewistown, Montana. Here he opened up a large harness and saddlery house and has carried on a flourishing business ever since.

Before leaving Nebraska he chose for his life companion Miss Hattie Cheney, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Cheney, of Princeton, Nebraska. They were joined in marriage at that place on the eighth day of November, 1891.

Mr. and Mrs. Jeffrey are now the parents of two grown children. Bert Jeffrey, the son, is with his father in business. He still makes his home with his parents. His sister, Gladys Jeffrey Lefler, is the wife of Mr. Arthur Lefler, who conducts a pool hall with a cigar business attached.

Mr. Christopher Jeffrey has been able to devote few years of his life to the obtaining of book knowledge, but with the shrewdness and determination inherited from his old Scotch father, he has won for himself a kind of education that schooling often fails to give. The Presbyterian teachings of his parents cause him to still lean toward that denomination. In this preference Mrs. Jeffrey joins him. Both of them are most devoted to Lewistown and Montana, believing that they are excelled by no sister town or state.

Mr. Jeffrey is a member of the Red Men lodge and most active in his service to the Yoemen, having filled nearly every office it was in their power to confer upon him. Politically he votes the Democratic ticket, although he feels no personal interest in politics. He is a great reader and keeps well informed on the questions of the day, however. His infrequent vacations are spent in the open, fishing being his favorite sport. His spare evenings are given over to the theater or to some musical entertainment, both he and Mrs. Jeffrey very much enjoying these diversions and being quite musical themselves. Montana has brought them prosperity and they, in return, give to her a loyalty that can not be exceeded by her native sons and daughters.

JAMES E. HEALY, one of the leading lawyers of Butte, was born at Silver City, Lyon county, Nevada, on July 12, 1871. His father, John G. Healy and his mother, Margaret, were born in Ireland.

James E. Healy began his education in the public schools of Gold Hill, Nevada, and completed it at high school in San Francisco, from which he was graduated in 1887. Immediately after leaving high school he began the study of law in the office of Henry E. Highton, then one of the leading lawyers of the California metropolis. He also studied in the same city in the office of B. C. Whitman, a former justice of the supreme court of Nevada, and that of Mitchell & Ricketts there. But all his studies were conducted under the direction and tutelage of Judge Whitman, who was a warm personal friend of his father and took a special interest in the young man. He was admitted to the bar in Butte in 1895 and began his practice in that city where he has ever since carried it on.

His practice grew rapidly to large proportions and became remunerative within a short time. It was general in character for a time, and is so yet in a measure. But of late years he has specialized considerably in negligence and injury cases, and has been very generally successful. He was county attorney of Silver Bow county in 1905 and 1906, and has a very successful record as such. He was one of the successful counsel in Terry A. John versus the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, the question at issue being the right of the railroad company to issue free passes over its lines in the face of a state constitution prohibiting such action. In this case Mr. Healy was associated with Jesse B. Roote, who wrote all the briefs himself. The case resulted in a judgment against the railroad company for the sum of $25,000.

In his political faith and activity Mr. Healy is a Democrat. During the anti-trust campaigns of a few years ago he was very active in the service of his party in every contest, but of late he has not taken an active part in political contests of any kind. Fraternally he is a zealous member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks on a roster of Butte Lodge No. 240 in the fraternity, also a member of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, Hive No. 11. He is married and lives with his sister Mary, at 731 West Quartz street. His law office is in Room No. 21, Silver Bow block.

Mr. Healy is essentially a self-educated and a self-made man. His success in his undertakings, his progress in his profession, are the direct results of his own ability and diligent attention to business.

FRANK W. LINGQUIST. Beginning life's activities as a messenger boy, from which he graduated as a telegraph operator, Frank W. Lingquist has advanced step by step until he is today prominently connected with several of the best known enterprises in the state of Montana. The Pioneer Realty Company holds the principal interests of Mr. Lingquist, and he has been the sole owner of that extensive business since 1909, when Mr. Richard Lockey, whose life sketch appears elsewhere in this historical work, retired from the firm. The other concerns with which Mr. Lingquist is actively interested are of a varied character, but all are doubly fortunate in having attracted the attention of a man of his splendid ability and unusual farsightedness.

Frank W. Lingquist was born in Logansport, Indiana, on February 22, 1874. He is the son of Peter and Catherine (Lingquist) Lingquist, both natives of Sweden, where they were married before emigrating to America. They settled at Logansport, Indiana, where the father carried on a contracting and building business since the early sixties, and they still live in the house in which their son, Frank W., was born. Three other children were born to them, Elmer H., a telegraph operator of Indianapolis, Indiana, and two daughters, who died in infancy. The boy, Frank, attended school until he reached the age of thirteen, when he secured work as a messenger boy; he studied telegraphy in his spare moments and in a comparatively short time was able to take a position as an operator. His first position was with the Pan Handle Railroad, and later he was with the Union Pacific, Rock Island and Oregon Short Line, after having severed his connection with the Postal Telegraph and Western Union Companies, and the Chicago Board of Trade, and he was four years in the employ of the railroad lines mentioned above, serving in all parts of the country, from Chicago to the Pacific coast. He came to Helena, Montana, on May 30, 1895, for the Northern Pacific, remaining with them a little more than a year, when he accepted a position with the Western Union Telegraph Company. He then located and by purchase became the owner of a stock ranch along the Missouri river for eight miles, at the famous Ox Bow Bend, where the great dam is now under construction near Wolf creek, and a large hay ranch in the Prickly Pear valley below Helena.

The Pioneer Realty Company, of which Mr. Lingquist is the head, does a general brokerage business, with special reference to loans on any substantial securities, and gives attention to the sale and rental of farming and city property. In addition they conduct a thoroughly reliable and modern bonding, livestock, fire and automobile insurance department, with resident inspectors and adjusters. While the firm specializes in live stock and ranch investments, they have built many homes which they have sold on the monthly payment plan. The firm was incorporated and organized by Richard Lockey and Frank W. Lingquist. In 1909 Mr. Lockey withdrew his interest from the business and since that time Mr. Lingquist has been the sole owner and proprietor of the concern, which has continued to thrive and flourish. The offices of the firm were moved from the Lockey building to more modern and up-to-date quarters in the Penwell block, at 36 west Sixth avenue where the business as continued now by Mr. Lingquist, is in high favor with the public, and the reputation of the head of the firm for unlimited integrity and honorable dealings under any and all circumstances is so well established that further words on that score are entirely superfluous. Mr. Lingquist is also a stock holder in the Conrad Trust & Savings Bank of Helena; a subscriber to the new Placer hotel at Helena and one of the donors to the new Montana Wesleyan University. He is president of the Pioneer Live Stock & Insurance Company, breeders and consignees for the sale of high grade and thoroughbred stock, and is in correspondence with breeders from all parts of the United States, Canada, and Australia. The firm, whose headquarters are in Helena, Montana, also represent the Indiana & Ohio Live Stock Insurance Company, of Crawfordsville, Indiana, a firm which has the reputation of paying its claims promptly and with fewer disputes than any other similar organization in the country. It is the only company of its kind licensed to do business in the state of Montana, and is capitalized at $200,000, with assets of $475,000.

Mr. Lingquist is a Democrat and is always active in the political affairs of his county and state. He has participated in nearly every county convention of his party for the past seventeen years, but has never been an office seeker. He was once appointed by the county central committee to make the race for county commissioner to fill out an unexpired term caused by the death of Moses Root, and against the presumably strongest man in the party. He carried the city and a majority of the outlying precincts, but lost the election by a small majority. The Helena papers, following his nomination, spoke of him in the most emphatic and complimentary terms, and two short articles appearing in representative papers at the time are here reproduced, as bearing directly upon the standing and reputation of the man in Helena and vicinity. They appear as follows: "The selection of Frank W. Lingquist as the second Democratic candidate for county commissioner by the committee last night was one that should meet the approval of every voter in the county. Mr. Lingquist is an active business man and one who has accomplished a great deal for one of his years. He is an upbuilder and one who believes in doing things and doing them well. He is the kind of man that will make a good county commissioner. Mr. Lingquist is a large property owner in the county and is therefore a big taxpayer. He knows the value of good roads to the farming industry of the county, fully understanding the necessity and importance of road improvements. He has already demonstrated what good road building means, having constructed as supervisor, some good county roads, and partly at his own expense." Another Helena paper spoke thus of him: "Among the live, progressive, self made men of Helena, Frank W. Lingquist stands without a peer. Having nothing to start with except his own initiative and native talent, Mr. Lingquist has arisen from the position of telegraph operator to one of the recognized forces of this community. He was born in Logansport, Indiana, thirty-eight years ago, and was educated in the common schools. He began at the very bottom and has made his way from messenger boy, step by step, until he is today the chosen representative of the Democracy for the highly responsible position of commissioner. In 1896 he located the Ox Bow Bend ranch on the Missouri river and later on purchased the William Reed ranch in the Prickly Pear valley and engaged actively in ranching. This property he sold to the Missouri River Power Company and secured in part payment five thousand acres of meadow land where he kept a large number of cattle and was known as the 'Hay King,' on account of the great amount of hay he harvested. Then he established the Pioneer Realty Company of this city of which he is the principal power and which he has successfully conducted from the start. He is also engaged in the live stock commission business. While living in the Prickly Pear Valley Mr. Lingquist was road supervisor of the district, and gained much practical knowledge of public roads."

Galen D. Poe

Mr. Lingquist is a man who is prominent in social and fraternal circles, some of his fraternal affiliations being with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, a life member of Lodge No. 193 of Helena, and the Masons, in which he is a member of the A. F. & A. M., Blue Lodge No. 3, of Helena.

On July 6, 1898, Mr. Lingquist was married to Miss Marguerite Birch, the daughter of Mrs. Marie Birch, a native of Denmark, and born in Copenhagen. One daughter has been born of their union, Eunice Helena, born at Helena, Montana, on September 8, 1905. The home of the family is maintained at 110 South Beattie street.

GALEN D. PUE. The city of Butte, Montana, offers a field for commercial enterprises not surpassed in any other part of the country, and her business men are energetic and progressive to a high degree, conducting their operations in the most modern and up-to-date manner. Every department of trade has its high-class representative and in the coal and fuel line Galen D. Pue is a conspicuous factor. Mr. Pue's career has been of varied character and of such nature as to fit him for the conduct of important transactions and the management of an enterprise requiring executive ability and business acumen of a high order.

Mr. Pue began his independent business career at an early age, and was only nineteen when he made his first venture in the field of trade, for three years conducting his own butcher shop at Denver, Colorado, with success and profit. His mother died when he was a small boy, and after his father's second marriage he ran away from home when thirteen years old. He went to school for several years in San Antonio, Texas, at which place he was born in October 16, 1874, the son of a prominent stock raiser and ranchman. The father, Samuel B. Pue, was a native of Maryland, where his birth occurred, July 14, 1836; he married Lucy Cooper, of Kentucky nativity, who was born June 30, 1843, and died May 28, 1881. The elder Pue was a veteran of the Civil war, a man of strong character, and lived to a good old age, the year of his demise being 1910.

Mr. Pue studied engineering for a time when a boy and also learned the butcher's trade in Denver, to which city he first went when sixteen years old. After disposing of his meat market in that city, he went to Butte, his original intention being to open up a market there. Investigation showed conditions to be unfavorable for the success of such an enterprise at that time, however, and he accordingly turned his attention to other pursuits.

The Amalgamated Copper Mining Company was at that time looking for a man of ability to take charge of its lumber yards at this point, and Mr. Pue secured the position and worked for the firm seven years, a portion of the period in its engineering department. His ambition extended beyond that of being an employee of others, however, and resigning his position with that concern he organized the South Butte Coal Company, and in the fall of 1904 began business as a wholesale and retail coal dealer, he being sole proprietor of the enterprise. His judgment in entering this business proved to be exceedingly good, for his trade has constantly increased until at the present time he handles an average of forty tons of coal a day, and besides the yard at No. 215 South Arizona street, operates another at No. 526 Madison street, at both places catering to a growing clientele.

Mr. Pue is the owner of a half interest in a promising coal mining property near Havre, Montana, and has growing financial interests in other lines, he being a careful and judicious investor of his surplus funds. He owns a ranch near Worden, Yellowstone county, which he operates in connection with his other business interests. He takes an active interest in public affairs in the city and is an influential worker in the ranks of the Republican party. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias order.

The marriage of Mr. Pue to Miss Agatha Richards occurred February 23, 1903. She is a daughter of Joseph Richards, who came to this country from England with his family when the daughter was a small child, and settled at Butte many years ago when the country was first opening up. Mr. and Mrs. Pue have two charming children—George D., born here September 16, 1905, and Florence, whose birth occurred in Butte, March 15, 1908. The family residence is at No. 909 Maryland Avenue.

WALLACE NORTH TANNER. The greatest industrial organization of its kind in the world, the A. C. M. Company, has many of its ablest technical and executive officials in Montana, and among them is the present superintendent of the foundry department at Anaconda. Wallace North Tanner has been identified more or less continuously with this company for the past fifteen years, and when, in September, 1909, the foundry department needed as its superintendent a man of expert knowledge and technical equipment the company did not hesitate in selecting a man whose worth had been proved by varied service in other capacities.

Mr. Tanner is a native of Minneapolis, where he was born on the 19th of August, 1873, and with the class of 1896 was graduated from the engineering department of the University of Minnesota. He belongs to that class of young and successful men who prepared for their careers in the modern technical schools and by experience and accomplishment have proved their value over the old-time practical men who until a few years ago were everywhere in control of the industries of this country.

In the same year as his graduation he entered the drafting department of the Boston and Montana Company at Great Falls, Montana, where he continued about one year, and in May, 1897, was employed in similar capacity by the Boston and Montana Company at Butte. In April, 1899, he was transferred to the foundry at Anaconda. In October of the same year he was engaged in engineering work at Basin, but in the following month returned to the A. C. M. Company at Butte. In 1902 occurred his advancement to chief draftsman of the A. C. M. smelter at Anaconda, a position which he filled until 1904. In May of that year he transferred his residence to Chicago, where he entered the engineering department of the Allis-Chalmers Company, and was there for two years. In May, 1906, Mr. Tanner established an office as consulting engineer at Salt Lake City, but in May, 1908, engaged in the concrete construction business. Then in September, 1909, he was selected on his previous record and known ability as superintendent of the foundry department at Anaconda for the greatest smelting and refining company in the world. This position requires the supervision of the technical knowledge. All the castings and machinery parts are made under his direction. Mr. Tanner began his career after leaving the university without any capital or outside assistance, and by merit in each grade of service has advanced to large responsibilities. He now has considerable investments of his own in various enterprises.

In politics Mr. Tanner is a Republican, and has usually been a delegate to the state and county conventions of his party. He is a member of the Montana Society of Engineers, of the Anaconda Club, and is esteemed leading knight of the Elks.

He was married in June, 1900, to Miss Lilly L. Bohland, who was born in St. Paul, Minnesota. They are the parents of four children, Wallace B., Harry L., Beatrice M. and Norman W. Outside of his business and the pleasures of his home and family, Mr. Tanner finds his greatest diversion in hunting and fishing, being especially fond of duck hunting.

Mr. Tanner was one of seven children born to W. L. and Helen C. (Finch) Tanner, his brothers and sisters being named as follows: Alice, the wife of William Wilson, of Minneapolis; William R., of Berkeley, California; Helen C., the wife of Fred Barnard, of Enderline, North Dakota; Ruth, who lives with her parents; Harry L., who died at New York City in 1899, having four years before graduated in electrical engineering; and Mabel, who died in infancy. W. L. Tanner, the father, who was born in New Haven, Connecticut, was a member of the First Connecticut Cavalry during the Civil war, was captured at the battle of the Wilderness and remained a prisoner four months in the Salisbury prison. For the past forty-four years he has been a prominent painting and decorating contractor at Minneapolis. The mother was born in New York state.

ELMER WILLIAM TRAINER, physician at Whitehall, Montana, was born in Eureka, Nevada, on May 4, 1881, the son of Thomas and Mary (Purcell) Trainer. Thomas Trainer was born in Northern Scotland, and at the age of seventeen he came to America, locating at Virginia City, Montana, where he was connected with the Comstock mine. Thence he went to Eureka, Nevada, remaining there until 1896, when he moved to Butte, in which city he has since resided. Mr. Trainer was one of the early comers to Eureka and he had a large part in all its enterprises. With a genius for executive work and unusual business foresight, he inevitably became a leader in commercial circles. He owned the iron foundry, the machine shops and also a livery business, in addition to which he had large holdings in ranch property, being the possessor of the noted Duckwater ranch and the Antelope Valley ranch in the vicinity of Eureka. Mr. Trainer served as sheriff and as deputy United States marshal and in those early days neither post was a sinecure. It required cool nerve and a fearless spirit to discharge those duties, for the country contained a large proportion of lawless characters who are always to be found in new settlements, and there was also the constant menace of Indian attack. More than once Mr. Trainer has exchanged shots with Nevada desperadoes, and though a target for many a would-be-deadly bullet, he escaped unharmed. When Nevada's resources began to fail, Mr. Trainer disposed of his interests there and came to Montana. He is now connected with the Amalgamated Copper Company at Butte. The marriage of Mr. Trainer occurred in Ruby Hill, Nevada, in 1879, when Miss Mary Purcell became his wife. She is a native of California, and a daughter of Michael and Mary Purcell, of Grass Valley, that state. Two children were born to their union, Elmer W. of this review and Dollie M., a teacher in the Butte public schools.

Until he was fifteen years of age, Elmer W. Trainer attended the schools of Eureka, and then entered the high school at Butte, being a member of the first class graduated from that school. He decided to study medicine and selected the University of Kentucky as the place from which to secure his degree. To earn the money for his course, he worked in Butte as a machinist and saved the necessary amount for his college expenses. After finishing the collegiate work, he entered the medical department, still paying his own way, and in 1905 received his M. D. degree. Although a diligent student and one who took high rank in scholarship, Dr. Trainer was also an athlete of note while in school. He pitched for the base-ball team of the University and played quarter-back on its foot-ball team. He still retains his fondness for these sports, as well as for all out-door diversions, but the demands of his growing practice leave him little time to indulge in them, even as a spectator.

Since 1906 Dr. Trainer has resided in Whitehall, where he is foremost in his profession. Until the demands upon his time made it impossible, the doctor was an office holder in the Masonic order, in which he has attained the thirty-second degree. It is a matter of considerable regret to Dr. Trainer that he was obliged to give up lodge work, for he is deeply interested in the organization. Traveling is one of the pleasures which appeal most strongly to him, and his journeys have taken him through Mexico and all the southern countries. At the time of the Goldfield excitement, he was among the early prospectors in that district, but he remained there only about nine months. He is interested in mining ventures, and one of the organizations of which he is a stockholder has control of the Ryan-Trainer properties.

CORNELIUS PATRICK O'CALLAGHAN. Foremost among the business men and citizens of Basin, Jefferson county, is Cornelius Patrick O'Callaghan, proprietor of a large merchandise establishment of that place. Mr. O'Callaghan has won his advancement in life through merit and by a steady industry, and is one of the representative men of affairs in the county.

He was born in the city of Chicago, Illinois, on the 14th of February, 1870, a son of Marcus and Hannah (Kearney) O'Callaghan, both of whom were natives of Ireland, the mother of Cork. The father was a boy when he came to the United States and a few years later enlisted in the federal army at Chattanooga, being assigned to the commissary department, and went through the entire war. He carried a musket at the battle of Lookout Mountain, and saw much arduous service. After the war he was for twenty years chief clerk in the general offices of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad at Chicago, and was also employed in the treasury department during the administration of Benjamin Harrison. In 1894, owing to poor health, he came out to Montana, leaving his family in Chicago, and was employed in the traffic department of the A. C. M. Company at Anaconda as agent for the B. A. & P. Railroad. In 1902 he returned to Chicago, and is now one of the officials of the Michigan Central Railroad in that city. The mother died at Chicago in December, 1909. There were five children, one of whom is now deceased, and Cornelius P. is the oldest of those living, the others being: Lillian, wife of Joseph Herrmann, of Chicago; Cora, wife of W. E. Cage, a prominent real estate man in Texas; Fannie, the wife of Mitchell Licalzi, formerly of New Orleans and now of Chicago.

Cornelius P. O'Callaghan was reared in Chicago, where he attended the public schools, and lived there until 1896. He then came west and began work in the general manager's office of the B. A. & P. Railroad at Anaconda. This road, as is well known, is controlled by the A. C. M. Company, and after a time he was transferred to the traffic department of the company. He was then made assistant paymaster of the mines office, and remained in that capacity at Anaconda for five years, when he resigned to take the management of the P. J. Brophy store in Butte. After three years as manager, he left Butte to go into business with Mr. D. Driscoll at Basin. Mr. Driscoll was then known as the oldest merchant of Montana, and his very successful career is briefly sketched below. In 1909 Mr. O'Callaghan bought out the Driscoll interest in the store and has since conducted a flourishing mercantile business in Basin, where he has his pleasant home and is a man of influence in all that community.

Mr. O'Callaghan was married on April 2, 1902, to Miss Anna Marie, the daughter of the pioneer merchant, Dennis Driscoll. Mrs. O'Callaghan has the distinction of having been the first white girl born in the town of Walkerville. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. O'Callaghan, namely: Madeline Corita; Joseph; Marguerite, deceased; and Anna Marion. The family are members of the Catholic church, and Mr. O'Callaghan is a Democrat.

Dennis Driscoll, the father of Mrs. O'Callaghan, is one of the oldest living pioneers of Montana. Born in Ireland, he came to the United States in 1854, at the age of fifteen, and began work in a malleable iron foundry at Newark, New Jersey. Mr. Driscoll went to California in 1861, and remained there two years, when he went to Boise City, Idaho, and was engaged there at mining until 1866, when he came to Silver Bow county, Montana, being among the very early prospectors of this region. After mining for a time at Silver Bow, Glendive and Alder Gulch, he returned to Newark, and engaged in grocery business, there remaining until after his marriage, when he returned to Montana and established a grocery and general mercantile store at Walkerville, where for twenty years or more he did a very large business, later removing to Basin, where he also conducted a mercantile business. He retired with a generous competence, and is now a resident of Butte. He is owner of valuable business and residence property in Walkerville, Butte, Basin and Lewistown in Montana, and Seattle, Washington. He was married at Newark, New Jersey, in 1877, to Miss Mary Taaffe, who had come as a child with her parents from Ireland to America. Of the eight children in his family two are deceased, and the others are: Anna, wife of Mr. O'Callaghan; Ella, living with her parents in Butte; Mary, wife of John Earl Corlette, of Butte; Margaret, Dennis and John, all living at home in Butte.

JOSEPH CLINTON SMITH. One of our most beloved American poets once wrote of a classmate,

"There was a young fellow of excellent pith, Fate tried to obscure him by naming him Smith."

but in this case, as in that of the subject of the famous couplet, fate has been defeated in her nefarious designs. Joseph Clinton Smith is everywhere recognized as one of the ablest lawyers of the state. The law partner of Governor Norris, he now has charge of the chief executive's law practice. He is a stalwart Democrat and is one of the most effective and eagerly sought of campaign speakers, his eloquence being of the most convincing sort.

Mr. Smith, who is a brother of ex-Governor Smith of Montana, was born in Lowes, Kentucky, September 25, 1873, and is the son of DeWitt Clinton and Eliza Booker (Hughes) Smith. The father was born in Louisville, Kentucky, November 5, 1831, and followed agriculture all his life in the Blue Grass state, the demise of this worthy citizen occurring January 11, 1899, in his sixty-eighth year. The mother was born in Milburn, Kentucky, January 23, 1836, and resides at Lowes, Kentucky. The subject is the eighth in order of birth in a family of nine children. He lived in the home town until about the age of twenty-three years and then, having become impressed with the future of the west and the advantages which it presented to the ambitious young man, he came to Montana and located in Dillon, Beaverhead county. Three months later he removed to Miles City, where for a year he served as guard in the state reform school for one year, and then went to Deer Lodge, where he acted as guard in the state penitentiary for two years.

In 1900 Mr. Smith came back to Dillon and studied law in the office of Edwin L. Norris, now governor of Montana, being duly admitted to the bar, and he has been in practice ever since. He opened his first office in Deer Lodge, where he practiced successfully for three years and then went to Miles City, where he lived four years, during part of which time he was associated with Sidney Sanner, now judge of the seventh judicial district. In March, 1908, when Governor Norris was installed in the office of governor, he returned to Dillon and took charge of the law business of that gentleman. His success has been noteworthy and he is gaining a professional renown not confined to the locality. The office is one of the finest in the state.

Mr. Smith received his early education in the public schools of Kentucky and then pursued a four year course in the University of Kentucky at Lexington, from which institution he was graduated in 1895. He has ever taken an active interest in politics and is influential in Democratic party ranks. In the matter of religion he leans toward the Christian church and his wife is an Episcopalian. Baseball is one of his chief enthusiasms and he is an efficient fan and rooter. He is fond of good literature and the drama and has marked gifts of oratory, being a tireless worker in campaigns and a valuable asset to any cause in whose worth he believes. He has done much to encourage and train young men with undeveloped oratorical ability. He is affiliated with the Beaverhead Social Club and the Beaverhead Commercial Club.

Mr. Smith is a fine example of the self-made man, for he has made his own way absolutely without assistance, being of dauntless courage, as well as tried ability. He knows the utter fatigue which comes from honest toil and made his first money at the age of fourteen in the Kentucky tobacco fields, his earnings amounting to but forty cents a day. With the money thus earned he bought his school books. He stands high in his profession.

Mr. Smith was happily married July 15, 1909, at Lisbon, North Dakota, to Clara Rawson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Willis Rawson. Their son, Joseph Rawson Smith, was born October 10, 1911.

JOHN A. SHELTON. Distinguished not only as one of the foremost citizens of Butte, but as one of the city's most able and influential lawyers, John A. Shelton is a man of integrity and worth, and eminently deserving of the high esteem and regard in which he is so universally held. A son of William H. Shelton, he was born, February 18, 1866, in Jefferson county, Iowa, coming from patriotic ancestry. The founder of the Shelton family in America was a native of England. Abram Shelton, the paternal great-grandfather, fought as a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and was a member of the Committee of Safety for Pittsylvania County, Virginia.

W. H. Shelton was but a boy when his parents removed from Virginia to Indiana, settling in the vicinity of Knightstown, that state. Here he grew to manhood and was married. Migrating to Iowa, he located in Jefferson county in pioneer days, and was there profitably engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death in 1885. His wife, whose maiden name was Martha Ann Ogg, was born in Indiana, daughter of Judge John Ogg and his wife, who was a Miss Hall from York state, where her Grandfather Ogg was a pioneer farmer, having moved thence from Virginia, his native state.

Laying a substantial foundation for his future education in the rural schools of Iowa, John A. Shelton subsequently pursued his studies at the Pleasant Plain Academy, in Jefferson county, until he was seventeen years old, when he began teaching school. When nineteen years old, he went to Ames, Iowa, where he took the scientific course at the Iowa State Agricultural College, from which he was graduated with the degree of B. S. Mr. Shelton then continued the study of science at the University of Michigan, which conferred upon him his well-earned degree of M. S. Thus mentally equipped for a professional career, Mr. Shelton read law under private tutors, and also studied in the law office of the noted firm of Cummins & Wright, Senator Cummins being the senior member of the firm, which was located in Des Moines. Then, after spending a year in the law department of the Iowa State University, Mr. Shelton came to Montana, and, having successfully passed the examinations at Helena, was admitted to the state bar in 1896. He immediately opened an office in Butte, and has since built up a large and lucrative general practice, although as a specialist in mining litigation his opinions and counsel are much sought for in the guidance of large financial interests, and for the solution of perplexing legal problems.

In his political affiliations Mr. Shelton is a staunch Republican, but he takes no active part in public affairs. At the age of twenty-three years, he was first assistant clerk of the Twenty-third general assembly of Iowa. Fraternally, he is a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks; and has been through all the chairs of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, being quite prominent in the organization. Socially, he belongs to the Silver Bow Club.

WILLIAM J. PHILLIP. The success to be gained from a life of industry and persevering labor, as illustrated in the career of William J. Phillip, blacksmith, wagon manufacturer, miller, and dealer in farming implements at Lavina, Montana, will serve as an example worthy of emulation by the youths of today who are too prone to believe that they are deprived of the advantages offered to those of former years. Since boyhood Mr. Phillip has labored faithfully and intelligently, with a definite goal in view, and as a result has gained success in his chosen vocation and an honorable position among his fellow men. Born on a farm near Davenport, Iowa, in 1875, Mr. Phillip is a son of William A. and Frances (Willey) Phillip. His father, a native of New York state, lived in various parts of the country, being engaged principally in farming, and his death occurred in Iowa in 1912, when he was about fifty-nine years of age. His widow still survives him, making her home near Davenport, Iowa, and their three children, of whom William J. is the youngest, are also living.

William J. Phillip was three years of age when his parents removed to the vicinity of Jamestown, North Dakota, and there he secured his education in the public schools when he could be spared from his duties on the home farm. On attaining his majority he moved to Montana, arriving in 1896, and first settled in Billings, in which city he remained for about one year, during which time he was in the employ of the Custer Cattle Company. He subsequently located in the Musselshell country, where for about two years he was employed at ranch work, in the cattle and horse department, and while located near Harlowton made two overland trips to North Dakota, trailing sheep. On leaving ranch life, Mr. Phillip went to Garneill, where he learned the trade of blacksmith, and after about four years came to Lavina and embarked in business on his own account, establishing his present industry. Later he added a complete line of agricultural implements, wagons, carriages, etc., and in January, 1912, formed a partnership with another progressive business man of this locality, R. Shoemaker, under the firm name of Phillip & Shoemaker. The firm was dissolved October 1, 1912, when Mr. Phillip bought out the entire business. Numerous specimens of his handicraft are to be found throughout this part of the state. He is an expert at his business, having made a thorough study of it in every detail and availed himself of all modern improvements and devices. As a thorough, practical mechanic, he has given personal attention to his work, and the product of his shop gives satisfaction in every way. Upright, honest and industrious, the administration of his affairs is characterized by wisdom and discernment, while his treatment of his patrons has won for him a wide popularity. An extensive feed mill is operated in connection with the other business. Mr. Phillip has lived in a number of different states, but none has found such favor in his eyes as Montana, and his belief in its agricultural welfare in the future has been demonstrated by his investing in 160 acres of land adjoining the townsite of Lavina. His recreation is found in hunting and fishing, and he also is fond of horses and enjoys baseball and all athletic sports as a spectator. His religious belief is that of the Methodist church, of which his wife is a member, she being also an active worker in the Ladies' Aid Society. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, of which he is venerable consul of his camp, and has filled various other offices, while in politics he is a Republican, but takes no active interest therein, although he believes it the duty of every man to vote.

On August 11, 1907, Mr. Phillip was married to Miss Grace A. Weston, and three interesting children have been born to this union, namely; Iona, Gertrude and Helen.

PROF. LEON RUSSELL FOOTE. The county of Beaverhead numbers among its citizens many skilled physicians, lawyers of state repute, well-known manufacturers and business men of much more than local reputation; while proud of them she is not lacking in others who have achieved distinction in callings requiring intellectual abilities of a high order. Among the latter, Prof. Leon Russell Foote, principal of the county high school, occupies a deservedly conspicuous place. No one is more entitled to the thoughtful consideration of a free and enlightened people than he who shapes and directs the minds of the young and to such noble work is the life of the subject of the sketch devoted. He is a man of fine initiative and has set in operation many good measures.

Professor Foote was born in Asherville, Kansas, November 22, 1871. He remained there until about the attainment of his majority and then removed to Ottawa, Kansas, where he resided for the space of four years. His next step took him to Butte, Montana, his arrival there being on July 15, 1896, and in that city he became associated with the faculty of the Butte Business College, with which he continued for over four years. He then became identified with the State School of Mines, where he had charge of the conditioned classes and assisted in mathematics and kindred studies. In July, 1905, he came to Dillon, to accept the principalship of the county high school and he has been its head ever since that time. Under his enlightened and zealous direction the school has grown and prospered and he has introduced many new features, a few of which are herewith mentioned. An agricultural department for the young men of the school has proved a wonderful success, and it also enjoys the distinction of being the first county high school to introduce a domestic science course, this as taught taking two years for completion. The agricultural department was the first introduced in Montana as was also the two year course in domestic science. This is likewise one of the first county high schools to adopt and teach a two years' commercial course. These make it one of the most valuable of the institutions of the kind in the United States. In addition to its other advantages it is housed in a fine building and is fitted with the most modern equipments for the various courses. Professor Foote deserves highest praise for his fruitful labors in this field.

Glancing over the earlier life of the gentleman whose name forms the caption of this sketch, it is found that he received his preliminary education in the public schools of Kansas, graduating in the high school of Beloit, that state. He was graduated from Ottawa University in Ottawa, Kansas, and spent the summers of 1902 and 1903 as a post-graduate student in Harvard University. In 1909 he attended the State University of Washington, in Seattle, and subsequently pursued a short course at the University of California, in Berkley. His education has been of the most thorough and varied character.

Professor Foote first entered upon his noble calling as an instructor in the public schools of Kansas, and his subsequent career has already been traced. He first knew the unparalleled joy of the wage-earner
